

CONTENTS.

MERRIMACK COUNTY.

GENERAL HISTORY.

CHAPTER	PAGE
I. ORGANIZATION AND STATISTICAL	1
II. BENCH AND BAR	2
III. STATE-HOUSE	3
IV. THE NEW HAMPSHIRE ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE	47

TOWN HISTORIES.

	PAGE		PAGE
CONCORD	57	NEWBURY	415
BOSCOWEN	169	NEW LONDON	421
BRADFORD	185	EPSOM	443
CANTERBURY	221	LOUDON	477
CHICHESTER	235	NORTHFIELD	516
BOW	293	HILL	547
DANBURY	289	PEMBROKE	560
DUNBARTON	291	PITTSFIELD	587
FRANKLIN	310	SALISBURY	602
ANDOVER	328	SUTTON	627
HENNIKER	340	WARNER	653
HOOKSETT	361	WEBSTER	678
HOPKINTON	391	WILMOT	685

BELKNAP COUNTY.

CHAPTER	PAGE
I. ORGANIZATION OF COUNTY—BENCH AND BAR	791

TOWN HISTORIES.

	PAGE		PAGE
ALTON	705	LACONIA	808
BARNSTEAD	711	MEREDITH	823
BELMONT	717	NEW HAMPTON	870
CENTRE HARBOR	725	SANBORNTON	893
GILFORD	731	TILTON	876

APPENDIX	905
--------------------	-----

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Abbot, J. Stephen	142	Fife, Captain Wilham	585
Abbott, Wilham	150	Fowler, Asa	17
Aiken, Walter	326	Fowler, Winthrop	582
Albin, John H.	26	Fowler, Trueworthy L.	582
Alexander, Captain Enoch	287	Fowler, Winthrop, Jr.	583
Ames, Lorenzo	231	French, D. J.	512
Ames, Jason H.	212	Gage, Converse	649
Amulen, Charles H.	158	Gal, N. B.	830
Bailey, Oliver	298	Gallinger, J. H.	169
Baker, Aaron W.	286	Gant, Ilon Jesse	389
Barnard, Daniel	31	George, Paul R.	410
Bartlett, Levi	676	Gerrish, Enoch	158
Bat-belder, Joseph	510	Gilman, James	808
Bean, Abraham	159	Gillingham, Moody	419
Bickford, H. C.	441	Goss, Wilham	470
Bickford, Nathan	476	Gatterson, John	358
Blanchard, Hiram	215	Hall, Rev. K. S.	777
Carrier, Solomon A.	41	Hall, Dr. A. B.	542
Carpenter, Charles H.	253	Hart, George	216
Childs, Horace	359	Hartwell, H. H.	216
Colley, J. M.	418	Haynes, Martin A.	779
Crough, Colonel D. M.	234	Head, Nathaniel	385
Cogswell, Thomas, Sr.	793	Head, Wilham F.	388
Cogswell, Thomas, Jr.	807	Hill, James R.	104
Cogswell, P. B.	89	Hodgson, Samuel	890
Clough, Rev. J.	509	Holt, Thomas L.	715
Coe, John	728	Hollen, Daniel	154
Cole, B. J.	773	Holmes, B.	218
Conn, G. P.	162	Howe, Calvin	152
Connor, Abel	355	Humphrey, Moses	101
Couch, Enoch	694	Hunt, Lucian	540
Cummings, George A.	156	Jewell, D. L.	576
Crane, John S., residence of	781	Keneson, Rankell S.	720
Crane, J. S.	780	Kenrick, Stephen	321
Crockett, S. C.	827	Kimball, B. A.	146
Daniell, Warren F.	324	Kimball, John	144
Davis, Curtis	219	Kimball, John P.	253
Davis, Hon. Walter S.	413	Knight, Elijah	153
Deering, Major Arthur	260	Knoxlton, Hosea C.	275
Doer, Charles C.	474	Knowles, Wilham F.	548
Downing, Lewis	141	Labl, Seneca A.	858
Drake, Oliver	256	Lang, Joseph W.	802
Durrell, David	217	Lane, Robert	647
Durrell, Thomas	806	Larales, George H.	581
Eaton, Joshua	211	Little, George P.	580
Eaton, Frederick	651	Little, George P., residence of	568
Ela, Robert L.	162e	Little, T. D.	621
Ela, Richard	162d	Loving, Samuel B.	511
Ela, Joseph	865	Map outline Merrimack and Belknap Counties	1
Ela, George W.	162b	Marshall, Anson S.	34
Emerson, Benjamin	600	Marshall, John W.	215
Evans, Benjamin	675	Martin, Nosh, M. D.	468

	PAGE		PAGE
Martin, Samuel	493	Sargent, Stephen	166
Meservey, Rev. A. B.	574	Savage, Major George D.	508
Morse, J. C.	783	Sawyer, A. H.	710
Morse, Meranda J.	584	Shaw, Charles C.	274
Morse, Stephen	14	Simlar, John G.	714
Mottrill, David	232	Snoley, James R.	650
Morse, John W.	299	Smith, A. D.	230
Morse, Joseph	139	Smith, Jeremiah	513
Moulton, Hon. John C.	825	Stark, Major Odeh	392
Moulton, John H.	727	State-House	40 b
Nesmith, George W.	36	Stearns, Onslow	158
New Hampshire Asylum for the Insane	48	Stevens, Colonel E.	863
Norris, J. S.	161	Stevens, Lynnah D.	40 a
Nutter, E. S.	151	Stinson, Captain Charles	307
Osgood, Addison N.	584	Stinson, John	396
Page, Enoch	648	Sulloway, Honorable A. W.	322
Peabody, Selwin B.	891	Tappan, Mason W.	22
Pease, Simon D.	867	Thayer, W. F.	92
Pembroke Academy	550	Tilton, Alexander H.	890
Phillips, D. M.	475	Tilton, C. E.	887
Phillips, George A.	147	Tinsdell, Edmund E.	559
Phillips, Oliver	45	Tuttle, Hon. Brian A.	597
Pitman, J. P.	851	Wallbigh, Judge Benjamin, Jr.	643
Plummer, Ephraim	184	Wallbigh, Eleostus	644
Prescott, D. S.	829	Wallbigh, General John	857
Putney, Truman	646	Walker, Joseph B., residence of	116
Rolle, Henry P.	624	Walker, Daniel	9
Rollins, Ames L.	709	Weeks, Stephen	508
Randborn, Capt. W. A.	775	Wentworth, Joseph	157
Sanders, George, Jr.	473	White, Nathaniel	156
Sanders, O. S.	471	Whittamore, Aaron	586
Sanders, O. S., Residence of	471	Woodman, Edgar H.	49
Sargent, J. Everett	18	Woodward, Frank R.	558
Sargent, Moses	782

BIOGRAPHICAL.

	PAGE		PAGE
Abbot, J. Stephens.....	142	Eaton, Joshua.....	211
Abbott, William.....	154	Ela, George W.....	162 b
Aiken, Walter.....	326	Ela Joseph.....	865
Allin, John H.....	26	Ela, Richard.....	162 d
Alexander, Enoch.....	287	Ela, Robert L.....	162 e
Ames, Lorenzo.....	231	Emerson, Benjamin.....	600
Ames, Jason H.....	212	Evans, Benjamin.....	675
Amsden, Charles H.....	158	Fife, Captain William.....	583
Bailey, Oliver.....	307	Fogg, George G.....	869
Baker, Aaron W.....	286	Foster, W. L.....	27
Barnard, Daniel.....	31	Fowler, Asa.....	15
Bartlett, Levi.....	676	Fowler, Trueworthy Ladd.....	581
Bartlett, William H.....	10	Fowler, Wuthrop.....	582
Batchelder, Joseph.....	510	Fowler, Wuthrop, Jr.....	583
Bean, A.....	159	French, David J.....	512
Bellows, Henry A.....	9	Gage, Converse.....	69
Bickford, Hezekiah C.....	441	Gale, Napoleon B.....	830
Bickford, Nathan.....	159	Gallinger, Jacob H.....	457
Blanchard, Hiram.....	215	Gault, Hon. Jesse.....	389
Brown, John.....	219	George, John H.....	28
Carpenter, Charles H.....	253	George, Paul R.....	410
Carter, Solon A.....	41	Gerrish, Enoch.....	157
Childs, Horace.....	339	Gillingham, Moody.....	419
Cilley, James M.....	418	Gilman, James.....	867
Clough, Col. David M.....	253	Goss, William.....	470
Clough, Rev. Jeremiah.....	509	Guterson, John.....	358
Clough, Joseph.....	915	Hall, Dr. A. B.....	542
Cogswell, P. B.....	89	Hall, Rev. K. S.....	777
Cogswell, Thomas, Sr.....	793	Hart, George.....	216
Cogswell, Thomas, Jr.....	807	Hartwell, Rev. Henry H.....	166
Coe, John.....	728	Haynes, Martin A.....	779
Cole, B. J.....	773	Head, Governor Nathaniel.....	385
Conn, Granville P.....	162	Head, William F.....	388
Connor, Abel.....	335	Hill, James R.....	103
Couch, Enoch.....	691	Hodgson, Samuel.....	860
Crane, John S.....	780	Holt, Thomas L.....	715
Crockett, Col. Seldon C.....	857	Holden, Daniel.....	123
Cummings, George A.....	155	Holmes, Rev. Hiram.....	218
Currier Family, The.....	414 d	Howe, Calvin.....	122
Daniell, Warren F.....	324	Humphrey, Moses.....	191
Davis, Curtis.....	219	Hunt, Lucian.....	546
Davis, Walter S.....	413	Jewell, Col. David L.....	576
Deering, Major Arthur.....	290	Jones, John F. (See Currier Family).....	414 d
Doe, Charles C.....	474	Keneson, Randall S.....	329
Downing, Lewis.....	140	Kenrick, Stephen.....	721
Drake, Oliver.....	256	Kimball, Benjamin A.....	116
Durell, David.....	217	Kimball, John.....	114
Durrell, Thomas.....	806	Kimball, J. P.....	233
Eastman, Ira A.....	39	Knight, Elijah.....	153
Eaton, Frederick.....	651	Knowles, W. F.....	546

BIOGRAPHICAL.

	PAGE
Wagner, T. H.	18
Ward, S. O.	782
Ward, H. D.	166
Ward, George W.	708
Ward, George W.	769
Ward, George W.	254
Ward, George W.	714
Ward, George W.	231
Ward, George W.	392
Ward, George W.	326
Ward, George W.	158
Ward, George W.	10
Ward, George W.	767
Ward, George W.	706
Ward, George W.	659
Ward, George W.	513
Ward, George W.	863
Ward, George W.	322
Ward, George W.	122
Ward, George W.	598
Ward, George W.	92
Ward, George W.	899
Ward, George W.	887
Ward, George W.	579
Ward, George W.	67
Ward, George W.	4
Ward, George W.	611
Ward, George W.	614
Ward, George W.	645
Ward, George W.	872
Ward, George W.	33
Ward, George W.	2
Ward, George W.	65
Ward, George W.	9
Ward, George W.	509
Ward, George W.	157
Ward, George W.	136
Ward, George W.	585
Ward, George W.	49
Ward, George W.	538

HISTORY

OF

MERRIMACK COUNTY, NEW HAMPSHIRE.

CHAPTER I.

ORGANIZATION AND STATISTICAL.

BY DANIEL F. SECOME.

MERRIMACK COUNTY was formed, in 1823, from towns in the northerly parts of Hillsborough and Rockingham Counties, to which have since been added towns from Grafton County and a portion of Sanbornton, in Strafford County, and it now contains portions of four of the five counties into which the province was divided in 1769.

It is now the second county in the State in population, and the third in the valuation of taxable property. Its population, as given in the United States census, has been as follows: In 1820, 34,614; 1840, 36,253; 1850, 40,337; 1860, 41,408; 1870, 42,151; 1880, 46,300. It includes the city of Concord and twenty-six towns, as follows:

Allenstown, taken from Rockingham County in 1823; incorporated, 1831; population in 1830, 483; in 1880, 1768.

Andover, from Hillsborough County, 1823; first known as New Breton; incorporated, 1779; population, 1830, 1324; 1880, 1204.

Bradford, from Hillsborough County, 1823; first known as New Bradford; incorporated, 1787; population, 1830, 1285; 1880, 950.

Boscawen, from Hillsborough County, 1823; formerly called Contocook; incorporated, 1760; population, 1830, 2093; 1880, 1380.

Bow, from Rockingham County, 1823; chartered, 1727; population, 1830, 1065; 1880, 734.

Canterbury, from Rockingham County, 1823; chartered, 1727; population, 1830, 1663; 1880, 1034.

Chichester, from Rockingham County, 1823; chartered, 1727; population, 1830, 1084; 1880, 784.

Concord, from Rockingham County, 1823; incorporated, 1765; formerly known as Penacook and Rumford; adopted a city charter, 1853; population, 1830, 3727; 1880, 13,845.

Daubury, from Grafton County, 1874; incorporated, 1795; population, 1830, 785; 1880, 760.

Dunbarton, from Hillsborough County, 1823; incorporated, 1765; formerly called Starkstown; population, 1830, 1067; 1880, 708.

Epsom, from Rockingham County, 1823; chartered, 1727; population, 1830, 1418; 1880, 909.

Franklin, from parts of Andover, Northfield and Salisbury, in Merrimack County, and Sanbornton, in Strafford County; incorporated, 1828; population, 1830, 1870; 1880, 3265.

Henniker, from Hillsborough County, 1823; incorporated, 1768; population, 1830, 1725; 1880, 1326.

Hill, from Grafton County, 1868; incorporated, 1778; formerly called New Chester; name changed, 1836; population, 1830, 1090; 1880, 667.

Hooksett, from Hillsborough County, 1823; incorporated, 1822, and included parts of Goffstown and Dunbarton, in Hillsborough County, and Chester, in Rockingham; population, 1830, 880; 1880, 1766.

Hopkinton, from Hillsborough County, 1823; incorporated, 1765; formerly called New Hopkinton; population, 1830, 2474; 1880, 1836.

London, from Rockingham County, 1823; incorporated, 1773; was originally a part of Canterbury; population, 1830, 1642; 1880, 1221.

Newbury, from Hillsborough County, 1823; incorporated, 1778; formerly known as Fisherfield; name changed, 1836; population, 1830, 798; 1880, 590.

New London, from Hillsborough County, 1823; incorporated, 1779; formerly called Dantzic; population, 1830, 913; 1880, 875.

Northfield, from Rockingham County, 1823; incorporated, 1789; was originally a part of Canterbury; population, 1830, 1169; 1880, 918.

Peabrook, from Rockingham County, 1823; incorporated, 1759; formerly called Suncook, and granted by the General Court of Massachusetts, in 1727, to Captain John Lovewell and his associates in the fight at Lovewell's Pond in 1725; population, 1830, 1312; 1880, 2797.

Pittsfield, from Rockingham County, 1823; incorporated, 1782; formerly a part of Chichester; population, 1830, 1271; 1880, 1974.

Salisbury, from Hillsborough County, 1823; incorporated, 1768; formerly known as Stevenstown; population, 1830, 1379; 1880, 795.

Sutton, from Hillsborough County, 1823; incorporated, 1784; formerly called Perrystown; population, 1830, 1424; 1880, 923.

Warner, from Hillsborough County, 1823; incorporated, 1774; formerly known as New Almsbury and Jennistown, and includes what was formerly called Kearsarge Gore; population, 1830, 2221; 1880, 1537.

Webster, formerly West Boscaawen, taken from Boscaawen, 1869; population, 1870, 689; 1880, 647.

Wilmot, from Hillsborough County, 1823; incorporated, 1807; formerly called Kearsarge; population, 1830, 934; 1880, 1080.

Of the 46,300 inhabitants of the county in 1880, 46,133 were whites, 158 colored, 1 Chinese and 8 Indians; 49,521 were natives of the United States, and 5779 of foreign birth; 34,808 were natives of New Hampshire, and 5713 of other States; 5116 males and 5075 females were from five to eighteen years of age; 14,286 males were above twenty-one years of age; 2680 males were between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, and one-half of the entire population was above twenty-six years of age.

Agricultural Statistics of Merrimack County. from the United States census of 1880, were as follows: Number of farms, June 1, 1880, 4334; number of acres of improved land, 306,282; value of farms, buildings and fences, $11,392,721; value of farm implements and machines, $426,083; estimated value of farm products for the year 1879-80, $1,878,149. Live stock and some of its products for the year ending June 1, 1880: Horses, 5998; working oxen, 4121; milk cows, 11,800; other cattle, 17,296; sheep, 27,555; swine, 8138. Gallons of milk produced, 586,662; pounds of butter made, 908,728; pounds of cheese made, 190,899. Vegetable products, 1879: Barley, 6279 bushels; buckwheat, 2976 bushels; Indian corn, 229,877 bushels; oats, 7503 bushels; rye, 4932 bushels; wheat, 25,403 bushels; hay, 75,743 tons; hops, 3219 lbs.; Irish potatoes, 375,653 bushels. Orchard products valued at $117,382.

Manufacturing Statistics.—Number of manufacturing establishments, June 1, 1880, 449; males above sixteen years of age employed, 3580; females, 1477; children and youth, 628.

Of the population of the county in 1880, there were 22,754 males and 23,549 females; 49,521 were natives of the United States, and 5779 of foreign birth; 5116 males and 5075 females were from 5 to 18 years of age, 2680 males were between 18 and 40 years of age, and 14,286 males were 21 years of age and above, and one-half of the whole population was over 26 years of age.

Capital invested, $6,089,215; value of materials used, $1,974,224; value of products, $8,742,560.

VALUATION AND TAXATION.

Valuation of the county, April 1, 1879	$24,882,550
Valuation of real estate	18,322,556
Valuation of personal property	6,369,194
State tax assessed	508,352
County tax assessed	78,000
City, town and school taxes	257,873
Whole amount of taxes	1,002,525
Total	$25,885,075
Indebtedness of the county, city, towns and school districts in the county, June 1, 1880
Bonded debt	$656,100
Floating debt	158,662
Aggregate debt	$814,762
Number of post-offices in the county July 1, 1883, 60; compensation of postmasters the preceding year, $18,513.94.

CHAPTER II.

BENCH AND BAR.

THE first term of the Superior Court of Judicature in Merrimack County was held in Concord in January, 1824. This was the first time that Concord had enjoyed the presence of a duly established court of law. The members of the bar of the county at this term convened and were duly organized as the Merrimack County bar, and during one of the first evenings of the session a bar supper was celebrated at the inn of J. P. Gass, which was located near the present site of Sanborn's block, on Main Street. The venerable George W. Nesmith, of Franklin, is the only surviving member of those present on that occasion.

PETER GREEN, son of Nathaniel Green, was one of the earliest lawyers in the State. He was born in Worcester, Mass., 1746; opened an office in Concord, 1767. He was chosen State counselor in 1788 and 1789. He died March 27, 1798, aged fifty-two.

HON. TIMOTHY WALKER was the only son of Rev. Timothy Walker, and was born upon the paternal farm in Rumford, June 27, 1737. He is said, when a boy, to have been a great favorite of the Indians living in the vicinity. Entertaining a deep reverence and affection for his father, they naturally inclined to him, and, as tradition says, were wont to take him on visits to their wigwags, assuring his mother, who did not altogether relish such civilities, that "Indians no hurt minister's papoose." This promise was never broken, and he was always returned in safety, although oftentimes modified much in appearance, from the Indians having painted his face in glowing colors, and garlanded his head with gaudy feathers.

His father gave early attention to his education, and sent him, when fifteen years of age, to Harvard College. He remained there during the regular course and graduated in 1756. The two years ensuing he spent in teaching school at Bradford, Mass. Upon leaving Bradford, having in the mean time chosen theology as his profession, he commenced a course of study and pursued it most probably with his father. Having completed his theological studies, he was examined at the association meeting in Haverhill, Mass., and licensed to preach September 11, 1759.

Mr. Walker was never a settled pastor, but preached occasionally for about six years. During the last absence of his father in England, in 1762-63, he supplied his pulpit in Rumford. He preached many times from 1761 to 1764 in Rindge, where he received a call to settle, which he declined. In the summer of 1765 he preached six Sabbaths at Pigwacket (now Fryeburg), Me., which seems to have been about the last of his preaching, soon after which he relinquished the profession of the ministry.

From his diary it appears that on the 25th of November, 1765, he concluded a partnership agreement with Colonel Andrew McMillan, and engaged with him in trade in Rumford, in the southerly part of the village. They continued in business together but for a single year. Soon after their separation Mr. Walker opened a store near the residence of his father, and there continued his mercantile pursuits until about the beginning of the Revolution. During this period he was also engaged in the manufacture of potash, which was disposed of in the lower towns of the province. Some portions of the works erected for this purpose remained until within a recent period, the well, stoned up from the bottom, being in good condition to-day.

Mr. Walker was married, some time previous to 1764, to his cousin, Susannah Burbeen, daughter of Rev. Joseph Burbeen, of Woburn, Mass., who died in Concord, September 28, 1828, at the age of eighty-two. They had fourteen children, ten of whom lived to mature life.

Upon the commencement of hostilities with Great Britain, Mr. Walker, like his father, warmly espoused the patriot cause, and seconded with zeal the measures adopted for the security of American liberty. His whole time seems now to have been devoted to the service of his country. The town of Concord chose him a delegate to the Fourth Provincial Congress, which assembled at Exeter, on the 17th of May, 1775, and he took an active interest in the very important measures which came before that body.

On the 20th of May he was appointed a member of the Committee of Supplies, constituted to act in conjunction with the Committee of Safety, and procure supplies for the New Hampshire troops, at this time in the vicinity of Boston. On the 20th of August he, with Ichabod Rawlings, Esq., was sent to the army to ascertain the losses sustained at the battle of Bunker Hill by each of the officers and soldiers of the New Hampshire forces, and in behalf of the province to make them compensation, as well as to secure to them supplies and advance a month's pay to such as had enlisted in the Continental service. The action of the Provincial Congress upon the report subsequently made of their doings affords evidence that those duties were performed to their acceptance.

About the 1st of September of this year the New Hampshire Congress passed an act creating four regiments of Minute-Men equal in number to about one-fourth part of the then existing militia of the province. These were to meet to drill once in every two weeks, and to be ready for service at a moment's warning. Mr. Walker was commissioned colonel of the Third Regiment September 5, 1775, and exerted himself to train and fit for duty the forces under his command.

From the 4th to the 16th of October we find him acting as paymaster of the New Hampshire troops at Winter Hill, commanded by Colonels Stark, Poor and Reid, and again, on the 27th of December, he was appointed by the Fifth Provincial Congress paymaster of the same forces.

The Fifth Provincial Congress was succeeded, January 6, 1776, by the first House of Representatives, organized under the temporary constitution and composed of the same members. Its journal shows Colonel Walker to have been one of the committee of three appointed by the House "to make a draft of the declaration of this General Assembly for independence of the United Colonies." The committee reported a draft June 15, 1776, which was at once adopted and a copy of it sent to the Continental Congress, then in session at Philadelphia.

At a date not long subsequent to this event Colonel Walker was made one of the committee to devise a systematic plan of finance, by means of which the payment of the debts of the State might be provided for and funds raised for present and future purposes.

When, on the 14th of March, 1776, the Continental Congress sent out the Association Test, to be signed by all friendly to the patriot cause, Colonel Walker most cheerfully signed the copy sent to Concord, and it was through his influence, in part at least, that, of the one hundred and fifty-six to whom it was presented for signature in that town, not one declined subscribing to it his name.

Colonel Walker was this year a member of the Committee of Safety and served in that capacity until the 20th of June, 1776. During the next three years—viz., from December 18, 1776, to December 15, 1779—he was a member of the Council, associated with Meshech Weare, Josiah Bartlett, Nicholas Gilman and others of like character,—men of the purest patriotism, whose names New Hampshire will ever cherish. On the 26th of March, 1777, he was chosen by the Legislature a delegate to the Continental Congress, and again, at three subsequent times, in 1778, 1782 and 1784, but it is not certain that he ever attended. He was sent from Concord a delegate to each of the New Hampshire Constitutional Conventions of 1778 and 1781, and also to that of 1791, to revise the constitution.

In 1777 he retired from the more stirring scenes connected with the war, and accepted the office of a justice of the Court of Common Pleas, which he continued to hold until 1809, being for the last five years a chief justice. The courts were held alternately at Exeter and Portsmouth, and Judge Walker made his journeys to and from those places on horseback.

Upon the organization of the Republican party in New Hampshire, in 1798, Judge Walker was selected for its first candidate for Governor, and was run against John Taylor Gilman, who had already been the incumbent of the office in previous years, and was one of the strongest men of the Federal party, at that time in large majority throughout the State. Governor Gilman was the successful candidate, receiving nine thousand three hundred and ninety-seven votes out of the whole number of twelve thousand one hundred and fifty-three thrown, and Judge Walker seven hundred and thirty-four. Twice afterwards—viz., in 1800 and 1801—he was the Republican candidate for Governor, receiving the former year six thousand and thirty-nine, and the latter five thousand two hundred and forty-nine votes, the whole number of votes cast being between sixteen thousand and seventeen thousand.

Although mingling largely in State affairs, Mr. Walker did not withhold himself from a participation in the management of the more limited business of his native town. In this sphere he was also prominent. He was moderator of the annual town-meeting in 1779 and every year afterwards, with the exception of ten, until 1809, serving in that capacity no less than twenty-one years. He was also town clerk from 1769 up to and including 1777, and one of the selectmen of the town for twenty-five years between 1769 and 1802, being chairman of the board every year during this period except four.

He ever took a lively interest in everything tending to advance the prosperity of Concord. Being a representative to the Legislature, which was holden at Exeter in 1781, and finding some dissatisfaction among the members relative to accommodations furnished there, he proposed to them that if they would adjourn to meet at Concord, they should be as well served and at one-half of the expense. The proposal was accepted, and upon his return home he informed his townsmen of the manner in which he had committed them, and they at once pledged themselves to make good his engagement to the best of their several abilities. The next year the Legislature assembled in Concord for the first time, meeting first at the meeting-house, but adjourning, immediately after coming together, to a hall prepared for them in a building now standing near the southwest corner of Main and Penacook Streets.

In 1798 we find him greatly interested in the improvement of the sacred music of the town, and the records of the Concord Musical Association show him to have been its first president. Indeed, Judge Walker seems to have been intimately connected with most of the Concord enterprises of his day. He was one of the original proprietors of Federal bridge, which was incorporated in 1795, and crossed the Merrimack at East Concord village. Three years after, he became one of the members of "The Proprietors of the Concord Library."

In 1806 the Concord Bank was incorporated by the Legislature, and irreconcilable differences of opinion arising at the meeting of the grantees for organization, two banks with different officers, but bearing the same name, were organized under the same charter,—one located at the north end and the other at the southerly end of Main Street. Each did a successful business for twenty years, at the expiration of which period they were organized under separate charters. Of the upper bank Judge Walker was the first president, and continued for several years. Upon most, or all, of the old subscription papers for procuring money for local purposes, which have been preserved, his name stands prominent, evincing his constant interest in the public enterprises of his native town.

In 1774, largely through his influence and efforts, a township of land upon the Androscoggin River, in Maine, was granted by the General Court of Massachusetts to the proprietors of Concord or their descendants, to indemnify them, in part, for expenses and losses incurred in consequence of the long controversy with the alleged proprietors of Bow. This grant afforded good lands upon favorable terms to the children of the original settlers of Concord, and many emigrated to that locality and established the present town of Rumford. Of these lands Judge Walker eventually became a large proprietor and afforded substantial aid to many young families of limited means in establishing themselves in life. Some of these lands descended to his children and to his children's children, while some are still held by his great-grandchildren, who are to-day among the prosperous farmers of Rumford.

Notwithstanding his multitudinous avocations of a more or less public character, Judge Walker always kept and managed with care the large farm left him by his father. He increased, rather than diminished, its original area. Situated, as this was, upon the very edge of the village, it afforded him a convenient residence, and at the plain mansion which sheltered him and his family he dispensed, for a long series of years, a plain hospitality to multitudes of friends and acquaintances who sought his society.

"My son, you must not pull down the old barn in my day," he said, on one occasion, to his youngest son and successor upon the farm. "You can build as many new ones as you like. That was Parson Walker's barn; it has never failed to afford shelter and feed to the horse of the visitor who has knocked at our door; let it stand as long as I last." And a new barn went up, but "Parson Walker's barn" remained standing until the worthy judge had rested from his labors a half-score of years and more.

In person, Judge Walker was of medium size, being about five feet ten inches in height and having rounded and well-developed limbs. In later life he was a little inclined to fulness. He had a placid, open countenance, a nose somewhat prominent and a full, blue eye. His walk was erect and his bearing dignified. He possessed an active, vigorous mind and a well-balanced judgment. He had keen perceptive faculties, which, aided by the experience gained by long intercourse with men, enabled him to form quickly correct opinions of the characters and motives of those with whom he came in contact. While cautious, he was yet of a sanguine temperament; hopeful, also, when others despaired, and rarely given to despondency. He had a cheerful disposition; he was reasonable in his expectations and charitable in his judgments. Careful in the choice of his plans, as well as patient in their execution, he was generally successful. Democratic and affable, he was on familiar terms with all about him. Rejoicing in the welfare of his townsmen, he was ever ready to do them kind services. He manifested a particular interest in the young men of the town, and not a few, just starting in life, received from him counsel or encouragement or pecuniary aid, which assisted them greatly in overcoming first obstacles and nerved them to exertions which secured the foundations of future prosperity.

When at length old age came upon him, he met it cheerfully and manfully. For several years previous to 1822 he had been somewhat infirm, but still enjoyed life in a good degree. His children were prosperous and respectably settled in their different avocations, a part of them near about him. He had frequent evidence of the respect entertained for him by his fellow-citizens; he had an inward consciousness of having done what he could be useful in his day and generation; he had entire confidence in the revelations of the Sacred Scriptures and an humble hope that the infinite atonement of the Son of God might attach to him. On the 5th of May, 1822, in the bosom of his family, he died, a virtuous and a happy old man, in the eighty-fifth year of his age. Truly, "The hoary head is a crown of glory if it be found in the way of righteousness."

EDWARD ST. LOE LIVERMORE, son of Hon. Samuel Livermore, born in Londonderry, 1761, entered upon his profession in Concord, 1783; solicitor for Rockingham County, 1791-93; judge in the Superior Court of Judicature, 1797-99; then resided at Portsmouth. He was also member of Congress from Massachusetts. He was the father of the celebrated Harriet Livermore, born in Concord April 14, 1788. He died at Tewksbury, Mass., September 15, 1832, aged seventy-one.

THOMAS W. THOMPSON, son of Deacon Thomas Thompson, of Boston, born March 10, 1766; graduated at Harvard University, 1786; was tutor in college, 1789; aid to General Lincoln at the time of "Shay's Rebellion;" commenced the practice of law at Salisbury, 1791; representative from that town in the State Legislature; chosen representative to Congress, 1805-07; in 1810 treasurer of the State, when he moved to Concord; speaker of the House in the State Legislature, 1813 and 1814; Senator in Congress, 1814-17; elected trustee of Dartmouth College in 1801, which office he held till his death. Mr. Thompson was an accomplished gentleman, distinguished for the dignity and urbanity of his manners, for integrity and piety. He held the office of deacon in the First Church in Concord from 1818 till his death. He died of pulmonary consumption, October 10, 1821, aged fifty-five years.

ARTHUR LIVERMORE, judge, brother of Edward St. Loë Livermore, opened an office in Concord in 1792; soon moved to Chester, thence to Holderness. He died July, 1853, aged eighty-seven years.

SAMUEL GREEN, judge, son of Nathaniel Green, born March 7, 1779, read law in the office of his brother, Peter Green, Esq.; commenced practice in Concord, 1793; associate justice of the Superior Court from 1819 to 1830, when he retired on account of the constitutional limit of age. He was then appointed to a clerkship at Washington, where he continued till his death, March, 1851, aged eighty-one years.

PHILIP CARRIGAIN, son of Dr. Philip Carrigain, was born in Concord in 1772, and graduated at Dartmouth College in 1794; studied law with Arthur Livermore, Esq., and settled in practice in his native town. He was Secretary of State, clerk of the Senate and was often employed in public business. He died March 15, 1842, aged seventy years.

MOODY KENT, son of Joseph Kent, was born in Newbury, Mass., May 22, 1779; graduated at Harvard College, 1801; admitted to the bar in 1804; practiced in Deerfield nearly five years; came to Concord in September, 1809, where he remained in practice till 1832, when he withdrew from business.

ISAAC GATES, graduated at Harvard College, 1802; was in Concord a short time in 1814; died in Harvard, Mass., in November, 1852.

LYMAN B. WALKER, from Gilford, while Attorney-General of the State, from 1843 to —, resided in Concord.

SAMUEL FLETCHER, born in Plymouth, July 31, 1785; graduated at Dartmouth College, 1810; opened an office in Concord, 1815; trustee of Dartmouth College; trustee and treasurer of Phillips Academy and Theological Seminary, at Andover, from 1841 to 1850.

NATHANIEL GOOKIN UPHAM was born in Deerfield, N. H., January 8, 1801. His parents removed to Rochester the following year. He pursued his studies preparatory to college at Exeter Academy; entered Dartmouth in 1816; was a faithful student, and graduated with honor in 1820.

Immediately after his graduation, Mr. Upham commenced the study of law. After being admitted to the bar, he practiced his profession in Bristol until 1829, when he removed to Concord.

Four years later Mr. Upham was appointed one of the associate justices of the Superior Court of New Hampshire. This honor was the more complimentary as he was only thirty-two years of age. With the single exception of Hon. Levi Woodbury, he was the youngest man who had been placed upon the bench of New Hampshire. He discharged with faithfulness and ability the duties devolving upon him until 1843, when he resigned and was appointed superintendent of the Concord Railroad. Some years later, the business of the road having greatly increased, he relinquished the superintendency and was made president. In the management of its affairs for twenty-three years he used great wisdom and judgment, giving to it his best thoughts, his legal knowledge and experience, ever planning wisely and successfully for the enlargement of its business, with remarkable prudence, foresight and perseverance. He held the office of president till 1866, when his connection with the railroad ceased.

In 1853, Judge Upham was appointed commissioner, on the part of the government of the United States, to confer with a similar commissioner appointed by the English government, and to decide upon certain claims brought by citizens of either country against the government of the other. These claims had been growing in number and amount for forty years. This commission met in London in September, 1853, Edmund Hornby, Esq., acting on the part of Great Britain. They considered all claims presented, pronouncing upon each a deliberate and final judgment, and in accordance with these decisions the claims were paid by the respective governments, amounting in the aggregate to many millions of dollars.

In 1862, Judge Upham was called to act in a similar service, that of umpire in the commission appointed by government for the settlement of claims between the United States and New Granada.

In politics Judge Upham was a Democrat for many years. Though decided in his political principles, he was not a politician. His influence was exercised rather by private suggestions and the weight of his general character.

In 1850 he was chairman of the business committee of the convention called to amend the Constitution of New Hampshire.

In 1865 and 1866 he was a member of the Legislature, and earnest in advocating the proposed amendment of the National Constitution. He was also at this time chairman of the committee to remodel the State House.

In the struggle between the North and the South Judge Upham took an open and decided stand at once on the side of the government, in the exercise of all the influence he could exert, by addresses delivered on public occasions, as well as by letters and essays published in the leading newspapers. He accepted heartily the emancipation proclamation, both as to its expediency and constitutionality as a war measure.

There was in Judge Upham, beneath all the business and professional life, a strong literary taste. He wrote with ease, and wrote much. His style was clear and forcible, at times eloquent, and many valuable articles from his pen were published.

For more than forty years he resided in Concord, and his name is associated with the growth and prosperity of the city. He was interested in all wise measures for the public good, and his was a leading mind in devising methods of improvement, and very efficient in carrying them into effect. His fellow-citizens learned to place great confidence in his judgment, acknowledging his prudence and foresight, knowing that his opinions were given after a careful consideration of the subject. He was a man of uprightness, true to his engagements, faithful to every contract, doing what he regarded as right in the sight of God and man. He was a leading member of the South Congregational Church from its organization, and did much for its stability and prosperity.

Judge Upham was twice married, first to Miss Betsy W. Lord, of Kennebunkport, Me. She died in Concord, August 17, 1833, leaving two children, both of whom survive,—Rev. Nathaniel L. Upham, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Joseph B. Walker, of Concord. His second wife was Miss Eliza W. Burnham, of Pembroke. The children of this marriage are not living. An infant daughter died in 1844, and Mr. Francis A. Upham, April 3, 1867, aged twenty-nine years. Mrs. E. W. Upham died April 14, 1882.

"But the most honored life must come to a close." Never a strong or robust man, yet with prudence and care he was ever able to perform well the duties of the hour. A few days' illness terminated a useful life, and Nathaniel Gookin Upham died December 11, 1869, aged sixty-nine.

STEPHEN C. BADGER, a native of Warner, born April 12, 1797; graduated at Dartmouth College, 1823; admitted to the bar, 1826; came to Concord from New London, 1833; was clerk of the courts of Merrimack County from 1834 to 1846; police magistrate several years previous to the adoption of the city charter.

DAVID PILLSBURY, born in Raymond, whence his father soon removed to Candia; a graduate of Dartmouth College, 1827; practiced law in Chester from 1830 to 1854, when he opened an office in Concord. Several years was a major-general in the New Hampshire militia.

HAMILTON HUTCHINS, A.M., son of the late Abel Hutchins, born July 10, 1805; graduated at Dartmouth College, 1827; admitted to the bar in Concord, 1830; was highly esteemed for his amiable temper and gentlemanly manners.

GEORGE MINOT, born in Bristol; graduated at Dartmouth College, 1828; admitted to the bar, 1831; practiced in his profession at Gilmanton, Bristol and Concord. He was cashier of the Mechanics' Bank in Concord.

CALVIN AINSWORTH, a native of Littleton, born August 22, 1807; admitted to the bar, 1835; came to Concord from Littleton, 1843; register of probate for Merrick County five years, and first police justice of the city of Concord, 1853.

EPHRAIM EATON, a native of Candia; graduated at Dartmouth College, 1833; studied law with Samuel Fletcher, Esq., and opened an office in Concord, 1837, where he continued in business until 1853.

NEHEMIAH BUTLER, born at Pelham, February 22, 1824; studied law with Asa Fowler, Esq., of Concord, and at the Law School in Harvard University; commenced practice at Fisherville, 1843; was appointed clerk of the Superior Court and Court of Common Pleas for the county of Merrimack, and removed to Concord, 1852, where he resided until his death.

HON. EZEKIEL WEBSTER, elder brother of Daniel, was born in Salisbury, April 11, 1780. The first nineteen years of his life were spent on his father's farm, and it was settled in the mind of Judge Webster that he was to remain at home and be a farmer, while Daniel, who had less physical strength in childhood, who seems to have had little inclination for farming, was to be educated to one of the learned professions.

Daniel entered college in 1797. It troubled him, however, to think that Ezekiel was at home plodding on the farm while he was obtaining an education. He says in his autobiography,—

"I soon began to grow uneasy at my brother's situation. His prospects were not promising, and he himself felt and saw this, and had aspirations beyond his condition. Nothing was proposed, however, by way of change of plan, till two years later.

"In the spring of 1799, at the May vacation, being then a sophomore, I visited my family, and then held serious consultation with my brother. I remember well when we went to bed we began to talk matters over, and that we rose after sunrise without having shut our eyes. But we had settled our plan.

"He had thought of going into some new part of the country. That was discussed and disagreed to. All the pros and cons of the question of remaining at home were weighed and considered, and when our council broke up, or, rather, got up, its result was that I should propose to my father that he, late as it was, should be sent to school, and also to college. This we knew would be a trying thing to my father and mother and two unmarried sisters. My father was growing old, his health not good and his circumstances far from easy. The farm was to be carried on, and the family taken care of, and there was nobody to do all this but him who was regarded as the main stay, that is to say, Ezekiel. However, I ventured on the negotiation, and it was carried, as other things often are, by the earnest and sanguine manner of youth. I told him that I was unhappy at my brother's prospects. For myself I saw my way to knowledge, respectability and self-protection, but as to him, all looked the other way, that I would keep school, and get along as well as I could—be more than four years in getting through college, if necessary—provided he also could be sent to study.

"He said, at once, he lived but for his children; that he had but little, and on that little he put no value, except so far as it might be useful to them; that to carry us both through college would take all he was worth; that for himself he was willing to run the risk, but that this was a serious matter to our mother and two unmarried sisters; that we must settle the matter with them, and if their consent was obtained, he would trust to Providence and get along as well as he could."

The father laid the case before the mother. "The farm is already mortgaged, and if we send Ezekiel to college, it will take all we have; but the boys think they can take care of us," he said.

It did not take the strong-hearted, sagacious woman long to decide the matter: "We can trust the boys."

The question was settled. Daniel went back to Hanover, while Ezekiel went, bundle in hand, to Dr. Wood's, and began the study of Latin. He spent two terms at a school kept at Salisbury, South Road village, and returned again to Dr. Wood's, where his expenses were about one dollar per week.

While thus studying and taking recreation beneath the magnificent beeches that stood before the house, he kept up a frequent correspondence with Daniel at Hanover. Ezekiel distrusted his ability to get on. Daniel made this reply to him, in a letter written April 25, 1800,—

"You tell me that you have difficulties to encounter which I know nothing of. What do you mean, Ezekiel? Do you mean to flatter? That don't become you. Or do you think you are inferior to me in natural abilities? If so, be assured you greatly mistake. Therefore, in the future say in your letters to me, 'I am superior to you in natural endowments—I will know more in one year than you do now, and more in six than you ever will.'"

"I should not resent the language,—I should be very well pleased in hearing it; but be assured, as mighty as you are, your great prowess shall never insure you a victory without a contest."

With such words Daniel endeavored to cheer the struggling elder brother.

In November, 1802, Daniel was at home in Salisbury, while Ezekiel was struggling with poverty at Hanover. Funds were getting low in the Webster homestead. Daniel writes under date of November 4th,—

"Now, Zeke, you will not read half a sentence, no, not one syllable before you have thoroughly searched this sheet for scrip; but my word for it, you'll find no scrip here. We held a smid-drum this morning on the subject of cash. Could not but upon any way to get you any. Just before we went away to hang ourselves through disappointment it came into our heads that next week might do. The truth is, father had an execution against Hubbard, of N. Chester, for about one hundred dollars. The money was collecting, and just ready to drop into the hands of the creditors, when Hubbard suddenly died. This, you see, stays the execution till the long process of administering is completed.

"I have now by me two cents in lawful federal currency. Next week I shall send them, if they be all. They will buy a pipe; with a pipe you can smoke; smoking inspires wisdom; wisdom is allied to fortune; from fortune it is but one step to station; and station never parts for this world's goods;—so perhaps my two cents, by this process, may put you quite at ease about cash. . . ."

"We are all here just in the old way, always behind and lacking. Boys digging potatoes with frozen fingers, and girls washing without wood."

Two days later Ezekiel writes to Daniel. It is not an answer; the letters doubtless passed each other on the way. Ezekiel, after giving a just criticism on the writings of Horace, thus closes his epistle,—

"These cold, frosty mornings very sensibly inform me that I want a warm coat-out. I wish, Daniel, it might be convenient to send me cloth for one; otherwise I shall be necessitated to purchase one here. I do not care what color it is, or what kind of cloth it is—anything that will keep the frost out. Some kind of shaggy cloth, I think, would be cheapest. Beason Pettingill has written, offering me fourteen dollars a month to keep school. I believe I shall take it."

"Money, Daniel, money." As I was walking down to the office after a letter, I happened to have one cent, which is the only money I have had since the second day after I came on. It is a fact, Dan, that I was called on for a dollar, where I owed it, and borrowed it, and have borrowed it four times since to pay those I borrowed of."

From a paragraph in a letter written by Daniel to his classmate, Bingham, of Lemper, it would appear that Ezekiel taught school in Sanbornton in December, 1803.—

"Zek is at Sanbornton. He comes home once in a while, sits down before the kitchen fire, to gaze to p. he and fiddle the auditions. I know what is coming, and am mute. At length he puts his feet into the oven's mouth, places his right eyebrow up on his forehead, & begins a very pathetic lecture on the evils of poverty. It is like church service. He does all the talking, and I only say "Amen! amen!"

Ezekiel's funds failed in the spring of 1804, and by permission of the faculty he left Dartmouth, went to Boston, where he purchased the good-will of a private school, which he taught with great success till April, 1805. He was graduated at Dartmouth meanwhile, in 1804, having spent but three years in college.

While earning a livelihood by teaching, he studied law with Governor Sullivan, then Attorney-General of Massachusetts. In 1806 he studied with Parker Noyes, Esq., of Salisbury, next door to Judge Webster's house. Daniel, having decided to leave Boscawen and take up his residence in Portsmouth, turned over his practice to Ezekiel, who entered upon his profession as a lawyer in Boscawen in the month of September, 1807. His legal knowledge and moral worth soon became known, and acquired for him an extensive business. He was not ambitious to excel as an orator, and it was only the urgent appeal of duty or the imperative obligation to his profession that overcame his instinctive aversion to a crowd, and called forth his highest powers of eloquence. He never encouraged litigation, but always used his personal influence to bring about a private adjustment of most of the contested matters originating in the town. He repeatedly represented the town in the Legislature. He was elected a Federalist by his father, a Whig of 1776. He was old enough to remember the administration of Washington, and believed with all his heart in the political principles adhered to by the Federal party, which was in a minority in the State after he came into public life. This adherence to political principles prevented his election to Congress, and from holding other offices in the gift of the people.

Although devoted to his profession, he loved agriculture, and retained the homestead at Salisbury after his father's death, which occurred in 1806. He was one of the proctors and an active member of the Merrimack Agricultural Society, and was active in advancing improved methods of husbandry.

He was simple in his tastes, kind, genial, polite, and a perfect gentleman. He attended to all the details of life, served as assessor in the religious society, and as committeeman for the school district.

He looked upon Dr. Wood as a loving child looks upon a devoted parent. A member of the bar spending a Sabbath with Mr. Webster, and hearing Dr. Wood, took occasion to disparage the sermon. Mr. Webster replied, pointedly and with spirit, that he doubted the gentleman's ability to appreciate the performance. He was ever Dr. Wood's confidential friend and adviser. Together they planned the establishing of Boscawen Academy. Mr. Webster contributed fully three hundred dollars to the institution, and by his heartiness and zeal stimulated his fellow-townsmen to carry on the project, while Daniel, then almost in the zenith of his fame, contributed the bell.

He was an exemplary member of the church, and his influence was ever on the side of right. He was a constant attendant upon religious services, and always maintained religious devotions in his home.

On the 10th of April, 1829, he was making a plea before the Merrimack bar at Concord. He was standing erect. The court-room was crowded, for whenever the lawyer from Boscawen made a plea the people flocked to hear him. The court, jurors, lawyers and audience were listening to his words, and noticing the play of his clear-cut features and the manly dignity of his commanding presence. He was speaking with vigor and earnestness. His periods were rounded as usual, his utterance clear, his enunciation perfect. He closed one branch of his argument, uttered the concluding sentence and the final word distinctly and with his accustomed cadence, his form erect as ever, his eyes clear and bright, his arms hanging naturally by his side, and then, without a murmur, a groan, a lisp, raising not a hand, clutching at nothing, with no bending of a joint or quivering of the eyelids, he fell backward upon the floor—dead! With the quickness of the lightning's flash, from the full vigor of a manly life, at the age of forty-nine, he died—one of the most remarkable deaths on record.

His funeral was attended on the following Sunday by a vast concourse of people, and he was mourned by the entire community.

A writer in a public journal describes his appearance.—

"He was nearly six feet in height, finely proportioned, with a very commanding presence. His was a magnificent form, crowned with a princely head, that in his last years was thickly covered with snowy hair. His complexion was just the opposite of Daniel's. His countenance was open as the day; his heart was warm and affectionate; his manners kind and courteous."

Daniel, in a letter written in 1846, thus spoke of him,—

"He appeared to me the finest human form that ever I laid eyes on. I saw him in his collar, a finest cheek, a complexion clear as the heavenly light."

One who saw him at church, on a cold day the winter before, speaks of his appearance. It was before the introduction of a stove. Mr. Webster came in, wearing a jacket, or "Spencer," as the garment was called, over his coat, bringing a foot-stove in his hand, which, with princely politeness, he placed at the feet of Mrs. Webster, and then took his seat, and joined reverently in the worship.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

He held important trusts: was trustee of Dartmouth College from 1819 till his death, and repeatedly represented the town in the Legislature.

DANIEL WEBSTER,¹ whose fame is world wide, lived the earlier half of his life in New Hampshire. The son of a Revolutionary patriot, Capt. Ebenezer Webster, and of New Hampshire descent for four generations, he was born in Salisbury, January 18, 1782. A feeble constitution pointed him out as fitter for education than for the sturdy labors of the farm, and with self-denial on the part of his parents, and struggle on his own part, he accomplished his wishes, and graduated at Dartmouth College in 1801 with honor. His legal studies he completed under the direction of Hon. T. W. Thompson, of Salisbury, and Hon. Christopher Gore, of Boston, where he was admitted an attorney in 1805. He took up his residence at once in Boseawen, and remained two years a close student of his profession and of general literature. In 1807 he made Portsmouth his place of abode, and lived there until 1816, when he removed to Boston. While a resident of New Hampshire he served two terms as representative in Congress.

Mr. Webster acquired a high reputation as a lawyer and a statesman (for he never was a politician) before he quitted his native State. When he went to Portsmouth, at the age of only twenty-five years, he was a mature man, armed at every point for the battle of life. Mr. Mason, then in the prime of his unrivaled powers, describes his first encounter with Webster. He had heard of him as a formidable antagonist, and found on trial that he was not over-estimated. Young and inexperienced as he was, Webster entered the arena with Mason and Sullivan and Bartlett, and bore away his full share of the honors. And before he quitted his New Hampshire home his reputation as a lawyer and as an advocate of eloquence and power ranked with the very highest in the land.

Those who heard his addresses to the jury in his early prime testify that none of his later great efforts surpassed them—if, indeed, they equaled them—as examples of earnest, impassioned forensic oratory. There was a youthful brilliancy and bloom about those earlier productions that is not found in the stately works of his maturer years.

In those days, when practitioners made reputations by special pleading and sharp practice, Mr. Webster relied little upon mere technicalities or adroit management. He tried his causes upon their merits, and with his logical power and eloquent tongue made short work of trumped-up claims and dishonest defenses. Many traditions attest his commanding influence over court and jury at this period of his career.

Without being authentic in all particulars, they all concur in demonstrating that on no legal practitioner of his time was the popular confidence and admiration so universally bestowed as on Webster.

The events in the life of Mr. Webster from the time he re-entered Congress from Massachusetts are too familiar to require special repetition here. He continued in public life, with the exception of very brief intervals, up to the time of his decease in 1852. He was a senator in Congress for seventeen years. He was twice Secretary of State, and died in possession of that office. Every public position that he held he adorned and dignified by eminent patriotic service.

Now that nearly a generation has passed since Mr. Webster's death, his character is beginning to be estimated more justly, and the value of the work he did for the country has been tested. We see that his sagacity and foresight were far beyond those of his time; and his apprehensions for the safety of the Union were well founded; that his exhortations to his countrymen to stand by the flag were honest, necessary, and vitalizing to the patriotism of the people.

The petty assaults that seemed temporarily to obscure his fame have had their brief day, and posterity will recognize the true grandeur of the man, and value at their just worth the great deeds of his lifetime. As a statesman and a diplomatist, as a vindicator of the Constitution, as a lawyer and an orator, and, most of all, as a patriot, the country will be fortunate if the future shall furnish his peer.

SYLVESTER DANA graduated at Dartmouth College in 1839. He is son of the late Rev. Sylvester Dana, and is a native of Oxford. He studied law with Pierce & Fowler and at the Harvard Law School, and was admitted to the bar in 1842. He soon after opened an office in Concord, where he has since resided. He is the present police justice of Concord.

JOSIAH MINOT graduated at Dartmouth College in 1837. He studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1840, and opened an office in Concord. He was appointed, in 1852, judge of the Court of Common Pleas, which he resigned, in 1855, to accept the appointment of commissioner of pensions. He is still in practice in Concord.

ARTHUR FLETCHER was a native of Bridgewater. He graduated at Yale College in 1836, and was admitted to the bar in Concord in 1849, where he remained in practice until his death.

HENRY P. ROLFE is one of the older attorneys of Concord. He is a son of Benjamin Rolfe, and was born in Boseawen, February 12, 1823. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1848, and in 1851 commenced the practice of law in Concord, where he has since resided.

HENRY ADAMS BELLOWS,² chief justice of New Hampshire, was born at Walpole, N. H., October 25, 1803, and died at Concord, March 11, 1873.

¹By Hon. Charles H. Bell.

²By Daniel F. Secord.

On the paternal side he was descended from Gen. Benjamin Bellows, one of the first settlers of Walpole, and on the maternal side his immediate ancestors were members of the Adams and Boylston families of Massachusetts, his grandfather, Rev. Zabdiel Adams, of Lunenburg, Mass., being a double cousin to President John Adams.

His father dying, the care of the family devolved upon him at the age of sixteen years, and for two years he was engaged in teaching, after which he read law in the office of Hon. William C. Bradley, of Westminster, Vt., and commenced practice in Walpole shortly after, removing to Littleton in 1828 and thence to Concord in 1850, where he continued in active practice until he was appointed an associate justice, in 1859, and on the resignation of Judge Perley, in September, 1869, he succeeded him as chief justice, which office he held at the time of his death.

He represented Littleton in the legislature in 1839, and was one of the representatives of Ward 5, of Concord, in 1856-57. While occupying a seat on the bench he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from Dartmouth College.

Judge Bellows was a sound lawyer and an excellent judge. He was one of the purest-minded men who ever held public office in the State; a large-hearted man in thoughts and deeds, taking an active interest in benevolent enterprises. A public-spirited citizen, genial and courteous in his intercourse with men, he enjoyed the respect and esteem of his associates of the bar and bench and the community at large.

WILLIAM HENRY BARTLETT.¹—Beneath the shadow of Kearsage Mountain, in the historic town of Salisbury,—the home of the Websters and Eastmans and Bartletts and Pettingills,—William Henry Bartlett was born, August 29, 1827. He was the youngest child of Samuel Colcord and Eleanor Pettingill Bartlett. His father was noted for his vigorous mind, his great activity and strict integrity; his mother for the sweetness of her character, her gentleness and dignity of manner, and strong, womanly sense; both for their pure Christian lives and characters. He was the nephew of Ichabod Bartlett, of Portsmouth, the contemporary at the bar of Mason and Smith and Webster, and the peer of either in learning and eloquence. The son of such parents could not fail to receive the impress of their virtues and characters. He was recognized by all as an interesting child, and a boy of great promise, both in mind and character. Without precocity, he was singularly quick of apprehension, and equally patient and painstaking. While in the common school, and afterwards at the academy, he would come with his arithmetic or algebra, and, of his own accord, sit by the hour working at his problems, till it was found necessary to send him to his sports. He never lost that habit of protracted toil to the end of his life. Perhaps the end was hastened by the excess. Meanwhile, from his childhood, his scholarship was of the highest order. In his earlier school-days he was associated in classes with much older persons than he, and proved himself fully their equal. But neither then nor afterwards did his proficiency create in him the slightest aspect of arrogance or conceit; but he remained to the end as modest as he was bright and strong.

His childhood and boyhood were marked by an extremely kind, obliging and winning disposition. At home he was helpful and uniformly cheerful and obliging. It was a marked and peculiar trait in his character, and steadily deepened into that thoughtful kindness which, in after years, gained him such unbroken and universal love.

Young Bartlett entered Meriden Academy at the age of thirteen, and at fifteen had completed his preparation for college. His friends considered him too young; but not seeing how else to occupy him, consented, and in the fall of 1842 he entered the freshman class in this college. The modest and diffident Bartlett—the youngest member, with possibly a single exception—soon became, by universal and cheerful acknowledgment, the leader of his class in point of scholarship. We were classmates; and I have no hesitation in saying, I do not know that I ever met a finer scholar, and seldom have I encountered a brighter or stronger intellect. He had a singular quickness to perceive, a powerful memory to retain, and a breadth and grasp that subordinated every detail to the whole, and extracted order out of complication. The modesty with which he bore his academic honors was only equaled by the sincere affection with which he was regarded by his classmates.

At the request of his brother Samuel, he left college during his sophomore year, and pursued his studies with him at Monson, Mass. There he remained nearly a year, applying himself with his usual diligence, and endearing himself in the community, so that the pleasant memory of him there has not been lost to the present time. He entered the next college class, graduating in the first rank in 1847. The "Prophetic Power of Genius" was the subject of his oration at commencement. Those who knew him best felt that no prophet was needed to estimate his maturer character or to anticipate his eminent success in whatever calling he might pursue.

At the time of his graduation his brother Samuel filled a professor's chair in Western Reserve College; and, as he was still quite young, it was thought best that he should spend a year of more general study before entering upon his professional career. He accordingly joined a class of graduate students in that college, and spent a highly profitable year in the study of history, the German language and the Greek dramatic poets. Here again his scholarship and personal qualities made a deep and permanent impression on his teachers and associates, so that they ever remembered him with a warm personal interest.

¹ From an eulogy delivered by Hon. Isaac W. Smith, before the alumni of Dartmouth College at commencement, June 23, 1880.

He entered upon the study of the law in Concord in the office of Chief Justice Perley in 1848, and remained with Judge Perley till he went upon the bench, in 1850, and afterwards completed his course of preparation with Chief Justice Bellows, then in practice at Concord, and was admitted to the bar in Merrimack County July 9, 1851. How he impressed those eminent jurists by his fine scholarship, studious habits, ingenuous disposition and legal attainments is best told in the language of Judge Perley, written soon after the death of Judge Bartlett: "Few men," wrote Judge Perley, "have excelled him in quickness of apprehension; and this was a general trait of his mind, observable in whatever he undertook,—in his classical and mathematical studies, in the law, and even in any amusement or recreation in which he might be led to indulge. There was a playful ease in his way of doing the most difficult things, which made them look more like an amusement or a pastime than an irksome labor. With all his dispatch, he was distinguished for accuracy and correctness. It was very seldom that he fell into any mistake or blunder. His memory was also tenacious and exact. In the law he united two things which are not often found together in the same individual,—a perfect mastery of principles, with great and ready recollection of points and authorities."

His relations to Judge Perley were most intimate and delightful,—in some respects the relation of equals; in others, almost of father and son.

His admirable collegiate training, supplemented by two years of special instruction under the immediate eye of his learned brother, and his study of the law under two such eminent legal minds as Judges Perley and Bellows, prepared him to enter upon the practice of the law with success assured. We are not therefore surprised to find him at once taking his place in the front ranks of the profession, and entrusted with a business important not only in the amounts involved, but especially because of the legal principles to be examined and applied. From the start he gave promise of becoming eminent in the profession, and his subsequent career demonstrated how well he was appreciated and understood by those who watched his entrance upon professional life. For several years he held the office of city solicitor of Concord, and with what acceptance is best shown by repeated re-elections without substantial opposition. The rugged discipline of ten years' practice in the courts of New Hampshire afforded him an admirable school of training for the faithful and honorable discharge of his subsequent duties upon the bench. In 1857 his health, until then apparently perfect, became impaired, and thenceforward to his death, ten years afterwards, his work at the bar and upon the bench was done while struggling against the inroads of unrelenting disease. His overtaken physical frame was shattered, but his intellect shone unclouded to the end.

While his success in the profession was assured, it is not claimed that he did or would have taken the first rank as an advocate. As Judge Perley puts it, "It is not impossible that he might have been found wanting in a certain boldness and confidence of manner and style which would now seem to be thought requisite in those who aspire to take the lead in that turbulent and noisy department of our profession."

Owing to the logical cast of his mind, he appeared to best advantage in matters of special pleading, in the preparation of briefs and in the investigation and argument of questions of law before the court in banc. The more difficult the question, the greater delight he seemed to take in its solution. He was often consulted by his brethren upon questions in regard to which they were in doubt, and frequently wrote opinions for their guidance.

His high sense of professional honor led him to regard the profession as an office, and not as a trade. Accordingly, to witnesses he was fair and respectful; to the bench he was deferential without being obsequious; and to his professional brethren he was dignified and courteous. As Judge Curtis said of Rufus Choate, "He showed that forensic strife is consistent with uniform personal kindness and gentleness of demeanor; that mere smartness, or aggressive and irritating captiousness, has nothing to do with the most effective conduct of a cause; that the business of an advocate is with the law and the evidence, and not in provoking or humbling an opponent; that wrangling, and the irritations which spring from it, obstruct the course of justice, and are indeed twice cursed, for they injure him who gives and him who receives."

Judge Bartlett was a lawyer of great research. He seemed to have an instinctive clinging to authorities. He could find readily what others could not. He had a great mastery of cases, such as few ever have; but he was not a case lawyer. He had a legal instinct or genius by which he could extract, from what to others seemed a chaos of conflicting decisions, the true legal principle, and put it in the smallest possible compass. He distilled the spirit from the dilution, appropriating the gold and rejecting the dross.

It must not be inferred that he was not positive in his opinions, or was not sufficiently firm in maintaining opinions deliberately formed. We have on this point the testimony of Judge Perley, that "he had nothing of that facility which yields in substantial matters to impertunity and over-persuasion. He was very firm in his opinions and judgments when once formed, and perfectly fearless in acting on them when duty appeared to require it."

We come now to the period when he "put off the gown of the bar to assume the more graceful and reverend ermine of the bench." In 1861 a vacancy occurred upon the bench of the Supreme Court of New Hampshire. The foremost lawyers of the State refused to be candidates, because they understood that he might be persuaded to accept the appointment. In obedience to the united voice of the profession, he was at once (February 23, 1861) appointed associate justice. The court at that time consisted of Bell, chief justice, and Sargent, Bellows, Doe and Nesmith, associate justices. No change occurred in the composition of the court while Judge Bartlett lived, except the reappointment of Judge Perley as chief justice upon the resignation of Judge Bell in 1864. At no period in the history of the State has there been a stronger court. Five of the six judges with whom he was associated have held the office of chief justice. His selection from a bar containing so many lawyers of established reputation, to be the associate of judges of such eminent ability, shows in what estimation his legal attainments and qualifications were held.

Rufus Choate thus describes the qualifications of the good judge: "In the first place, he should be profoundly learned in all the learning of the law, and he must know how to use that learning. . . . In the next place, he must be a man not merely upright, not merely honest and well-intentioned,—this, of course,—but a man who will not respect persons in judgment. . . . And, finally, he must possess the perfect confidence of the community, that he bear not the sword in vain. To be honest, to be no respecter of persons, is not enough. He must be believed such." We shall see how well Judge Bartlett answered these requirements.

His legal learning was profound. He had an extraordinary genius for learning everything quickly and accurately, and remembering it during life, and without effort. We have shining and encouraging examples of what can be done by men of moderate abilities. Judge Bartlett was not of that class, and, therefore, as an example, he is worth far less than many others. As a brilliant legal scholar, a brilliant legal thinker and practical logician, capable of applying ancient legal principles to the facts of new cases, and working out for the benefit of modern life the best results of that common law that has been constantly growing out of the last thousand years of English and American civilization, he was not surpassed by any one judge who has sat upon the bench of New Hampshire. It is not uncommon for a man of intellect to succeed in mastering much of the special doctrine and general theory of the law, and to fail as a practicing lawyer and working judge from a lack of ability rightly to apply his learning to the varying and novel circumstances that constitute most of the cases that are carried to the office of a lawyer and to the courts of justice. Nearly infallible as Judge Bartlett was in his opinion on an abstract question of law, he equally excelled in perceiving what rule was applicable to each case. His remarkable powers were equally accurate in theory and practice.

All great lawyers are naturally conservative; so was Judge Bartlett. Generally inclined to follow precedents, he was strong enough to disregard them when they disregarded fundamental principles. Witness his opinion in Bassett v. Salisbury Manufacturing Company, 43 N. H. 569. The action was case for maintaining a dam, thereby causing water to percolate through the plaintiff's meadow. On the fifth jury trial, the present chief justice presided, and ruled the law in accordance with the English case of Acton v. Blondeil, 12 M. & W. 324, and numerous cases that followed in its train. The cause was carried to the full bench on exceptions, and an opinion prepared affirming the ruling of the court below, which received the assent of a majority of the court; but the judge who drew up the opinion resigned, and the cause was continued for further examination, and assigned to Judge Bartlett, who succeeded him upon the bench. Few cases have received such careful consideration (50 N. H. 444). Four opinions were drawn up by different members of the court, of which three sustained the English doctrine. The opinion published in the reports was drawn up by Judge Bartlett, at the sea shore, when in feeble health and hardly able to be about. It reversed the English authorities, those of a majority of the States, the decision of the court below and the opinions of all his associates except one; yet, when read in consultation, every judge yielded his objections and assented to the opinion, because it was found unanswerable. But for him, the contrary erroneous doctrine would have been established in New Hampshire. The logic of the opinion, and its clear and precise style, are only equaled by the modesty which marked his dissent from the English and American authorities.

As illustrating his way of summing up a case and instructing a jury, I might cite Hoyes v. Wahlton, 44 N. H. 580, where his charge is fully reported, and so admirably and clearly did it set forth the law of the case, that little was left for the judge who delivered the opinion in banc except to adopt the reasoning and substance of the charge.

The decisions of the court, written and delivered by him, will be his lasting monument. Models of brevity, of perspicuous statement and logical deduction, of legal thought, and literary, unornamented style, they will endure. But they are very brief. Those that are published are but a small part of his work, and will carry to other generations a very inadequate idea of how much was lost at his decease. His associates at the bar and on the bench, who enjoyed the benefits of a personal acquaintance with him, and felt the refreshing power of his fellowship, will never lose the benefit of his personal influence, nor cease to grieve that he did not live to lead them to the end of their labors. It was not an uncommon thing for him, whether he delivered the judgment or not, to cause a decision to be put upon ground not thought of by other members of the court or by counsel. His learning was so complete, and his grasp of the law and facts so comprehensive, that while he seldom changed in consultation an opinion he had formed in his library, other members of the court not infrequently found occasion to correct theirs by the light of his expositions.

Judge Perley says of him,—“When he went upon the bench, his high qualifications for the office were at once recognized by the legal profession. His youthful appearance, his unpretending manners and his easy and rapid way of dispatching business might have led a careless observer to fear that he would be found wanting in solidity and soundness of judgment; but the character of his mind was eminently judicial. His examination of authority in cases which required it was faithful and exhaustive. He weighed conflicting arguments and reasons with equal impartiality. He had great sagacity in perceiving the practical bearing of any question under consideration, and its connection with the whole complete system of the law; and his opinions and rulings were received with the greatest respect and deference by the legal profession throughout the State. In presiding over trials, I never learned that he was known, in the most irritating circumstances, to lose the sweetness and equanimity of his own temper, and he often had the rare felicity of winning from both sides the commendation of perfect fairness and impartiality.”

Judge Bartlett never failed to show that he had the courage of his convictions whenever the occasion called for it. Witness his action upon the Soldiers' Voting Bill, so called, introduced in 1863 in the midst of political excitement, when he united with three other members of the court in an opinion which set aside the act as a violation of the constitution.

In 1866 was passed, under similar circumstances, an act disfranchising deserters from the army, the constitutionality of which was brought before the full bench. Not long before his death he drew up an opinion setting aside this act, also, as a plain violation of the fundamental law of the land. The fact in some way came to the knowledge of the Legislature, which forthwith did itself and him the honor to repeal the law before the opinion could be read in court.

History tells us that the celebrated court of the Areopagus, when Athens was at the height of its civilization, sat in the dark, that the judges might not see or know who were the suitors, and so be enabled to dispense impartial justice. I suppose for the same reason the Goddess of Justice is represented with eyes blindfolded, that her hand may feel the “trepidations of the balance,” uninfluenced by the presence or appearance of the contending parties.

All systems of judicial tenure suppose judges to be imperfect because mortal. The constitution recognizes this in that clause which secures the right to the subject “to be tried by judges as impartial as the lot of humanity will admit.”

But I do not hesitate to say, that if there ever was a judge who was a living personification of the blind-fold goddess; one who watched not the faces of his suitors, to inquire who they were, or what their standing or influence, but only the movements of the scales held in an even hand; one who, unlike his ancient brethren of Athens, had no need to sit in the dark, because wholly oblivious to all surrounding circumstances; one who, when a whole city, Athens-like, came “to demand that the cup of hemlock be put to the lips of the wisest of men,” would deliver him if he believed he “had not corrupted the youth, nor omitted to worship the gods of the city, nor introduced new divinities of his own,”—such an one was Judge Bartlett.

His good-fellowship placed him on terms of intimacy with his brethren of the bar; but no one presumed, on the strength of former intimacy, or of close and friendly relations, to influence his rulings or decisions; or, if any one did so far forget himself, the success of the attempt was not such as to encourage its repetition.

It must not be inferred that, while he was noted for his patient, courteous and urbane manners, he was tolerant of fraud, or failed to rebuke chicanery or improper interference with the course of justice. On such occasion he “Carried anger as the flint bears fire,

Which, much enflamed, shows a hasty spark,
And straight is cold again.”

The testimony of one of his associates¹ upon the bench affords a fitting close to this review of Judge Bartlett's judicial life,—

“His career was brief, but it was long enough to satisfy those who knew him best, and whose judgment was trustworthy, that, with life and health, he would have become the great American jurist of his generation. No mental or moral weakness impaired the operation or influence of his great powers.

“There have been great men who were not loved, and did not deserve to be loved. There have been good men who were not great. There was a man equally great and good, equally superior by nature on the intellectual and on the moral side. Inappable of selfishness, envy or any meanness, wholly-sound in the best sense, incapable of uttering an unkind word or entertaining an unkind feeling, he would have had only pity for his enemies, it had been possible for him to have an enemy. He had neither a single enemy, nor a single cold or indifferent friend. He involuntarily held all whom he met, bound to him by those ties of affection which draw all men to a character the most amiable and lovely as well as by those ties of reverence which draw all men to mental supremacy. With health and life, what a judge he would have become! And, what is so much more to be said, with health and life, what a teacher and leader of youth—what a head of an educational institution—he would have been! Where he presided, there was no thought of legal power provided for the maintenance of judicial dignity. In himself men recognized the unconscious majesty of the law, and the unconscious majesty of whatever is greatest and best in human nature. With such as he in many places of government and personal control, it would not be too much to hope that the word "discipline," in the sense that is often misapprehended and offensive, might become obsolete."

¹Chief Justice Doe.

There is another aspect of Judge Bartlett's character which, although already considered to some extent, because so closely interwoven with his intellectual character, yet remains to be spoken of. I allude to his moral and Christian virtues. He was valued more for his character than for his intellect. He was witty, bright and genial, faithful and judicious; a thoughtful friend, a self-denying brother, a most affectionate son and husband. His professional life was passed in the near vicinity of his native town; and, in their declining years, the hearts of his parents turned much and constantly to him for sympathy and kindly care, and never were they disappointed. He visited and wrote to them often; and for years, whatever were his engagements, almost never did a Monday pass without bringing them an affectionate letter. And during the last months of his life, it was an occasion of almost uncontrollable grief to him that he had been frustrated of being present to comfort the last hours of his father not long before.

In his own home he seemed to be whatever a host and a husband ought to be. So warmly was he attached to his home, and to her who was its star and its light, that he was loath to leave it, even when called away by professional engagements. The one trait that fixes itself most deeply in the memory of his friends is the kindly spirit that, in his maturer years, followed him in all his relations, and made him always considerate of the feelings, and actively attentive to the wants, of all around him. It was a pleasure to him to make others happy; and he loved to do a kind office to those who could not repay. It seems, as we look back upon it, the practical benevolence of the gospel. He became a diligent and deeply-interested reader of the Scriptures; and to those who knew him best, he seemed to exemplify the spirit of the gospel in a most important aspect.

At the close of the summer of 1867 he returned to his home from the sea-shore, without having been benefited by the invigorating air of the ocean. For a few days he struggled cheerfully against physical weakness and disease,—more for the sake of others, perhaps, than for himself,—his pallid countenance illumined as with the lustre of a beautiful spirit. On Tuesday, September 24th, as gently as a child falls asleep, without pain or a struggle, consciousness preserved to the last moment, that life, which had been so noble and beautiful, changed its course, as a river, to a smoother channel, and put on immortality. Three days later, on a bright and beautiful day in early autumn, his professional brethren, representing nearly every county in the State, and the surviving members of the court, with his inconsolable relatives, in tenderness committed to his mother earth all that was mortal of him who had been a dutiful child, a quick and ready scholar, a profound lawyer, an upright magistrate, an affectionate brother and devoted husband, to rest till the resurrection morning.

ISA PERLEY was born in Boxford, Mass., November 9, 1799. He graduated from Dartmouth College in the class of 1822 and was tutor in that institution from 1823 to 1825. He read law with Benjamin J. Gilbert, of Hanover, and commenced practice in that town in 1827. Here he remained until 1834, when he removed to Concord, where he resided until his death.

Upon his removal to Concord he soon acquired a large practice, and ranked among the leaders at the Merrimack bar. In July, 1850, he was appointed a justice in the Superior Court of this State, which position he held until October, 1852, when he resigned and resumed the practice of law. In 1855 he was appointed chief-justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, and held the position until 1859, when he resigned and again resumed the practice of law. In 1864 he was appointed chief-justice of the same court, and held the position until September, 1869.

Judge Perley had no taste for political office, but served at three different times as a member of the House of Representatives,—first from Hanover in 1834 and from Concord in 1839 and 1870. He received the degree of LL.D. from Dartmouth College in 1852. He manifested an interest in historical matters, and for several years was an active member of the New Hampshire Historical Society and was vice-president of the New England Historic Genealogical Society at the time of his death.

As a scholar, Judge Perley ranked among the foremost in the State and in New England. He kept up his interest in classics to the day of his death, and read German, French and Italian with readiness. In social life he was modest and unassuming, but was nevertheless a rare conversationalist.

In January, 1840, he united in marriage with Mary L. Nelson, of Haverhill. Judge Perley died February 26, 1874.

JOHN Y. MUGRIDGE was born in Laconia, N. H., then a part of Meroloth, April 15, 1832. He received his preparatory education at the Gilford Academy and commenced the study of the law in the office of Colonel Thomas J. Whipple, in Laconia. He concluded his studies with the late Hon. Asa Fowler, of Concord, with whom he formed a copartnership for the practice of his profession soon after his admission to the bar, in 1854. He was subsequently in partnership with Hon. Josiah Minot and later with Hon. Mason W. Tappan, but at the time of his death was alone in practice. Mr. Mugridge never sought political preference, but devoted himself almost entirely to his profession. He served as city solicitor from 1861 to 1868, was a representative in the Legislature in 1863 and 1864, Senator from the old Fourth District in 1868 and 1869, being president of the Senate the latter year, and again representative in 1875.

¹ May 8, 1856, he was married to Miss Caroline Baker, daughter of the late Abel Baker, Esq., of Concord, and sister of the late ex-Governor Nathaniel B. Baker. Mrs. Bartlett survives her husband and still resides in Concord.

*James truly,
Asa Fowler.*

As a lawyer Mr. Mugridge held a commanding position at the Merrimaek bar, and probably enjoyed a more extensive practice than any other man in the county, especially excelling in criminal cases. He was a man of great personal popularity, had a large heart, full of generous impulses, and he gave them free course in all the relations of life. He was a Republican in politics.

HON. ASA FOWLER.—The origin of the name and the antiquity of the family of Fowler in England have never been ascertained. It is probable, from the large number of families of that name known to have existed in various sections of that country early in the sixteenth century, and the high standing of some of them, that the name was adopted soon after surnames came to be used. Edward Fowler, eldest son and heir of Sir Richard Q. Fowler, is said to have entertained Queen Catharine of Arragon at his manor, near Buckingham, in September, 1514. Froude, in his "History of England," vol. v, pp. 129 and 131, mentions John Fowler, a member, in 1547, of the household of King Edward VI., who was so influential with that young monarch that he was employed by Lord Seymour to secure the royal assent to his contemplated marriage with the Princess, afterwards Queen, Elizabeth, and subsequently the royal approval of his already secretly accomplished marriage with Catharine Parr, widow of Henry VIII. Christopher Fowler, an English clergyman, born in 1611, left the Established Church in 1641 and joined the Presbyterians, among whom he became eminent, and died in 1676. John Fowler, a learned printer, born in Bristol, removed his press to Antwerp more effectually to aid the Catholics, and died in 1579. Edward Fowler, born at Westerleigh in 1632, was distinguished as a divine, published a discourse on "The Design of Christianity" in 1676, which Bunyan attacked, and another on "Christian Liberty" in 1680; was made bishop of Gloucester in 1691, and died in 1714. William Fowler, born about 1560,—died in 1614,—was one of the poets that frequented the court of James VI., whose works have been preserved. He was a lawyer and clergyman, as well as a poet.

The Fowlers in this country, now quite numerous, as their namesakes were in England three centuries ago, and are still more so at the present day, sprang from several different pioneer ancestors who emigrated to America from various parts of England at different periods, and, so far as known, were in no way related to each other. The subject of this sketch is of the sixth generation in lineal descent from one of the founders of New England, the common ancestor of the great majority of the Fowlers in Massachusetts, and of most, if not all, of those in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.¹

Philip Fowler, Sr., born about 1520 in the ancient town of Marlborough, in the county of Wiltshire, England, where no less than five families of Fowlers are shown by the records to have been living contemporaneously early in the seventeenth century, came from thence with his family to Massachusetts in 1634 in the ship "Mary and John," of London, having taken the oath of allegiance and supremacy to qualify him as a passenger at Southampton on the 24th of March. He must have embarked in February, since, by an order of Council, dated February 24th, the vessel was detained in the Thames until the captain gave bond in one hundred pounds, conditional, among other things, that the service of the Church of England should be read daily on board and attended by the passengers, and also that the adult male passengers should take the oath of allegiance and supremacy. All this having been done, the ship was allowed to proceed on her voyage, but did not reach New England until May. September 3, 1634, he was admitted freeman at Boston; obtained a grant of land in Ipswich the same year, on which he settled in 1635, and where he resided until his death, on the 24th of June, 1679, at the age of eighty-eight. During his long life he made a variety of records, but none that any descendant need blush to read. It is remarkable that his homestead in Ipswich has ever since been, and still is, occupied by one of his descendants bearing the family name. His wife, Mary, mother of his children, died August 30, 1659, and he again married, February 27, 1660, Mary, widow of George Norton, early of Salem, afterwards Representative from Gloucester. There came over in the same ship with Philip Fowler, Sr., and family, his daughter, Margaret, and her husband, Christopher Osgood, whom she had married the previous year, and who was the common ancestor of most of the Osgoods of Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

Joseph Fowler, son of Philip, Sr., born in England, date unknown, married, in Ipswich, Mass., Martha Kimball, who came over from Ipswich, England, in 1634, in the ship "Elizabeth," with her parents, and is stated to have been then five years of age. Her father, Richard Kimball, settled in Ipswich, Mass., and is believed to have been the ancestor of nearly all the Kimballs in this country. His wife, Ursula Scott, was the daughter of the widow Martha Scott, who came over with the Kimballs at the age of sixty, supposed to have been the wife of Hon. John Scott, of Scott's Hall, Kent County, England. Joseph Fowler was killed by the Indians near Deerfield, Mass., May 19, 1676, on his return from the Falls fight. He was a tanner by trade.

Philip Fowler (second), eldest son of Joseph, was to Matthew A. Stickney, Esq., of Salem, Mass., author of the admirable genealogy of the Stickney family, who is preparing for publication the genealogy of the Ipswich family of Fowlers, from which he is descended.

¹ For a sketch of the ancestors of Judge Fowler we are greatly indebted born in Ipswich, Mass., December 25, 1648. When only two or three years of age, he was adopted, with the consent of his parents, by his grandfather, Philip, Sr., who made him his heir by deed dated December 23, 1668. He received the rudiments of his education at the famous school kept by Ezekiel Cheever. He was a man of superior ability, and as a merchant, deputy marshal and attorney quite distinguished. He acquired a large landed estate, which he divided by deeds of gift among his four sons, a valuable farm to each. He married, January 29, 1674, Elizabeth Herrick, born about July 4, 1647. He died November 16, 1715. His wife died May 6, 1727. She was the daughter of Henry and Editha (Laskin) Herrick. Henry Herrick, born at Bean Manor in 1694, was the son of Sir William Herrick, and came from Leicester, England, to Salem, Mass., where he arrived June 24, 1629.

Philip Fowler (third), ninth child of Philip (second), was born in Ipswich, Mass., in October, 1691; married there, July 5, 1716, Susanna Jacob, daughter of Joseph and Susanna (Symonds) Jacob, and granddaughter of Deputy Governor Samuel Symonds, of that town. He is reported to have fitted for Harvard College, but did not enter, engaging instead in trade and carrying on the tanning business, until he sold out and removed to New Market, N. H., in May, 1743, where he died May 16, 1767. His widow died there in 1773. Before removing to New Market he purchased of his brother-in-law, Joseph Jacob, for the consideration of two thousand pounds, two hundred and thirty-six acres of land in "New Market, in the township of Exeter and province of New Hampshire, with two houses and two barns thereon." The deed is dated February 14, 1737. For fifty-six acres of this land including the homestead, he was sued by Josiah Hilton in 1769, and after two trials, one in the Common Pleas and the other in the Superior Court, both resulting in verdicts in Fowler's favor, Hilton appealed to the Governor and Council, some of whom were directly interested in the event of the suit as lessors of the plaintiff, and they, in 1764, rendered judgment in favor of Hilton, from which the defendant appealed to the King in Council and furnished bonds to prosecute his appeal in England. The Governor and Council granted this appeal, which vacated their judgment, and then at once issued a writ of possession founded thereon, upon which Fowler was turned out of the land and compelled to pay costs. He had executed his will May 22, 1754, therein devising his large landed estate to his three sons,—Philip, Jacob and Symonds,—and requiring them to pay legacies to his daughters. The land in controversy with Hilton was devised to the two former sons. The appeal was prosecuted in England by the father and these devisees until after the Declaration of American Independence, and in 1777 the Legislature of New Hampshire passed an act authorizing these devisees to bring an action of review in the Superior Court for Rockingham County to determine the title to this land. Such action was brought by them, and at the September term, 1778, of that court, they recovered judgment for the land, costs of court and costs of former litigation. On the 14th of September, 1778, the sheriff put them into possession of the property from which their father had been wrongfully ejected fourteen years before. Sarah, daughter of Philip, one of these sons, was the wife of Governor William Plumer and the mother of his children.

Symonds Fowler, the tenth of fourteen children of Philip (third), born in Ipswich, Mass., August 29, 1734, removed to New Market, N. H., with his father, in 1743, where he married, July 12, 1756, Hannah Weeks, born in the old brick house in Greenland, N. H., August 12, 1738. By the will of his father he inherited a farm adjoining the station at New Market Junction, on the Concord and Portsmouth and Boston and Maine Railroads, upon which he lived until he removed, in 1778, to a farm in the western part of Epsom, N. H., upon Suncook River, where he resided until his death, April 6, 1821. His wife, Hannah, died there December 9, 1807.

Benjamin Fowler, the sixth of eleven children of Symonds, was born at New Market, N. H., June 16, 1769; removed with his father to Epsom, N. H., in 1778; married in Pembroke, N. H., January 15, 1795, Mehitable Ladd, only child of John and Jerusha (Lovejoy) Ladd, of that town, and granddaughter of Captain Trueworthy and Mehitable (Harriman) Ladd, of Kingston, N. H. He settled in Pembroke, after his marriage, on a farm he purchased, and died there July 24, 1832. His widow survived him until September 9, 1853.

Isa Fowler, the ninth of eleven children of Benjamin and Mehitable (Ladd) Fowler, was born in Pembroke, N. H., February 23, 1811. His childhood was spent on his father's farm, his means of education after he was seven or eight years of age being limited to eight or nine weeks of winter school, his services after that age in summer being required in farm-work. There were very few books to which he had access, except the Bible and ordinary school-books, and his early reading was confined to these. At the age of fourteen he had a very severe attack of typhoid fever, which left him in such enfeebled condition as to be incapable of severe manual labor. Under these circumstances he was sent to the Blanchard Academy, in his native town, then under the charge of Hon. John Vose, but with no other intention than that he might become qualified to instruct a common district school. But with opportunity to learn and to read, a desire for a liberal education was awakened, and, by alternately working upon his father's farm in the spring and summer, attending the academy in the fall and teaching school in winter, he succeeded in not only fitting himself for college, but in preparing to enter the sophomore class, having attended school only sixty weeks after he commenced the study of Latin. With so meagre and defective a training, he entered the sophomore class at Dartmouth College at the opening of the fall term, 1830, and although he taught school every winter, was able, nevertheless, to maintain a highly respectable standing until his graduation, in 1833, when, among the parts assigned to the graduating class, according to scholarship, an English oration was given him. He was never absent or unprepared at any recitation during his three years' course. In his junior year he was elected a member of the Phi Beta Kappa Society, as being in the first third of his class. He has never sought or received any honorary degree from his Alma Mater. After leaving college he taught the academy at Topsfield, Mass., for a single term in the fall of 1833, thereby raising sufficient funds to liquidate all indebtedness incurred to defray his college expenses, over and above what he received from his father's estate. Immediately upon leaving Topsfield, having determined to adopt the legal profession, he entered his name as a student in the office of James Sullivan, Esq., then in practice in Pembroke, occupying the office of the Hon. Boswell Stevens, disabled by a paralytic attack, from which he never recovered. He continued to read books from Mr. Sullivan's library through the following winter. In March, 1834, he came to Concord, N. H., where he has since resided, and entered the office of Hon. Charles H. Peaslee, then a rising young lawyer, and continued with him until admitted to the Merrimack County bar, in February, 1837. While a student in General Peaslee's office, he and Hon. Moody Currier, then a teacher in Concord, undertook the editorship, as a matter of amusement and with no hope of pecuniary reward, of a small literary paper, called the Literary Gazette. It was published weekly for six months, and then once a fortnight for another six months. After Mr. Currier retired from the editorship, Cyrus P. Bradley, a youth of wonderful precocity, and the author, when a mere boy, of a "Life of Governor Isaac Hill," became associated with Mr. Fowler in the management of the Gazette. During a considerable portion of the period in which he pursued the study of the law, Mr. Fowler supported himself by writing for other papers. In June, 1835, he was elected clerk of the New Hampshire Senate, which office he continued to hold by annual elections for six successive years, discharging its duties to universal satisfaction. In 1846 he was appointed by the Hon. Levi Woodbury United States commissioner for the district of New Hampshire, which office he held at the time of his death. In 1845 he was a member of the New Hampshire House of Representatives from Concord and served as chairman of the judiciary committee. Again, in 1847 and 1848, he was one of the Representatives of Concord in that body and served upon the same committee in both years. In 1855 he was nominated by the Independent Democrats, or Free-Soilers, as their candidate for Governor, and was frequently assured by prominent Know-Nothings that if he would join their order he might and would be made their candidate, also; but he was deaf to all such suggestions. After that party came into power and decided to change the judiciary system of the State, he was engaged to draft the bill for that purpose, which subsequently became a law. Afterwards, at the earnest and repeated solicitation of Governor Metcalf, although at first he absolutely declined to do so, he accepted a position on the bench of the Supreme Court as associate justice, which he continued to hold, at a great pecuniary sacrifice, from August 1, 1855, to February 1, 1861, when he voluntarily resigned it. During this period of five and a half years he performed his full share of the arduous labors of a judge of our highest judicial tribunal, and gave general satisfaction to the bar and the public. If his opinions at the law terms as reported are not so labored as those of some of his associates, they are more numerous and not less sound and clear.

Immediately upon his resignation, Judge Fowler was appointed by the Governor and Council a delegate from New Hampshire to the Peace Congress, which met in Washington in February, 1861, for the purpose of averting, if possible, the threatened secession of the Southern States from the Union, and continued its sessions through the entire month. His associate delegates were Hon. Levi Chamberlain, of Keene, and Hon. Amos Tuck, of Exeter. In 1861 he was appointed solicitor for the county of Merrimack, and held the office until he resigned, in 1865, upon his being appointed one of the commissioners to revise the statutes of the State. He was associated in that commission with Hon. Samuel D. Bell, of Manchester, and Hon. George Y. Sawyer, of Nashua. Upon it he labored diligently and successfully, alone superintending the printing of the commissioners' report, and, subsequently, the printing of the General Statutes as finally adopted by the Legislature of 1867. He also attended almost constantly, during the whole period of that Legislature, upon the sessions of the joint select committee to whom the report of the commissioners was referred, and greatly aided in procuring the speedy action of that committee, and the final adoption of the report of the commissioners, as amended by the General Court, without protracting the session beyond its usual length. In 1871 and again in 1872, Judge Fowler was a member of the House of Representatives from Ward Six, in Concord, serving on the judiciary committee in 1871, and presiding over the deliberations of the House, as Speaker, in 1872, with dignity, impartiality and complete success.

Judge Fowler was one of the most diligent, laborious and successful lawyers in the State, and the extent of his practice for many years has rarely been exceeded. In September, 1838, after practicing alone for a year and a half, he formed a co-partnership with the late President Pierce, which continued until April, 1845. During this period of six years and a half, their practice was probably as extensive as that of any individual or firm in the State. General Pierce engaged in the trial of causes as an advocate in nearly every county, while Judge Fowler attended chiefly to office business, the preparation of causes for trial and briefs for argument at the law terms of court. Hon. John Y. Mugridge completed his preparatory studies in Judge Fowler's office, and upon his admission to the bar, in 1854, Judge Fowler formed a business connection with him for one year, which expired about the time of Judge Fowler's appointment to the bench. Soon after his resignation of the judgeship, in 1861, he entered into partnership with Hon. William E. Chandler, which continued until Mr. Chandler's appointment as Solicitor of the Navy, in 1864.

During his long residence in Concord, Judge Fowler was quite familiar with the forms of legislation, and probably drafted more bills for our Legislature than any other man, living or dead. He originated many laws and procured their enactment, when not a member of the Legislature. Among those thus originated and procured to be enacted may be mentioned the statute authorizing school districts to unite for the purpose of maintaining High Schools, and that authorizing towns to establish and maintain public libraries. He worked zealously with General Peaslee to secure the establishment of the Asylum for the Insane, was very active and persistent in securing the establishment of a Public Library in Concord and a High School in Union District. He always showed a deep interest in the cause of public education, and for more than twenty successive years served as prudential committee or a member of the Board of Education in Concord. He was always fond of literary pursuits, and has an extensive and well-selected miscellaneous library. For the last three or four years of his life he belonged to a class in English Literature, whose weekly meetings, during the winter season, were devoted, with much pleasure and profit, to reading the works and discussing the lives, character and times of English and American authors of reputation. He was more or less connected with various moneyed institutions. He was a director of the State Capital Bank from its organization under a State charter until his appointment to the bench, when he resigned. He was a director and president of the First National Bank from its organization until he lost confidence in its cashier, when he disposed of his stock and resigned. He was for many years a director of the Manchester and Lawrence Railroad, and for several years its president. In his religious sentiments he was a liberal Unitarian, and took a prominent part in the work of the society in Concord, serving for several years as the superintendent of its Sunday-school, and showing his interest in it by leaving it a legacy of one thousand dollars in his will, the interest on which sum to be devoted to the support of liberal preaching. Educated a Democrat, but with strong anti-slavery convictions, he acted with the Democratic party until its devotion to the extension of slavery compelled its abandonment in 1846, and for the next ten years he acted as an Independent Democrat. Upon the formation of the Republican party he joined it, and continued in its ranks until, in 1875, he resumed his connection with the Democracy.

In the spring of 1877, forty years from his admission to the bar, Judge Fowler determined to retire from active practice. A severe illness in the fall of that year confirmed his resolution. Before his full recovery, by the advice of his physician, he decided to visit Europe. Accompanied by his wife, daughter and third son, he left Boston on the 13th of April, 1878, and returned to New York on the 17th of October following, having, during his absence, visited the principal points of interest in England, Scotland, Ireland, Italy, Switzerland, Bavaria, Austria, Bohemia, Saxony, Prussia, Hanover, Holland, Belgium, Germany and France. He returned home with renewed strength and energy, and passed the next four years in the full enjoyment of health and happiness, in the quiet of his pleasant home in Concord and his beautiful cottage by the sea, near Rye Beach.

In October, 1882, the great sorrow of his life came upon him in the loss of his dearly-beloved wife, after a long and painful illness. He had been peculiarly fortunate in his domestic relations. On the 13th of July, 1837, he married the daughter of Robert and Polly Dole (Cilley) Knox, of Epsom, N. H., and granddaughter of General Joseph Cilley, of the Revolution, Mary Dole Cilley Knox, by whom he had five children,—four sons and one daughter,—all now living.

In the winter of 1882-83, Judge Fowler had a severe attack of gastric fever at Richmond, Va., while on his way to Florida for his health. After a long convalescence at St. Augustine, Fla., he fully recovered his health and spent the entire winter and spring in the South.

In November, 1883, he again went abroad, spending six delightful months in Nice, Mentone and Italy, returning in May to New Hampshire after a month's sojourn in Paris and London.

Again, in November, 1884, he went away from his Concord home, and sought the warmer climate of California, spending the greater part of the winter at Monterey. Here he again suffered from attacks of gastritis, and, after a trip down to Santa Barbara, was very ill at San Francisco, and died at San Rafael, Cal., on the 26th of April, A. D., 1885. His remains were embalmed and brought to Concord, and were buried, May 9th, from his residence.

HON. J. EVERETT SARGENT, LL.D.—Judge Sargent, now of Concord, has been well known throughout the State for more than a quarter of a century.

J. E. Sargent

Besides an extensive legislative acquaintance, he has, as judge of the different courts and as chief justice of the State, held terms of court in every shire-town and half-shire town in every county in the State. He has been emphatically the architect of his own fortune, and by his energy and perseverance has reached the highest post of honor in his profession in his native State. He is genial and social with his friends; he loves a joke, and belongs to that small class of men "who never grow old." He loves his home, his family and his books. No man enjoys the study of history and of poetry, of philosophy and of fiction, better than he, while law and theology come in for a share of attention. He is a kind neighbor, a respected citizen, a ripe scholar, a wise legislator, an upright judge and an honest man.

In the year 1781, Peter Sargent, the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, moved from Hopkinton, N. H., to New London, at that time equally well known as Heidelberg. This locality had been known by this latter name for a quarter of a century or more. It was granted by the Masonian proprietors, July 7, 1773, to Jonas Minot, and others as the "Addition of Alexandria." It was first settled in 1775, and was incorporated as a town by the Legislature, June 25, 1779. Peter Sargent, who thus moved into the town two years after its incorporation, was one of ten brothers, all born in Amesbury, Mass., who settled as follows: Amasa, Ezekiel, Thomas and Moses always lived at Amesbury; James settled in Methuen, Mass.; Peter, Nathan and Stephen came to Hopkinton, N. H., and settled there; and Abner and Ebenezer came to Warner, N. H., and settled there. These ten brothers, with four sisters, were the children of Deacon Stephen Sargent, of Amesbury, Mass.

(Christopher Sargent, an older brother of Deacon Stephen, graduated at Harvard, entered the ministry and was the first settled minister of Methuen, Mass. His eldest son, Nathaniel Peaslee Sargent, graduated at Harvard, practiced law at Haverhill and was for many years a judge of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, and was chief justice of the State in 1790 and 1791, when he died, aged sixty.)

Stephen Sargent was the son of Thomas (second), who was the son of Thomas (first), who was the son of William Sargent. Stephen married Judith Ordway, of West Newbury, Mass., September 26, 1730, was chosen deacon of the Second Congregational Church in Amesbury, May 10, 1757, and died October 2, 1773, aged sixty-three.

William Sargent was born in England about 1602, and was the son of Richard Sargent, an officer in the royal navy. William came to this country when a young man, married Judith Perkins for his first wife, who died about 1633, when he, with several daughters, was one of the twelve men who commenced the settlement at Ipswich that year. He soon after went to Newbury, and helped form a settlement there. Soon after, about 1638, he, with several others, commenced a settlement at Hampton, and about 1640 he removed to Salisbury, and was one of the eighteen original proprietors, or commoners, who settled in New Salisbury, since known as Amesbury. His second wife's name was Elizabeth, by whom he had two sons, Thomas and William. He had several lots of land assigned him at different times, and was one of the selectmen of the town in 1667. He died in 1675, aged seventy-three.

Thomas Sargent, son of William, was born April 11, 1643, at Amesbury; married Rachel Barnes, January 2, 1667-68, and had children, among whom was Thomas, Jr., born at Amesbury, November 15, 1676, who married Mary Stevens, December 17, 1702, and was the father of Stephen, whose family has been mentioned, and who was born at Amesbury, September 14, 1710.

Peter Sargent, son of Stephen, married Ruth Nichols, of Amesbury, and moved to Hopkinton, N. H., about 1763, where they lived some eighteen years and raised a large family, and when he went to New London, took them all with him. His children were Anthony, Abigail, Ruth, Judith, Peter, Ebenezer, Amasa, John, Molly, Ezekiel, Stephen, William and Lois. These all came from Hopkinton to New London in 1781, except Lois, who was born subsequently in New London.

Ebenezer (the son of Peter), the father of the judge, was born in Hopkinton in 1768, and was, of course, thirteen years old when he came to New London with his father's family. After becoming of age he procured him a farm, and, on the 25th of November, 1792, he married Prudence Chase, of Wendell (now Sunapee), the daughter of John and Ruth (Hills) Chase. They had ten children, as follows: Anna, Rebekah, Ruth, Seth Freeman, Aaron Lealand, Sylvanus Thayer, Lois, Laura, Jonathan Kittredge and Jonathan Everett. Jonathan Kittredge died young; the other nine lived to mature age, and five of them—three sons and two daughters—still survive. The parents had only a very limited education, having been taught to read and to write a little, the schools of those early times only furnishing instruction in these two branches. They always lived upon a farm, securing what was then considered as a competence, and both died in New London, having lived together more than sixty-five years.

The following, then, is the order of descent:

1. Richard Sargent, of England.
2. William, son of Richard, born in England, 1602.
3. Thomas, son of William, born in Amesbury, April, 1643.
4. Thomas, Jr., son of Thomas, born in Amesbury, November, 1676.
5. Stephen, son of Thomas, Jr., born in Amesbury, September, 1710.
6. Peter, son of Stephen, born at Amesbury, November 2, 1736.

7. Ebenezer, son of Peter, born at Hopkinton, N. H., April 3, 1768.

8. Jonathan Everett Sargent was born at New London, N. H., October 23, 1816. He lived at home, working upon the farm until he was seventeen years of age, and, being the youngest child, his father had arranged for him to live at home and take care of his parents, and have the farm at their decease.

While living at home his advantages for schooling were very limited, being confined to eight weeks winter school each year, the farm affording too much work to allow of his attending the summer school after he was nine or ten years of age. He attended one term at Hopkinton Academy and one term at a private school at home before he was seventeen. For years he had been thirsting for knowledge, and had resolved that, if any way could be provided for taking care of his parents in their old age, he would obtain an education. When about sixteen his youngest sister was married, and she, with her husband, made an arrangement with her parents under which they moved upon the homestead farm and assumed the care of her parents for life. So, at seventeen, Everett, as he was always called, arranged with his father that he was to have the remaining four years of his time till twenty-one, instead of the sum which his older brothers had received upon arriving of age. He was to clothe himself and pay his own bills, and call for nothing more from his father.

This arrangement was made in the summer of 1833, and that fall he worked in the saddler's shop near his father's and taught school the next winter; and in the spring of 1834 he went to Hopkinton Academy, then under the charge of Mr. Enoch L. Childs, where he remained through the season. He taught school the next winter, and then went, in the spring of 1835, to Kimball Union Academy, at Meriden, where he remained, under the instruction of Mr. Cyrus S. Richards, until commencement in 1836, when he entered Dartmouth College. After he had thus, without assistance, fitted himself for and entered college, his father, very unexpectedly to him, gave him fifty dollars to pay his expenses the first term, and offered to loan him a few hundred dollars, if he should need, in his college course, but that it must be considered as an honorary debt, to be repaid, with interest, after graduation.

But, by teaching school every winter and two fall terms in Canaan Academy during his course, he earned enough to pay all his expenses in college with the exception of two hundred dollars, which he borrowed of his father, and gave him his note for the same, with interest, which he adjusted within a few years after graduation. Though out of college two terms, besides winters in teaching and another term on account of sickness, yet he was always ready at each examination to be examined with his class in all the studies they had been over, and always took a high stand at these examinations. He was elected a member of the Phi Beta Kappa Society, and graduated in 1840 among the first in his class.

He had long before this made up his mind to turn his attention to the law as a profession, and he accordingly began the study of the law at once with Hon. Wm. P. Weeks, of Canaan, and remained with him till the spring of 1841, when he was advised by his physician to go South for his health. He went first to Washington, soon after to Alexandria, D. C., where he taught a High School, then to Maryland, where he remained a year in a family school, when, having regained his health, he returned to New Hampshire in September, 1842. He had, upon his arrival in Washington, entered his name as a law student in the office of Hon. David A. Hall, of that city, and continued the study of the law under his direction while engaged in teaching, and he was admitted to the bar in the courts of the District of Columbia in April, 1842, only about twenty months after leaving college. By the rule of that court, any one might be admitted upon examination without regard to the length of time he had studied. So he was examined in open court by Chief Justice Cranch and his associates upon the bench, and was admitted.

After returning home he continued his legal studies with Mr. Weeks until the July law term, in Sullivan County, in 1843, when he was admitted to the bar in the Superior Court of Judicature in this State. He then went into company with Mr. Weeks at Canaan, where he remained till 1847, when he removed to Wentworth, and opened an office there. He had been appointed solicitor for Grafton County in November, 1844, while at Canaan, and he at once commenced a lucrative business at Wentworth; was re-appointed solicitor, in 1849, for five years more, thus holding the office for ten years, to 1854, performing the duties to the entire acceptance of the county and the people. He declined a reappointment.

In 1851 he was first elected a member of the Legislature from Wentworth, and served as chairman of the committee on incorporations. The next year he was re-elected, and was made chairman of the judiciary committee, and in 1853 he was again a member, and was nominated with great unanimity, and elected as Speaker of the House of Representatives. He served with ability and impartiality, and to the general acceptance of all parties.

The next winter a new man was to be selected as a candidate for Senator in his district, and at the convention he was nominated with great unanimity, and was elected in March, in a close district, by about three hundred majority. When the Senate met, in June, there was some discussion as to a candidate for president, but at the caucus he was nominated upon the first ballot, and was duly elected as president of the Senate in 1854. He was renominated in the spring of 1855, but the Know-Nothing movement that year carried everything before it, and he was defeated, with nearly all the other Democratic nominees in the State.

On the 2d day of April, 1855, he was appointed a circuit justice of the Court of Common Pleas for the State. But in June of that year there was an unwanted overturn, and the old courts were abolished, mainly upon political grounds, and new ones organized, and new judges appointed. Judge Sargent was making his arrangements to go into practice again at the bar, when he received a request from Governor Metcalf that he would accept the second place on the bench of the new Court of Common Pleas. This offer had not been expected, but, upon consultation with friends, it was accepted, and Judge Sargent was appointed an associate justice of the Court of Common Pleas.

He acted as judge of the new Court of Common Pleas for four years, until 1859, when, by a statute of that year, that court was abolished, and the Supreme Judicial Court was to do the work of that court in addition to its own, and one new judge was to be added to that court, making the number of Supreme Court judges six instead of five, as before. Judge Sargent was at once appointed to that place on the Supreme bench. He was then the youngest member of the court in age, as well as in the date of his commission. He remained upon the bench of that court just fifteen years, from 1859 to 1874. In March, 1873, upon the death of Chief Justice Bellows, Judge Sargent was appointed chief justice of the State, which place he held until August, 1874, when the court was again overturned to make room for the appointees of the prevailing political party. Chief Justice Sargent, at the time of his appointment as chief justice, had become the oldest judge upon the bench, both in age and date of commission, so frequent had been the changes in its members since his appointment to that bench, less than fourteen years before. He was distinguished for his laborious industry, his impartiality and his ability. His written opinions are contained in the sixteen volumes of the New Hampshire Reports, from the thirty-ninth to the fifty-fourth, inclusive, numbering about three hundred in all. Many of these are leading opinions upon various subjects, and show great learning and research.

After the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, and the attempt to make Kansas a slave State, Judge Sargent acted with the Republican party.

Upon leaving the bench, in August, 1874, he was solicited to go into the practice of the law in Concord with Wm. M. Chase, Esq., whose late partner, the Hon. Anson S. Marshall, had recently been suddenly removed by death. He left a very extensive and lucrative practice, more than any one man could well attend to alone, and into this practice, by an arrangement with Mr. Chase, Judge Sargent stepped at once, and the business firm thus formed continued for five years.

In 1876 he was elected a member of the Constitutional Convention of this State. In this convention he acted a prominent part. He received a large complimentary vote for president of the convention, but that choice falling upon another, Judge Sargent was made chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the same place held by Judge Levi Woodbury in the convention of 1859. He took an active part in the debates and discussions of that body, and wielded an influence probably second to no one in the convention.

He was also elected by his ward a member of the House of Representatives for the years 1877 and 1878. It was evident from the first, so numerous and important had been the changes in the constitution, that there must be a revision of the general statutes of the State. Early in 1877 steps were taken for this revision, and Judge Sargent was appointed chairman of a committee, with Hon. L. W. Barton, of Newport, and Judge J. S. Wiggin, of Exeter, to revise and codify the statutes of the State.

This committee at once commenced their work, and with so much dispatch was it prosecuted that they made their report to the Legislature of 1878, which report was, with various amendments, adopted by that Legislature. There was also much new legislation enacted that year, which the committee were instructed to incorporate with their own work, and this was all to go into effect the 1st day of January, 1879.

The committee revised their work, making the required additions, superintended the printing of the whole, and had their volume ready for distribution before the day appointed. It is the largest volume of statutes ever printed in the State, and it is believed not to be inferior to any other in any important particular.

In the fall of 1878 Judge Sargent was invited by a committee of the citizens of New London to prepare a centennial address, to be delivered on the one hundredth anniversary of the incorporation of the town. He at once accepted the invitation, and set about the work, and on the 25th day of June, 1879, he delivered his address to a large assembly of the present and former citizens of the town and others, the occasion being distinguished by a larger collection of people, probably, than ever met in the town upon any former occasion. Being a native of New London, he took a peculiar interest in looking up its early history and in tracing the lives of its prominent men. The address was published in the Granite Monthly in the numbers for July, August and September, 1879, and has been favorably noticed as a work of great labor and research.

About the 1st of September, 1879, at the end of five years from the commencement of his partnership in business, the question arose whether he should continue for five years more or retire. Having spent nearly forty years of his life in toil, he concluded to take some portion of the remaining time for enjoyment, while he had health and strength and capacity to enjoy. He retired from the practice of the law, finding that it was vain to hope for rest and recreation while engaged in that profession. The judge has one of the finest residences in the city, and is enjoying life with his friends and his books. He has also traveled extensively in his own country, and been a close observer of men and things.

In 1864 he was elected Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons for the State of New Hampshire, and was re-elected the next year. After this he declined a re-election.

Dartmouth College conferred on him the degree of Master of Arts, in course, three years after graduation; also, the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws, at its centennial commencement, in 1869.

He has for many years been an active member of the New Hampshire Historical Society, and for the last ten or twelve years has been one of its vice-presidents.

For many years past he has been connected with the National State Capital Bank as one of its directors. The Loan and Trust Savings-Bank, at Concord, commenced business August 1, 1872, and in the thirteen years since then its deposits have increased to over one million seven hundred thousand dollars. Judge Sargent has been president of this bank and one of its investment committee since its commencement, and has given his personal attention to its affairs.

In 1876 the New Hampshire Centennial Home for the Aged was organized and incorporated, and, January 1, 1879, a home was opened in Concord at which some ten to twenty aged ladies have since been supported. The funds of this institution are gradually increasing, and its work is being well done. For the last eight years Judge Sargent has been president of this institution, and has taken a deep interest in its prosperity and success.

In compliance with a request from a committee of the trustees, he prepared and delivered, at the commencement at Dartmouth College, in 1880, a memorial address upon the late Hon. Joel Parker, formerly chief justice of this State, and afterwards professor of law in Harvard College. This duty Judge Sargent performed in a manner creditable to himself and satisfactory to the friends of the late Judge Parker. His address was printed, with other similar addresses in memory of other deceased judges, graduates of Dartmouth, by other distinguished sons of the college.

He married, first, Maria C. Jones, of Enfield, daughter of John Jones, Esq., November 29, 1843, by whom he had two children. John Jones Sargent, the elder, graduated at Dartmouth College in 1866, and died in Oshkosh, Wis., October 3, 1870, just as he was ready to commence the practice of the law. The second, Everett Foster, died young. For his second wife, he married Louisa Jennie Paige, daughter of Deacon James K. Paige, of Wentworth, September 5, 1853, by whom he has had three children,—Marie Louise, Annie Lawrie and George Lincoln. The second died young; the eldest and youngest survive.

Since he commenced the practice of the law, in 1843, his residence has been as follows: In Canaan four years, to 1847; in Wentworth twenty-two years, to 1869; and in Concord sixteen years since.

As a lawyer, Judge Sargent was always faithful and true to his clients, a safe counselor and an able advocate. As a legislator, he has been conservative and safe. As a judge, he always studied to get at the right of the case, to hold the scales of justice evenly, to rule the law plainly, so that the party against whom he ruled might have the full benefit of his exemption to the ruling, and to get the questions of fact and the evidence, as it bore upon them, clearly and distinctly before the jury. Any one who attended the courts where he presided as judge could see at once that he was patient and painstaking, industrious and persevering, vigilant and discriminating, impartial and fearless; and any one who reads his written opinions will see that they exhibit great research, learning and ability.

MASON WEARE TAPPAN¹ was born October 20, 1817, in the village of Newport, Sullivan County. His father, the late Weare Tappan, being a strong admirer of Jeremiah Mason, who, at that time, was in full practice at the bar, named his son after him, and gave him also his own name and the name of his mother, who was one of the descendants of the celebrated old Weare family.

Weare Tappan was a man of note and ability, prominent as a lawyer, and a main pillar in the community in which he lived. He was born in the town of East Kingston, Rockingham County, and early settled in the town of Newport. He read law with the late Judge Ellis, of Claremont, who was one of the ablest and most accomplished lawyers in the State. Mr. Tappan was one of the marked men of his time. Taking an early position on the subject of slavery, he was an old pioneer in the cause. His house was the rendezvous of the anti-slavery lecturer and the home of the fugitive slave. A patriarch of the olden time, strong in his convictions when answering to his conscience, he had determined that he was right; he died in 1866, but not till he had seen the fulfillment of his hope and prayer, that the curse of slavery might be blotted out and the authority of the government restored.

The mother of Mason W. Tappan died only a few months after the decease of his father. The Concord Monitor, in noticing her death at the time, paid her the following tribute: "The deceased was a fine specimen of the old school of ladies, who maintained a lively interest in the present, which, added to her great intelligence, rare conversational powers, keen insight of persons, a strong moral nature and a catholic spirit, bounded by no creed or color, made her presence a benediction and her life a pleasant recollection."

¹ By Walter C. Harriman.

Mason W. Pappan

At an early age Mason removed with the family to Bradford, Merrimack County, and here he spent his boyhood days, and here has he always resided. In his youth he displayed many of those strong traits of character which became prominent in after-life. He early formed a resolution to abstain from the use of intoxicating drinks, and that resolution has never been broken. In addition to the regular course of instruction which he received from his parents, he attended old Father Ballard's school, in Hopkinton, and the Hopkinton Academy, which was a noted school in those days. He also became a student at the Meriden Academy.

Having chosen the profession of the law, he pursued the study of the same with his father and with the Hon. George W. Nesmith, of Franklin, who for a long time was one of the judges of the Supreme Judicial Court. He was admitted to the bar in 1841, and soon acquired an extensive practice in Merrimack and Sullivan Counties. In the eminent array of legal ability that adorned the bar in those days, by his power as an advocate, he shortly obtained a prominent place.

Down to the year 1853 he had given his undivided attention to the law. His practice and his reputation as a lawyer were constantly on the increase. He had belonged to the Whig, Free-Soil and American parties. Although his first step aside from his profession was only to represent his town (which was largely Democratic) in the Legislature, to which he was successively elected in 1853, 1854 and 1855, by his personal popularity among his townsmen, it was apparent, from the position that he occupied and the character of the times, that he would drift into broader fields. To turn from his profession and enter the arena of party strife, although a matter largely controlled by force of circumstances, was a step not to be taken without due deliberation. In Sullivan County, with always a formidable array of counsel against him, he had achieved some of his greatest triumphs, and had never failed to secure a verdict before a jury. It was with some misgivings that he turned from the certain pursuits of his professional career to tread the uncertain paths in the field of American politics.

In the legislative session of 1854, Mr. Tappan was a candidate for Speaker of the House, and, notwithstanding there was a Democratic majority of about twenty, he came within two votes of an election. In the same year, forgetting past contentions, and moved by the prominent stand he had taken in the Legislature, the Whigs, Free-Soilers, Independent Democrats and Americans came to his support and nominated him a member of Congress from the old Second District, and he was elected. He was twice re-elected, breaking for the first time the long-established rule of giving a member of Congress only two terms, and served in the Thirty-fourth, Thirty-fifth and Thirty-sixth Congresses with distinguished ability, and established for himself, in those eventful times when "madness ruled the hour," a reputation as an able and fearless champion of the cause of the Union and the great principles of the Republican party. In July, 1856, Mr. Tappan made a speech upon the subject of the extension of slavery into Kansas, the House being in a committee of the whole on the state of the Union. "It was a rich treat," to use the language of the New York Tribune at the time, "and made some of the Southern chivalry 'rise to a point of order,' and ask questions and squirm, and look very uncomfortable. It was a speech produced by deep research and much labor." In conclusion, Mr. Tappan said: "Mr. Chairman, let me say that we seek no quarrel with our brethren of the South. This is an issue they have forced upon us, and, with God's blessing, we will meet it as becomes worthy descendants of patriotic sires! You sometimes tell us that you want to be let alone. That is precisely what we intend to do; we will interfere with none of your rights; whatever is 'nominated in the bond' that we will yield. In turn, is it too much for us to make the same request of you—that you will let us alone? If slavery be a blessing, to you shall inure all its benefits. If it be a curse, do not ask to place it on our soil to involve us in its guilt. We desire to cultivate the relations of peace and fraternal kindness with the people of the South."

The storm of secession was rising, and all political elements were warming to the contest that was fast coming on. No State in the Union had more reason to be proud of any of its delegation in Congress than had New Hampshire of Mr. Tappan. As was said by one of the leading newspapers in the State at the time, he was "active, enthusiastic and always conciliatory where conciliation is needed. With a heart forced by its very nature to hate falsehood, oppression and wrong, he is just the man whom a free people should delight to honor, and in honoring whom they must honor themselves."

Mr. Tappan, in March, 1858, delivered an able speech in the House upon slavery agitation, nullification and the Leecompton Constitution, in which he said that he wished "to put on record the protest of New Hampshire of what he conceived to be the most stupendous political fraud that was ever before attempted to be perpetrated upon any people." In the winter of 1860-61, in the Thirty-sixth Congress, the celebrated select committee of thirty-three—one from each State—was constituted, to which was referred so much of the President's annual message as related to the then disturbed state of the country. Mr. Tappan was placed upon this committee, and joined with Mr. Washburn, of Wisconsin, in a minority report. A report on the part of the majority had been agreed to and submitted, recommending amendments to the Constitution, by which the South would acquire all, if not more, than it had demanded for its institution of slavery. This minority report was a strong document, and recommended the adoption of the following resolution :

Resolved, That the provisions of the Constitution are ample for the preservation of the Union, and the protection of the material interests of the country ; that it needs to be obeyed rather than amended ; and our extrication from present difficulties is to be looked for in efforts to preserve and protect the public property and enforce the laws, rather than in new guarantees for particular interests, or compromises, or concessions to unreasonable demands."

On the 5th of February, 1861, the minority report was submitted, and Mr. Tappan immediately arose in his seat and addressed himself to the issues involved. He began by saying that he was opposed to the raising of this committee at the outset, not because he did not fully understand the perilous condition of the country, but because he believed that the appointment of such a committee would lead to some sort of a compromise, when any compromise, under the circumstances, would be humiliating to the North, and he did not believe that any measures that might be passed would be productive of good, and would only add fuel to the flame. He was not unwilling, at the proper time, to make reasonable concessions to any portion of his countrymen that had grievances to be redressed. But he contended that that portion of the American people who had just succeeded in electing their President, in the modes and forms recognized by the Constitution, had done nothing that required apology,—he did not, for one, go into that election to have the principles for which he contended abandoned at the first howl of those that were disappointed at the result. Other parties went into the election, and all must abide the result. But no sooner was the election of Mr. Lincoln declared than the fires of revolution broke out. With most indecent haste, the disunionists of the country, who, by their own confessions, had been plotting its overthrow for thirty years, seized the public property, insulted the American flag and, with jeers at the government which had protected them so long, declared themselves out of the Union. Under these circumstances, he was for postponing all other questions until it was ascertained whether we had a government or not. He declared that if this government was a mere cobweb, with no power for its own preservation, it would be utterly useless to attempt to patch it up with compromises. He was for narrowing the issue to the question of Union or no Union, government or no government, and maintained that, if this position had been boldly taken from the start, they would have stood stronger. Every time the people of the free States have wavered, every time her representatives have evinced a disposition to fall back one step from their position, the Secessionists, with fiercer yells, have advanced two. At the first dawn of treason in its borders, the great Nation retires before it, and is crumbling to pieces without an effort to maintain its integrity or a finger raised to protect its flag! The enforcement of the revenue laws, the defense of the capital and the protection of the public property does not necessarily involve war. He proceeded at length on this line, and in course of his masterly effort uttered the following sentiments :

" Sir, I will indulge in no threats of what would be the result in such an event [in the event of war]. I will make no boasts of the prowess of any particular section of the country. I desire to say no word that can exasperate or inflame, but simply to plant myself on the side of my country and the integrity of its government, whose Constitution I have sworn to support. Sir, the Union is dear to the people of the Northern States; they would sacrifice much to preserve it as it is; but a Union founded on the protection of slavery as its 'chief corner-stone' is not the Union for which our fathers fought, and is not the precious boon which they supposed they had transmitted to their posterity."

The speech was widely circulated, and many of the congratulations that were called forth by it were contained in private letters from leading citizens, not only in New England, but throughout the free States. By this heroic maintenance of the " Union as it is and the Constitution as our fathers made it," there were accorded to him an ability and statesmanship which those troublesome times so much demanded in the halls of Congress.

Mr. Tappan's course throughout, as a member of Congress, was characterized by a conscientious regard for the right and the true spirit of independence. Over him there was no unworthy control and with him there was no unworthy alliance. The part he bore as a member of the committee of thirty-three receives high commendation in the first volume of Mr. Blaine's book, "Twenty Years of Congress." His action in the celebrated Judge Watrous case and on the admission of Oregon as a State was not without criticism. But that criticism was fully disarmed and his course vindicated. On the 5th of March, 1859, at a great Republican meeting in the city of Concord, the people of every shade of political opinion gathered to hear him and listen to an explanation of his position in the Oregon affair. In a candid and able manner he reviewed his action thereon, and concluded by saying "that he would not have taken a different position if every man, woman and child in the State, on bended knees, had implored him to do it; but would have resigned and come home and delivered to his constituents the trust which had been confided to him." A press report says "That the speaker was interrupted here by loud and continued applause such as was never before heard in the city, while three tremendous cheers were given, which showed emphatically that the hearts of the people were with him."

During his Congressional life, which closed with the Thirty-sixth Congress (not being a candidate for re-election), he had served on the judiciary committee and was chairman of the committee of claims, and at the time of his appointment as such chairman, the following appeared in the New York Tribune: "The Hon. Mason W. Tappan was conspicuous in the Thirty-fifth Congress as a member of the committee of the judiciary, and during the protracted examination of the charges preferred against Judge Watrous, Mr. Tappan was untiring in the discharge of his delicate duties. His selection now, as the head of the committee on claims, was a compliment due, as well to his past services in Congress, as to his distinguished ability as a lawyer and integrity as a man."

He was also a member of the vigilance committee, the chief duties of which were to watch the "Black Horse Cavalry."

We had reached the period of civil war. Armies were gathering, and the principles he had enunciated in the national House of Representatives he was ready to defend in the field. Abraham Lincoln called for seventy-five thousand volunteers for three months, and Colonel Tappan was one of the first men to enlist in the State. The command of the First Regiment naturally went to him, and he was accordingly appointed and commissioned by Governor Berry. The regiment was mustered into the service of the United States from the 1st to the 4th of May, 1861, and on the morning of the 25th left for the seat of war. The regiment received one continued ovation as it moved to the front. In New York City it was presented with a silk flag, by Judge Bowney, and its passage through the streets of the great metropolis on the day of the funeral of Colonel Ellsworth created a scene never to be forgotten. It was the first regiment that had entered the field fully equipped, with field and staff officers mounted, and with seventy-five horses and twenty-one baggage-waggons. It wheeled into line behind the funeral cortege and marched down Broadway. Baltimore was reached in the afternoon of May 27th. The men disembarked from the cars, and, with loaded muskets and fixed bayonets, marched to the tune of "Yankee Doodle" unmolested through the city that had shed Union blood. On reaching Washington, the regiment marched up Pennsylvania Avenue and on to Kalorama, where it went into camp. As soon as the column had passed the White House, President Lincoln sent for Colonel Tappan, and, complimenting him highly on the appearance of his men, said, taking him by the hand, "Colonel Tappan, your regiment looks more like war than anything I have seen." On the 10th of June the regiment was joined to a brigade commanded by Colonel Charles P. Stone, and marched to Rockville, Md. At this time the Confederate army was skirting the right bank of the Potomac, and at no time during the war was the national capital in greater peril.

On the 14th of June the regiment moved towards Poolesville, the object of this movement being to guard the river against the enemy, who were in large force at Leesburg, Va. On the 17th the enemy opened fire on a portion of the regiment with rifles and six-pound cannon, and while Colonel Tappan was moving with the remaining portion of the regiment to the scene of action, he was ordered back to guard against an anticipated attack from another direction. He was placed in command at Poolesville, and established a line of pickets for a distance of fourteen miles, from his camp, at Poolesville, down to Concord Ferry, thence up the Potomac to the mouth of the Monocacy. On the 6th of July a detachment, under command of Colonel Tappan, moved to Sandy Hook, the reserve to be sent there by rail on the 7th, and that night moved up the river on the Maryland side twelve miles, arriving at Sharpsburg at two o'clock in the morning, and at Williamsport, twelve miles farther, in the afternoon, where they forded the river and stood on the "sacred soil" of Virginia. Here they joined the brigade, which moved forward to Martinsburg, where they joined the command of General Patterson, who had his running fight with Johnston, called the battle of Falling Waters. July 14th the regiment, with the rest of the division, moved on towards Winchester. The enemy fled at their approach. They reached Bunker Hill in the afternoon of the same day. The troops were anxious for battle, but instead of marching on Winchester, a retreat was ordered to Charlestown. On the day of the battle of Bull Run, the 21st, the division marched to Harper's Ferry and went into camp on Bolivar Heights. July 21st found the regiment again in camp at Sandy Hook, and August 2d, their term of enlistment having expired, they embarked on board the cars for New Hampshire, being mustered out of the service at Concord, the 12th of August, 1861.

The men of Colonel Tappan's regiment were a portion of the time wretchedly clad, and endured many hardships. Owing to the reputation the regiment had acquired since entering the field, it was placed as the leading regiment on the right of the army in its extended operations in Maryland and Virginia. Of Colonel Tappan, "New Hampshire in the Rebellion" says: "As a commander he was patriotic, brave and thoughtful of and kind to his officers and men, and respected by all."

Colonel Tappan was appointed colonel of the Fourth Regiment upon the resignation of Colonel Whipple, but declined the appointment, feeling that it would be doing injustice to the brave ranking officers of that regiment. He was, subsequently, unanimously elected colonel of the Sixteenth Regiment by its soldiers; but Colonel Tappan, as well as the Governor of the State, thought it advisable that the commission should go to another.

For the last twenty-five years Colonel Tappan has been engaged in the constant practice of the law. He has always maintained a large practice in his county, and in many noted trials in other parts of the State he has been engaged. In the celebrated Paul

R. George will ease he was associated with the late Caleb Cushing at his particular request.

By a close application to the study of the law through a period of five years, Colonel Tappan was admitted to the bar, after a thorough examination by such a lawyer as the late Judge Perley, with no common knowledge in all its branches, and perhaps fitted, had he so inclined, to become what is popularly known as a technical lawyer. But rather than a strict adherence to the mere technicalities of the law, but taking a broader and more comprehensive view of what the law is and what the practice of it ought to be, it is more in accordance with his nature to rely on the merits of each individual case and the great law of reason and common sense as applicable to them.

In 1876, Colonel Tappan was appointed Attorney-General of the State by Governor Cheney, which position he now holds. The administration of his office, and the manner he has conducted the large number of State and capital cases that have fallen to him, has been characterized by ability and a faithful discharge of its varied and important duties.

As an advocate, he goes to his work with great assurance, moulds his thought into shape with stalwart strength, is clear and convincing, and the conviction that he is sincere in the cause he presents is impressed upon those that hear him.

During the time that he has been thus actively engaged in his profession he has, in many heated political campaigns, for which the State is so much noted, taken the stump in behalf of the cause of the Republican party, and what he deemed to be for the welfare of the whole country. In the great contest of 1868, in Warner, the home of his friend and the nominee of the Republican party, General Walter Harriman, he made a speech of four hours' duration, in reply to Richard Vaux, of Pennsylvania, who had spoken there the day before, and had taken the ground that in the reconstruction of the Southern States the administration had acted outside of the Constitution. Colonel Tappan, taking as his text the clause in the Constitution that the "United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government," proceeded with heavy blows to destroy the argument of the day before. The impression that this speech made upon the writer, as well as upon the minds of all that heard him, still remains, and it was the opinion, regardless of party, that the object of it was accomplished.

In the national campaign of 1872, Colonel Tappan joined the Liberal Republican movement, and supported his life-long friend, Horace Greeley, for the Presidency. Between these two men the strongest ties of friendship existed. Colonel Tappan believed that, more than any other man, Horace Greeley was the framer and builder of the Republican party. He was in Washington, as a member of Congress, during the great contest for the Speakership of the House of Representatives. Horace Greeley was there, and he regarded him as the master-spirit that directed the jarring and discordant elements, and uniting them on General Banks, secured his election as Speaker. The war being over, and the people of the North and South being citizens of one common country, he believed that the desired era of peace and reconciliation would be brought about by the election of Horace Greeley, and preferred that it should come under the leadership of such a Republican than under a reign of the Democratic party. He therefore supported Horace Greeley, and while this course subjected him to adverse comment and criticism no one doubted his sincerity or the motives by which he was actuated. Nor did it imply that he had renounced any of the principles of the Republican party, to which he had adhered from the day of its birth, and with which, in the course of events, he again found himself in full accord.

Colonel Tappan has been three times married. His first wife was Emeline M. Worth, of Sutton, by whom he had one son, Frank M. Tappan, Esq., who resides near his father, in Bradford. His second wife was Mary E. Jenkins, of Boston, and his present wife was Miss Imogene B. Atwood, of Lisbon, by whom he has a little daughter, Helen L. Tappan.

Of Colonel Tappan, as a man and a citizen, the writer concludes this sketch by quoting from a letter of a neighbor, as follows: "Mr. Tappan's kindness to the poor and afflicted, his fidelity as a friend, his sensitiveness of heart and his honor in his profession are proverbial among his most intimate acquaintances."

JOHN HENRY ALBIN¹ was born October 17, 1843, at West Randolph, Vermont. He is the son of John and Emily (White) Albin. At the High School in Concord, N. H., he prepared for college, and entered Dartmouth at the fall term of 1860, and graduating therefrom in 1864, he commenced the study of the law with the late Hon. Ira A. Eastman of Concord, who was a prominent lawyer and at one time one of the judges of the Supreme Judicial Court. He pursued his legal studies assiduously, without interruption, until October, 1867, when he was admitted to the bar. In April, 1868, he became a partner of Judge Eastman. In December of the same year, Samuel B. Page, Esq., removed from Warren, N. H., and became a member of the firm. They did a large business and it was one of the leading firms in the State. It was dissolved in 1874, at which time Mr. Albin became associated with the writer of this sketch, and by reason of whose appointment as Attorney General of the State, the relation was for a short time dissolved, as under a statute the Attorney-General was disqualified from practice, except in cases wherein the State was a party. This statute being repealed, the association was renewed.

¹ By Mason W. Tappan.

J. H. Albion

Mr. Albin formed a partnership with Nathaniel E. Martin, Esq., of Concord, under the title of Albin & Martin. This firm has an extensive legal business.

Mr. Albin was a member of the Legislature from Concord, in 1872-73. During his first term he served upon the Judiciary Committee, and in 1873 was chairman of the Committee on Railroads.

In 1875 he took up his residence in Henniker, N. H., but continued his business in Concord. He was elected to represent the town in the Legislature of 1876, during which session he was a member of the Judiciary Committee, and of several important special committees he was made chairman.

Mr. Albin has given much time and attention to Odd-Fellowship, and takes great interest in the mystic brotherhood. He has held all of the official positions in the Grand Lodge of the jurisdiction, and at its annual session in 1879 was elected Grand Master. In September, 1881, he represented the Grand Lodge in the Sovereign Grand Lodge at its session in Cincinnati, and in that at Baltimore in September, 1882. At the session held in Cincinnati, September, 1881, a committee was appointed to prepare a Degree of Uniformed Patriarchs, which consisted of William H. Crocker of Chicago, Theodore B. Elliott of Milwaukee, John H. Albin, C. B. Colledge of Washington, D. C., and John Heeseman of Charleston, S. C. The laborious duty of preparing the work contemplated, fell to Mr. Albin, and was performed with great care; he reported a Degree which was accepted by the committee and almost unanimously adopted by the Sovereign Grand Lodge, at its session in Baltimore in September 1882. This committee was continued in existence, with full power over the Degree until it was discharged by the grand body at its session held in Providence, in September, 1883. At the September session of 1884, at Minneapolis, Minn., Mr. Albin was made chairman of the Committee of the Patriarchal Branch of the Order, and at the same session a special committee was appointed for the purpose of making any revision that might be deemed necessary so far as that Degree was concerned, and also to report such legislation as might be necessary to carry it into full effect. That committee was composed of Mr. Albin, ex-Governor John C. Underwood of Covington, Ky., and Edward A. Stevens of Minneapolis, Minn., with instructions to report at the session of the Sovereign Grand Lodge, at Baltimore, September, 1885.

To those who know Mr. Albin it is not too much to say, that he is one of the most active, industrious and well-read lawyers in the State, and, notwithstanding his constantly increasing business, he keeps himself thoroughly read up in the latest legal decisions, and makes it a point to provide himself with the best and newest text-books in the profession. No case comes to his hands but is first thoroughly investigated in all its legal aspects; and in preparing and presenting his cases to the court, jury, or whatever tribunal are to hear the same, in fact, in the whole conduct of a trial, he takes high rank at the New Hampshire bar. No pains are spared and no labor is shirked which he considers will in any way tend to advance the cause or the interests of his clients.

Although actively engaged in his profession, Mr. Albin takes great interest in agricultural pursuits, and upon his farm in Henniker he spends many days of pleasant recreation.

He was married, September 5, 1872, to Miss Georgie A. Medica, of Henniker. They have two children, Henry A., born February 5, 1875, and Edith G., born August 5, 1878.

WILLIAM LAWRENCE FOSTER is the only son of John and Sophia (Willard) Foster. His father was one of thirteen children of the Rev. Edmund and Phoebe (Lawrence) Foster.

Edmund, the grandfather of Judge Foster, was born at Groton, Mass., in 1754. He graduated at Yale College, studied for the ministry and became quite prominent as a preacher. He was settled over the church in Littleton, Mass., and continued to be its pastor until his death, in 1825, a period of more than forty years. He was at one time a member of the Massachusetts State Senate. In 1783 he married Phoebe Lawrence, of Littleton. She was the daughter of Colonel William Lawrence, of Littleton. Through his paternal grandmother Judge Foster traces his descent from Robert Lawrence, of Lancashire, England, who was born about the year 1150. Attending his sovereign, Richard Cœur de Léon, in the war of the Crusades in the Holy Land, he so distinguished himself in the siege of Acre that he was knighted Sir Robert, of Ashton Hall.

The sixteenth in descent was John Lawrence, who came to America in 1655, and settled at Watertown, Mass.

The great-grandfather of Judge Foster was Abraham Foster, whose father came from England about the middle of the seventeenth century, and settled in Groton, Mass., where Abraham, Edmund and John Foster, the ninth child and third son of Edmund, was born. John Foster, in early life, removed to Westminster, Vt., where he married Sophia Willard, and where his only son, William Lawrence Foster, was born, June 1, 1823.

John Foster removed to Fitzwilliam, N. H., in 1825, and from thence to Keene, N. H., in 1834, where he died February 7, 1854. He was a captain in the old New Hampshire Militia, and was for many years high sheriff of the county of Cheshire. While residing in Keene, John Foster was many years a trader, and his son assisted him in his store.

Judge Foster, when a boy, attended the common schools and afterwards studied in the Keene and Walpole Academies. When about seventeen years of age he commenced the study of the law in the office of Levi Chamberlain, Esq. In 1844 and 1845 he attended the Law School at Cambridge. In 1845 he was admitted to the bar in Keene, and for a short time sustained a partnership with John N. Baxter, and afterward with Mr. Chamberlain. From 1845 to 1849 he was postmaster at Keene. From 1849 to 1853 he was clerk of the New Hampshire Senate. He was a member of Governor Dinsmore's staff, with the rank of colonel, by whom, in 1859, he was appointed State reporter, holding that office till 1856. During his term of office he edited Vols. 17-19, 21-31 inclusive, of the New Hampshire Reports.

In January, 1853, he married Harriet Morton, daughter of Hon. Hamilton E. Perkins, of Hopkinton, N. H., and in April of that year he removed from Keene to Concord, where he entered into partnership with Colonel John H. George. Hon. Charles P. Sanborn subsequently became a member of the firm, and upon Colonel George's retirement therefrom, in 1867, the partnership was continued by Messrs. Foster & Sanborn till October, 1869.

In 1854, Colonel Foster was appointed commissioner of the Circuit Court of the United States, which office he held until his election to the New Hampshire House of Representatives, in 1862. He was a member of the Legislature in 1862 and 1863. In 1863 he received from Dartmouth College the honorary degree of Master of Arts.

He was appointed a judge of the Supreme Judicial Court October 1, 1869, and held that office till October 1, 1874, when, upon the reorganization of the courts, he was appointed chief justice of the Circuit Court, with the late Judges Stanley and Rand as his associates. October 1, 1876, he was appointed a judge of the Supreme Court. He resigned that office July 1, 1881, and resumed the practice of the law. In 1884 he was reappointed an United States commissioner.

Judge Foster was very highly esteemed while a member of the court, and, as a lawyer, is noted for his legal attainments. He is a graceful writer and an eloquent orator, and has frequently been called upon to preside at public meetings and to deliver commemorative addresses. His post-prandial speeches have been especially happy. He is a strong advocate before a jury.

JOHN HATCH GEORGE.—The man who makes his way to the front rank at the bar and in politics, and holds his position without dispute for more than a quarter of a century, must be a person of ability, energy and sagacity. Especially is this true in New Hampshire, which, from the earliest period of our national history, has produced some of the ablest lawyers and the keenest politicians known to the country. Such a man is Colonel John Hatch George, of Concord, whose name has long been a household word at every Democratic fireside in the State, and whose eminent legal position is recognized throughout New England.

He was born in Concord, where he has ever since resided, November 29, 1824. His parents were John and Mary (Hatch) George, the former a prominent, respected and energetic citizen, who, though a native of Hopkinton, located in Concord in early manhood; the latter, a daughter of Samuel Hatch, a leading citizen of the town of Greenland, among whose grandchildren are included the Hon. Albert R. Hatch and John S. H. Frink, Esq., both also known as eminent lawyers and leading Democrats.

Gaining his preliminary education in the excellent public schools of his native town and in the old Concord Academy, Colonel George entered Dartmouth College in 1840, being then fifteen years of age, where he diligently pursued his studies for about three years, until the death of his father compelled his return home and the non-completion of his college course. The faculty subsequently conferred upon him his graduating degree, which was followed by that of Master of Arts. Among his classmates at Dartmouth were several who became prominent at the bar and in public life, including the late Hon. Harvey Jewell, and Hons. A. A. Ranney and Horatio G. Parker, of Boston, and ex-Governor Charles H. Bell.

If young George was unfortunate in the loss of his father, and in the failure to complete the college course consequent thereon, he was especially fortunate in being favored with the kindly regard of that brilliant son of New Hampshire, General Franklin Pierce, who, as a friend of the family, had become conversant with his qualities and characteristics, and readily discerned the line of action best calculated for the development and successful exercise of his powers. Fortunate as he was, however, in the enjoyment of the friendship of General Pierce at this time, it may safely be assumed that he never would have been the recipient of such favor had he not given evidence of the possession of abilities above the common order. The really great lawyer has a lofty regard for his profession, and will never be found influencing any one to enter upon its pursuit who is not likely to honor the profession and bring credit to himself. When, therefore, upon the invitation of General Pierce, young George entered upon the study of the law in the office of the former,—as he did soon after leaving college, and at the time when that distinguished man was in active practice,—it was under circumstances every way propitious to that ultimate success creditable alike to each. During his three years of legal study under such tutelage, he made that rapid progress which characterizes the advance of the ambitious and enthusiastic young man, well equipped, mentally and physically for the work in hand, thoroughly in love therewith, guided by wise counsel and inspired by brilliant example; and when, in 1846, he was admitted to the bar, and entered upon the practice of his profession in his native city, it was with unusual thoroughness of preparation.

At the opening of his professional career, Colonel George was again particularly fortunate. General Charles H. Penselee had long ranked among the most careful lawyers of the State, and had acquired an extensive practice. He was a warm friend of General Pierce, professionally and politically, and, like him, an intimate friend of the George family. Entering largely into public life, its engrossing duties withdrew his attention more and more from professional engagements, rendering desirable a partnership alliance with some active and competent young man. Such alliance was offered to and promptly accepted by young George, who thus auspiciously commenced his professional career.

¹ By H. H. Metcalf, in "Clark's Successful New Hampshire Men."

The limits of this sketch will not permit a detailed account of the progress and success of its subject; but it may be stated, that from his entrance upon legal practice to the present time, all his energies and faculties have been heartily devoted to the labors and duties of his profession, in whose performance he has won a high measure of fame, as well as a fair amount of that substantial reward which the world largely regards as the prime object of human effort. His connection with General Peaslee continued about five years, and was followed by a professional alliance of a similar character with Sidney Webster, Esq., then a young lawyer of fine abilities and brilliant promise, who has since become distinguished in legal and diplomatic circles. This partnership continued till Mr. Webster left Concord to become private secretary to General Pierce, upon the accession of the latter to the Presidency, in 1853. Soon afterward, Colonel George formed partnership relations with Hon. William L. Foster, who subsequently became, and long remained, a judge of the Supreme Court of the State, and with them Hon. Charles P. Sautborn was also for a time associated.

Not only in behalf of an extensive private clientele have the professional services of Colonel George been employed, but for many years, also, in behalf of the public,—he having been appointed solicitor for Merrimack County in 1849, and re-appointed in 1854, discharging the duties of the office until 1856, when he was removed for partisan reasons, the Republican party signaling its ascendency by a clean sweep of Democratic officials. From 1853 to 1858 he was United States attorney for the district of New Hampshire, appointed by President Pierce.

There are, undoubtedly, many men at the bar, in this and other States, as well grounded in legal principles as Colonel George, and even more familiar with the text-books, who have fallen far short of the success he has attained. It is one thing to be able to state abstract legal principles, and quite another correctly to apply those principles to the facts in any given case. It has ever been the habit of Colonel George, in the conduct of a cause, to thoroughly familiarize himself with all the facts and circumstances connected therewith. The mastery of the cause itself leaves little difficulty in the determination of the law bearing thereon, and it is the strongest guaranty of success in its management before a jury; and it is in the conduct of jury causes that Colonel George has won the greater measure of his success. Gifted with great perceptive powers and a ready knowledge of men, and familiar as he ever is with the cause in hand, in all its bearings, he is never taken at a disadvantage, no matter how able or alert the opposing counsel. In handling witnesses, and especially in cross-examination, he has shown unusual tact and ability. He reads the mind of a witness almost intuitively, and understands how to bring out the essential facts even from the most reluctant, and to do so in the manner best calculated to make the desired impression upon the minds of the jury. As an advocate, he is equaled by few and excelled by none of our New Hampshire lawyers; yet his power in this regard consists in the systematic, logical and intensely earnest presentation of all the facts which go to make up and strengthen his cause, and to destroy or weaken that of his opponents, rather than in the oratory which abounds in eloquently rounded periods and impassioned appeals. In this connection may well be quoted the words of one who, knowing Colonel George from youth, has written of him as follows:

"Intense earnestness, and a faculty of an immediate and powerful concentration of all his mental faculties on any subject which interested him, were the prominent peculiarities of the early manhood of Mr. George. When he came to the bar, he manifested a power of felicitous language, and a largeness of vocabulary, which were rarely to be seen even in the most practiced speakers. He never prepared beforehand the words of his spoken utterances, either at the bar, in the committee room or on the stump. Whatever he could see and understand at all, he saw and understood clearly. The strength of his feelings, the enormous power and range of his vocabulary, added to this clearness of vision, made mere verbal preparation unnecessary for him. His speaking was made up of a clear perception of the turning-point of his case, and then of pungent epigram, sparkling paradox, rattling attack, vivid repartee, hearty humor and, when occasion called for, of a fearlessness of denunciation of what he believed to be wrong or unjust or unfair, which made him, even at the outset of his brilliant career, a dangerous antagonist for the most practiced and powerful members of the New Hampshire bar."

Though not retiring from general practice, Colonel George has devoted his attention largely to railroad law for many years past, having accepted, in 1867, the position of solicitor for the Boston and Lowell Railroad, and established an office in Boston for the transaction of business in connection with that position. He retired from this position in 1884. For nearly twenty years previous to that date he had served as clerk and counsel of the Concord Railroad corporation, and had already become familiar with the law of railways and their general relations to the public. To-day there is no higher living authority upon railroad law in New England than Colonel George,—no man who understands more thoroughly or can state more clearly the respective rights, duties and obligations of railroad corporations and the people in relation to each other, a general understanding of which is becoming more and more essential to the fullest measure of our national prosperity. His public addresses upon the subject, his arguments before legislative committees, courts and juries, are models of clearness and cogency, admirable in construction and convincing in effect.

Notwithstanding his uninterrupted devotion to the law, Colonel George is no less generally known in politics than at the bar. Well grounded in the faith of the Democratic party in his youthful years, his intimate association with Pierce, Peaslee and other distinguished leaders of that organization in his early manhood served to intensify his feelings and convictions in that regard; so he has ever been a ready and zealous exponent of Democratic principles and a champion of the Democratic cause, contributing his services without stint in conventions, in committee work and upon the stump, doing able and brilliant service in the latter direction in all parts of the State, and in almost every campaign for the past thirty-five years. He long since came to be regarded as one of the most powerful and effective political debaters in the State. His efforts upon the stump are characterized by the same earnestness, the same sledge-hammer logic and the same comprehensive array of facts as at the bar. His mode of warfare, political as well as legal, is of the Napoleonic order. He never assumes the defensive, and if placed in such position by any combination of circumstances, he soon transforms it into one of active aggression.

From 1851 to 1853, inclusive, Colonel George served as chairman of the Democratic State Committee, and again in 1856. In 1852 he was also selected as the New Hampshire member of the Democratic National Committee, and he was especially active in the campaign, both in the State and the country at large, which resulted in the election of his friend, General Pierce, to the Presidency. His service upon the National Committee continued until 1860. He was a member of the Democratic National Convention in 1856, and chairman of the State delegation in the National Convention at Cincinnati, in 1860. At the State Convention of his party, in September of that year, he presided, delivering, upon assuming the chair, one of the ablest addresses ever heard upon a similar occasion.

His party having been in the minority in New Hampshire for the past twenty-five years, he has been comparatively little in public office. Aside from the non-partisan positions heretofore mentioned, he was for three years—in 1847, 1848 and again in 1850—clerk of the State Senate. In 1853 he was chosen a member of the Legislature, but resigned his seat to accept the office of United States attorney. In this connection it may be mentioned that in 1855 he was tendered, by President Pierce, the office of secretary of the Territory of Minnesota, which he at first was inclined to accept, but, after deliberation, determined to forego the chances for political promotion ordinarily involved in an appointment of that character, and remain with his friends and his law practice in his own State. In 1859, Colonel George received the Democratic nomination for Congress in the Second District, and again in 1863, when he made a vigorous canvass, and was defeated by a very close vote. In 1866 he received the votes of the Democratic members of the Legislature as their candidate for United States Senator. Had he deserted his party and allied himself with the majority when the Republicans came into ascendancy, he might readily have commanded the highest honors in the gift of the State, as others less able than himself have done; but his position in the honest regard of the people, irrespective of party, is far higher to-day for having remained true to his convictions and steadfast and active in their maintenance.

His military title comes from his service as chief of the staff of Governor Dinsmoor from 1848 to 1850. He was also for several years commander in the brilliant and popular organization known as the "Governor's Horse-Guards." As a popular orator, outside the domain of law and politics, Colonel George also takes high rank. His oration upon Daniel Webster, at the centennial celebration of the birth of that most illustrious son of New Hampshire, under the auspices of the Webster Club of Concord, is surpassed in power and felicity of expression by none which the event anywhere called forth.

Colonel George was united in marriage, in September, 1849, with Miss Susan Ann Brigham, daughter of Captain Levi Brigham, of Boston, who died May 10, 1862, leaving five children, three sons and two daughters,—viz.: John Paul, Charles Peaslee, Benjamin Pierce, Jane Appleton, Anne Brigham. In July, 1864, he married Miss Salvadora Meade Graham, daughter of Colonel James D. Graham, of the United States engineers, by whom he has one child, Charlotte Graham.

The family residence of Colonel George is the old paternal mansion on North Main Street, in Concord, wherein he was born. He has also an excellent farm a few miles out of the city, in Hopkinton, where he makes his summer home, and where, in his little leisure from professional labor, he indulges a fondness for rural pursuits, and especially for the breeding and care of domestic animals, which was one of the characteristics of his boyhood. Incidental as this may be, his farm is known as one of the most highly cultivated in the section where it is located, and his horses and Jersey cattle are the admiration of all lovers of good stock.

As a citizen, Colonel George is public-spirited, and freely devotes his time and energies to the furtherance of every movement and the advocacy of every measure which he believes calculated to promote the material or educational welfare of the community. No man in Concord has done more than he to advance the prosperity of the city in every essential regard. The efficiency of the public schools has ever been an object of deep interest to him; and as a private citizen, as a member of building Committees and in the Board of Education, he has given his services freely in perfecting the admirably-equipped public-school system, which is far from the least of the attractions which render our capital city one of the most desirable places of residence in New England.

Samuel R. Knapp

The general extension of the railway system of the State, to which most that has been accomplished in the development of its material resources for the last twenty-five years is due, has ever found an enthusiastic supporter in Colonel George, who has been and still is directly connected with several railroad enterprises in different sections, which have proved of great local and general advantage.

Few men have more or warmer friends than Colonel George. A man of positive opinions, frankly and honestly declared, he commands the sincere respect of those with whom he comes in contact in all the relations of life, private, social, public and professional. Formidable as an opponent, he is nevertheless fair and honorable, as he is true and faithful as a friend and ally. He is a prominent member of the Masonic order, having attained the rank of Sovereign Grand Inspector-General of the Thirty-third Degree, and a member of the "Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of the Northern Jurisdiction of the United States."

This brief sketch can, perhaps, be no more appropriately concluded than in the following language of the gentleman (Sidney Webster, Esq.) heretofore quoted:

"Years of incessant toil, while they have diminished somewhat the energetic temperament and the exuberant animal spirits of Colonel George's youth, and have naturally softened his once blunt and almost brusque manner in debate, have not diminished the real force and strength of his genuine character, for character is just what Colonel George has always had. As the ripples of his experience spread over a wider and wider area, he may have less and less confidence in the infallibility of any man's opinions, and less belief in the importance to society of any one man's action; but Colonel George has reached and possessed his half-century with his mental faculties and his moral faculties improving and strengthening year by year. New Hampshire has to-day very few among her living sons better equipped to do triumphant battle for her in the high places of the world."

HON. DANIEL BARNARD.—1. John Barnard was among the earlier settlers of Massachusetts. He came to this country in 1634, in the ship "Elizabeth," from Ipswich, England, and settled in Watertown.

2. John Barnard, son of the pioneer John Barnard, had two sons,—Jonathan and Samuel.

3. Jonathan Barnard, inn-holder in Amesbury, who kept "The Lion's Mouth" in provincial days, was a captain in the colonial militia, and was prominent in the affairs of the town in which he lived. His name heads the list of the sixty original grantees, in 1735, of the township of New Amesbury, or "Number One," which was afterwards granted, in 1767, by the Masonian proprietors, as Warner.

4. Charles Barnard, son of Jonathan, was a soldier in the patriot army of the Revolution, and settled in Warner.

5. Thomas Barnard, son of Charles Barnard, was born in Warner in 1782; married, first, Ruth Eastman, of Hopkinton; second, Phebe, his first wife's sister. In the fall of 1826 he removed, with his family, from Warner to Orange. He died January 29, 1859. His wife, Phebe, died June 30, 1845.

6. Daniel Barnard, son of Thomas and Phebe Barnard, was born in Orange, N. H., January 23, 1827.

This town, though it received some settlers under its original name of Cardigan as early as 1773, was in 1826, for the most part, still an unbroken wilderness. When Thomas Barnard went up there and planted his home on his lot of three hundred acres on the highlands dividing the waters which flow into the Penigewassett from those which flow into the Connecticut, the whole territory was still covered by the primeval forest. The church and the district school stood together more than three miles off, and so continued till the subject of this notice, the fifth child of the family, was fourteen years old, no regular school being established nearer till he was eighteen years old. But the father being a man of sense and intelligence, and the mother an uncommonly bright, capable woman, they not only made the utmost exertion to give their children the full benefit of the meagre chances of the district school, but also systematically supplemented these opportunities with regular study and teaching in the long winter evenings at home. The father, a good mathematician, managed the flock in arithmetic, and the mother handled them in other branches. At the age of seventeen Daniel was at the academy in Canaan, several miles from home, during the winter, and subsequently continued to work on the farm in the summers and study at the academy in the winters till he became of age.

During this time he was anxiously endeavoring to secure the advantages of a college education, and with this end in view, pursued his preparatory studies at the Canaan and Boscawen Academies, and at the Normal Institute at Reel's Ferry, under the tuition of Professor William Russell, teaching during the winter seasons.

When he arrived at man's estate he took his stand with the Free-Soil Democrats, and was elected to represent the town of Orange in the popular branch of the Legislature in the years 1848, '49, '50 and '51.

Mr. Barnard was well known in the House from his first appearance in that body, not merely because so youthful in appearance, but because, also, of the uncommon capacity, the sincerity and sagacity with which, in unassuming, almost diffident ways, he met all his duties; and in the latter sessions of the four years' service he became a leader of the Independent party in the House, an influential member of that body. At home during the same period he was sleepless in his vigilance, contriving by sagacious management to hold the little band of Free-Soil Democrats in a solid column, and annually to carry the town till he left, in the autumn of 1851.

His legislative experience causing him to materially change his plans for the future, he decided to enter at once upon the study of law, and at the close of the legislative session of 1851 he entered the law-office of Nesmith & Pike, in Franklin.

In 1851, on admission to the bar, he became at once the junior partner with Mr. Pike in the office in which he had read his profession, Mr. Nesmith at that time retiring from the office and extensive business which he had so honorably founded and built into its large proportions. In 1863, Mr. Barnard withdrew from the firm and established himself alone in his profession in the same village, rapidly rising into the very large, wide and lucrative business which for more than fifteen years has allowed him not so much as a week or scarcely a day of vacation in the year. During this period he has had as many students in his office constantly as the circumstances of his office would admit, and has nearly all the time had a partner in a temporary way. His partner now is his eldest son, who was graduated at Dartmouth College, with superior rank, in 1876, at the age of twenty years, studied his profession in his father's office and at the Boston Law School, and was admitted to the bar and into partnership with his father in 1879. In relation to the business of the office, it is perfectly safe to add that there has been no time within the last ten years in which there has not been a formidable amount of business piled up awaiting attention, notwithstanding the most sleepless, indefatigable industry which Mr. Barnard has brought to his duties. For many years he has not only regularly attended all the courts in the counties of Merrimack, Belknap, and the Plymouth sessions of Grafton, but has constantly attended the United States Circuit Courts, practicing in bankrupt, patent and revenue cases. The reports of the courts fully support the statements here made on this subject.

The esteem in which Mr. Barnard is held by the immediate community in which he lives has been casually mentioned. Though never seeking office, he has been often chosen to places of responsibility by his townsmen. In 1860 and 1862 he represented the town in the Legislature, and in all political contests in the town in which he has been candidate for the suffrages of his townsmen he has always run much ahead of the party ticket. In 1865 and 1866 he was a member of the State Senate, presiding over that body in the latter-named year; in 1870 and 1871 he was a member of the Governor's Council, and in 1872 was a member of the National Republican Convention at Philadelphia. He was solicitor of Merrimack County from 1867 till 1872, when he declined a reappointment, again declining the position in 1877. He was a firm, earnest supporter of the homestead-exemption law of 1850, which was opposed by most of the legal profession in the Legislature, and introduced the resolution in the House which first gave the members a daily paper. As a member of the Senate in 1867 he took a profound interest in the amendment of the Federal Constitution prohibiting slavery, making an able and effective argument, which was published at the time, in its support in that body. In the cause of education he has always been a foremost friend in Franklin and throughout the State. His own early struggles have doubtless contributed to make him peculiarly a friend of the common school, and his experience as a teacher in his early years gives him practical wisdom in the cause. While studying his profession in Franklin he was, from year to year employed in the teachers' institutes, which did a large work in awakening higher ideas of the mission of the common school in New Hampshire during that period, and in that business he was in nearly every county of the State. Sensible of his own personal misfortune in having so little early chance for schooling, his voice and his open hand are always on the side which aims to give enlargement to the education of the masses of the people, and in his own family is seen his appreciation of the higher grades of education. In 1867 the honorary degree of Master of Arts was conferred upon him by Dartmouth College.

Mr. Barnard has been prominently identified with all the leading industries which have been established in Franklin, and which have so remarkably built up the town within the last twenty years. He procured the charters and helped organize all the large corporations; has been a continuous trustee of the Franklin Library Association since its establishment more than fifteen years ago, and a trustee of the Franklin Savings-Bank since its establishment, in 1865; legal counsel of the Franklin Falls Company from its organization, in 1864, and for many years its local agent, and is, and has been from the first, a director and vice-president of the Franklin National Bank, organized in that town in 1880.

As a lawyer Mr. Barnard ranks very high in the profession, his advice being eagerly sought by all classes, but no person, however poor, with a meritorious cause was ever turned away from his office to make room for a richer or more powerful client. His client's cause becomes his, and his whole energy is directed to winning for him what he believes he should have. His terse and logical arguments are especially powerful before a jury, and his eloquent voice has often been heard in legislative halls, leading and guiding the law-making assemblies, and in political meetings sustaining the motives and policy of his party.

In the social, humane and religious work of the community he has always been active and efficient, generous almost to a fault in every good enterprise, and in these spheres of duty he has ever had the efficient co-operation of a cultivated and it is not too much to add, a model Christian wife,—Amelia, only child of Rev. William Morse, a Unitarian clergyman, of Chelmsford, Mass., at the time of the marriage,—to whom he was married November 8, 1854. Mr. Morse, now deceased, was one of the pioneer clergymen of the Unitarian faith in this country, was many years pastor of the Callowhill Street Church, Philadelphia, and an able and excellent minister. His wife was Sophronia, daughter of Abner Kneeland, of Boston, an able and upright man, whose trial on the technical charge of blasphemy, but really for the publication of heretical religious doctrines, was a most notable episode in New England forty years ago. Mrs. Morse was a noble woman. Mr. Morse and his wife resided during the last years of their pleasant lives in Franklin, near their daughter, who watched with singular tenderness over the closing years of the parents to whom she is indebted for superior trainings, as well as superior ability.

Their union has been blessed with seven children, six of whom—four sons and two daughters—are now living.

William Morse, the eldest son, has been mentioned. James Ellery, the second son, entered Dartmouth College, but left at the end of his sophomore year, and is in business in Boston.

Charles Daniel and Frank Engene are both at school, the former being a student at Phillips Exeter Academy.

Emma Sophronia, the elder of the two daughters, is married to Captain Samuel Pray, of Portsmouth, N. H.

Mary Amelia was graduated at Smith College in 1881, and lives at home.

JOSEPH B. WALKER is the son of Captain Joseph Walker, and the great-grandson of Rev. Timothy Walker, the first minister of Concord. He was born on the paternal farm June 12, 1822. He was fitted for college largely at Exeter, and graduated at Yale in 1844. He studied law in the office of Hon. Charles H. Peaslee, of Concord, and at the Harvard Law School, and was admitted to the New Hampshire bar in March, 1847.

A year or two after his admission to the bar he relinquished his profession, and has since been devoted to general business.

He inherited the family farm, one of the largest in Concord, which he has greatly improved by working, draining, fertilizing, etc., thereby trebling its productiveness.

From 1845 to 1866, when its third charter expired, Mr. Walker was a director of the Merrimack County Bank. This was a State institution, and its managers not caring to continue it as a national bank, its existence ceased with its third charter, after a successful career of sixty years. In 1865 he was elected president of the New Hampshire Savings-Bank, in Concord, one of the oldest institutions for savings in New Hampshire, and remained at its head until 1874. Upon its organization in 1880 he was elected one of the directors of the Mechanics' National Bank, and is still a member of that board.

About 1847 he was elected clerk of the board of directors of the Northern Railroad and, a few years later, a director, which two offices he held for several years. Some twelve or fifteen years ago he became a director of the Concord and Portsmouth Railroad, a position which he still holds.

Mr. Walker took an early interest in the New Hampshire Asylum for the Insane, and became one of its trustees in 1847 and its secretary in 1848. These positions he still occupies, having held them for nearly forty years. Being a resident trustee, he has had much active service in connection with the outside business of that institution. Since his connection with it, its accommodations for patients have increased from those for ninety-six patients to ample ones for three hundred and fifty.

He has ever taken an active interest in the New Hampshire Historical Society, of which he became a member in 1845 and has since served it in various ways, acting as its librarian from 1845 to 1850, its recording secretary from 1849 to 1853, its second vice-president from 1860 to 1861, its first vice-president from 1861 to 1866, and its president from 1866 to 1868. He was also active in the successful efforts to procure for it a permanent habitation of its own and in fitting this to meet the wants of the institution.

He also took a deep interest in the founding of the New Hampshire College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts. He was chairman of the special committee of the House of Representatives, in 1866 to whom this subject was committed, drew and reported the bill establishing it, which, with some modifications, passed both branches of the Legislature, and after its organization was for a year or two one of its trustees. His name now stands upon its catalogue as lecturer to its students upon the subjects of drainage and irrigation.

Mr. Walker has always felt a deep interest in the welfare of his native city. Twice—in 1866 and 1867—he has represented it in the Legislature, and for two years he was a member of its Board of Aldermen.

The educational interests of the city have also received his earnest support. Up to about 1850 the schools of Concord had been as poor as those of any other large town in the State. The consolidation of the three districts in the central part of the city into one, since known as Union School District, was the first important step in their improvement. The second was the establishment of a Board of Education in this district. These two steps subsequently secured a new interest on the part of its people in the welfare of their schools. A systematic grading of the schools and a rebuilding of all its school-houses, with such additional buildings as the wants of the schools required, were the third and fourth in this important work, which required large expenditures of money by the district and large expenditures of time, skill and patience on the part of the Board of Education. The result has been the elevation of the schools to a level with that of the good schools of New England, and the placing within the reach of all the children of this district the means of attaining a respectable English or classical education.

Mr. Walker was one of the original members of this Board of Education, and by successive elections was continued such for thirteen years, at the expiration of which period he felt that he had contributed his share of work in this direction, and retired.

Mr. Walker was one of the original members of the committee appointed by the city for the purchase of a new cemetery, and took an active part in laying out the grounds of Blossom Hill Cemetery, in 1860, and in securing a proper ordinance for the regulation of its affairs. After a service of ten years he retired from this position, in 1870.

He has ever been a good deal interested in agricultural and historical subjects; from time to time has written papers, and on various occasions has delivered addresses upon these. All the fourteen volumes of "Reports of the Secretary of the Board of Agriculture" contain one or more of these, with the exception of the thirteenth. Before the New Hampshire Historical Society and the New England Historic Genealogical Society he has repeatedly read papers upon historical and biographical subjects; many of these latter have been printed.

ANSON SOUTHWARD MARSHALL¹ was born in Lyme, New Hampshire, December 3d, 1822, and died in Concord on the morning of July 5th, 1874. His father was a farmer, and young Anson's boyhood was passed on the farm, where his naturally delicate constitution became strong and vigorous and thus enabled him, in the succeeding years of his busy life, to bear its fatigues and worriments without seriously affecting his health. At an early age he inclined towards reading and study; and, although he did not neglect the sports incident to his gleeful disposition, young Marshall found time to indulge in a course of readings somewhat unusual for one of his years. With an ambition like this, it was but natural that he should turn his eyes towards that venerable seat of learning only a few miles distant from his father's homestead.

Accordingly, he entered Dartmouth College at the age of twenty-one, having fitted himself in the space of eighteen months while at the academy at Thetford. Among his classmates were the Hon. James W. Patterson, now superintendent of State instruction, the Hon. Henry P. Rolfe, Albert H. Crosby, M.D., and many others since distinguished in their various walks of life. He was graduated in the class of 1848, and, like many a young graduate of that time, sought his immediate livelihood in the vocation of school-teacher. In this he was singularly fortunate. About the year 1849 the town of Fitchburg, Mass., established a High School, and the committee having the selection of teachers in charge chose Mr. Marshall from a large number of applicants. To the wisdom of this choice the old people testify to this day, and his name is held in most affectionate regard by those who attended the school during his principalship. As a teacher, he was remarkably successful; his method of instruction was such as to interest the scholar without the tediousness of an unchanging routine.

As an illustration of his originality as a teacher, he once dismissed his class and went with it to a circus, in order, as he said, that his scholars might see the exceeding suppleness and perfection of the human body as shown by the performers. As a practical lesson in anatomy, this deviation from the truly orthodox regulation may have proved productive of much good.

While in Fitchburg, Mr. Marshall entered his name in the law-office of Wood & Torrey, but his school duties must have prevented any serious or deep researches in the literature of that profession, to which he afterward dedicated his life.

He often referred to the time he spent in Fitchburg as one of the pleasantest of his life, and whenever, in after-years, business called him in its neighborhood, he was sure to visit the old scenes and to receive the hearty welcome of those of his old friends who yet remained.

In 1851 he left Fitchburg and came to Concord, where he lived to the day of his death. Entering the law-office of President Pierce and Judge Josiah Minot, he made good progress in his studies, and the next year was admitted to the bar.

A partnership was formed with his former classmate, Mr. Rolfe, which continued until 1859, and was then dissolved, Mr. Marshall remaining alone until 1863, when William M. Chase, Esq., became associated with him under the name of Marshall & Chase.

There is, probably, no State in the Union where politics are more assiduously cultivated than in New Hampshire, and especially by the lawyers; so, when Mr. Marshall found himself again in his native State, his active mind inevitably turned to party questions. He came from a staunch Democratic family, and his later associations were of the same political faith. One of the eminent lawyers with whom he had studied was President of the United States, the other was one of the wisest counselors in the Democratic camp, and it is not surprising that the young man just entering into life should take an active part in the management and detail of the campaigns.

He was elected assistant clerk of the House of Representatives, and, later, was appointed district attorney by President Buchanan, which office he held until the advent of the Lincoln administration. The fascination of politics never wore off, and he continued to render his party efficient service on the stump and in the council-room.

In 1867 he was chairman of the Democratic State

¹ By Charles R. Corning.

Wm. S. Marshall,

Committee during one of the most exciting campaigns ever waged. Andrew Johnson had broken with the Republican party, and as New Hampshire then held its election in March, the great eye of the nation was fixed on the Granite State to see if she wavered in the fidelity to those principles which had so long guided her.

The fight was bitter and hotly contested, but Mr. Marshall and his party were beaten. His genial nature, however, did not suffer from the defeat, his cheery ways were not lessened, and there lurked in his generous mind no feeling of resentment or of revenge either toward his own party or his opponents.

In the spirited contest between the Northern and the Concord Railroads Mr. Marshall was an active factor, and about 1870 was elected clerk of the latter corporation, a position which he held at the time of his death.

But law was, most truly, Mr. Marshall's forte, and to it he devoted the best years of his life.

He was not a learned, nor was he even an unusually well-read lawyer, but few, indeed, excelled him in getting at the pith of the case or in applying the necessary legal principles. He possessed a confidence and courage that helped him to conquer difficulties which others might have deemed insurmountable, and, above all, a tact which never failed him. He was uniformly polite not only to the bench and to the bar, but to the witnesses arrayed against him. Nor was his manner of cross-examination severe except when he knew the truth was held back; and even then he depended more on worrying the witness than on vehement denunciation.

His knowledge of human nature was large, and he knew almost by intuition which juryman needed his particular attention.

But it was as an advocate that Mr. Marshall attracted the public notice, for he so invested his arguments with wit and humor that the court-room was sure to be filled whenever it became known that he was to address the jury. His manner of speech was quiet, but he never failed to indulge in invective and sarcasm if the cause demanded it, and with these weapons he was counted a most dangerous adversary.

He rarely, if ever, wrote out and committed his speeches, either political or forensic; but he carefully thought them out as he walked the streets, and this, together with his exceeding readiness, both of words and of apt illustrations, often misled his hearers as to the method of his preparation.

One element that distinguished him was his habit of putting himself in his client's place; he seemed to feel his cause and to make it his own.

His law practice increased year by year, and at the time of his death had become one of the largest in the State.

Mr. Marshall was one of those happily organized men who enjoyed life and its blessings to the utmost; he could look law cases in his office and go forth among society with a seeming forgetfulness of his morrow's labors, and it was in this way that he found that temporary recreation so indispensable to the brain-worker.

He was exceedingly fond of nature and loved to roam round the beautiful drives of Concord, whose beauty he so keenly appreciated. Indeed, it was the love of such outings that led him to his terrible death.

He was one of the most charming conversationalists that ever lived, for his vast reading had made him a full man, and there was no subject upon which he could not entertain his hearers. His quick wit and readiness at repartee gave his conversation a sparkle and lustre that never failed to delight even those whose opinions were at variance with his own.

But one of his most beautiful traits was his liking for boys and young men. They were attracted to him by his politeness, for Mr. Marshall made it his habit to bow to everybody, no matter how humble, and aside from this, he often paused in his walks to inquire of them about their studies or their pastimes. He took much pleasure in recommending courses of reading to the young, and willingly lent his own books to encourage them.

His taste in reading was excellent, and his library contained the works of the great writers and poets.

It may not be out of place to say that his favorite author was Scott, and his favorite poem "Gray's Elegy."

He had a strong memory, and oftentimes, while in his company, I have heard him quote long passages from Shakespeare, Milton and others, and so accurately that he seldom halted for a word.

In religion Mr. Marshall entertained very liberal views of man's duty and man's reward, although for the last years of his life he was an attendant at the South Congregational Church, and his funeral services were conducted by its minister.

He retained the respect of his fellow-citizens, for he was active and full of public spirit, and it was with heavy hearts that those with whom he had lived so long learned of his tragic death.

On the bright morning of July 4, 1874, he drove with his wife and young son to the grove at the head of Lake Penacook, where he intended to lunch. A militia company, encamped on the grounds not many rods away, suddenly began firing at a target. Mr. Marshall heard the bullets whistle near and called out to the men to be careful. He then rose to his feet and was instantly shot in the abdomen. The wound was mortal, and death ended his agonies a few hours later.

His funeral was largely attended by all classes of society; the bench and the bar and the State government were all represented.

He lies in Blossom Hill Cemetery, on the ridge facing the north, and near him lie his friends Ira Perley, Charles C. Lund, George G. Fogg, John Y. Mugridge and Asa Fowler.

At the next term of the Supreme Court after his death the following resolutions were entered upon the records:

"Resolved, That in the recent sudden and untimely death of Anson S. Marshall, Esq., a prominent member of this bar, struck down in the vigor of life and the full possession of all his powers, through the culpable, if not criminal, carelessness of others, we regret the loss of a frank and courteous gentleman, a kind and genial associate and companion, a generous and public-spirited citizen and an active, zealous and able lawyer, always uniting in his devotion to the interests of his clients and ever laborious and patient in the practice of his chosen profession.

"Resolved, That we tender to the family of our deceased brother our sincerest sympathy in the afflictive dispensation which has deprived them of an affectionate husband and indulgent father.

"Resolved, That these resolutions be presented to the Court, with a request that they be entered upon the records, and their clerk instructed to transmit a copy of them to the family of the deceased."

Mr. Marshall was married to Mary Jane Corning April 9, 1861. Anson Southard Marshall, Jr., was born March 29, 1863, and is now studying law in the office of Chase & Streeter.

HON. GEORGE WASHINGTON NESMITH, LL.D.—One of the most affable and genial gentlemen of the old school is Judge Nesmith, of Franklin, or, more widely, of New Hampshire. His years sit lightly upon him. An honorable man, a just judge, a kindly neighbor, a good citizen and a ripe scholar, he can calmly sit in his well-appointed library, surrounded by his well-loved books and mementoes of the past, and review a well-spent life, crowned with honors. He is of pure Scotch-Irish descent. In him are united the families of the old Covenanters, the defenders of Londonderry, the hardy pioneers of New England, the heroes of Bunker Hill and the strict Presbyterians; the Nesmiths, the McKeanes, the Dinsmores and the Dickeyes. He comes of a brave and cultured race.

Genealogy.²—1. James Nesmith was born in county Antrim, Ireland, in the valley of the Bann, in the year 1692, about two years after his parents, coming from Scotland, had settled there. In 1714 he married Elizabeth, daughter of James and Janet (Cochran) McKean, who was his companion for nearly half a century. James Nesmith was one of the signers of the memorial to Governor Shute, March 26, 1718, one of the proprietors of Londonderry and one of the original sixteen who made the first settlement of that town, April 22, 1719. James Nesmith was a strong man, respected and honored by his associates, and an elder in the church. He died in 1767.

2. James Nesmith, Jr., son of James and Elizabeth (McKean) Nesmith, was born in Ireland in 1718, shortly before the embarkation of his parents for America. He married Mary Dinsmore, and settled in Londonderry. Although beyond the military age, he took an active part in the struggle for independence, and was present at the battle of Bunker Hill, at the siege of Boston and at Bennington. He died at home, July 15, 1793.

3. Jonathan Nesmith, son of James and Mary (Dinsmore) Nesmith, was born in Londonderry in August, 1759. At the age of sixteen he commenced to clear a lot in Antrim, and permanently settled there in 1778. He was one of the leading spirits of the town, an elder of the Presbyterian Church from its formation, a selectman for eleven years and a representative four years, commencing with 1796. For fifty years he missed but one communion. He was genial, jolly, good-natured and enjoyed a joke; was very hospitable and benevolent; anxious for the public welfare; stoutly in earnest to maintain the faith of his fathers. He was a man of strong ability, good judgment, irreproachable character and an honor to the town he helped to establish. He married Eleanor, daughter of Adam and Jane (Strahan) Dickey, of Londonderry, and granddaughter of John and Margaret Dickey, of Londonderry, Ireland. She was born January 1, 1761, and died September 17, 1818. He died at the age of eighty-six, October 15, 1845.

4. George Washington Nesmith, son of Jonathan and Eleanor (Dickey) Nesmith, was born in Antrim, October 23, 1800.

Life.—His father's residence in Antrim was situate a mile from the district school-house, and the distance and his lameness interfered with his early attendance. Miss Katherine Miller, a sister of General James Miller, later wife of John Caldwell, of Antrim, led him through the rudiments as found in Noah Webster's spelling-book. She was an amiable and kind woman, well calculated to gain the affections of children. The other teachers who helped to mould his character were Miss Lucinda Lawrence, of Ashby, Mass.; Miss Fanny Baldwin, afterwards wife of Dr. Israel Burnham; and Miss Anstess Woodbury, a sister of Hon. Levi Woodbury, who in later years married Hon. Nehemiah Eastman, and who became the early friend and patron of Henry Wilson in his boyhood. In the winter of 1810 he received instruction from J. Miltimore, of West Woodbury, Mass.; in 1811, from Joshua Holt, of Greenfield, N. H.; and in 1812, '13 and '14, from Daniel M. Christie, of Antrim, afterwards of Dover, N. H. In early life, in the school-room, Mr. Christie gave evidence of superior ability as an instructor, and ranked as a model schoolmaster. He was an able mathematician, and could lead a class through the intricacies of figures with consummate tact.

In May, 1814, the boy was sent from home and placed at Jaffrey, under the instruction of Henry Cummings. His companions were Luke Woodbury and Samuel Dakin, of Utica, N. Y., the former for many years judge of Probate, while the latter lived to see his five sons take degrees from his own alma mater, Hamilton College. To Rev. John M. Whiton, minister at Antrim, was he chiefly indebted for his progress in the classics and his early preparation to enter Dartmouth College. His course of four years embraced the stormy, threatening period when the Legislature of the State attempted to establish the Dartmouth University, and deprive the trustees of the college of their jurisdiction.

¹By J. S. McClintock.

²This account is taken from the "History of Antrim," by Rev. W. R. Colburne.

Geo. W. Vesmithe.

In the class of 1820, with Judge Nesmith, were graduated Hon. Nathan Crosby, of Lowell, Hon. George P. Marsh, Judges Upham and Woodbury, Hon. H. Williams and James W. Parker, and Rev. David Goodwillie, D.D., now of Trumbull County, Ohio, who yet survives.

After graduation he taught school at "the north end of Concord Street" four months, and at the academy at Bradford, Vt., eighteen months.

He commenced the study of the law with Parker Noyes, Esq. (then of Salisbury, N. H.), August 14, 1822. Parker Noyes was the brother-in-law of Hon. Thomas W. Thompson, and his law-partner from A.D. 1801, continuing to 1807, when the firm was dissolved, and Mr. Noyes succeeded to the whole business of the late firm.

He commenced the study of the law under the depressing influence of poor health, but by adopting a rigid system of out-door exercise and manual labor, and strictly adhering to it for nearly two years, he regained his accustomed strength and vigor. The law business of Mr. Noyes was quite extensive, and required more than the ability and strength of one man to attend to it, so that the hearty co-operation of the young law student was duly appreciated and handsomely recompensed. Mr. Nesmith was admitted to the bar in August, 1825, and immediately formed an equal partnership with Mr. Noyes, which continued until the end of one year, when the senior member of the firm withdrew from professional labor, on account of sickness, and surrendered the whole business to Mr. Nesmith. The kindness and liberality of Mr. Noyes to the young lawyer, on the threshold of his business life, has ever been rightly appreciated by the recipient.

The old law-office stood in the lower village of Franklin (then Salisbury, now known as the Webster Place). It was originally built and occupied about 1790, by Thomas W. Thompson. Its situation, near the point where four of the five great counties of the State then cornered, was well selected for legal business. Mr. Thompson was a good lawyer, but not a great advocate. His students acquired good, industrious habits and correct principles. They were Moses Eastman, Daniel Webster, Ezekiel Webster, Daniel Abbot, Jeremiah H. Woodman, Jacob McGaw and Parker Noyes, Ichabod Bartlett, D. C. Atkinson, John A. Harper, Josiah Houghton, Peabody Rogers and William C. Thompson studied with Mr. Noyes. To the last named, Mr. Nesmith owed his invitation to leave his school in Bradford, Vt., and enter the office consecrated to legal lore as a student.

In April, 1829, Mr. Nesmith gave up the office at the lower village and removed to the upper village, where he has ever since resided. The old office is still in existence, reduced from its lofty station, and now doing duty as a neglected back kitchen, the law-tomes being replaced by the more humble pans and kettles.

Mr. Nesmith at once took an active part in the affairs of his adopted home, and entered eagerly into the scheme to incorporate the territory from the four towns of Northfield, Simsborton, Andover and Salisbury into a township, when there would be a community of interest,—the town of Franklin. The first petition was presented in 1824. The following year a viewing committee, consisting of William Plummer, Jr., Caleb Keith and Abel Merrill, examined the territory, and reported favorably in 1826. The Legislature of that year rejected the application on the ground that a majority of the inhabitants within the territory in question were not in favor of the new town. In June, 1828, there was more union and consequently more strength, and the petition was presented under more favorable auspices. Although opposed by the strenuous efforts and influence of three towns, the charter was granted in December, 1828. Judge Nesmith wrote the charter and gave the town its name. The three opposing towns, at the June session, 1829, asked that the several tracts of territory taken from them should be restored. An order of notice was obtained for a hearing of this subject, returnable at June session, 1830. To the Legislature of that year Mr. Nesmith was elected to represent the young town, and advocate the inviolability of its territory. The struggle came on in June. The first hearing was before the committee on towns and parishes, of which Hon. Franklin Pierce was chairman. The committee, by a majority of one, reported adversely to the towns; but their report, after a long and well-contested debate, was rejected by the House by two majority. The territory taken from Northfield was restored to her on a final vote, the matter being settled by the casting vote of the Speaker. Twenty-six years afterwards this disputed territory, with more added, was quietly ceded to Franklin. His first legislative experience was arduous and repulsive to Mr. Nesmith, and by the division of the town he saw his majority fade away. However, he entered into the canvass of 1831 with vigor, and had the satisfaction of being re-elected by a majority of fifty—an increased majority over that of the previous election. Judge Nesmith also represented Franklin in the Legislature in 1832, 1834, 1835, 1836, 1838, 1839, 1844, 1845, 1846, 1847, 1854, 1871 and 1872, and was a member of the Constitutional Convention in 1850 and 1851.

From the first he took advanced grounds on the subject of extending the system of railroads through the State and in granting to them the right of way, which was for a long time bitterly contested. From its organization, in 1845, he has been actively interested in the Northern Railroad, having been a director on every board and for eight years president of the corporation. In 1852 and 1853 he became interested in manufacturing in the village of Franklin, and was an owner and director in the woolen-factory, destroyed by fire in 1858.

December 31, 1859, he was appointed one of the judges of the Supreme Judicial Court, which responsible trust he exercised until October, 1870, when, having reached the age of seventy years, the constitution of the State relieved him from further duty. The last term of court over which he presided he brought to a close on the day before his seventieth birthday.

In the cause of education, and especially in Dartmouth College, his alma mater, in all its departments, he has ever been deeply interested. Since 1858 he has been a trustee of that venerable institution; since 1870 a trustee of the New Hampshire Agricultural College; since 1877 its president.

For the last fifty years of his life Judge Nesmith has owned and occupied real estate that has required cultivation. He has therefore taken a deep interest in the measures adopted to improve the condition of the agriculture of our State. He has been enrolled among the practical farmers of the State. He lent his aid in organizing our New Hampshire State Agricultural Society in 1850-51, and acted as its president during those years.

In 1871 Dartmouth College conferred upon him the degree of LL.D. The incorporation and establishment of the New Hampshire Orphans' Home, in 1871 (of which institution he has been president since its organization), and its maintenance since, has occupied much of Judge Nesmith's attention of late years, and he takes a paternal interest in every little orphan received there. He has attended to the purchase of the property and its daily support since, to the employment of the labor necessary for carrying on the farm and the other departments of the institution, disbursing all the money from the treasury.

In politics Judge Nesmith was a Whig, and has been a Republican from the organization of the party. For many years he has been a member of the Congregational Church of Franklin, and is a consistent, if not an active, member. As a lawyer, he has the reputation of closing many lawsuits and stopping much litigation. His clients have always reposed the utmost confidence in his judgment. During his connection with the bar of Merrimack County he has been engaged in many heavy lawsuits. Among the students who have studied with him are Hon. Asa P. Cate, Hon. Stephen G. Nash, Hon. Austin F. Pike, Hon. Daniel Barnard, John Bell Bouton, Daniel A. Clark, Walter P. Flanders and Frederick Bartlett. One of the most pleasant reminiscences of his life is his friendship and intimacy with the "Great Expounder," Daniel Webster.

Friendly relations with Mr. Webster had existed for a number of years. As one of the Whig delegates from this State, elected for the purpose of nominating a President in 1848, when Zachary Taylor was finally nominated, Judge Nesmith gave his vote for Mr. Webster. He also supported him at the Whig National Convention at Baltimore, in June, 1852, as his favorite candidate for the same office, having cast for him, at the several (fifty) ballots there made, his vote. About one week's time was consumed in making a choice at this memorable contest, when General Scott was nominated, and without much chance of an election.

September 26, 1826, he was joined in marriage to Mary M., daughter of Samuel and Annie (Bedel) Brooks, granddaughter of General Timothy Bedel, of Revolutionary fame. Mrs. Nesmith was born in Haverhill, July 8, 1799, and died, much lamented, May 31, 1885. Of their children, but one survives, George Brooks Nesmith, born February 13, 1831, died October 26, 1852, while a member of the junior class of Dartmouth College. Arthur Sidney Nesmith, born March 30, 1833, served the State during the War of the Rebellion in the quartermaster's department, holding the rank of captain; married Mary E. Moulder, of Washington, D. C.; served as representative in the Legislature for the town of Franklin for the years 1868 and 1869, and died, deeply lamented, August 18, 1877, from the result of disease contracted in the army, leaving two daughters, who still survive, aged, respectively, fifteen and twelve years. Annie Nesmith, born July 24, 1841, resides with her father.

In closing this imperfect sketch of Judge Nesmith's life, I will quote the summing up of his character in Rev. W. R. Cochrane's "History of Andrim": "He is a man of noble principles and honored life, enjoying, in his old age, the highest confidence and esteem of men;" a lawyer of sound judgment, of good sense, a safe counselor and an honest man.

As a sequel to the words of Mr. McClintock, we would add that Judge Nesmith has now arrived to a green old age, having nearly reached the age of eighty-five years.

From the experience and lessons of his early life he was taught the benefits of active out-door exercise.

By the observance of the general rules laid down for preserving good health, and under the power of a kind Providence, he has realized much enjoyment in his latter days. Though Cicero did not die at a very advanced age, yet, in his treatise on old age, he knew how to prescribe correct rules for the aged (page 157).—

"Videtur, ut senectus non modo languida, atque iners non sit, verum etiam sit optiosa, et saepe agens aliquid."

"You see, that old age not only should not be sluggish and inactive, but also industrious, and always doing something." No doubt the steady, active employment of all our faculties tends to prolong our lives and give a zest to old age.

Amid the enjoyments of the protracted life of Judge

Nesmith, still there have been mingled in his cup many of the trials and sorrows incident to the death of many intimate friends. The loss of these friends and the certain termination allotted to all earthly life now serve as faithful monitors that but a few days at best remain for the accomplishment of life's work here, and that much diligence is required to perfect it.

HON. ISAAC N. BLODGETT was born in the town of Canaan, November 6, 1838. His father was the late Hon. Caleb Blodgett, a prominent citizen of Grafton County, who served many years in the Legislature, and was also a member of the Senate and of the Executive Council. Hon. Jeremiah Blodgett, of Wentworth, is his uncle. He received a thorough education at the Canaan Academy, read law with Hon. William P. Weeks and Anson S. Marshall, and commenced the practice of his profession at Canaan in December, 1862. In 1867 he removed to Franklin, and was a partner of Hon. Austin F. Pike until March, 1879.

He was four years a member of the House of Representatives from Franklin, taking a leading position upon the Democratic side, and was an active member of the Constitutional Convention of 1876. He has taken strong interest in political affairs, and was chairman of the Democratic State Committee in 1876 and 1877.

He was appointed an associate justice of the Supreme Court, November 30, 1880, a position which he still occupies.

In June, 1860, he was united in marriage to Sarah A., daughter of Rev. M. Gerould. They have one child, a daughter, now a member of Wellesley Female College.

E. B. S. SANBORN was born in Canterbury, N. H., August 11, 1833. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1855 and read law with Nesmith & Pike, and was admitted to the bar in 1857. He settled in Franklin in 1868, where he has since resided. He has represented the town several terms in the Legislature and is at present one of the railroad commissioners of the State.

AARON WHITTEMORE, Jr., son of Hon. Aaron Whittemore, was born at Pembroke in 1849. He was educated at Pembroke Academy and Harvard Law School, read law with Hon. John M. Shirley, of Andover, admitted to the bar in 1870, at the age of twenty-one, and commenced practice in Pittsfield, where he continued until his death, May 4, 1885. He was a member of the last State Senate and judge-advocate on the staff of Brigadier-General White, commanding New Hampshire National Guard, and was also captain of Westou Guards, of the Third Regiment. He was identified with the best interests of Pittsfield, and was a worthy and highly-respected citizen and lawyer.

JOHN M. SHIRLEY was born in what is now East Tilton November 16, 1831. He was admitted to the bar in 1854, and soon after commenced practice in Andover, where he has since resided. He has associated with him in Andover Mr. George W. Stone, under the firm name of Shirley & Stone; he has also an office in Concord, in partnership with Colonel John H. George, under the firm name of George & Shirley. Mr. Shirley is also deeply interested in historical matters. He is a Democrat in politics.

HON. IRA A. EASTMAN was born at Gilmanton, N. H., January 1, 1809. He was the son of Captain Stephen and Hannah Eastman. He was graduated at Dartmouth College in 1829, at the early age of twenty. He immediately commenced the study of law with the late Judge John Willard, of Troy, N. Y., in which city he commenced the practice of his profession in 1832. His love for his native State and town, however, induced him to return to Gilmanton in 1834, where he continued his practice. He was clerk of the New Hampshire Senate in 1835. As evidence of the esteem and confidence his townsmen reposed in him, they sent him to the Legislature in the years 1836, 1837, 1838, over which body he was the presiding officer the two last years. From 1839 to 1843 he was representative in Congress. He was one of the circuit judges of the Court of Common Pleas from 1844 to 1849, and a judge of the Supreme Judicial Court from 1855 to December 1, 1859, at which time he resigned the office. He had also been one of the justices of the Superior Court of Judicature from 1849 to 1855.

Judge Eastman was a thorough and industrious student, and by his diligence became learned in the law. His attention to his profession always gave him plenty of clients, and he never lacked business while he was in active practice. He was an eminent jurist, as his opinions in many volumes of the New Hampshire Reports abundantly testify. Judge Eastman was trustee of Dartmouth College at the time of his death, and that institution conferred the degree of LL.D. upon him in 1858. He died at Manchester in March, 1881.

AUSTIN F. PIKE, of Franklin, N. H., was born October 16, 1819; received an academic education; studied law and was admitted to the bar of Merrimack County in July, 1845, and has been in active practice since; was a member of the New Hampshire House of Representatives in 1850, '51, '52, '65 and '66, and Speaker of the House the last two years; was a member of the New Hampshire Senate in 1857 and '58, and President of the Senate the last year; was chairman of the Republican State Committee in 1858, '59 and '60; was delegate to the Philadelphia Convention which nominated General Fremont in 1856; was elected a Representative to the Forty-third Congress, serving from December 1, 1873, to March 3, 1875, and was elected to the United States Senate as a Republican, to succeed E. H. Rollins, Republican, and took his seat December 3, 1883. Mr. Pike is in practice in Franklin in company with F. N. Parsons.

FRANK N. PARSONS, was born September 3, 1854; graduated at Dartmouth College in 1874; read law with Hon. D. Barnard, of Franklin, and G. C. Bartlett, of Derry, N. H., and was admitted to the bar March, 1875. The firm is Pike & Parsons.

HON. EDGAR H. WOODMAN, the present (1885) mayor of the city of Concord, dates his ancestry in this country to Edward Woodman, who arrived at Newbury, Mass., from Malvern, England, in 1635, and from that time to the present the Woodman name has been honorably and prominently identified with the professional and business interests of New England.

Hon. E. H. Woodman, son of John Kimball Woodman and Mary Jane (Drew) Woodman, was born in Gilmanton, N. H., May 6, 1847. He was educated at the Gilmanton and Bosawen Academies, fitting for college at the latter. He finally decided, however, not to enter for a collegiate course, but went to Poughkeepsie and attended Eastman's Business College, the representative institution of its kind in this country. After receiving the degree of Master of Accounts he came to Concord, and in February, 1866, entered the employ of Colonel C. C. Webster as book-keeper, with whom he remained until July, 1868, when he accepted a position in the adjutant-general's office, tendered him by Governor Nathaniel Head, then adjutant-general of the State. October 27, 1868, while gunning in Gilmanton, he received an accidental gun-shot wound which resulted in the loss of his right arm. He had gone to his native town to cast his first vote, and was taking a vacation for a few days when the accident occurred. Possessed of a good constitution, his arm healed rapidly, and in the following December he returned to this city and spent the winter learning to write with his left hand at the Commercial School in Manchester. In April, 1869, as assistant superintendent of construction and paymaster, he entered upon the work of building the Suncook Valley Railroad, and continued therein until the road was completed, in December of the same year.

January 1, 1870, Mr. Woodman commenced his legal studies in the office of Minot, Tappan & Murgidge, where he remained until 1872, when the treasurer's office of the Northern Railroad was removed to Boston, and Judge Minot appointed him assistant treasurer of the Boston office. While discharging his duties here he attended law lectures at the Boston University, and, in 1873, was admitted to the New Hampshire bar. He, however, remained in charge of the Boston office of the railroad until its removal to this city, April 1, 1876, and continued therein until April 1, 1878, when the office was again transferred to Boston. He then resigned his position in the treasurer's office, and at once entered upon the practice of his profession in this city, opening an office in the Board of Trade buildings. July 1, 1879, he removed to his present office in the Governor Hill block, which is the same office in which he commenced the study of law. He brought to the practice of his profession a good knowledge of law, sound judgment, quick perception and an indomitable will, which have borne legitimate fruit in the securing of a good practice, which is constantly increasing.

The citizens of Concord, recognizing his ability and integrity, in 1882, tendered him the nomination for mayor, an honor which came to him unsought and while he was absent from the city. He was elected by a large majority, and re-elected in 1884, and is the present mayor.

Mayor Woodman is a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity; has been recorder of Mount Horeb Commandery since 1877, and was also secretary of Eureka Lodge and Trinity Chapter; secretary of Concord Masonic Association, and is the present treasurer. He is treasurer of the Peterborough and Hillsborough Railroad, and of Saint Paul's Episcopal parish. He is also a director in the First National Bank and president of the Webster Club. May 6, 1878, he married Georgiana Hodges, of Boston, Mass., and they had one child, George Edgar, who died in infancy. Mrs. Woodman died January 8, 1879.

Genial and courteous by nature, he has won hosts of friends; he is an able and ready speaker, and an executive officer of marked ability.

LYMAN DEWEY STEVENS, a leading member of the Merrimack bar, was born in Piermont, N. H., September 20, 1821. His father, Caleb Stevens, was born in Hampstead, N. H., November 27, 1782, and died March 29, 1870; his mother, Sally Dewey, was born in Piermont, January 2, 1793, and died January 9, 1879.

Mr. Stevens pursued his preparatory studies at Haverhill (N. H.) Academy. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1843. He then became principal of the Stanstead (C. E.) Academy, where he remained two years, and later assisted Jonathan Tenney, for a short time, as principal of the academy at Pembroke, N. H. While in Stanstead, he decided upon the legal profession as his life-work, and began his studies in the office of E. C. Johnson, Esq., of Derby, Vt. He subsequently continued his studies with Hon. Ira Perley in Concord, N. H., and was admitted to the bar in October, 1847. He at once opened an office in Concord, where he has remained to the present time in the successful practice of his profession.

Edgar H. Kooiman

L. D. Stevens

Mr. Stevens has ever manifested a lively interest in his adopted city, and all measures tending to advance its welfare have found in him an able and fearless advocate. He was elected mayor of Concord in 1865, and re-elected in 1869. During his mayoralty he instituted various reforms and improvements, the most notable being the adoption of the present system of sewage. This was almost the first real and substantial improvement that the people had been called upon to make, and it is not surprising that he met with determined opposition in this needless outlay of expenditure, as many deemed the movement. He paused not, however, to listen to the words of opposition, which, in many instances, were exceedingly severe, but proceeded fearlessly to carry on the improvements which the health and beauty of the city demanded. The wisdom of his course soon became apparent, even to the most strenuous opponent. He is now, and has been for a long series of years, identified with various leading interests of the city. He has been a director in the National State Capital Bank since 1865, and president of the Merrimack County Savings-Bank since its organization. He is also president of the Board of Trade, and a director in the Page Belting Company.

He was appointed by Governor Gilmore to adjust the suspended war-claims of New Hampshire against the United States accruing prior to May, 1863, and also to attend the dedication of the National Cemetery at Gettysburg, November 19, 1863, as commissioner from New Hampshire.

His interest in charitable objects has led to his appointment as vice-president and treasurer of the New Hampshire Home Missionary Society. He was also a trustee in the Kimball Union Academy and Boscawen Academy. He has served on the school committee, and been a member of the city Board of Education.

Politically, Mr. Stevens is a Republican, and has been since the organization of that party. He has been called to various positions within the gift of his townsmen and fellow-citizens. He was city solicitor in 1855 and 1856; a member of the House of Representatives in 1860, '61, '66 and '67, and was elected Senator in 1884. He was one of the Presidential electors in 1872, and was also a member of Governor Bell's Council.

Mr. Stevens is a member of the South Congregational Church and one of its most active and energetic supporters.

August 21, 1850, he united in marriage with Aelsah Pollard, daughter of Captain Theodore French, of Concord, by whom he had two children,—Margaret French and Henry Webster. Mrs. Stevens died July 2, 1863. January 20, 1875, he married Frances Child Brownell, of New Bedford, Mass., and they have two children,—Fanny Brownell, born January 19, 1876, and William Lyman, born April 5, 1880.

The present members of the Merrimack bar are as follows:

John H. Albin.

Benjamin E. Badger.

Bingham & Mitchell (Harry Bingham, John M. Mitchell).

Chase & Streeter (William M. Chase, Frank S. Streeter).

Warren Clark.

C. E. Clifford.

Charles B. Corning.

Sylvester Dana.

Daniel B. Donovan.

Samuel C. Eastman.

George M. Fletcher.

William L. Foster.

John H. George.

John P. George.

Fred. H. Gould.

S. G. Lane.

Leach & Stevens (E. G. Leach, Henry W. Stevens).

Wells H. Johnson.

Nathaniel E. Martin.

Luther S. Morrill.

A. F. L. Norris.

Henry Robinson.

Henry P. Rolfe.

Charles P. Sanborn.

Harry G. Sargent.

Everett J. Sargent.

Arthur W. Silsby.

Lyman D. Stevens.

Reuben E. Walker.

Edgar H. Woodman.

Willis G. Buxton.

David F. Dudley.

C. E. Carr.

Shirley & Stone.

M. W. Tappan.

A. F. Pike.

Isaac N. Blodgett.

Daniel Barnard.
 E. G. Leach.
 G. W. Nesmith.
 G. R. Stone.
 W. M. Barnard.
 F. N. Parsons.
 J. B. Hazelton.
 George S. Blanchard.
 A. F. Burbank.
 T. H. Thorndike.
 A. W. Bartlett.
 E. A. Lane.
 Samuel Davis.
 A. P. Davis.
 S. K. Paige.
 W. W. Flanders.
 Walter C. Harriman.

CHAPTER III.

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE STATE-HOUSE.

BY ISAAC W. HAMMOND.

THE first session of the Legislature that was held in Concord convened in March, 1782. Prior to that time, and subsequent to the commencement of the Revolutionary War, legislative sessions, with two exceptions, were held in Exeter; those two exceptions being the September session of 1777 and the October session of 1780, which were held in Portsmouth.

From 1782 to 1808 the Legislature was a movable institution, and held its sessions in Concord, Exeter, Portsmouth, Charlestown, Dover, Hanover, Hopkinton and Amherst,—at whichever town the members of the next preceding Legislature voted to have it held. The matter of deciding at what place the next Legislature should sit came up at every session, and often occasioned considerable strife among the members. A vote in favor of one town was occasionally reconsidered and another town finally decided upon, in consequence, probably, of some of the members having been "seen" and persuaded that a change would be for the best interest of the State.

Since 1808 all legislative sessions have been held in Concord, although not permanently located here until the completion of the State-House, in 1819. In 1814 the matter of having a permanent habitation came up in the Legislature, and the members wisely concluded that the wandering life theretofore led by the honorable body and the exposure of its records to loss in consequence of frequent removals, as well as to destruction by fire for want of proper vaults, was not conducive to the best interests of the State, and accordingly, on the 6th day of June of that year, a committee was appointed by the Legislature "to take into consideration the expediency of building a State-House, and report where, and the time when, it will be expedient to commence the building," etc. Said committee reported that, so far as they could learn, all of the States in the Union, except New Hampshire, had provided themselves with a State-House and located a "seat of government;" and also, "That it is justly considered derogatory to a respectable and independent State to suffer the officers of its government to sit and transact the business of the State in a building mean in its appearance and destitute of suitable accommodations. That your committee are deeply impressed with a sense of the propriety, expediency and even necessity of providing fire-proof rooms for the safe keeping of the public records," etc. The committee further reported that a State-House might be built upon reasonable terms, and advised the appointment of a committee of three persons to sit during the recess of the Legislature, designate a location, prepare plans, ascertain the probable expense and receive proposals for erecting the building, and report to the next Legislature. The report was accepted, and a committee, consisting of Hon. John Harris, of Hopkinton, Benjamin Kimball, Jr., of Concord, and Andrew Bowers, of Salisbury, was appointed.

On the 13th of June, 1815, said committee reported that they had prepared a plan and ascertained that the probable expense would be about thirty thousand dollars if built of stone; that Stuart J. Park had made a proposal to complete the building for thirty-two thousand dollars; that a majority of the committee had designated a location in Concord west of the court-house; and also reported that the inhabitants of Salisbury had offered to contribute seven thousand dollars if the Legislature would locate the building in that town.

The report was accepted, and another committee was appointed to inquire whether any donations would be made by the town of Concord or its citizens if the building was located in the place designated by the committee. The citizens of Concord were agreed as to the propriety of having it in their town, but were not agreed as to the lot upon which to locate it. Subscription papers were circulated by each faction; the people at the north end favored the site of the present court-house, and those residing at the south end favored the "Green lot," which was the one finally selected. A sufficient amount of money was pledged by each party to meet the requirements of the legislative committee; but the disaagreement as to location and the lack of funds, partially in consequence of the then late war with Great Britain, carried the matter over to the next June session.

STATE HOUSE, CONCORD, N. H.

On the 21st day of June, 1816, the matter came up in the House of Representatives, and the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That a State-House, agreeably to the plan communicated by Stuart J. Park at the last June session, be erected in the town of Concord and county of Rockingham; the spot of ground to be selected, and the place on which to erect said State-House to be located by his excellency, the Governor, and the Honorable the Council.

That board was also authorized to appoint a committee to make the necessary contracts and superintend its erection; and said committee was to be instructed to commence, as soon as practicable, and to employ the convicts in the State Prison in preparing the stone. By the same resolution, the sum of three thousand dollars was appropriated to commence the work, and it also contained a provision by which it was not to take effect unless the town of Concord, or its inhabitants, would donate the land, level and prepare it to the acceptance of the committee, give all the stone needed for its construction and convey the same to the lot free of charge.

The inhabitants residing at the north end were ready to give a bond to comply with these requirements, providing the Stickney lot (site of the present court-house) was selected; and those residing at the south end would do the same, providing the Green lot (site of the present State-House) was decided upon. The advocates of the north end location claimed that the Stickney lot was elevated and dry, and had been selected by the committee of the Legislature as being the more eligible of the two; that the Green lot was low and wet, and that it would cost a large sum to put in a substantial foundation. The other side urged that the Green lot was more central, and for that reason the most eligible.

William Plumer, of Epping, was Governor, and Benjamin Pierce, of Hillsborough, Levi Jackson, of Chesterfield, Samuel Quarles, of Ossipee, Elijah Hall and Enoch Colby composed the Council. Messrs. Pierce, Jackson and Quarles favored the Stickney lot; the Governor, with Messrs. Hall and Colby, favored the Green lot. Consequently, with all present acting in the capacity of a committee of the Legislature, as some of them subsequently claimed they did, the result would have been a tie. On the 2d day of July, Colonel Quarles asked leave of absence until the 4th, to attend to some matters of his own, and went away, as he afterward stated, with the understanding that the matter of locating the State-House should not be decided until his return. On the following day, July 3d, at a meeting of the Governor and four members of the Council, the matter was brought up, and they proceeded to examine the two locations, and then returned to the Council chamber. The Governor then asked the councillors, severally, if they were "ready to proceed in selecting a plot of ground for said house." Mr. Colby answered that he was ready, but asked whether it would not be best to wait until the return of Colonel Quarles.

According to the statement of Mr. Colby, no one else expressed any desire for postponement, and a ballot was taken, which stood three in favor of the Green lot and two in favor of the Stickney lot, the Governor voting with the Council. Had all of the councillors been present, and acting in the capacity of an executive board, as I think was the intention of the Legislature, the vote would have stood three in favor of the Stickney lot and two in favor of the present location, in which case the Governor could have used his privilege of negating the vote of the majority of the Council, thus leaving the matter undecided. It was, therefore, fortunate for the friends of the Green lot location that Colonel Quarles was called away at that time.

On July 4th, Colonel Quarles having returned, the Governor and Council held a meeting, the proceedings of which were recorded in the Council records in the same manner as were those of the 3d, or any other meeting of that board, the caption of the record being as follows: "At a meeting of His Excellency, the Governor, and the Hon^{ble}. Council, July 4, 1816, The whole board present," etc. At that meeting some one moved a reconsideration of "the vote of yesterday, selecting a lot of land whereon to erect a State-House." The question being put, the vote stood three for reconsideration—Messrs. Quarles, Pierce and Jackson, —and three against, the Governor voting with the Council, as before, and claiming subsequently, in vindication of his action in so doing, that they were acting in the capacity of a committee of the Legislature. If that was the case, and so understood at the time, it is not quite clear why they convened as "a meeting of His Excellency, the Governor and the Hon^{ble}. Council," or why their proceedings in that matter were recorded in the Council records, with other acts done at the same meeting, which could not have been legally done by any body of men except the Governor and Council in executive session.

On July 5th the Governor and Council met and appointed Albe Cady, William Low and Jeremiah Pecker, all of Concord, as a committee to superintend the erection of the State-House. Messrs. Hall, Colby and Jackson acted with the Governor in making the appointment, a record of which was made by the Secretary of State in the same book and manner as the record of any executive appointment. The board then adjourned and did not meet again until September 18th.

The Legislature adjourned on the 29th of June, to meet on the third Wednesday of November following. During the recess the work of construction progressed, as also did the strife between the "north-enders" and the "south-enders." Charges of unfairness, on the part of the Governor and Council, were made by the defeated north-enders, the principal charges being that the matter was acted upon in the absence of Colonel Quarles, contrary to an agreement to delay it until his return, and that the Governor voted with the Council, as he had no right to do, if they were acting in their official capacity as an Executive Council.

The Legislature assembled on the twentieth of November, 1816, and the State-House matter was taken up on the ninth of December, at which time a committee was appointed to "request such information of the Governor as he possesses relative to the location of the State-House," and report to the House of Representatives. Said committee called on the Governor, made the request verbally and on the following day he communicated in writing a statement of the action of the board in making the selection of a lot, etc. This not proving satisfactory to the House of Representatives, the committee called again on the evening of the thirteenth, and requested copies of "all the votes and proceedings of the Governor and Council" relating to the matter, which request he complied with by furnishing attested copies from the Council records, covering said proceedings, and suggested, in his letter of transmittal, that if either branch of the government considered it necessary to make any inquiries of the other, whether it "would not better comport with the dignity of both that the inquiries and answers should be in writing." Whereupon the House of Representatives formulated several questions, and sent a copy to the Governor, and one to each of the councillors. The substance of the Governor's answers was: That on the third day of July, 1816, Charles Walker, Esq., presented a bond to furnish a lot; and the required amount of stone, provided the building was located on the Stickney lot; that William A. Kent and Isaac Hill, Esqrs., presented a bond to do the same, provided it was located on the Green lot; that in the afternoon of that day, he and four of the councillors examined all lots that any one requested them to see, and then returned to the Senate chamber and made the selection, as hereinbefore stated. The Governor also stated, that he did not understand that any agreement had been made to wait until the return of Colonel Quarles before making the selection. Mr. Pierce, Mr. Jackson and Mr. Quarles stated that there was such an agreement. The Governor further stated that, in making said selection, they acted as a committee appointed by a resolve of the Legislature, and not in their executive capacity; and in this his answer was sustained by a majority of the Council. But no attempt was made to explain why their transactions as a committee were acted upon in a meeting of "His Excellency, the Governor and the Honorable Council," at which meeting executive appointments were made, and the proceedings of which were embodied in one record, by the Secretary of State, in the same manner as was the record of any meeting of the Governor and Council.

December 20th the investigating committee reported in full, from which report I extract the following: "Your committee would further report that, in their opinion, the general location of the lot whereon to erect the State-House never was made agreeably to the true meaning and provisions of the resolve aforesaid, inasmuch as that they have never seen any evidence that a majority of that Honorable board ever did agree to such location."

December 25th the investigating committee reported a resolution repealing the resolution of June 22, 1816, which placed the appointment of a committee to superintend the erection of the State-House in the hands of the Governor and Council, which failed of a passage. On the same day a resolution appropriating four thousand dollars toward the erection of the building passed, ninety-one to seventy.

December 27th the investigating committee reported a resolution providing that the committee to superintend the building should consist of one man, instead of three, and that Albe Cady should be that man. As no complaint had been made by the committee against any of the men composing the building committee, the presumption is that the resolution was introduced for the purpose of taking the matter from the control of the Governor and Council, by making the building committee an appointee direct of the Legislature. The resolution passed the House, but was defeated in the Senate.

At the June session, 1817, the sum of thirty thousand dollars was appropriated to continue the work, in accordance with a report and recommendation of the building committee, who stated that they desired to complete the outside that season.

In 1818 an appropriation was made for necessary furniture, and the building was first occupied by the Legislature at the June session of 1819, but the building committee was not discharged until June, 1820.

The building as completed was one hundred and twenty-six feet in length, including the wings, and forty-nine feet in width, with a projection of four feet in the centre of each front, and cost as follows, including fencing and furniture: Amount appropriated from the State treasury, $67,372.44; stone-work done at the State Prison by convicts, $10,455.16; lot and materials given by citizens of Concord, $4,000.—total, $81,827.60. The building, as thus erected, was occupied without any material change until remodelled, in 1864-66.

In 1854, Governor N. B. Baker, in his address to the Legislature, at the June session, called the attention of that body to the insecure manner in which the provincial and State records, Revolutionary War rolls and other valuable documents belonging to the State, were kept, stating that they were liable to destruction by fire at any moment and advising the construction of fire-proof rooms in the State-House, or of a separate fire-proof building for their safe keeping. A committee of the Legislature, appointed to investigate the matter, reported a resolution providing that the Governor be requested to employ some suitable person to estimate the expense and make necessary plans for erecting a fire-proof building of sufficient capacity to accommodate the Secretary of State, State treasurer, State Library and the standard weights and measures.

The resolution passed, as also did another calling for a plan and an estimate of the cost of enlarging the Representatives' Hall, and, in accordance therewith, a report was made to the Legislature of 1855, plans presented and the expense estimated at $37,000 for enlarging the State-House and hall, and $17,500 for a separate fire-proof building. That report not being acceptable to the Legislature, the matter was postponed to the next session, and no material progress was made until 1863. At the June session of the last-named year the Legislature passed a resolution setting forth the fact that the largely increased business of the State government imperatively required an enlargement of the State-House; that the city of Concord derived considerable benefit from the location and should contribute materially to the expense of enlarging the capital. The resolution authorized the Governor and Council to cause new plans and estimates to be made, receive propositions from the city of Concord or any other city or town having necessary railroad facilities and "desirous of having the State-House established therein." In other words, the location of the capital was again for sale to the highest bidder, regardless of the fact that it had once been sold, paid for and delivered. Bids were to be made to the Governor and to be by him presented to the Legislature of 1864. The city of Manchester submitted a proposition to erect and complete a building without expense to the State, providing it should be located in that city.

Concord, by action of the City Councils on the 23d day of May, 1864, voted to raise and appropriate $100,000 to the work of enlarging the building then in use, and subsequently raised $50,000 more in the precinct. These propositions were transmitted to the Legislature by the Governor, June 6th, and referred to a select committee of one from each county. A sharp contest between the two cities ensued; the citizens of Manchester used every means in their power to obtain the prize, and the citizens of Concord as earnestly struggled to retain it, believing that, as they had once purchased the location, it ought not to be taken from them without cause; and believing also that no cause existed to warrant its removal, as Concord was nearer the centre of the State than Manchester, and had equal railroad facilities. A majority of the Legislature decided in favor of Concord, and the location of 1864 was confirmed by an act approved July 16, 1864, the act requiring Concord to bear the entire expense of the work, which amounted to nearly $200,000.

A contest of this kind between neighboring municipalities is much to be regretted; the placing of citizens in hostility to each other creates enmities which time alone can allay; and in this case, the twenty years that have elapsed have failed to obliterate the scars caused by that memorable contest. The proposition made by the Legislature of 1863 was wrong in principle, and should never be repeated. When a public building is needed for the use of the State, let the Legislature decide upon its location at such place as in their opinion will best accommodate the majority of the people, and then cause the same to be erected, and paid for from the State treasury.

A new steam-heating apparatus was placed in the building in 1879, and valuable improvements were made in the basement in 1883, and the State-House, as it now stands, is an artistic and substantial edifice. The halls and offices are well lighted and roomy, with the exception of the room used for the library, and, as a whole, the structure is a credit to the State.

The porch on the east front is two stories in height, each story being supported by eight granite columns of massive proportions, which present a fine appearance as viewed from Main Street. The Council-room contains the portraits of all the Governors of the State, except the first, of whom no likeness is known to exist. Portraits of many presidents of the Senate are hung in the Senate chamber, and the Representatives' hall contains portraits of Revolutionary officers and other eminent New Hampshire men. Doric Hall contains the battle-scarred flags of the regiments from this State who participated in the late war, some portraits, a bust of Hon. Amos Tuck, and a raised map of the State. In the Secretary's office are portraits of two Provincial and two State Secretaries. In 1876 a fountain was placed in the front walk of the park, but proving to be a nuisance there, it was removed, in 1879, by order of the Legislature, to the southeast quarter of the grounds.

A statue, in bronze, of New Hampshire's most gifted son, Daniel Webster, presented to the State by Benjamin P. Cheney, is soon to be placed in the park, on the side adjoining Main Street. It will be seven-tenths of a foot in height, including the pedestal, which will be of granite. Mr. Cheney was a native, and for many years a resident, of this State, and the gift which he is able to make from the abundant accumulations of an honest, sagacious and industrious life is a credit to himself, an honor to his native State and the renowned Webster, whose reputation as a statesman is second to that of no other man, and whose name will be familiar to future generations, when this statue shall have crumbled to dust.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

COLONEL SOLON A. CARTER.

Solon Augustus Carter (7) was born in Leominster, Mass., June 22, 1857; seventh generation from Rev. Thomas Carter (1), who was born A. D. 1610, graduated at St. John's College, Cambridge, England, in 1629, and came from St. Albans, Hertfordshire, England, in the "Planter," embarking April 2, 1635. On his arrival in this country he was admitted an inhabitant of Dedham, Mass.; thence he removed to Watertown, Mass.

He was ordained the first minister of the church in Woburn, Mass., November 22, 1642, which office he filled to the acceptance of his people until his death, which occurred September 5, 1684. Johnson, in his "Wonder-Working Providence," says, "He was a reverend, godly man, apt to teach the sound and wholesome truths of Christ."

The subject of this sketch traces his descent from Rev. Thomas (1), born 1610; Rev. Samuel (2), born 1640; Samuel (3), born 1677-78; Josiah (4), born 1726-27; James Carter (5), born 1768; Solon Carter (6), born 1801; Solon A. Carter (7), born 1857.

Josiah (4), his great-grandfather, married, at the age of eighteen, Tabitha Howe, aged sixteen, and settled in Leominster, Mass., clearing the homestead where the three succeeding generations were born and reared. He served in the Revolutionary War, attaining to the rank of lieutenant-colonel. He was with the army under General Washington in the disastrous campaign in New Jersey, previous to the retreat across the Delaware. He died at the ripe age of eighty-four, on the farm his own hands had cleared, and in the house his own hands had reared. At the time of his death he had living more grandchildren than he was years old, several of the fourth degree and one or two of the fifth, so that he could without fiction say, "Arise, son, go to thy son, for thy son's son has born unto him a son."

James Carter (5) reared and educated a family of eleven children. James G. (6), the eldest son, graduated from Harvard in 1820, and was engaged in educational enterprises, being contemporary with Horace Mann and a co-worker with him in educational matters, notably the establishment of the system of Normal Schools in Massachusetts.

Solon (6), the second son, succeeded to the homestead farm, which he cultivated successfully until his death, in 1879. He was an active participant in the social, religious and civil affairs of his town, being called upon at different times to fill the various town offices within the gift of his fellow-citizens.

Solon Augustus Carter (7), the eldest son of Solon (6) and Lucretia (Joslin) Carter, was born upon the farm cleared by his great-grandfather, educated in the public schools of his native town, completing his education in the High School at the age of seventeen, working upon the homestead farm between terms, and also during term-time. The winter succeeding his seventeenth birthday he taught a district school in Leominster. The superintending committee, in his report of the school, said of the teacher, "It is evident he does not need to learn to teach—it is in him." The next winter he taught in the neighboring town of Lancaster. The summer of 1857 he spent in Chicago, in the employ of an uncle engaged in the lumber trade; but the panic of that year had such a depressing effect upon business in general that a commercial life had few attractions for him and he returned to the farm, teaching during the winter months.

He entered the employ of the Keene Gas-Light Company as its superintendent in December, 1859, and has since that time considered Keene his residence. In August, 1862, he enlisted in the Fourteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, and was commissioned captain of Company G, serving with his command until July, 1863, when he was ordered upon recruiting service at Concord, where he was assigned to duty as acting assistant adjutant-general upon the staff of Brigadier-General Edw. W. Hinks. In the spring of 1864, General Hinks was assigned to the command of a division of colored troops near Fortress Monroe, and Captain Carter was, at General Hinks' request, by a special order from the War Department, directed to report to him for assignment to duty. Captain Carter was announced in General Orders as acting assistant adjutant-general of the Third Colored Division, Eighteenth Army Corps, and remained on duty with that organization until the close of the war, having received a commission from the President as assistant adjutant-general of volunteers, with the rank of captain (July 25, 1864). He participated with his command in all the skirmishes and battles in which it was engaged before Petersburg, on the north of the James, at Deep Bottom, Newmarket Heights and Fort Harrison, and in both expeditions to Fort Fisher and the subsequent campaign to Raleigh. He was subsequently breveted major and lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious services during the war.

Brevet Major-General Charles J. Paine, in recommending him for brevet commissions, wrote,—

"Captain Solon A. Carter, late assistant adjutant-general United States Volunteers, served as assistant adjutant-general of the division which I commanded for about a year, from the beginning of August, 1864.

"First, in front of Petersburg, under constant fire-day and night; then across the James, in front of Richmond, taking part in a very severe and successful assault by the division on the enemy's lines on the Newmarket road, September 29, 1864, and in other engagements; later, in both Fort Fisher expeditions. At the taking of Wilmington and in the march in pursuit of General Johnston's command, never for a moment away from his post, and never neglecting his duties, which often were quite as severe as those of any officer of the division.

"He was a brave and faithful officer of great merit, and I always exceedingly regretted that he was not promoted. There is not, within my knowledge, an instance of equal desert without greater reward."

After his discharge from the service he returned to

Wm. C. Smith

Oliver Pillsbury

Keene and engaged in the furniture trade. He was a member of the House of Representatives from Keene in 1869 and 1879.

In June, 1872, he was elected State treasurer, which office he has held since that time, with the exception of one year (1874-75), receiving the nomination by acclamation, and without opposition, in nine successive re-elections, and also the commendation of successive auditing committees for the satisfactory manner in which the duties of the office have been performed. He is an active member of the Unitarian organization, having been for several years president of the State association, and is also identified with the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States and the Grand Army of the Republic.

He has taken an active part in Masonic organizations, having passed the chairs of the Blue Lodge, Royal Arch Chapter and Commandery, and also the chairs of the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge, serving as Most Worshipful Grand Master for two years (1878-79), and as Right Eminent Grand Commander of the Grand Commandery in 1875.

He was married, December 13, 1860, to Emily A. Conant, of Leominster, Mass.

HON. OLIVER PILLSBURY.¹

William Pillsbury, from whom most and probably all of the Pillsburys of this country have descended, emigrated from Dorchester, England, in 1631, and settled in old Newbury (now Newburyport), Mass., in the year 1641.

It will be seen that the family belonged to that brave old Puritan stock that had been ground and sifted in the mills of God for generations, and had been prepared to go forth in the fulness of time and take possession of a continent in the name of liberty and truth. In such mysterious ways the progress of government, church and society is evolved from the seed of the dead ages, and we move upward by the providence of Him who "works within us to will and to do of His own good pleasure." The families that planted our nation were not the sport of fortune, drifted by an accident of history to these shores, but were preordained and guided to their destiny.

Oliver Pillsbury, the subject of this sketch, sprang from this line. He was born in Henniker, N. H., February 16, 1817. His parents, Deacon Oliver Pillsbury and Anna Smith Pillsbury, were both persons of unusual physical and mental strength. The writer recalls distinctly, after a lapse of more than thirty years, the amiable expression and serene dignity of Mrs. Pillsbury, and the masculine thought and deep, solemn voice of the deacon, as he led the devotions of the religious assemblies of the people. He was one of the strong men of the town and a pillar in the church. Others might veer and drift, but we all knew that the deacon was anchored within the veil, and was as sure to outride the storm as the hill upon which he had fixed his home. He was a man of strong powers, a stern will and constant devotion to the great ends of life as he saw them. The qualities of both parents were transmitted in large measure to their children. Our State has produced but few men who were the peers in intellectual strength and moral courage to their first-born, Parker Pillsbury. Not many men in our country, indeed, in the years that preceded the Civil War, struck heavier blows for, or clung with a more courageous, self-sacrificing devotion to, liberty than he. Those of us who knew him could hear the deep undertone of the deacon's voice in his, and knew he would conquer or die. In the roll-call of the imperishables in the great struggle for liberty his name will be heard among the first.

The subject of this sketch, during the first seventeen years of his life, experienced the usual fortune of the sons of New England farmers,—a maximum of hard work and a minimum of schooling; but at that time, having been overtaken by a lameness which threatened to be permanent, he was sent to the academy that he might prepare for duties suited to his prospective infirmity. He entirely recovered, but this circumstance gave a new drift to his life. For nearly five years he pursued his studies with unabated interest and industry, giving thoroughness and a practical character to his acquisitions by teaching during the winter months. Mr. Pillsbury had few equals and no superiors among those who taught at that time in our public schools. He was master both of his school and his studies, and had the faculty of inspiring his pupils with his own spirit. Many who have since done good work in life look back with gratitude to those years of pupilage.

In 1839, Mr. Pillsbury left New England and went to New Jersey, where he opened a tuition school, there being no free schools in the State at that time. There, though an entire stranger, he gained the confidence of the community and held it during eight years of successful work. During the last six years of this time he taught the academy at Bound Brook, Somerset County. While there he married Matilda Nevius, who died in 1847, leaving a young daughter, an only child. The position which Mr. Pillsbury acquired among the educators of New Jersey may be learned from the fact that he was prominent among the few gentlemen who held the first school convention at the capital, over which he presided, and which was followed by similar conventions in other cities. The movement thus begun resulted in the establishment of public instruction in that State.

At the end of this time, Mr. Pillsbury's health having become impaired, he returned to his native place, where he purchased the paternal homestead and entered again upon the work of his boyhood. For seventeen years he followed the life of a farmer, but did not move in its old empirical ruts. He applied the knowledge and improved methods which modern investigation has given to agriculture, and in a little time doubled the productive power of his farm. The successful factor in every industry is brains, and in this case even New Hampshire farming proved no exception to the rule.

¹ By Hon. J. W. Patterson.

Mr. Pillsbury contracted a second marriage, in 1850, with Miss Sarah Wilkins, of Henniker.

Though assiduous in the pursuits of agriculture, his benevolent instincts led him to take an active interest in the causes of temperance, anti-slavery and whatever else the public welfare seemed to demand. His efforts in this direction, in co-operation with those of others, produced a change in the politics of the town, which resulted in his introduction to public life. He was elected to various town offices and to the Legislature three times. As a legislator, he did not seem anxious merely to shine, but to be useful and to advance the interests of the State. Such qualities and service commended him to public favor, and in 1862 he was elected a counselor for the last year of Governor Berry's administration, and re-elected to the Council of Governor Gilmore. This, it will be remembered, was while the hardships and horrors of the Civil War were upon us, and when questions that could not be settled by precedent, and that tested the authority and resources of the State, were brought daily before the Governor and his Council for decision. The exigencies of the government would not suffer delay. Not only great permanent interests, but the very life of the nation was in peril, and large and frequent demands were made upon the States for supplies of men and money, when every resource seemed exhausted. In such times means must be invented and resources created. Criticism becomes silent, and waits for the return of peace to awaken into unreasoning activity. Under the pressure of such events, weak men are likely to be paralyzed, avaricious men corrupt and bold men to abuse power.

The qualities which Mr. Pillsbury developed in these trying circumstances ought to make his name historic. The writer has received communications from two gentlemen who were associated with him in the Council, and whose services to the State are universally acknowledged, and, as they express more forcibly than any words of mine can do the part which the subject of this sketch took in that eventful period, I take the responsibility to publish such portions of their respective letters as bear specially upon the subject of this paper. The known character of the writers will give additional weight to their strong language of encomium.

Hon. John W. Sanborn, of Wakefield, writes as follows:

"Learning that you are to prepare a biographical sketch of Hon. Oliver Pillsbury, I take pleasure in saying that I formed acquaintance with him in 1863, being then associated with him in Governor Gilmore's Council. His great executive ability, patriotism, honesty and integrity won the respect and admiration of all his associates. At that time the country was engaged in that terrible war for the support of the government and its own salvation, and grave questions came before us relative to the prosecution of the same. Although an ardent Republican, he never let partisan feeling warp his judgment in his official acts. He had strong convictions of right, but was always ready to discuss all questions with frankness and fairness, and he fully appreciated the opinions of his opponents. I had the honor to serve with him on the military committee of the Council, which had important matters to consider,—questions involving the rights and interests of the soldiers, their families, and the State. The duties of this committee were arduous and often difficult, but I can attest to the ability and untiring energy with which he performed his part. He took great interest in the welfare of the soldiers, particularly the sick and wounded, and was ever ready to minister to their wants. In a word, he was a model counselor for the time in which he served, and the future historian will class him among our ablest and most efficient men."

Hon. John W. Noyes, of Chester, who was also in official association with Mr. Pillsbury, says:

"I was with him a very considerable portion of the time for two years, while we were members of Governor Gilmore's Council during the war. He was the most important member of the Council, on account of his experience and familiarity with the duties of the situation; in fact, his information and good judgment were exceedingly valuable to the Governor and all the other members of the Council.

"I regard Mr. Pillsbury as one of the best informed and most competent business men in this State. I hardly think there is another man in the State that could fill his present position as well as he does. I said to Governor Stearns, before he made the appointment, that, if he knew Mr. Pillsbury as well as I did, he would not need recommendations, but would urge his acceptance of the place."

It would be idle to add anything to such commendations.

In 1869, Mr. Pillsbury was appointed insurance commissioner by Governor Stearns, for a period of three years, and has been reappointed, from time to time, to the office which he still holds. Soon after his appointment he drafted and secured the enactment of the present law of the State relative to insurance companies of other States and other countries. This law established the department of insurance, and has given to the people a degree of protection against the frauds and impositions of unreliable companies never before enjoyed in this State, and has brought into its treasury, by tax on insurance premiums, nearly one hundred and thirty-eight thousand dollars, in addition to the compensation of the commissioner.

During the whole term of his office Mr. Pillsbury has worked quietly, but assiduously, to eliminate unreliable companies from our borders, and has carefully avoided the admission of all such as are not regarded as perfectly trustworthy. It is universally affirmed, by men familiar with the insurance business, that the commissioner of this State has administered his office with unusual skill and success, and his reports are much sought for and often quoted and referred to as authority in other States. The State may well congratulate itself on having had the continued services, for sixteen years, of one so able and experienced in an office so intimately connected with the material interests of the people.

In 1871, Mr. Pillsbury moved to Concord, and the estimation in which he is held in the community is attested by the fact that, during the fourteen years of his residence at the capital, he has twice been elected to represent one of its wards in the Legislature, and has been a member of its Board of Education for seven years, and was president of the board at the time he tendered his resignation. When a member of the Legislature, Mr. Pillsbury was eminently practical, and whenever he spoke, was listened to with marked attention, for he only addressed the House on subjects that he had thoroughly considered, and it was understood that his remarks were likely to aid the members in reaching wise and just conclusions.

As one of the supervisors of the educational interests of Concord Mr. Pillsbury was exceptionally intelligent, conscientious and pains-taking. His views on the general subject were comprehensive, and he kept himself informed as to all real improvements in methods of instruction. He discountenanced shams and superfluities, and labored faithfully to make the schools sources of knowledge, of discipline and of virtue. To the other public trusts so honorably held by the subject of this sketch we may add that of president of the board of trustees of the State Industrial School. He has had a deep and abiding interest in this institution since its founding, and has given to it an active and efficient support.

We can only realize how pure and unselfish his labors of this character have been when we reflect that Mr. Pillsbury has no children of his own to kindle and feed his sympathies, but that they spring from a general benevolence toward all children, of whatever condition in life. His only child was a daughter of rare mental activity and attainments, and of unusual sweetness of temper. She married Mr. J. S. Eveleth, of Beverly, Mass., where, after a residence of nearly two years, she died of consumption, in the flower and promise of early womanhood, leaving two homes stricken and desolate.

In this brief sketch we have unconsciously drawn a model citizen,—a man in all the relations of life faithful to the claims of duty; in the family, society and the State, blameless; benevolent without ostentation, patriotic without the claim of reward and true to every trust.

CHAPTER IV.

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

ABOUT the year 1830 the condition of the insane of New Hampshire began to awaken a deep interest in the hearts of philanthropic persons in all sections of the State. The feeling rapidly increased that something should be done for their benefit, and that, too, upon a scale commensurate with the magnitude of their numbers.

But what, by whom and in what way? This was a question of difficult solution. As the public interest in the subject deepened, a settled conviction was formed in leading minds that the State should take the initiative in whatever measures might be adopted. Influenced in part, perhaps, by this general sentiment, but feeling deeply the importance of the enterprise, Governor Dinsmore, in his message to the Legislature, in June, 1832, thus called attention to the condition of the insane,—

"I feel no apology need be made, in an age so distinguished for its public and private charities, for calling your attention to a subject which has so much reason and humanity on its side as a measure for the security and recovery of the human mind. The Legislature of the State has never yet recognized these unfortunate beings as entitled to any special favor from government."

After alluding to the belief once entertained of the incurableness of insanity, he contrasts the enlightened and humane treatment afforded by well-regulated hospitals with that in use throughout the State. He then asserts the curableness of the malady, in a large percentage of cases, under proper and timely treatment, and cites, in proof thereof, statistics gathered from the reports of some of the best-managed institutions in England and the United States, thereby showing the importance "of having, in some convenient part of the State, a place where patients of this description can be received with as little delay as possible after the commencement of the disease and before improper management shall have aggravated its character and lessened the chances of cure." He also recommended, as a preparatory step, the institution of an inquiry "to ascertain, with as much exactness as practicable, the whole number of insane within the State, distinguishing paupers from others, the number which have been committed to jail within a given time by authority of court or by their friends or others without the order or sanction of judicial proceedings, and the length of their respective terms of confinement; and to ascertain, in like manner, the actual or probable amount of costs of court and jailer's fees and expenses of their support and maintenance in cases of confinement."

In accordance with this recommendation, the Governor was directed, by a resolution introduced by Mr. Hugh Miller, of Peterborough, and passed on the 22d day of June of that year, "to take proper means to ascertain the number of insane persons in the State."

In his message at the opening of the winter session, in November following, Governor Dinsmore further said,—

"I addressed letters of inquiry, containing copies of the resolution, to the selectmen of the several towns in the State, requesting them to furnish me seasonably with the information desired. In one hundred and forty-one towns, being all from which returns have been received, the whole number of insane is one hundred and eighty-nine,—ninety males and ninety-nine females,—one hundred and three of whom are paupers. The whole of these now in confinement is seventy-six, of whom twenty-five are in private houses, thirty-four in poor-houses, seven in cells and cases, six in chains and irons and four in jails. Of those not now in confinement, many were stated to have been at times secured in private houses, some have been handcuffed, others have been confined in cells and some in chains and jails."

In pursuance of the Governor's recommendation, a bill was introduced into the House of Representatives by Mr. Samuel C. Webster, of Plymouth, on the 26th day of December, providing "for the establishment of the New Hampshire Asylum for the Insane." This was read twice, laid upon the table, and on the 28th of December, on motion of Mr. Samuel E. Cones, of Portsmouth, indefinitely postponed by a vote of one hundred and thirty-nine to seventy-eight.

Upon the assembling of the next Legislature, in 1833, Governor Dinsmore again alluded to the subject in his message, and said, in relation to the establishment of an asylum for the insane,—

"Although your predecessors did not feel prepared to sanction the measure recommended, I have never lost the hope of seeing at an early period a zealous co-operation of the several branches of the government with the friends of suffering humanity, in promoting a charity so plainly recommended by the principles of our religion and by every consideration of justice and philanthropy."

On the 20th day of June of this year a resolution was introduced into the House of Representatives by Mr. Arthur Livermore, of Canpton, authorizing the appointment of an agent to examine and inspect sundry asylums for the insane and "report a plan for an asylum in this State." The resolution passed to its third reading, when, on the 25th day of June, its indefinite postponement being moved by Mr. John L. Hadley, of Weare, the yeas and nays were required by Mr. Hadley, and its postponement was lost by a vote of fifty-four yeas and one hundred and five nays. The resolution was then passed and sent to the Senate, where, a few days afterwards, July 1, 1833, on motion of Mr. Cyrus Barton, its further consideration was postponed to the next session of the Legislature. A resolution was also passed by the House "That each member of this Legislature instruct their respective towns to report by their members at the next session the number of insane, and their wishes in relation to the State building an hospital for the use of the insane;" but, on the 4th day of July, this, on motion of Mr. Warren Lovell, of Meredith, was also indefinitely postponed by the Senate. On the 26th of June still another resolution was introduced to the House by Mr. Charles H. Peaslee, of Concord, appropriating ten thousand dollars "for the erection of an insane hospital," the further consideration of which was, on the 3d day of July, on motion of Mr. Zenas Clement, of Claremont, postponed to the next session of the Legislature by a vote of one hundred and eight yeas to eighty-seven nays.

The use of the Representatives' Hall was granted to Dr. William Perry, of Exeter, on the evening of the 20th of June, for the delivery of a lecture upon the subject of the insane.

Upon the opening of the session of 1834, Governor Badger warmly urged in his message the importance of taking some measures for alleviating the existing condition of the insane, and on the 11th of June so much of the Governor's message as related to the deaf, dumb and insane was referred to a special committee of the House, consisting of Messrs. Charles H. Peaslee, of Concord; John L. Perley, of Meredith; Hugh Bartley, of Londonderry; John Sullivan, of Exeter; William Gordon, of Charlestown; Otis Amidon, of Chesterfield; and Gideon L. Tirrell, of Shelburne.

On the 24th, Mr. Peaslee, for the committee, presented to the House an able report, accompanied by a resolution for an appropriation, by the State, of the sum of twelve thousand five hundred dollars for the erection of an asylum for the insane, which, on the 30th of the same month, on motion of Mr. John Rogers, of Exeter, was postponed to the next session of the Legislature. The resolution "authorizing the appointment of an agent for the inspection of certain asylums for the insane," which was postponed in 1833 to the next session of the Legislature, was reported, on the 18th day of June, to the Senate from the committee on unfinished business, and the same day, on motion of Mr. Austin Corbin, of Newport, was indefinitely postponed. Twelve days afterward, however, a resolution, introduced to the House by Mr. Jacob Taylor, of Stoddard, was passed, which required the selectmen of the several towns to make return to the Secretary of State of the number and condition of the insane in their respective towns and districts. Further evidence of the activity of the friends of the insane is found in the fact that the House granted the use of their hall a second time to Dr. William Perry for the delivery of a lecture upon the condition and wants of the insane of the State.

On the 29th of June the next year (1835) a resolution was introduced in the House by Mr. Charles H. Peaslee, of Concord, "appropriating twenty-five bank shares for an asylum for the insane," which subsequently, on the 25th of June, on motion of Mr. John Woodbury, of Salem, was postponed to the next session of the Legislature. The next day, however, the House passed a resolution, introduced by Mr. George W. Kittredge, of New Market, providing for the appointment of a commission, to consist of one from each county, to ascertain the number and condition of the insane in the several counties of the State and make report to the next Legislature.

At the next session of the Legislature (1836) the subject of an asylum for the insane was again brought forward by Governor Hill in his message, and on the 7th day of June a select committee of ten was appointed "on so much of the Governor's message as relates to insane persons in this State, the memorials and petitions praying for the establishment of an insane asylum and the statistical returns from the towns of the number and condition of the insane."

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE,

DESIGNED BY

This committee consisted of Messrs. Charles H. Peaslee, of Concord; Luther V. Bell, of Derry; Thatcher Bradford, of Hancock; Augustus Jenkins, of Portsmouth; Benjamin F. Folsom, of Guilford; Benjamin Pettingill, of Salisbury; Cyrus Frost, of Marlborough; James Bree, of Newport; Henry H. Lang, of Bath; and Aaron Potter, of Milan.

To this committee were referred the petitions of sundry inhabitants of the towns of Richmond, Fitzwilliam, Nelson, Winchester, Gilsom, Keene, Exeter, Sullivan, Dover, Roxbury, Portsmouth and Claremont, besides others of individuals whose residences are not mentioned. At the autumn session other petitions of like purport to the foregoing were introduced and similarly referred. On the 15th, Dr. Luther V. Bell, for the committee, made to the House of Representatives an able report, whereupon the House postponed the further consideration of the subject to the next session of the Legislature. Immediately after, on motion of Mr. Joel Eastman, of Conway, the clerk was ordered to procure one thousand printed copies of this report for the use of that body.

Early in the June session Samuel E. Cones, of Portsmouth, was granted the use of Representatives' Hall for the delivery of a lecture upon insanity and the insane. A few days later, on the 15th, a resolution of the previous Legislature appropriating twenty-five bank shares belonging to the State for the erection of an asylum for the insane was referred to the select committee above mentioned. Upon the same day Mr. John L. Hadley, of Weare, introduced to the House a joint resolution, which soon afterwards passed both branches of the Legislature, that the Governor be requested to issue his precepts to the selectmen of the several towns, to take the sense of the qualified voters upon the question, "Is it expedient for the State to grant an appropriation to build an insane hospital?"

At the opening of the November session Governor Hill, in his message to the Legislature, remarks, in relation to the returns made in conformity to this resolution, that "less than one-half of the legal voters of the State have expressed any opinion, and the official returns, so far as received, would indicate that the vote had been nearly equal for and against the proposition."

In 1837 neither the message of the Governor nor the proceedings of the Legislature contain any allusion to the subject of an asylum for the insane. Great financial depression, extending throughout all parts of the country, may possibly have discouraged efforts in this direction, which, under other circumstances, would have been active.

The friends of the enterprise, however, were not disheartened, nor were their efforts abandoned, as they cherished a belief that these efforts must ere long be crowned with success. And in this anticipation they were not disappointed. On the 21st day of June, 1838, a bill was reported to the House from the select committee, to whom had been referred so much of the Governor's message as related to insane persons in this State, and petitions praying for the establishment of an insane asylum. This passed to a third reading, when a motion was made by Mr. Reuben Wyman, of Albany, to postpone it to the next session of the Legislature, and "that the Secretary of State be required to notify the selectmen of the several towns in this State to insert an article in their warrants for holding the annual March meetings, to take the sense of the qualified voters upon the subject of granting an appropriation for building an asylum." Upon the yeas and nays being called for by Mr. Warren Lovell, of Meredith, it was found that the motion did not prevail, the yeas being eighty-five and the nays one hundred and forty-four. The bill was then passed, and in a few days its passage was concurred in by the Senate.

Thus, after a severe struggle of six years, during which period they encountered a most obstinate opposition, its advocates at length succeeded in obtaining for the asylum a charter. We would be glad to recount the names of these early and devoted friends to whose protracted and unwearied efforts the institution owes its existence, but our limits forbid. But for their efforts in its behalf in the Legislature, the pulpit, the lecture-room, by the way and wherever an opportunity offered, it might not have been erected to this day. In its success they afterwards had proof of the correctness of their early foresight of its importance, and in its usefulness, their reward.

By its charter the New Hampshire Asylum for the Insane was constituted a corporation, with power to hold real and personal property in any amount necessary for its maintenance and support, "provided that its annual income from real and personal estate should not exceed thirty thousand dollars." The institution was placed under the management of a board of twelve trustees, the offices of three of whom should become vacant annually, eight to be chosen by the corporation and four by a board of visitors, consisting of the Governor and Council, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, for the time being. It also provided that when the sum of fifteen thousand dollars should be secured to the asylum by individuals, then the State should make over to it, in aid of its benevolent aims, thirty shares of New Hampshire bank stock, worth at that time about eighteen thousand dollars.

Some six months after the passage of this act a controversy arose between the corporation representing the subscribers to the voluntary fund and the board of visitors representing the State, relative to certain powers of control assumed by the former, and different interpretations of the act were urged. The questions involved were settled not long after by an act of the Legislature, "in amendment to and explanatory of the incorporating act," which provided that "the direction, management and control of all the property and concerns" of the asylum should be vested in the trustees, without power of interference by the corporation. And it was ere long thought best that the institution should be placed entirely under the control of the State, which, in accordance with an act passed by the Legislature in 1840, assumed its sole management through a board of twelve trustees, to be appointed by the Governor and Council. Another act, passed the same year, provided that all contributions by private individuals, previously made, should be refunded to them if claimed within a specified time.

The location of the asylum at some point in the town of Concord was left to the trustees, who, on the 21st day of January, 1841, selected that which it now occupies, the town of Concord having previously voted to give to the asylum the sum of nine thousand five hundred dollars, provided it should be located within its limits; private citizens of the town having previously pledged a considerable amount in addition upon the same condition.

A building committee, previously appointed, now entered upon the discharge of their duties and procured the completion, in October, 1842, of the front portion of the present centre building and the adjoining north and south wings, which afforded accommodations for ninety-six patients. From the trustees' report of 1844 it appears "that the whole amount expended in the erection of the hospital, barn and out-buildings, for the farm, consisting of one hundred and twenty-one acres, supply of water, furniture, farming tools, stock and other property was $35,266.70;" and that of this sum, nineteen thousand dollars only had been paid by the State, the balance having been received from contributions by the town and citizens of Concord, the Society of Shakers and other benevolent individuals or realized from the board of patients.

A few years later an additional building was erected in the rear of the main structure, for the use of excited patients, which, upon the completion of the original Peaslee building, in 1855, was converted into a laundry.

The asylum was opened for the reception of patients on the 29th day of October, 1842, under the superintendency of Dr. George Chandler, who, in June following, reported to the trustees the admission of seventy-six patients during the previous seven months. Dr. Chandler remained at the head of the institution for about three years, and to him it is largely indebted for the initiation of a wise routine of management. He was succeeded in 1845 by Dr. Andrew McFarland, afterwards superintendent of the Illinois Asylum for the Insane, who discharged the duties of superintendent for about seven years, and resigned in the summer of 1852. In 1849, three years before he retired from his office, the Chandler wing was built.

He was succeeded by Dr. John E. Tyler, who held the office for a period of about four years and a half.

During his superintendency the first portion of the Peaslee building was erected in 1854, steam fixtures for warming the halls and other parts of the house were introduced in 1855, and, in consequence of increasing applications for admission, the Rumford wing was erected the same year, thereby increasing the limit of accommodations to two hundred and twenty-five patients.

In consequence of impaired health, Dr. Tyler resigned in 1857, and was succeeded by Dr. Jesse P. Bancroft. His period of service was a long one, extending from 1857 to 1883. It was also an active one, during which no less than seven important buildings were added to those previously in use.

The first of these, in the order of construction, was the Kent building, erected in 1867. This is the corresponding building, on the female side of the asylum, to the Peaslee building, on the male side. It embodies most of the advanced ideas pertaining to the custody of highly-excited patients prevailing at the time of its erection, and is still well abreast of the present period in this respect.

The very greatly-enlarged number of patients in 1868 rendered necessary a new kitchen, bakery, cellar, dining-room for employes, sewing-room and chapel. These wants were all supplied in the present chapel building, which was built this year and designed to meet them.

The ventilation of the old buildings proved more and more defective as time elapsed and numbers increased. In 1869, Dr. Bancroft devised a new system for the halls and rooms in these, and from time to time, as fast as practicable, it has been introduced with gratifying success.

The enlargement of the asylum structure on the south brought into very objectionable contiguity the barn and stable of the institution. The necessity for larger structures of this character, better planned and more remotely located, was met, in 1871, by their removal and reconstruction upon the sites which they now occupy.

In 1874 the Peaslee building, originally occupying a foremost rank among buildings of this description, was found to have become of insufficient capacity and wanting in some important conveniences, which the experience of the period following its erection had suggested. Its accommodations having become insufficient rather than unsuitable, it was enlarged to double its size and furnished with such additional conveniences as the most advanced treatment of highly excited patients required.

Three years later it became apparent that the asylum had outgrown its boiler-house and repair-shops, and that a new structure to meet these wants had become imperative. After a careful consideration of these and of the most desirable way of providing for them, the present boiler-house and work-shops were constructed in 1877.

Twice since its erection has the central building of the asylum been enlarged. Its accommodations were first increased, in 1860, by an addition of some thirty-six feet upon the west. The greatly-enlarged number of employes calling ere long for still more room, an additional story was put upon it in 1879. These additions have doubled its original capacity.

The last addition made to the asylum structure was that of the Bancroft building. This was suggested partly by the need of additional room on the female side of the asylum, and partly by a desire, on the part of the friends of a somewhat limited class of patients in the State, for more ample accommodations and a more private life than is usually found practicable at institutions for the insane. To meet this want the comely structure designated as above was erected in 1882.

Such has been the growth of the asylum structure up to the present time (1885). Its accommodations have been increased from those at first provided for ninety-six patients to those which can now more amply accommodate three hundred and fifty.

The whole amount expended upon this structure, from first to last, by the State has been but two hundred and fourteen thousand dollars, or, considering the character of the accommodations afforded, the very low sum of six hundred and eleven dollars per patient. Whatever the asylum has cost beyond this amount has come from sources other than the State treasury.

It is located in the very heart of the city of Concord, upon a tract of ground, highly improved, of about one hundred and twenty-five acres. Some twenty-five acres of this are occupied by the various buildings and airing courts; the remainder by the pond, farming areas, groves, avenues and paths. In addition to the ground about the house, the asylum owns a pasture, about a half a mile distant, of fifty acres.

One of the greatest boons enjoyed by the institution is that of an unlimited supply of purest water. This comes from a well sunk by Dr. Bancroft upon the premises in 1880, which has a diameter of fifty feet and a depth of fifteen. It is drawn upon daily for about fifty thousand gallons, and is capable of yielding a much larger supply. Never since its construction has it shown the slightest indications of failure, even during the severest droughts.

In 1855, as before stated, the furnaces, which had been previously employed, were discarded, and appliances for warming the buildings by steam were introduced. Up to 1870 wood was the fuel used. But this growing more and more dear in price and its supply more and more uncertain, it gave way to coal, and for the last fifteen years the steam for heating, washing, cooking, etc., has been made by this.

After an active service of twenty-five years, Dr. Bancroft resigned the superintendency in 1882, and has been succeeded by his son, Dr. Charles P. Bancroft. Familiar with all the traditions of the institution and thoroughly equipped by education and experience for the high responsibilities of his post, he is maintaining its usefulness and continuing it in the front rank of American asylums for the insane. Its success thus far has been due very largely to the entire absence of partisanship in its boards of visitors and of trustees, to the patient and devoted efforts of able superintendents, to the liberal benefactions of earnest friends of the insane, to timely aid from time to time rendered by the State and to the full reports made annually to the public of its condition and operations.

It is an interesting fact in its history that devoted friends of the insane have ever watched the progress of the asylum, and made, from time to time, liberal contributions to its funds. It has been deemed just and proper to put on record here the names of these generous patrons.

Before its opening, even, in 1837, Miss Catharine Fisk, of Keene, a lady of high culture and benevolent impulses, bequeathed to it a legacy of nearly six thousand dollars, charged with certain temporary annuities, since terminated. By the terms of her will, this bequest was not to be paid to the asylum until the expiration of fifty years from the time of her decease, and, consequently, no part of this has yet been received. At present, held by the State as trustee, it is increasing by the annual addition of the accruing interest, and now (1885) amounts to twenty-three thousand four hundred and seventy-six dollars and seventy-one cents. It will become payable to the asylum in the year 1887.

In 1846, and at subsequent times, the State, as trustee for the asylum, received, in partial payments from the estate of Jacob Kimball, of Hanpstead, a legacy amounting to six thousand seven hundred and forty-three dollars and forty-nine cents, the interest of which is annually paid by the State treasurer to the asylum.

Again, in 1847, the Hon. Samuel Bell, of Chester, made to the asylum generous donations of money, to be expended in the purchase of books for the use of such patients as might be benefited by the perusal of them. With this some two hundred and fifty volumes of standard works, well suited to the purpose intended, were procured. These formed the nucleus about which the present asylum library has grown up. The important additions since made have resulted from numerous smaller and later gifts. This collection of books, now containing about eighteen hundred volumes, is of great value as a curative agency in the treatment of large numbers of convalescent and mildly affected patients.

Two years afterwards, in 1849, the institution received, as a contribution to its fund, the sum of two hundred dollars from John Williams, Esq., of Hanover.

Abiel Chandler, Esq., of Walpole, the founder of the Chandler Scientific School at Hanover, who died in 1851, bequeathed to the asylum two legacies, one of six hundred dollars, charged with the life-estate of a niece, and another of one thousand dollars, at the same time making the institution his residuary legatee. The several sums paid to its treasurer and financial agent, from time to time, by his executors amount to twenty-seven thousand six hundred and thirty-one dollars and fifteen cents. The ultimate amount of this fund, which bears the name of its donor, has been fixed by the trustees at thirty thousand dollars, and already, increased by the addition to it of interest, stands upon the books of the institution at twenty-nine thousand eight hundred dollars.

The Countess of Rumford, who died at Concord in December, 1852, was also a benefactress of the asylum. Feeling a deep interest in this and other benevolent institutions in her native State and elsewhere, at her decease she left to such a very large proportion of her estate. To her kindness the asylum is indebted for a legacy of fifteen thousand dollars, which was paid to its treasurer in 1853.

Mrs. Mary Danforth, of Boscawren, who also died in 1852, after making other specific bequests, left to the asylum the residuum of her estate. From this the sum of three hundred and forty-seven dollars and ninety cents was realized by the institution.

One of the early trustees of the asylum was Mr. William Plumer, of Londonderry, who ever manifested a deep concern for its welfare. It was found, after his decease, that, retaining this interest to the last, he had left to it a legacy of five hundred dollars, which was paid to its treasurer in 1863.

Still another benefactress of the asylum was Mrs. Peggy Fuller, of Francestown, from whose estate it received, in 1862-63, the sum of eighteen hundred and fourteen dollars and forty-two cents.

In 1862 the institution received from the executors of the will of Mrs. Fanny S. Sherman, of Exeter, a lady of great excellence of character, a legacy of five thousand dollars, the annual income of which is, by her direction, given to indigent patients, to assist them in paying the necessary expenses of their support, and is the first bequest ever received by the asylum to which any particular direction has been attached by the donor. Some five years later the sum of two hundred and two dollars and ten cents was paid to the asylum, by his executors, as a legacy of Mr. Horace Hall, of Charlestown.

The largest bequest ever made to the asylum was the munificent one of Mr. Moody Kent, who died in 1866. Having watched its progress with great interest for a long series of years, he left to it, at his decease, the residue of his property, after the payment of numerous legacies to relatives and friends. From his estate the institution received one hundred and forty-nine thousand four hundred and fourteen dollars, which sum, increased by a small addition derived from accrued interest, now constitutes the present Kent fund of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

The Rev. Dr. Charles Burroughs, of Portsmouth, who, for about thirteen years, had held the office of president of the board of trustees, left at his decease, in March, 1868, as an evidence of his deep interest in the asylum, a bequest of one thousand dollars, to be paid to the institution at the close of the life of Mrs. Burroughs.

Isaac Adams, of Sandwich, after having served the institution for several years with signal ability as one of its trustees, upon retiring from the board, in 1868, accompanied his resignation with the liberal gift of one thousand dollars, requesting that the interest might be expended in affording means of in-door recreation to male patients so situated as to be deprived of it in the open air. This fund, which has been accumulating, will be used at an early day as the foundation of active measures to secure the important result suggested by its donor.

In 1872, John Conant, of Jaffrey, the constructing agent of the first asylum building, for many years a member of its board of trustees, and for six years its president, gave expression to a deep interest long entertained for the institution by a generous donation of six thousand dollars, as an addition to its permanent funds.

The third on the list of female patrons of the institution stands the name of Miss Arabella Rice, of Portsmouth, who died in 1872 and left to it a legacy of twenty thousand dollars as a proof of her deep interest in the welfare of the asylum and of the unfortunate class to whom it ministers.

Hon. Isaac Spalding, of Nashua, for many years a member of the board of its trustees and from 1868 to 1875 its president, died the latter year, leaving to the asylum a legacy of ten thousand dollars as his contribution to its permanent funds.

In 1883 the asylum received a legacy of one thousand dollars from the estate of Miss H. Louise Penhallow, of Portsmouth, being the last which has come into its treasury.

The whole amount of the asylum's permanent funds on the 1st day of June, 1885, was two hundred and seventy thousand three hundred and eighty-four dollars and five cents.

The settled purpose of the trustees as to each of these, and to every other fund which may hereafter be given to the asylum amounting to one thousand dollars or over, unless otherwise ordered by the donor, is to maintain the principal thereof intact, and so to expend the income, from time to time accruing, as the greatest good of the patients and of the asylum shall suggest. The following votes of the trustees, regulating their action in this regard, will present more in detail the rules by which they are governed:

Total. That the several funds that have been, or may hereafter be, given to the New Hampshire Asylum for the Insane, unless otherwise ordered by the donors, be entered upon the books of the asylum as permanent funds, be set apart with the names of said donors attached to each, to be forever kept intact, and that the income thereof be expended in accordance with the conditions upon which they are given, or, in the absence of such, in such manner as the trustees shall deem most for the interest of the asylum and its patients.

"Fated, That if, at any time, the principal of any fund be impaired, the income thereof shall be at once devoted to its restoration and continue to be thus appropriated until the said fund shall attain its original amount."

From the foregoing sketch of the rise and progress of the New Hampshire Asylum it appears that, from the first, there have been successive demands for additional buildings and other facilities for the care and treatment of the insane. This demand has arisen, in part, from the constant increase in the number of persons requiring hospital care; but this has not been the sole cause of the demand. There has been, as the result of experience, an advancing idea of the requisites for the proper treatment of insanity, and, as a result, there has been, from time to time, demands not only for new buildings, but for radical changes of old ones. Experience has been constantly bringing to light the insufficiency and defects of the earlier ideas and usages, and calling for facilities for utilizing the fruits of that experience,—a common fact in all fields of progress. The history of the asylum has been one of progressive development, which has found no resting-place.

It germinated in sympathy for the insane, the depth of which was shown in the patience and persistence with which the first movers in the enterprise resisted the obstacles thrown in their way, and renewed their determined efforts from year to year. The results of their efforts have been an emphatic vindication of the soundness of their judgment as well as of the benevolence of their sentiments. It would be impossible to form a just estimate of the benefits which have followed, unless by a comparison of the condition of the insane prior to the founding of the institution and that at the present time. A few words in regard to the old notions of insanity may be allowable here in contrast with present views, as illustrating the amount of good accomplished. Before the opening of this century the insane were regarded and treated as outcasts, looked upon with horror, as culprits or possessed with evil spirits. Execution or imprisonment was their portion. Those who escaped these were subjected to measures for the expulsion of demoniac possession, incantations or vile compounds supposed to possess virtue against demons. Holy water, to which salt was added, was a famous prescription for this purpose, on the theory that the devil abhorred salt. Binding the subject to a cross was another remedy supposed to possess great efficiency.

An old medical writer records this as the treatment of a case of active mania, which he witnessed: A priest entered the room of the person and said, "Thou devil of devils! I adjure thee by the potential power of the Father and the Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, and by the virtue of the Holy Ghost that thou do show me for what cause thou dost possess this woman."

Recovery was the result reported. Prior to the year 1797 almost no rational and scientific provision for the insane had been attempted. The few institutions then existing differed little from prisons. Pinel, with an insight deeper than others, saw that disease, and not the devil, was the cause of insanity; and his logical inference was that treatment of it as of other diseases was the remedy, rather than binding to a holy cross or the expulsion of the devil.

After much effort, and against violent opposition, he obtained the reluctant permission of the authorities to try the experiment of treating insanity as disease, but only on condition that he be held personally responsible for any harm which might ensue to the public from this supposed hazardous measure. He removed the insane from dark and foul prisons into hospital care, much to their relief and joy. This was the first step in rational and scientific treatment. Out of this germ has grown the grand results of the present period. But the hospital of to-day was not the immediate product of this radical change of theory. For a long time after this there was no institution seen which could compare favorably with the hospital of the present. Even Pinel himself had little conception of the possibilities lying in the direction of liberal usages in the care of the insane. The best practice of that day would now be regarded as crude and insufficient, affording little worth copying.

The way out of the strange vagaries in opinion and practice, so long entertained, was not short or sudden, but, of necessity, through a long series of cautious observations and careful practical trials. Old traditions and hereditary prejudices, however absurd and unreasonable, are never quickly eradicated. But our great advantage was immediately realized: insanity at once begun to be studied and dealt with from a new point of departure. Pinel had transferred it from demonology and crime into the category of disease, to be henceforth investigated as other bodily affections. This was an immense gain. Henceforward the sciences tributary to general medicine were to contribute in explanation of the intricate mental phenomena dependent on cerebral lesions. Physiology and pathology came at once to be consulted, rather than the changes of the moon. In the light of these, careful observation of the phenomena of insanity as disease has been the increasing practice.

From this point progress has been uninterrupted, but especially rapid during the last half-century. The breaking away from old traditions and prejudices has been much more apparent in this period, as shown in changing hospital architecture and the adoption of a vastly more liberal type of organization. If the progress seems, at first thought, slow, it is to be considered that, in the nature of the case, the full extent to which it is now found that liberal and common-sense methods can be safely applied in practice with the insane could be only gradually apprehended. It was only by cautiously conducted trials, even at some supposed risks, that the now generally accepted conviction became established that the insane, as a class, could be intrusted with a larger liberty and controlled more by moral influences than had, in earlier times, been deemed safe.

These lessons of experience explain the great difference apparent between the architectural features of the old and the later structures of the New Hampshire Asylum. These latter show that much more self-control is expected on the part of the patient than was supposed possible when the former were constructed; and also provide a larger latitude for the exercise of independent volition and the free exercise of personal tastes. A careful examination of the features of the series of buildings, in the order of the time of their erection since the first, will afford a very correct illustration of the gradual evolution of ideas and methods of practice with the insane. This evolution is most gratifying to philanthropy, and, by the most intelligent alienists, is not believed to have yet reached its limit. They look confidently forward to that happy adjustment of residences and other auxiliary influences which shall reduce to a minimum the real sacrifices involved in hospital treatment, as also the dread with which so many have regarded its necessity.

The New Hampshire Asylum has, from its organization, been in fullest sympathy with others in this progressive work, and has never been satisfied with an inferior rank. Each new move, whether in building or in administration, has embodied the gleanings of the past, both in the literature of the subject and of experience, whether its own or that of others. So far as its resources would allow, it has ever followed the most progressive ideas, regulated by a rigid, but not suicidal, economy. Its trustees and physicians have always regarded buildings and surroundings as important co-factors in successful treatment, and have therefore spared no pains to embody in these as much of remedial force as possible. It was not the first in the field. Enough had been done in England and in this country to afford solid hope and promise to our sagacious and whole-hearted people, by whose unwearied efforts the first organization was secured.

The practical work accomplished by the asylum could not be fairly appreciated without taking into account the condition of the insane in the State when it commenced operations, a condition which it is difficult to realize at this day. It cannot be described more briefly or better than by Dr. Bell, in his report made to the Legislature in June, 1836, to which reference has already been made. He says, —

"The committee feel that neither the time nor the occasion require them to allude to instances of the aggravated and almost intolerable sufferings of the insane poor which have come to their knowledge, they are convinced that the Legislature require no high or weighty picture of the variations of intense misery to which the pauper lunatic is subjected, extending from the time of his incarceration in the cold, narrow, sunless, fireless cell of the almshouse to the severely more human disposal of him by 'selling at auction,' as it is called, by which he fell into the tender mercies of the most abject and worthless of society, who alone could be excited by empathy to such a revolting charge. Suffice it to say, on this point, that your committee are satisfied that the horrors of the present condition of the insane in New Hampshire are far from having been exaggerated. They have found that public officers and citizens of towns have naturally been unwilling that the extent and particulars of what many of them doubtless sincerely believe a necessary, or at least, an unavoidable severity, should be blazoned forth to the public; those having charge of insane friends have been found often unwilling even to refer to the malades, still less to speak of the treatment and condition which they conscientiously think unavoidable in their circumstances. . . . In view of this immense mass of unmitigated and unalleviated misery, the question will spontaneously occur, what can be done for its alleviation and prevention?"

The enacting of the law founding the asylum was the manner in which the Legislature answered this grave question of their committee. The same committee thus set forth the results to be secured by this legislation,—

"First, a curative institution, restoring those intrusted to its charge to the exercise of reason and their duties in society; second, the influence of such an institution in diminishing the amount of public suffering, both in alleviating the condition of the insane inmates who may be beyond the reach of successful medication, and removing the immense weight of anxiety and distress and danger to their connections and relations; third, a place of custody for those insane persons endangering the lives and safety of the community and their own persons."

That these objects have been secured, in an eminent degree, can hardly be questioned at this day by any one who has intelligently watched the progress of the institution from its foundation. But the full measure of relief from suffering which it has secured to the objects of its care, as well as the amount of misery it has saved by its preventive measures, can be known only to those who have been personally conversant with, or interested in, its personal histories.

A brief review of the historical record of its work, as derived from its statistics, will be germane to the objects of this article. From the time of the admission of the first patient, October 29, 1842, to March 31, 1885, a period of forty-two years, five months and two days, four thousand seven hundred and fifty-two persons were admitted to the asylum and received its care. Of this number, seventeen hundred and thirty-four went forth restored to reason, prepared to resume their places and trusts in society. This fact alone has much significance when taken in connection with the statement of the committee already quoted from, that "We found no more than an occasional instance of amendment under the common treatment."

It further appears that eleven hundred and seven persons, under care and treatment, but who did not fully recover mental health, left the institution so much improved as to render life among friends practicable, safe, and generally more or less useful. Of this class, a considerable number were convalescent on leaving, and fully recovered afterwards. The records show only eight hundred and thirty-eight discharged whose diseases were not either removed or mitigated. But even with those whose maladies did not admit of relief, the ministrations of the institution were by no means of little value. This will be found emphatically true when the hospital life of such persons, with its systematic regulation of things and its sanitary provisions, is compared with any possible life without a hospital. The incurable insane, whose lives, to a great extent, could otherwise be only misery, are here brought within the reach of every domestic comfort, and even convenience, and the moderating and steady influences existing secure to this class some good measure even of happiness. But besides these three classes,—the restored, the improved and the nominally unimproved,—there were those who died. Of this class, from the opening of the asylum to April, 1, 1885, there were seven hundred and forty-eight. The attentions due and rendered to these have not been among the least of the benefits accruing to these sufferers. Kind ministrations to the hopeless and the helpless are ever held among the highest and best of human acts. They exalt and dignify human nature. We think only with a shudder of the hopeless victims of disease dying in lonesome neglect. It is a bright feature of Christian civilization that it tenderly cares for those who fall in the race; it is the trait of the savage to abandon to their fate those who can no longer do service in the ranks. To bring to the bed of the dying all suitable tokens of respect, and to make the last days of these as far as possible from solitude or neglect, has ever been the studious effort of the management of the institution.

What these ministrations may have been worth to the immediate objects of them, and to the sorrowing homes to which they belonged, it is not the province of words to show,—their full bearings cannot be made written history.

This glance at the statistical records of the work of the asylum from its foundation is only a naked outline. To bring the extent and value of this work to the full apprehension of the reader would be to review, in detail, the busy, laborious and often painful hours of forty-two years.

Through these years all plans and all work have aimed at one object, and that, to make the treatment of mental disorders rational, thoroughly human and free of all superstition and all needless interference with the rights and privileges of the patient. Following, in the adoption of plans, this principle, the history of the institution has been one of evolution. Out of what, at first, bore great resemblances to imprisonment there have been evolved conditions of life for the insane lacking none of the necessaries and comforts, and few of the privileges and even the amenities, of ordinary domestic life.

The space allowed for this article will not admit of remark upon the medical treatment of insanity, further than to say that mental derangement, in some instances, is the reflex effect of disorder in some bodily organ other than the brain, and that in such cases treatment is directed to that organ. What remains to be said must have reference to the general, or so-called moral, treatment, having reference largely to those influences which address themselves to the mind, and involve such a regulation of hospital life and activities as best to antagonize morbid processes, restore normal habits of thought or to yield the largest benefits where restoration is impossible. The same general system of measures contributes to both these ends. In other words, experience has shown that, in adjusting surroundings and shaping domestic and social influences for the average of the insane, the usages and methods most agreeable to the sane are most conducive to the recovery of the curable, and most congenial to the minds of those who cannot recover. This is equivalent to saying that insanity introduces no new and special elements of its own requiring the suspension of ordinary customs. Tastes, personal proclivities and the conditions of pleasure and pain remain unchanged in kind, even when modified in action by disease; and are responsive to the same stimuli. The recognition of this fact has been a modern achievement, and is in agreeable contrast with older ideas and practice. The latter made the insane some unreal being, endowed with exceptional traits not amenable to ordinary influences, and hence to be treated as an exception. This error led to every absurdity and wrong in practice, the most conspicuous of which were inactivity, repression and confinement, shutting out most of the health-giving remedial stimuli. Comparatively speaking, this was the practice at the opening of the asylum, when hospital life, as compared with that of the present, was a gloomy monotony, embracing little calculated to arrest the morbid currents of thought and feeling, and invite them into healthy channels. The institution, during its forty years of activity, has been steadily illustrating the incorrectness of these older notions, and making its cautious way towards the opposite theory and practice. This latter method is especially characterized by varied activities and the least practicable departure in the same from the style of social intercourse, and the usages and rules of ordinary life.

The study and effort, in the direction of affairs, has ever been and is, to make the institution in the smallest degree possible a peculiar place, but, on the other hand, to give it the aspects of home-life, and to furnish it with attractive and pleasant activities, calculated to arrest the attention and draw the thoughts from self and morbid themes. This end has been steadily kept in view in all the movements of the management, whether in building new or reconstructing old, in furnishings or equipments, or in inventing the various methods of occupying time and attention. All have sought this one object till scarcely any resemblance could be traced between the original and the later institution life. Attractive surroundings, associations and occupations have come to take the place of the gloomy and depressing monotony, in the ways of living, which characterized the first stages of the enterprise. The application, in detail, of the underlying principle could not be the work of a day or a year, but the result of long-continued study of the symptoms, tastes and wants of many individual cases, and of the effects of these agencies upon them.

This has shown that, next to a natural and attractive domestic adjustment, occupation is the great desideratum of successful treatment. This applies both to body and mind, and should be varied almost without limit to adapt it to individual capacities and tastes.

To provide such occupation in sufficient variety is at once the foremost and the most difficult of the duties of the administration. It lays under contribution every practicable agency within reach,—the farm, the shop, the laundry, the kitchen, the sewing-room, the carriage-drive and the walk in the country; and in-doors, the library and various public exercises of instruction or entertainment. All these are drawn upon with increasing diligence, to the extent of available resources, so that none, except the few who, from bodily weakness, require absolute rest, are left without an external stimulus designed to antagonize the morbid introversion ever present in mental disease. It requires no argument to show the reasonableness of this practice, even if ample experience had not faithfully demonstrated it; and it may be affirmed that, aside from strictly medical treatment, the value of hospital residence is now largely measured by the ability of the institution to provide these agencies. With a view to multiply and vary these, a large shop is now being fitted up, to be supplied with facilities for introducing many forms of light, safe, and attractive mechanical work. These forms will be so chosen as to meet the largest practicable variety of tastes and qualifications for work on the part of the patients, with a view, at the same time, to being as easily conducted and as inexpensive as possible. The income of the Adams fund is available for the support of this department. Our limits will not allow us to extend remarks on this subject.

Another, and the last we shall notice, of the progressive steps taken to render the treatment of the insane as liberal and complete as possible was the erection of the Bancroft building in 1882-83. In its plan of construction, this was an advance on all the others; and not simply to increase accommodations, but also to occupy new ground in treatment. Previously, the more agitated and irresponsible classes had been amply provided for in the older buildings, but not so amply the convalescent and those not needing restraints. The partially self-sustaining patients have hitherto been associated with more or less incompatible classes for lack of sufficient variety in apartments. So, also, persons with ample means, and needing no other than moral restraints, have not found, in the older buildings, sufficiently liberal accommodations to satisfy their habits and tastes. Both these classes have been provided for in the construction of this building.

The trustees, seeing no reason why the tastes of the insane should not be recognized in their treatment, have here prepared to do so by furnishing the facilities for individualizing attentions. Without inconvenience to others, a patient can have one, two or three rooms, and such private attendance and service as may be desired, with all the privacy and independence of private residence. At the same time those not able to provide so liberal an outfit, or not desiring it, can have single rooms, with the general attendance, and secure all the benefits of the retired and quiet situation without burdensome expense. The practical working of this detached and retired building has already been most gratifying, and has done much to remove any real objection to hospital residence, since it has done away with almost the last vestige of departure from the forms and usages of private life, at the same time that it has retained all the sustaining and remedial influences of hospital organization.

Sufficient has been said to give the reader an idea of the tendencies and most prominent characteristics of the hospital care and treatment of the insane at the present time. When this method is compared with the confinement, the inactivity and monotony which characterized the earliest usages, it is not difficult to form some adequate estimate of the influence the New Hampshire Asylum has had upon the condition of the insane, or to see how far it has realized the hopes of its early advocates; and proved a success and an inestimable blessing to the State.

HISTORY OF CONCORD.

CHAPTER I.

Geographical—Indian Occupation—The Penacooks—Original Grant, 1725—First Meeting of Proprietors—The Pioneers—Early Rules and Regulations—Grant of Bow—The Controversy—The First Settlements—List of Proprietors and Settlers—Incorporation of Rumford—Incorporation of Concord Parish—The First Parish Meeting—Officers Elected—Indian Troubles—Garrisons in 1746—The Massacre—The Bradley Monument.

CONCORD, the county-seat of Merrimack County, and capital of the State of New Hampshire, lies in the southern part of the county, and is bounded as follows:

North by Webster, Boscawen, Canterbury and Loudon; East by Loudon, Chichester and Pembroke; South by Pembroke and Bow; West by Dunbarton, Hopkinton, Webster, Boscawen and Canterbury.

This territory was originally occupied by the Penacooks, a powerful tribe of Indians, who, when first known by the English, had their headquarters here, and numbered four or five hundred men. Their chief was named Passaconaway, "the child and the bear," and was regarded with the highest veneration by the Indians, filling the office of chief, priest and physician, and, as they believed, having direct communication with the Great Spirit.

The township was granted January 17, 1725. The petition for the grant was as follows:

"To the Hon^{ble} Wm. Dummer, Esq., Lieut. Governor, and Commander in Chief in and over His Majesty's province of ^{ys} Massachusetts Bay, in New England, to the Hon^{ble} His Majesty's Council and House of Representatives in Gen. Court or Assembly convened at Boston, June 17th, 1725.

"The petition of Benj^l. Stephens, Andrew Mitchel, David Kimball, Ebenezer Eastman, John Osgood and Moses Day, a Committee appointed by and in behalf of the petitioners formally for a Tract of Land at a place called Pennycook, —

"Humbly sheweth, That whereas ^{ys} petitioners have at two sever^{al} times petitioned the Great and Gen^l Court for a grant of the aforesaid tract of Land at Pennycook, with resolutions fully inclined to make a speedy settlement there, w^{ch} they conceive, under the divine protection, they are able to go on and through with; and the Hon^{ble} House of Representatives having been pleased twice so far to take their petition under consideration as to grant the prayer under such conditions as by ^{ys} vote of the s^d Hon^{ble} House may more fully appear, which conditions, though they be expensive, yet ^{ys} petitioners have well weighed the same, and would willingly have undertaken the settlement, if it had been the pleasure of the Hon^{ble} Board to have concurred in the aforesaid vote. But as ^{ys} petitioners are informed it did not meet with a concurrence. Wherefore, ^{ys} petitioners are emboldened, with great submission, to renew their pet^{ns} to ^{ys} Honour, and this Great and Gen^l Court, that you would please to take the premises again into ^{ys} wise and serious consideration; and as the building a Fort there will undoubtedly be a great security within and on

Merrimack River, and ^{ys} your petitioners are still willing to build and maintain it as afore propos^d, at their own cost, ^{ys} they may have the countenance and authority of this Court therefor, and that they would please to make them a grant of it accordingly.

"^{Ys} pet^{rs} would also suggest to ^{ys} Honours, that many applications have been made to the Government of New Hampshire for a grant of the s^d Land, which, though it be the undoubted right and property of this Province, yet it is highly probable that a parcel of Irish people will obtain a grant from New Hampshire for it, unless some speedy care be taken by this great and Hon^{ble} Court to prevent it. If that Government should once make ^{ys} a grant, tho' the pet^{rs} conceive it would be without right, as in the case of Sutfield, yet it would be a thing attended with too much difficulty to pretend to root ^{ys} out, if they sho^{ld} once gett foot hold there. Your petitioners therefore pray that the vote passed by the Hon^{ble} House may be revived, or that they may have a grant of the Land on such other terms and conditions as to the wisdom of this Court shall seem best. And for ^{ys} Honour, as in duty bound, ^{ys} petitioners shall ever pray, etc.

" BENJA. STEPHENS.

" ANDREW MITCHELL.

" DAVID KIMBALL.

" EBENEZ. EASTMAN.

" JOHN OSGOOD.

" MOSES DAY.

" In the House of Representatives, June 17th, 1725.

" Read, and the question was put whether the House would revive their vote above refer^d to, —

" Resolved in the affirmative.

" Copy examined per

" J. WILFORD, Sec. y.

The first meeting of the proprietors was held at the house of Ebenezer Eastman, in Haverhill, for the purpose of admitting settlers.

At a meeting of the proprietors, held at Andover February 7 and 8, 1726, the following settlers drew lots:

Enoch Coffin, John Peabody, Richard Crann, Andrew Mitchell, M. Samuel Phillips, Samuel Ayer, John Grainger, Henry Rolfe, John Sanders, Jr., Thomas Page, William Barker, Isaac Walker, Joseph Davis, John Coggin, Benjamin Parker, Edward Clarke, Stephen Osgood, Benjamin Gage, Moses Day, David Kimball, Benjamin Stevens, John Chandler, Ebenezer Virgin, John Pecker, Moses Hazzen, William Gifferson, Joseph Hale, Ephraim Davis, John Wright, Jacob Eames, Jacob Abbott, Christopher Carlton, Nathaniel Page, Samuel Kimball, Nathan Simonds, David Dodge, Robert Peaslee, Richard Goshidge, right drawn by Samuel Jones, Thomas Wicomb, Robert Kimball, John Saunders, Nathaniel Clement, Ebenezer Lovejoy, John Osgood, Zerobabel Snow, Ebenezer Eastman, Jonathan Shipley, John Austin, Edward Winn, Ebenezer Stevens, Joseph Page, Samuel Davis, Ephraim Hildreth, James Parker, Nathan Lovejoy, Samuel Reynolds, John Foster, James Simonds, Joseph Parker, Nathan Fisk's right drawn by Zeeh. Chandler, Zerobahil Barker's right drawn by Edward Abbott, John Bayley's right drawn by Samuel White, William Whittier, Joshua Bayley, Ammi Rhuhamah, William White, Nathaniel Peaslee, Thomas Colman, John Jaques, Obadiah Ayer, Abraham Foster, John Mattis, John Merrill, Thomas Pearley for Nathaniel Cogswell, David Wood, Nathaniel Abbott, John Ayer, Nathan Blodgett, Benjamin Carlton, Jonathan Hubbard for Daniel Davis, Ephraim Farnum, Stephen Emerson, Timothy Johnson, Nathaniel Bar-

ker's right drawn by Solomon Martin, Nehemiah Heath, Nathaniel Sanders, Nathaniel Jones, Samuel Grainger, Thomas Blawhead, Nicholas White, Jonathan Pillsbury, Richard Hazen, Jr., Samuel Topping, Moses Barlow, Bezzel Topping, Thomas Leavell, Joseph Hall, Nehemiah Parker, Benjamin Stevens, Minister's lot, Ministerial lot, School lot, N. Parker.

At this meeting it was also,— Agreed and Voted, That a block-house of twenty-five feet in breadth and forty feet in length be built at Penny Cook, for the security of the settlers.

Agreed and Voted, That John Chandler, Moses Hazzen, Nehemiah Carlton, Nathan Simonds and Ebenezer Stevens be a committee, and they are hereby empowered to build, either by themselves, or to agree with workmen to build, a block-house of twenty-five feet in breadth, and forty feet in length, as in their judgment shall be most for the security of the settlers.

Agreed and Voted, That Benjamin Stevens, Esq., be treasurer for the settlers.

Agreed and Voted, That Timothy Johnson, John Osgood and Moses Day be chosen, appointed and empowered to examine the charges that shall arise in building a block-house at the place called Penny Cook, or any other charges that shall arise in the bringing forward the settlement and to allow, as in their judgment shall be just and equal, and also to draw money out of the treasury for the defraying of said charges.

Agreed and Voted, That the sum of one hundred pounds be raised and paid by the settlers into the hands of Benjamin Stevens, Esq., treasurer, for defraying the charges that are past, or that shall necessarily arise in bringing forward the intended settlement, to be paid in to said Benjamin Stevens, Esq., by the first day of March next, in equal proportion.

Enoch Coffin dissented.

Agreed and Voted, That a committee of five persons on oath, three whereof to be a quorum, be chosen out of the number of the intended settlers, to lay out the remaining part of the interval at the place called Penny Cook, that is not yet laid out, so that the whole of the interval already laid out, or to be laid out to the settlers, shall be equal in quantity and quality.

Agreed and Voted, That John Chandler, Henry Rolfe, William White, Richard Hazzen, Junr., and John Osgood be a committee, chosen and empowered to lay out the interval at the place called Penny Cook, that is not yet laid out, so that the whole of the interval already laid out or to be laid out to the settlers shall be equally divided among them as to quantity and quality.

Agreed, That Jonathan Hubbard be admitted a settler in place of Daniel Davis, who was admitted a settler of Penny Cook by the Honorable General Court's Committee appointed to admit persons to settle Penny Cook.

Agreed and Voted, That three pence per tail for every rattlesnake's tail, the rattlesnake being killed within the bounds of the township granted at Penny Cook, be paid by the intended settlers, the money to be paid by the settlers' treasurer, upon sight of the tail.

While the proprietors were thus arranging the affairs of the new plantation, May 29, 1727, the government of New Hampshire made a grant of the township of Bow, which covered a large portion of the Penacook grant, and these conflicting grants led to a lengthy and expensive controversy, which was carried to the Court of St. James by the Hon. Timothy Walker, as agent for the Rumford proprietors, and decided in their favor by the King in Council, December 27, 1762.

REV. TIMOTHY WALKER.¹—More than any other person, Rev. Timothy Walker is entitled to the appellation of Father of Concord. He was the son of Deacon Samuel Walker, of Woburn, Mass., was born July 27, 1765, and graduated at Harvard College in the class of 1725, of which the Rev. Mather Byles was the most eccentric and perhaps the most distinguished member. After his settlement, in 1730, he first lived in a log house which stood on the brow of Horse-shoe Pond Hill, but in 1733-34 built the two-storied gambrel-roof house in which he afterwards resided until his death. The house, with some modern improvements, overshadowed by the stately elm-trees which Mr. Walker set out in 1764, is well represented by the fine engraving in this volume.

Mr. Walker was of full middling stature and size, not corpulent, but portly in form and of dignified manners. He had blue eyes and a light complexion. Naturally, his temper was quick, but well restrained and governed. If, at any time, he was betrayed into hasty expressions or acts, he was prompt to acknowledge the fault and ask the forgiveness of any one injured. He was exact and precise in all his domestic arrangements and business transactions, keeping a diary in a little book done up in the form of an almanac. Though not talkative, he was agreeable in social intercourse and occasionally facetious. According to the custom of the times, he wore a large powdered wig and a three-cornered cocked hat, short clothes and shoes with large buckles. He was held in high regard by all his parishioners. After service on the Sabbath, both morning and afternoon, the whole congregation stood until Mr. Walker went out, he respectfully bowing to those on each side as he passed down the broad aisle.

Mr. Walker served the town as a wise counselor in relation to every matter of public interest, and, in connection with Benjamin Rolfe, Esq., who married his eldest daughter, drew up the first petition for help against the Indians addressed to the governments of both Massachusetts and New Hampshire, and also many of the papers in the long controversy with the proprietors of Bow. As fully related in Dr. Bouton's "History of Concord," he thrice visited England as agent of the town in that vexatious litigation, and through his judicious and persevering efforts and his personal influence with his counsel, Mr. William Murray (afterwards Chief Justice Mansfield), secured forever the rights of the proprietors of Rumford (now Concord).

As a preacher, Mr. Walker was instructive and practical, dwelling more on the duties than on the doctrines of religion. He was calm and moderate in his delivery; his sermons, of which a few still exist, were written out in full on sheets of paper, folded in the 18mo form, and would occupy about thirty minutes each in their delivery. His style was good, perspicuous and didactic, with but few illustrations, but well supported with quotations from Scripture.

In his theological views Mr. Walker was orthodox, according to existing standards. He received the Westminster Assembly's Catechism, which was then also used in the families and schools of the town. In distinction, however, from the preachers who, in his day, were called "new lights," he was accused of being an Arminian, but called himself a Moderate Calvinist. He was highly conservative as regarded innovations and new measures. Hence, in the period of the great reformation, under the preaching of Rev. George Whitefield and others, Mr. Walker was among those ministers who did not favor the excitement which was generally awakened. In January, 1743, he preached and published a sermon to his people entitled, "The Way to try all Pretended Apostles," from the text Rev. ii. 2. In this sermon he dwelt at length on the evils produced by itinerant preachers, especially the divisions they caused in established churches and societies. Hence, he warned his people not to go after them or hear them preach. "Nothing," he says, "I am well satisfied, has so much contributed to the evils that do so cloud the present day and look with such a direful aspect upon us as the indulging an unmortified itch for Novelties, and having the Persons of Strangers, whom we know nothing of, in Admiration, and setting them up above the Place of Instruments. If, therefore, you would not become accessory to the guilt of those who are endeavoring the subversion of our religious constitution, keep out of the way of temptation as much as may be; ponder well the first step that leads to a compliance with these errors."

¹ This sketch of the life of Rev. Timothy Walker was prepared by Mr. E. B. Walker, though derived largely from the sketch of Mr. Walker by Rev. Dr. Bouton, in his "History of Concord."

At this time all of Mr. Walker's hearers were of one way of thinking in religious matters, and his object was to keep them together and make them steadfast in the "religion and church order which was very dear to our forefathers." Conscious of the power he had over his people, he not only charged them not to go after or to hear these pretended apostles preach, "but," said he, "if any of you think yourselves unable to manage a controversy with them, invite them to accompany you to my house, and I will gladly undertake this, or any other service I am capable of, for the benefit of your souls."

In 1771, Mr. Walker felt called on to give his people another warning against innovations and what he called disturbers of the peace and order of the churches. A Baptist elder, Hezekiah Smith, had preached in the vicinity, and awakened much interest in his peculiar views. To counteract this influence, Mr. Walker preached a discourse, May 12, 1771, entitled, "Those who have the form of godliness, but deny the power thereof, described and cautioned against." The text was 2 Timothy iii. 5. The sermon was "published at the desire of many of the hearers." It is dedicated "to the church and congregation under the author's pastoral care, having been composed and delivered solely for your benefit, without the most distant view of its farther publication, is now respectfully inscribed by him who esteems it his highest honor and greatest happiness to serve your best interest.

"TIMOTHY WALKER."

During his ministry of fifty-two years there is no regular record of church proceedings after 1736; but in his memoranda there are entries made of those who owned the covenant, were admitted to communion, baptized, married and died, together with notices of private affairs, the weather, journeys, etc. From the memoranda kept by Mr. Walker, it appears that his interest in his people did not cease upon their removal from Concord. About 1764-65, considerable numbers of them became first settlers of Conway and Fryeburg, in the Pigwacket country, on Saco River. These he was in the habit of visiting until they had established religious teachers, preaching to them, giving them pastoral counsel and baptizing their children. Many of them were members of his church, many of them he had married, many of them he had known from infancy. His big heart yearned after them, and he considered them a portion of his own home-flock until he had seen them securely established in the care of another shepherd.

Mr. Walker was largely dependent for the support of himself and family upon the farm given him by the proprietors of the township as an "encouragement to his settlement with them in the wilderness of Penacook. His salary as pastor was at one hundred pounds per annum, to "rise forty shillings per annum until it comes to one hundred and twenty pounds, and that to be the stated sum annually for his salary. Mr. Walker was twenty-five years old at the time (November 18, 1730) of his settlement, and the prudence and foresight of his people is clearly seen in the farther provision relative to his salary, that "anything to the contrary above mentioned notwithstanding, that if Mr. Walker, by extreme old age, shall be disabled from carrying on the whole work of the ministry, that he shall abate so much of his salary as shall be rational."

Mr. Walker was an ardent patriot as well as a devoted Christian minister. Upon the breaking out of the Revolution it was a great grief to him that circumstances beyond the control of either compelled his son-in-law, Major Benjamin Thompson, afterwards Count Rumford, to join the royal cause, in October, 1775, and retire within the British lines at Boston. But it was at the same time an exalted gratification that his only son, Timothy, afterwards Judge Timothy Walker, was intensely earnest in his devotion to American interests. His family, like many others of that period, was represented in the ranks of the patriots and royalists both. But this fact never abated in the least degree his own patriotic zeal and activity. And it is a fact, of which all his descendants feel proud, that in all contests from that time to the present in which their country has been a party, they have ranged themselves instinctively and deliberately on the side of its friends.

The news of the battle of Lexington reached Concord in the evening and spread like wild-fire throughout the town. The next morning, before daylight, his neighbor, Esq. John Bradley, seeing a bright light in the pastor's study, went at once to learn the occasion of it. As he approached the house, through the uncurtained windows he saw his venerable pastor striding back and forth across the room, apparently absorbed in deepest mental anxiety. As he entered the room he was immediately accosted with the remark, "There is no other course left us but to fight, John. Yes, John, we must fight, we must fight." It is unnecessary to say that the good parson voiced the spontaneous sentiment of the province, which did fight, losing more soldiers in the Revolution than it had male children born while it lasted.

One Sunday in July, 1777, when in church and in the midst of his afternoon sermon, his quick eye observed the unexpected entrance of Colonel Gordon Hutchins, Concord's representative in the General Court, which had just adjourned at Exeter. Pausing abruptly in his discourse, he turned to him and said, "Are you the bearer of tidings, Colonel Hutchins?" Upon learning that forces were wanted immediately to check the progress of Burgoyne and his army, he remarked at once to his congregation, "Those of you who can go had best retire and get ready to march to-morrow morning;" upon which a portion of the audience went out, while with the remainder the service went on to its conclusion. The following night was a busy one in Concord, and in the early morning of the next day their aged minister invoked God's blessing upon a well-equipped band of brave men, and dismissed them to Bennington and to victory.

Mr. Walker possessed a quiet humor, accompanied by a strong common sense, which manifested itself on not infrequent occasions, some of which have been remembered. As an instance of these, tradition says, that, going out to work one day, with John Evans, his hired man, and with an ox-team and cart, they had to pass a very wet and muddy place. In passing it John sat on the cart-tongue while Mr. Walker sat on the rear end of the cart. When about midway of the slough, John slyly pulled out the pin which held down the front end of the cart and dropped it, to make his employer think it worked out accidentally; up went the cart and out went the worthy minister into the mud and water. Getting on to dry land, he said to his man, "John, this is a bad accident; but never mind, drive on and I will go back." A few days after, he went, late one afternoon, into the field where John was at work. When it became time to go home, he told John that he would drive the team home. Upon coming to the slough, he quietly seated himself upon the cart-tongue while the unsuspecting John took to the seat formerly occupied by the minister. Upon reaching the spot where the mud and water was deepest, Mr. Walker pulled out the before-mentioned pin, up went the cart and John was suddenly unloaded. When he had struggled through to hard ground, his master, holding up the pin, quietly said to him, "John, John, here is the pin; I didn't throw it away as you did,"

Tradition furnishes another instance of the display of mild humor and sagacity on his part. A worthy young couple, who were members of his church and whom he had recently married, happened to be blessed with an increase of family at an earlier day after that solemnity than was deemed decorous. Some worthy church brethren, whose sense of duty surpassed their charity, immediately reported the fact to the pastor, in painful anxiety as to what means should be taken to protect the fair fame of the church; at the same time inquiring "what was to be done about it?" The pastor, seeing at once the situation of affairs, and knowing well the previous good character of the parties, quietly replied to his zealous brethren, "This fault of our young friends gives me great pain; but, as we all know, it is their first offense. I think, therefore, we should forgive them this time. Should it be repeated, I should advise their summary expulsion from the church." The tradition is that it never was.

As another specimen of his prudence and good sense, it is related that the Rev. Elijah Fletcher, of Hopkinton, once requested an exchange with him on the Sabbath, and that he would preach upon the subject of witchcraft, which at the time was making trouble with some of Mr. Fletcher's parishioners. Mr. Walker accordingly prepared a sermon for the occasion and preached. He told the people, "that the most they had to fear from witches was from talk-ing about them; that if they would cease to talk about them, and let them alone, they would disappear." The hint had the desired effect.

But, underneath all this bonhomie, was a quiet solemnity of purpose, which was never absent, and always apparent. His dignified deportment and manners were such as to command universal respect. Ephraim Colby, Concord's noted fighter and champion of that time, who worked much for him upon his farm, used to say that "Parson Walker was the only man the Almighty ever made that he was afraid of."

During the intervals of peace between the French and Indian Wars Indians frequently called at his house and were hospitably entertained. On one occasion a number of the warriors encamped near by, and were to have a powwow the night succeeding. Mr. Walker being absent, Mrs. Walker was under great apprehensions of injury. Upon learning this the Indians remarked, "Minister's wife afraid," at the same time delivering into her possession all their guns, as an assurance of her safety. They called for them the next day, having kept in fidelity the promise made to her. From first to last, he seems to have been highly respected by his wild neighbors of the woods, and in no instance to have received personal injury at their hands.

During his long ministry, of more than half a century, Mr. Walker enjoyed remarkable health. Tradition says that he was able to preach every Sabbath except the one previous to his death. This, there is reason to believe, is not quite correct, but is doubtless true in the main. For convenience, in his old age, he slept in the north, lower front room of his house, and his hired man, Philip Abbot, was near by, to assist him when necessary. On Sunday morning, September 1, 1782, he woke early and asked that his fire be built, for he was tired of lying and wished to get up. Shortly after he arose, and having partly dressed himself, sat down in a chair. Mr. Abbot, seeing him slide forward in his seat, went immediately to assist him and found him dead. Just as the morning sun began to mount the heavens his spirit rose to the presence of Jehovah, whom he had served long and faithfully. If a long and successful discharge of the duties pertaining to the station in which one is placed entitles him to the commendation of his contemporaries and of his posterity, Mr. Walker, by his protracted service, clearly earned it.

The first settlements were made in 1727 by Ebenzer Eastman and others.

"The spring of 1728" (says Dr. Bouton in his "History of Concord,") "opened upon the new plantation with most favorable auspices. Eager to fulfill the conditions of their grant, and to become settled in their chosen home, a large number of the proprietors were early engaged in building houses, clearing, fencing and plowing their lands. The block, or meeting-house, was finished; canoes constructed for navigating the river; the new way to Penacook from Haverhill was improved, and the First Division of interval ordered to be completely fenced by the last of May. Messrs. Joseph Hale and John Pecker were chosen a committee to agree with a minister to preach at Penacook,—to begin the 15th of May,—but they were not to assure the gentlemen more than after the rate of one hundred pounds per annum for his service."

"In answer to a petition presented by John Osgood, in behalf of the settlers,—praying that an allowance might be made them for the five hundred acres formerly laid out to the right of Governor Endicott,—the General Court, on the 6th of August, this year, authorized them 'to extend the south bounds of the township one hundred rods, the full breadth of their town, and the same was confirmed to them as an equivalent for the above-said five hundred acres.'

"Arrangements were also made for building a saw-mill within six months, a grist-mill within one year, and to establish a ferry at the most convenient place. The first grist-mill stood at or near the bank-mill now owned by Robinson & Morrill, in the East Village, and the saw-mill, on the same stream, about half a mile above. The mill-crank was brought upon a horse from Haverhill. Soon after commencing operations the crank was broken. How to remedy the evil they knew not, as there was no blacksmith nearer than Haverhill. One of the men, who had once been in a blacksmith's shop and seen them work, undertook to mend it. Collecting together a quantity of pitch-pine knots for a fire, they fastened the crank with beetle rings and wedges, and then wedged the disjointed parts. The crank was afterwards used many years. For the grist-mill fifty pounds were allowed, and fifty acres of land granted to Nathan Symonds, as near to the mill as was convenient."

The following is a list of the proprietors and early settlers:

Nathaniel Abbot was about thirty years of age when he came to Penacook. His house lot was where the North Congregational Church now stands. He was the first constable of Penacook (1732-33),—an efficient, enterprising, useful citizen, and member of the church. At the commencement of the French War (1744) he entered the service, and joined the rangers under Major Robert Rogers. He held a lieutenant's commission in 1755, in Captain Joseph Eastman's company, in the expedition against Crown Point, and was a lieutenant in Captain Richard Rogers' company of rangers, in Fort William Henry, at the time of the massacre, 1757. In 1746 he had command of a company in defense of the town against the Indians. He died in 1770, aged seventy-four.

Edward Abbot, cousin of Captain Nathaniel, was one of the first selectmen of Rumford. In 1746 his house was a garrison. Edward, his son, was the first male child born in Penacook (7th of January, 1731), and Dorcas the first female child.

Jacob Abbot, cousin of Nathaniel and Edward, died in the French War, 1760.

John Austin, probably a descendant of Thomas Austin, from Andover, where was Samuel Austin (1714), who died 1753, aged eighty-three.

Obadiah, Samuel and John Ayers, or Ayer, were from Haverhill. Obadiah was a graduate of Harvard College, 1719; was employed to "examine the General Court's records, to see if there be any former grant" of the township; was one of the principal inhabitants of Haverhill. Samuel and John were of the same family, and were among the most active and enterprising settlers.

Thomas Blanchard, the proprietor of Penacook, died in 1759, aged eighty-five.

William, Nathan and Zebediah Barker came from Andover.

Captain Joshua Bayley is named in the proprietors' records as "one of the principal inhabitants of Haverhill."

Moses Boardman—unknown.

Nathan Blodgett was probably from Woburn.

Nathaniel Clement was from Haverhill.

John Chandler was a leading and influential man; was a powerful, athletic man, of great muscular strength and cool, indomitable courage.

The Carltons—Benjamin, Nehemiah and Christopher—were relatives, probably from Andover and Haverhill.

Richard Coolidge.

John Coggin is believed to have been of Woburn.

Edward Clark was from Haverhill.

Rev. Enoch Collin accompanied the honorable committee of the court and surveyors when they came to Penacook to lay out the land, in May, 1726, and preached twice on the Sabbath after their arrival, in a tent on Sugar Ball Plain. The first settlers of the name in Concord, after the death of Rev. Enoch, were William and Peter, sons of John, of Newbury. Peter afterwards settled in Boscawen, from whom those of that name there have descended.

Thomas Coleman was of Newbury, probably a descendant of Thomas Coleman. Coleman forfeited his lot, by not paying, to Henry Rolfe, Esq.

Nathaniel Cogswell's right was drawn and carried on by Thomas Perley.

Moses Day was from Bradford. One of the same name was deacon of the church in the west parish of Bradford 1739 and also 1750. Probably one of them was the proprietor in Penacook.

Ephraim, Joseph and Samuel Davis were from Haverhill. Ephraim was the only one who finally settled in Concord.

David Dodge—not known from whence he came.

Captain Ebenezer Eastman was from Haverhill; one of the most enterprising and useful of the proprietors. He settled on the east side of the river. His house was a garrison in 1746.

Jacob Eames was from Andover.

Stephen Emerson was from Haverhill.

John and Abraham Foster were from Andover.

Ephraim Farnum, from Andover, was son of Ephraim, son of Ralph Farnum, who married Elizabeth Holt in 1658. He died in 1775, aged about eighty.

John and Samuel Grauger were brothers from Andover.

Benjamin Gage was from Bradford.

William Guttererson was from Andover.

Nehemiah Heath was from Haverhill.

Ephraim Hibbith was probably from Chelmsford.

Joseph Hale was from Newbury.

Moses and Richard Hazen, Jr., were from Haverhill.

Deacon Joseph Hall, from Bradford. He was deacon of the church in Concord more than forty years, a benefactor to the poor and an example of Christian virtues. During the hostilities of the Indians his house was a garrison. He died April 8, 1784, aged seventy-seven.

Timothy Johnson, of Haverhill.

John Jaques is believed to have been from Bradford.

Nathaniel Jones—unknown.

Robert, Samuel and David Kimball were from Bradford. Probably the latter only finally settled in Concord. He was the father of Captain Reuben Kimball. He died November 29, 1745.

Nathaniel and Ebenezer Lovejoy were brothers, and sons of John Lovejoy, of Andover.

Thomas Learned was probably from Woburn.

John Merrill, deacon, is believed to have come from Haverhill.

John Mattis. His origin is not known.

Andrew Mitchell was from Newbury.

Benjamin Nichols. His origin is not certainly known.

John and Stephen Osgood were cousins, from Andover.

Benjamin, James and Nathan Parker were brothers, from Andover.

Nathaniel Page was from Haverhill, and, probably, Thomas and Joseph also.

Nathaniel and Robert Peaslee were from Haverhill.

Rev. Samuel Phillips was minister of the South Parish Church in Andover. His right in Penacook was carried on by William Peters.

Jonathan Pospipher's origin is not known.

John Pecker is believed to have come from Haverhill. He was a bolding and useful man in town.

John Peabody was probably from Salisbury, Mass. Samuel Reynolds—unknown.

Henry Rolfe, Esq., was from Newbury; was one of the commissioners appointed by Massachusetts in 1737, on the question of the boundary line between Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

John Sanders, John Sanders, Jr., and Jonathan Sanders—the two former, father and son, were from Haverhill; probably also Nathaniel Sanders. John Sanders was one of "the Committee of the Great and General Court" for the settlement of Penacook.

Benjamin and Ebenezer Stevens were brothers, from Andover.

James and Nathan Simonds were probably from Woburn.

Zerobabel Snow. From whence he came is unknown.

Jonathan Shipley. Whence from not known.

Bezaleel and Samuel Toppau were from Newbury.

Rev. Bezaleel Toppau was born March 7, 1705. Bezaleel preached a while at Penacook.

Richard Urann, it is believed, was from Newbury.

Ebenezer Virgin, probably from Salisbury.

John Wright.

Nicholas and William White were from Haverhill.

Ruhamah Wise.

Isaac Walker was from Woburn—a relative of Rev. Timothy Walker, from the same place. Isaac Walker was father of Isaac, Jr., grandfather of Abiel, lately deceased, who lived on the spot where his grandfather built his log house. Isaac Walker, Jr., died on the same day that Rev. Timothy Walker died. In 1746 the house of Timothy Walker, Jr., was a garrison. He was a son of Isaac Walker, Sr.

David Wood. This is a Newbury name.

William Whittier was from Haverhill.

Thomas Wicomb.

Edward Winn, from Woburn.

Abraham Bradley was not an original proprietor, but came to Penacook as early as 1729.

Stephen Farrington, not an original proprietor, but an early settler, from Andover.

Jacob Shute came to Penacook with Captain Ebenezer Eastman.

Jeremiah Stickney came from Bradford about 1731—not an original proprietor, but became a valuable citizen.

Rumford Incorporated.—The town was incorporated by Massachusetts February 27, 1733, under the name of Rumford, and was a "new town within the county of Essex, at a plantation called Penny Cook." This civil organization continued until June 7, 1765, when it was incorporated as a parish with town privileges, by the name of Concord, probably with a hope that thereafter the inhabitants might live in peace and concord with their neighbors in Bow.

The following is the petition for the incorporation of the town:

"To His Excellency Benning Wentworth Esq. Capt. General Governor and Commander in Chief in and over His Majesty's Province of New Hampshire, The Honble His Majesty's Court and House of Representatives in General Assembly Convened, April 11^o 1764

"The humble Petition of Timothy Walker on behalf of himself and the Inhabitants of Rumford (so called in said Province) sheweth, That the Affairs of the said Inhabitants (so far as relates to Town matters), have been in great Confusion Ever since the Year 1749, for want of the Power which they had 'till then Enjoyed ever since the year 1741 by the District Act (so called) which this Honble Court say in July 1741 when it was received had been found 'Convenient both for the Government of this Province in general, and also the Inhabitants incorporated thereby in particular."

"That altho' it has been pretended that they might still have Enjoyed the same Privileges (as Inhabitants of Bow) yet they never understood Matters in that Light; And for their Opinion and Prudence consequent thereupon, they humbly conceive they could give Reasons which w^old be satisfactory to this Court, were they permitted.—But to pass over all this—This Power of the Exercise of it has been lost to them (if Ever they had it) Ever since March 1756, for want of a next Meeting—

"That by the Year 1760 they were so heartily tired of such an unsettled State that they would have been glad to have acted Even under the Incorporation of Bow, if they could (altho' highly inconvenient for them as it blended part of three Towns together whose Interests had always been separate, and would consequently be apt to create Strife and Contentions)."

"That this Court was apprized of their utter Incapacity of doing any Corporate Act (Even as Bow) by a Letter signed Jeremiah Sturkey, on behalf of himself and others, 'new on File, together with their dutiful & ready disposition to Comply with every motion of this Court to the utmost of their Powers."

"That the said Inhabitants conceive themselves greatly aggrieved by a late Act of this Government, imposing a heavy Tax on the Inhabitants of Bow as Arrears Ac—a Tax which Nobody has Power to assess and Collect at y^e Time when y^e s^o Arrears became Due and which if now done, must be had in many Instances on wrong Persons."

"That what they suffered for want of the Powers they had Enjoyed by the first mentioned District Act, was unspeakably more to them Damage, than to have paid their Proportion of the Province Expence"

"That the Incapacity complained of all along, still continues and yet the people are subjected to pay their part of the Current Charge but nobody has power to assess or Collect it."

"They therefore most humbly Pray that your Excellency and Honours will take the Matters complained of under Consideration, and either revive the said District Act so far as relates to Rumford, or (which w^old be much more satisfactory to the said Inhabitants) Incorporate them by a standing Act, and by their former known Boundaries that the said Inhabitants may be abated at least one half part of said Arrearsages. And that with respect to their part of the Current Charge of the Province, they may be subjected to pay no more than their just proportion with the other Towns in this Province, or grant them such other Relief as in your great Wisdom and Goodness you shall see meet."

"And your Petitioners as in Duty bound shall Ever Pray Ac"

TIMOTHY WALKER

The first parish meeting was held January 21, 1766, when the following officers were chosen: Moderator, Lieutenant Richard Hasseltine; Clerk, Peter Coffin; Selectmen, Joseph Farnum, Lot Colby, John Chandler, Jr.; Constable, Benjamin Embury; Tithingmen, Lieutenant Richard Hasseltine, Amos Abbot; Surveyors of Highways, Jonathan Chase, Robert Davis and Nathaniel Eastman; Sealer of Leather, Deacon George Abbot; Sealer of Weights and Measures, Lieutenant Nathaniel Abbot.

Indian Troubles.—The little settlement rapidly increased in population and importance, and no danger from Indian incursions was apprehended by the enterprising pioneers until 1739. In that year, however, the town voted "that a garrison should be built round the house of Rev. Mr. Walker, and that five pounds should be granted to Baruchias Farnum, to enable him to build a block, in order to defend his mills on Turkey River."

The following account of the Indian troubles is from Dr. Bouton's "History of Concord," and is a faithful narrative of this trying period:

"About the year 1742, according to tradition, the wife of Mr. Jean, then Eastman—who resided on the Hopkinton road, opposite the house of Mr. Aaron Shute—was taken by a party of Indians and carried to Canada. She was, however, soon redeemed by her husband and restored to her family."

"In the opening of the French war, in 1741, greatly increased the alarm and anxiety which prevailed the colonies; and, particularly, the frontier towns which were most exposed. As to means of removing or allaying these fears, the expedition against Louisbourg, on Cape Breton—which was the stronghold of the French—was projected, and triumphantly executed by the daring enterprise of the New England colonies. In this expedition Capt. Ebenezer Eastman was commander of a company raised in these parts, and was engaged in the assault made on that stronghold the following year. Before he set out he signed a petition, with sixty-two others, to the general Assembly of New Hampshire, for assistance against the French and Indians. This petition was drawn up by Rev. Mr. Walker."

"In the opening of this Capt. Eastman, commanded were Nathaniel Abbot, Isaac Abbot, Obadiah Pebrin, one Chandler, and probably others whose names are not known. The late aged Joseph Abbot said he always understood that his uncle Isaac was killed at Cape Breton, and that one Mr. Chandler from this town also died there." Capt. Eastman went to Cape Breton twice. He first set out from Rumford, March 1, 1744-45, and returned November 10th, the same year. The next year he went again, and returned home July 9, 1745.

"The reduction of the fortress at Louisurgely changed the scene of war. The Indians, the more incited by the French, poured forth from Canada upon the frontier towns, and, with horrible barbarity, carried on the work of destruction. The inhabitants of Rumford felt the general shock, and sought for means of defense and safety. At each parish meeting, from 1744 to 1747, they chose some person to represent to the government, either of New Hampshire or Massachusetts, of both, 'the deplorable circumstances they were in, on account of their being exposed to imminent danger, both from the French and Indian enemy. The language which they instruct their agents to use is:—'We request of them such aid, both with respect to men and military stores, as to their great wisdom may seem meet, and which may be sufficient to enable us, with the Divine blessing, vigorously to repel all attempts of our said enemies.'"

"In answer to these petitions, early in 1745, two small companies of scouts were raised by authority of Gov. Wentworth, under the direction of Col. Benjamin Kelle, of which Capt. John Chandler, of Rumford, had command of one, consisting of ten men, and Capt. Jeremiah Chouin, of Canterbury, of the other, consisting of five men. The Massachusetts government also sent a small detachment of men from Andover, and another from Billerica, who were stationed here in 1745. In 1746 precautionary measures were taken by the proprietors for the preservation of their records. Under authority of Gov. Wentworth, garrisons were established at different points in the town, and men, with their families, assigned to them, as was most convenient."

"The garrisons, or forts, were built of log logs, which lay flat upon each other, the ends being fitted for the purposes, were inserted in grooves cut in large posts erected at each corner. They enclosed an area of several square rods; were raised to the height of the roof of a common dwelling-house, and at two or more of the corners were placed boxes where sentinels kept watch. In some cases several small buildings—erected for the temporary accommodation of families, were within the enclosure. Houses not connected with garrisons were all deserted by their owners, and the furniture removed. In the day-time men went forth to their labor in companies, always carrying their guns with them, and one or more of the number placed on guard. If the enemy were discovered approaching, alarm guns were fired, and the report answered from fort to fort. On the Sabbath the men all went armed to the house of worship, stacked their guns around a post near the middle, and sat down, with powder-horn and bullet-pouch slung across their shoulders, while their revered pastor—who is said to have had the best gun in the parish—prayed and preached with his good gun standing in the pulpit."

and, he says, the Indians shot three guns first. He says he thought our men shot at a deer; he says that he ran back about forty rods upon a hill, so that he could see over upon the other hill, where the Indians lie, and shot upon the men; and, he says, as ever he came upon the hill so as to see over upon the other hill, he heard Lieut. Jonathan Bradley speak and say, 'Lord, have mercy on me—Fight!' In a moment his gun went off, and three more guns of our men's were shot, and then the Indians rose up and shot a volley, and run out into the path, and making all sort of howling and yelling, and he did not stay long to see it, he saith. It was supposed that John Lufkin was upon the front, and Othadiah Peters on the rear; and they shot down this Lufkin and Peters the first shot, as they were in the path, about twelve or fourteen rods apart; and they shot Samuel Bradley, as he was about twelve feet before where this Othadiah Peters lay, and wounded [him] so that the blood started every step he took. He went about five rods right in the path, and they shot him right through his powder horn, as it hung by his side, and so through his body—and there lay these three men, lying in the path—and Lieut. Bradley run out of the path, about two rods, right in amongst the Indians. He was shot through his wrist. It was supposed he killed the Indian; it was supposed that he fought as he stood there in the spot where he was killed; till the Indians cut his head almost all to pieces; and John Bean run about six rods out of the path, on the other side of the way, and then was shot right through his body;—so that there were none of these men that went one or two steps after they were shot, excepting this Samuel Bradley that was shot as above said. And there seemed to be as much blood where the Indian was shot as there was where any one of the men were killed. It was supposed the men laid there about two hours after they were killed, before any body came there. We did not go till there came a post down from the fort, three quarters of a mile beyond where the men lie and were killed. The reason we did not go sooner, was because we did not hear the guns. I suppose the reason that we did not hear the guns, was because the wind wa'n't fair to hear. We went up to the men, and ranged the woods awhile, after these captives, and then brought the dead down to town in a cart, and buried the dead men this day. These men, when they went away in the morning, said they intended to be at home about twelve o'clock, in order to go to Canterbury in the afternoon, or, at least, to get fit to go. It was supposed that these men, some of them, rid double on horses when they were killed. On the twelfth day, early in the morning, went up and took the blood of the Indian, and followed along by the drag and blood of the Indian about a mile, very plain, till we came within about fifteen rods of a small river, and then we could see no more sign of the Indian; but we tracked the Indians along the river, about twenty or thirty rods, and there were falls where they went over. . . . It was supposed there could not be less than fifty or sixty Indians."

The initials of those massacred were inscribed on a large tree standing near the spot, which remained a number of years. August 22, 1836, a monument was erected on the site of the massacre, bearing the following inscription:

This Monument is in memory of
SAMUEL BRADLEY,
JONATHAN BRADLEY,
ORAVIAH PETERS,
JOHN BEAN AND JOHN LUFRIN,
Who were massacred Aug. 11, 1759,
by the Indians.
Erected, 1837, by Richard Bradley, son of the Hon. John Bradley, and grandson of Samuel Bradley."

CHAPTER II.

CONCORD—(Continued).

ECCLÉSIASTICAL HISTORY.

First Congregational Church—South Congregational Church—Congregational Church, East Concord—Congregational Church, West Concord—Congregational Church, Penacook—Unitarian Church—St. Paul's Church—Universalist Church—First Methodist Episcopal Church—Lake Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church—Methodist Church, Penacook—First Baptist Church—Pleasant Street Baptist Church—First Will Baptist Church—Baptist Church, Penacook—St. John the Evangelist Roman Catholic Church—Catholic Church, Penacook.

First Congregational Church.¹—The history of the First Congregational Church in Concord runs parallel with that of the town. At a meeting in Andover, Mass., February 8, 1726, the proprietors of the town voted to build a block-house, which should serve the double purpose of a fort and a meeting-house. The first public assembly in the township was one for public worship, held May 15, 1726, and composed of a committee of the General Court, surveyors and some of the proprietors who had arrived two days before. Rev. Enoch Coffin led the service in their camp. Early in 1727 the first family moved into town and Rev. Bezaleel Toppan was employed to preach one year.

Rev. Messrs. Toppan and Coffin, both proprietors of the town, were employed to preach till October 14, 1730, when it was resolved to establish a permanent ministry. Rev. Timothy Walker was at once called to be the minister of the town. A council met November 18, 1730, in a small log building "in this remote part of the wilderness," and organized a church of nine members, and Rev. Timothy Walker was installed its pastor.

The church was orthodox and stable in its faith, and during the ministry of Mr. Walker—fifty-two years—it was united and prosperous. Strong in the confidence and affection of the people, the pastor actively opposed anything that threatened division in the church or the town. It is not possible to state accurately the growth of the church during this period, as the records are incomplete. No continuous record is found after 1736, and the names of those who owned the covenant are gathered, only in part, from entries made in his diary. The names of only one hundred and twenty-seven who united with the church are known, though many more must have been received, for at the pastor's death one hundred and twenty members were living.

Rev. Timothy Walker was a native of Woburn, Mass., and was graduated at Harvard College in the class of 1725. His salary at settlement was one hundred pounds, to increase forty shillings per annum till it reached one hundred and twenty pounds; also the use of parsonage. He died suddenly, Sunday morning, September 1, 1782, aged seventy-seven years.

¹By Rev. F. D. Ayer.

The deep piety of this early ministry has never been effaced, and the influence of Mr. Walker, to a large degree, decided the moral tone and habits of the town. For more than half a century his clear convictions and bold utterances directed the thought of the early settlers. He served the town as well as the church. His was counsel and judicious action in relation to every matter of public interest were of great benefit to the people and made him their leader. Three times he visited England as agent for the town to confirm its endangered rights, and was enabled to make secure forever the claims and privileges of the settlers.

Nearly seven years now passed without a stated ministry. Rev. Israel Evans was called by both the church and the town to settle as minister September 1, 1788, and was installed pastor July 1, 1789. His ministry continued eight years. No records of the church for this period can be found. There were one hundred and twenty-four members of the church at the close of this ministry.

Mr. Evans was a native of Pennsylvania, and was graduated at Princeton College, 1772. He was ordained chaplain in the United States army at Philadelphia in 1776. He resigned his pastorate July 1, 1797, but resided in town till his death, at the age of sixty years, March 9, 1807.

The church, without delay, chose to the pastorate Rev. Asa McFarland, and the town concurring in the choice, he was installed March 7, 1798.

The growth of the church was, from this time, rapid and steady. Seasons of deep religious interest blessed it, and four hundred and twenty-nine were added to the membership. His ministry continued twenty-seven years and closed March 23, 1825.

Rev. Asa McFarland, D.D., was born in Worcester, Mass., April 19, 1769. He was graduated at Dartmouth College in 1793. He died, by paralysis, Sunday morning, February 18, 1827, in the fifty-eighth year of his age. He possessed a vigorous mind, was sound in judgment and diligent in action. His personal character and position secured to him a wide influence in the State, and eighteen discourses, delivered by him on public occasions, were published.

The council which dismissed Dr. McFarland, March 23, 1825, installed as his successor Rev. Nathaniel Bouton. Bible classes and Sunday-schools were organized in different parts of the town, and the assembly of the people in the single place of worship was large and united in spirit.

In connection with the meeting of the General Association of New Hampshire in 1831, a deep work of grace began. Soon the whole people felt its power and more than a hundred were added to the church. In the following years "protracted meetings" were held and always useful. Large accessions were made in 1834, 1836, 1842 and 1843. During the last ten years of Dr. Bouton's ministry seven hundred and seventy-two were added to the church.

For years the church grew with the town, but in 1833 it was called to a new experience. The very prosperity and growth of the town, the religious habits of the people, the great spiritual harvests that had been gathered made necessary the provision of new and other accommodations for worship.

The residents of the West Parish, living on an average nearly five miles from the meeting-house, decided that they ought to seek greater conveniences for worship and build a house unto the Lord. A house was built and eighty-eight members of this church were dismissed and organized into the West Parish Church, April 22, 1833.

The old house was soon full again and the church membership five hundred and thirty-nine. The village growing towards the south, the brethren thus located erected a church edifice and sixty-seven members were dismissed. Bearing with them letters and the love and prayer of the mother-church, these were organized into the South Church February 1, 1837.

March 30, 1842, forty-four members having been dismissed, were organized into the East Church.

All these were dismissed and the churches organized, prompted by love to Christ and His cause, and the mother-church gave many of her devoted and useful members with regret at the parting, but every one with her blessing. True were the words of the pastor, that "the church history of New England does not furnish a parallel to this experience of three churches going out from a single church within ten years without so much as a ripple of discord."

Besides these losses, a large number was dismissed to the churches of other denominations which were organized here, and thus began to be realized the change that had come over the community, as from one great congregation, gathered weekly at the same place from all parts of the town, there were now different congregations, and the people were no longer one assembly in the delightful service of worship. All this had affected the strength and relations of the church, but in harmony and under the favor of God it went on prospering and continued to be a positive and aggressive power for good.

Rev. Dr. Bouton resigned his pastorate at his forty-second anniversary, March 23, 1867. He did this under the conviction that the changes in the people and in all about the church might be met best by a change in its ministry, and that he might accept another office. His love to the people, as their love to him, was unabated. Few men have been permitted to fill a pastorate so happy and useful as was this; few have transmitted one to a successor under such a wealth of affection as, from this whole city, had been won by the years of faithful Christian labor.

Rev. Nathaniel Bouton, a native of Norwalk, Conn., was graduated at Yale College in 1821. Not only was he a faithful minister, but a citizen of valued influence, who bore for more than a generation an active part in all that advanced the weal of the people, both at home and abroad.

He was a friend of learning and its institutions, and performed an amount of intellectual work that alone would have marked his long life as busy. Thirty-four of his sermons and addresses were published, and many articles written for periodicals. In 1856 he published the "History of Concord." Five other volumes are from his pen. He was appointed to the office of State historian in 1866. To the duties of this office he devoted himself with fidelity and zeal for eleven years, and compiled ten volumes of the Provincial and State Papers.

In the ecclesiastical bodies of the State and the benevolent organizations of the land he bore an active part. Industry, fidelity, system were his. With the completion of his historical work his labor seemed done. He attended church service on the fifty-third anniversary of his settlement, but was unable to preach, as had been his annual custom. He died June 6, 1878, aged seventy-nine years.

Soon after the resignation of Dr. Bouton a call to this pastorate was extended to Rev. Franklin D. Ayer, a native of St. Johnsbury, Vt., a graduate of Dartmouth College, 1856, and of Andover Theological Seminary, 1859. He was installed pastor by the council that dismissed Rev. N. Bouton, D.D., September 12, 1867.

The church, so long used to the ways of the venerable pastor, welcomed the new one, and have labored unitedly with him. The church has been blessed with seasons of revival, and during the present pastorate two hundred have been added to the church, making the total number uniting to the present time, one thousand six hundred and fifty-three.

The one hundred and fiftieth anniversary was observed November 18, 1880. Historical Discourse, by Rev. F. D. Ayer; History and Description of our Four Meeting-Houses, by Hon. Joseph B. Walker; History of the Sunday-School, by John C. Thorn; History of Music, by William G. Carter, M.D.

This church has taken a positive and decided part in all the great moral reforms of the past years. It has lived in peace at home, in hearty fellowship and co-operation with churches of other denominations, and has exerted, both in this community and the State, a controlling influence. From its location, its pastors and its efficient membership have had much to do with the ecclesiastical gatherings and the benevolent societies of the State and the land. It has borne its full share in the great benevolent enterprises of the day, and its contributions have been constant and generous.

It has given to benevolent objects during the past fifty years $48,000, for the support of worship not less than $85,000, and more than $80,000 for houses of worship and parsonage.

The Sunday-school was organized in 1818, and has always been well attended.

The houses of worship demand a separate notice. The first meeting-house was built of logs in 1727, and was occupied twenty-seven years. The second was that so long known as the "Old North." The main body of the house was built in 1751. In 1783 it was completed with porches and spire, and in 1802 enlarged so as to furnish sittings for twelve hundred people, and a bell was placed in the tower. Central in its location, it was for a long time the only place for public worship in town, and was used by this church for ninety years. It served the State also. In this house the Convention of 1778 met "to form a permanent plan of government for the State." The first time the Legislature met in Concord, March 13, 1782, it assembled in this house, and not less than fifteen sessions of the General Court was held here. Here, with religious services, in 1784, the new State Constitution was first introduced; and here, too, in June, 1788, the Federal Constitution was adopted, by which New Hampshire became one of the States of the Union. This being the ninth State to adopt the Constitution, that vote made it binding upon the United States. Many of the political gatherings, historic in the State, were held in this house. After another church was built, 1842, this was used by the Methodist Biblical Institute till 1866. When it was destroyed by fire, on the night of November 28, 1870, there passed from sight the church building which had associated with it more of marked and precious history than with any other in the State.

As the church was about leaving the "Old North" as a house of worship, it was voted to invite all the churches formed from this to unite in a special religious service. These farewell services were held Thursday and Friday, October 27 and 28, 1842. On Friday afternoon, after a sermon by the pastor, about five hundred and fifty communicants of the four churches sat down at the table of the Lord. "It was a season of tender and affectionate interest. Many wept at the thought of separation from the place where they and their fathers had worshiped."

So happy was the effect of this meeting that the next year one of like character was held in the New North Church on November 18th. Since that time an annual meeting of the Congregational Churches in Concord has been held, and the meetings have been precious seasons of Christian union and fellowship.

The third house of worship, situated on the corner of Main and Washington Streets, was dedicated November 23, 1842. It was enlarged in 1848, and destroyed by fire June 29, 1873. A chapel was erected in 1858, and enlarged in 1868.

The fourth and present house of worship was erected on the site of the third, and dedicated March 1, 1876. It was paid for as built, and is a beautiful and commodious church building. The total cost of it was $50,883.36. A new chapel, connecting with the church, was completed and opened with appropriate services January 20, 1884.

In grateful memory of the relation of his parents and family to this church, William Abbott, Esq., gave two thousand five hundred dollars towards the erection of this building, which is called "Abbott Memorial Chapel," and the people promptly added to this sum five thousand dollars more, which completed it.

The present officers of the church are: Pastor, Rev. Franklin D. Ayer, installed September 12, 1867; Deacons, John Ballard, Edward A. Moulton, Andrew S. Smith, Robert G. Morrison.

The things to be noted in this history of more than one hundred and fifty years are: 1. That there have been but five pastors, and that all but the surviving one have died and been buried among this people. The church has not been without a pastor for an hour since 1798. 2. The church has lived in peace and grown. It has never had a serious misunderstanding or called for the advice of council on account of difficulty. It has called but one council for sixty years. 3. It has paid its bills as it went on, and kept free from debt. 4. "The Lord hath been mindful of us."

South Congregational Church.—The first meeting of individuals for the purpose of forming a religious society was held at the house of Mr. Asaph Evans, May 9, 1835. Samuel Fletcher was chairman and Amos Wood secretary. At this meeting a committee was appointed, who purchased a lot of land at the corner of Main and Pleasant Streets, for twelve hundred dollars, as the site for a meeting-house. At an adjourned meeting it was voted to form a religious body, to be known as the "South Congregational Society." Also a constitution and by-laws had been prepared, and a committee of seven had been procured, who were to build the church edifice. On the 1st day of August, 1835, the constitution and by-laws were adopted, and thirty names were signed thereto as members of the new society.

In the summer of 1836 a new church building was erected on the lot purchased for that purpose by the committee of seven. It was of wood, seventy-seven by sixty-four feet, with two stores and a vestry on the first floor, with the church edifice on the second floor, and cost, with the land, about ten thousand dollars. The house was dedicated on the 1st day of February, 1837, in the afternoon. The pews were sold in the afternoon. In the evening of the 1st day of February, 1837, the South Congregational Church was organized with sixty-seven members, all from the First Congregational Church in Concord, as follows:

Thomas Chadbourne, Clarissa (Green) Chadbourne (Thomas), John B. Chandler, Sarah Chandler (Timothy) Ruth Wilson, Chokering (Elizabeth), Mizal Clement (Joshua), Esther W. Currier, Jo H. M. A. H. Foster, J. Wm W. Asaph Parsons, Abner B. Evans (Asaph), Samuel Evans, Sarah Evans (Samuel), Samuel Evans, Jr., Henry Farley, Mary J. L. A. O'Brien, Martha O. Farrand, William Fisk, Margaret C. Fish, Wm. C. Samuel (Ephraim), Nancy B. Fletcher (Samuel), Ruth W. H. (Samuel) M. Fletcher, Daniel H. Lydia French (Theodore), Harriet (Samuel) M. French, George Hutchins, Sarah B. (Trickett) Hutchins (George), J. H. M. (William) Child (M. H. Hand) Davidson, George (George) (M. H. Hand) Davidson, David Kimball, Elizabeth L. Kimball, (David), Mary Ann Kimball, Emily A. Low (Joseph), Grace G. Low (William), Clarissa J. (Chase) McFarland (Asa), Mary Mills (Charles), Emily Moore (J. W.), Asa Merrill, John Niles, Olive Niles (John), Betsy Robinson (Osgood) Davids, Caleb Parker, Abigail D. Parker (Caleb), Lucy E. Johnson (Josiah), Mary G. Robinson, Benjamin Rolfe, Sarah H. Sargent (Polly) Parker, Samuel Shute, M. H. Tenney (David), Rowell W. Turner, Linah Tuttle, Hannah S. Tuttle (Elijah), Zerviah Tuttle (Joseph), Mary J. (Tuttle) Tarlton (John), Sarah S. Tuttle, Nathaniel G. Upham, Eliza W. (Barnabas) Upham (Nathaniel G.), Hannah Upham (Ephraim), Philip Watson, Mary W. Watson (Philip), Susan Weeks (John), James Weeks, Mary L. Weeks (James), Sarah S. Wilson (Thomas), Amos Wood, Louisa W. Wood (Amos).

In March, 1837, the church and society extended a call to Rev. Daniel J. Noyes, then tutor in Dartmouth College, to become pastor. This invitation was accepted, and Mr. Noyes, a graduate of Dartmouth and of Andover Theological Seminary, was ordained and installed May 3, 1837,—sermon by Rev. Dr. Bouton, of the North Church. Mr. Noyes had a very successful pastorate of twelve and a half years, to November, 1849, when he resigned to accept a professorship in Dartmouth College.

Rev. Henry E. Parker, of Keene, who was then preaching at Eastport, Me., commenced his pastorate in April, 1850, but was not installed until May 14, 1851,—sermon by Rev. Nathan Lord, D.D., president of Dartmouth College. In 1857 the meeting-house was repaired and improved, but in 1859 (June 12th) it was totally consumed by fire, with no insurance. Public services were held in Phoenix Hall until November, 1860. After much discussion, the society purchased the property on Pleasant Street, many years occupied by the Hon. William A. Kent, as the site for their new house of worship. A building committee was appointed, and work was commenced on the foundations in the fall of 1859. The corner-stone was laid, with appropriate exercises, May 3, 1860, and the house was completed and dedicated November 27, 1860. The house, land, furnaces, stoves and bell cost twenty-four thousand five hundred and forty-five dollars. Mr. Parker's pastorate of nearly sixteen years was attended by the most salutary results. He had leave of absence on two occasions,—from June, 1861, to August, 1862, when he was chaplain of the Second New Hampshire Volunteers, and from September, 1865, to February, 1866, when he went on a European excursion. He resigned while abroad, and a council held in March, 1866, after his return, dissolved his relation with the church and society.

There was no installed pastor of the church from March, 1866, to January, 1869. Rev. William F. V. Bartlett, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was called, and accepted conditionally; but his health failing, he was not installed, though he preached for more than a year, up to May, 1867. In 1868 an invitation was extended to Rev. Mr. Hamilton, of North Andover, Mass., and a little later to Rev. John V. Hilton, of North Bridgewater, Mass., both of whom declined.

But the society was not inactive in the mean time. The house of worship, as first constructed, had no galleries. In 1867 all the slips were occupied, and there seemed to be a call for more room. To provide this additional space, the plan of erecting galleries was suggested. The consent of the society being obtained, galleries containing forty slips were built by twenty-five gentlemen, members of the society known as the Gallery Association. There was no organ in the church until 1868, but in the summer of that year the society purchased the one now used, at an expense of four thousand dollars. About twelve hundred dollars more was expended in repairs and improvements on the house and chapel.

In December, 1868, the church and society extended a call to Rev. Silas L. Blake, of Pepperell, Mass., to become pastor. This call was accepted, and the services of the pastor-elect commenced the first Sabbath of January, 1869. He was installed on the 27th of the same month, the sermon being delivered by the Rev. Professor Park, of Andover Theological Seminary. Mr. Blake's pastorate of nearly nine years proved very successful. Sunday, February 4, 1877, was observed as the fortieth anniversary of the formation of the church. In the morning the pastor preached a sermon giving an historical sketch of the material growth and prosperity of the church and society, and in the afternoon he gave a history of the spiritual growth and progress of the church during these forty years. In the morning he was assisted by Rev. Dr. Noyes, of Hanover, the first pastor, and Rev. Dr. Bouton, of Concord; and in the afternoon Rev. Mr. Ayer, of the North Church, Concord, was also present, and assisted. In the evening Dr. Noyes and Dr. Bouton occupied the time in most interesting and profitable personal reminiscences. The house was crowded, and the occasion was one of great interest. In the fall of 1877 Mr. Blake, having received a call to become pastor of a church in Cleveland, Ohio, resigned, and he was dismissed by council October 14, 1877.

Rev. Dr. Wallace, of Manchester, was employed to preach regularly in the church for some six months after Mr. Blake's departure, and continued until another pastor was called. At the close of his services the church passed resolutions expressive of their deep appreciation of his faithful services, and of their affectionate personal regard.

In the spring of 1878 the church and society invited the Rev. Charles E. Harrington, of Lancaster, N. H., to become their pastor, which call was accepted. He began his labors in March, and was installed by council April 18, 1878, Professor William M. Barbour, D.D., of Yale College, preaching the sermon.

April 19, 1882, Brother Franklin Evans gave the church two hundred dollars "as a nucleus for a fund" to aid the needy members of the church and congregation. This was in memory of his late wife, Mrs. Sarah E. Evans. The church took action on this subject, and the result was that a society was formed of the members of the church, known as the South Church Relief Society, for the purpose of accumulating a fund, the income of which should be applied to the aforesaid charitable object.

Mr. Harrington's pastorate, although short, was a profitable one. He resigned his charge as pastor, and was dismissed by council August 31, 1882.

Rev. William H. Hubbard, of Merrimack, Mass., was called to be pastor in the spring of 1883, which call was accepted, and he was installed June 4, 1883; Rev. William J. Tucker, D.D., of Andover Theological Seminary, preaching the sermon. His resignation has been accepted to take effect September 30, 1885.

In October, 1883, the National Council of Congregational Churches for the United States was held in the South Congregational Church in Concord, the North Church uniting in making the arrangements and in entertaining the delegates. The council continued nearly a week. The meetings, day and evening, were well attended, and were very interesting and profitable.

The interest of the Gallery Association has now been purchased by the society, so that now the society owns all those pews, and many others in the body of the house.

For nearly twenty years past the pew-holders have voted to assess a tax upon the pews to defray the larger part of the expense of supporting the gospel, but at their annual meeting in January, 1885, they refused to assess any tax upon the pews, so that hereafter all moneys for the support of the gospel must be raised by subscription until some better way can be devised.

Present membership of church, three hundred and eighty-four.

DEACONS.

Samuel Fletcher, elected May 25, 1847
 John Niles, elected May 25, 1847.
 Amos Wood, elected August 15, 1849.
 David Kimball, elected March 3, 1842.
 Epps Burnham, elected August 31, 1843.
 Nathaniel Evans, elected August 31, 1843.
 Asa McFarland, elected August 31, 1844.
 Caleb Parker, elected August 31, 1845.
 Joseph French, elected July 18, 1849.
 George B. Chandler, elected November 4, 1852.
 Greenough McQuestion, elected October 29, 1857.
 Levi Jaseon, elected December 31, 1857.
 Hays P. Kelling, elected December 31, 1867.
 George G. Sanborn, elected December 29, 1864.
 William H. Allison, elected July 5, 1872.
 Charles W. Harvey, elected July 5, 1872.
 Charles Kimball, elected January 28, 1875.
 Albert S. Hammond, elected May 5, 1876.
 Frank Colton, elected January 31, 1879.
 Henry A. Mann, elected January 25, 1884.
 William A. Stone, elected February 8, 1884.

The South Congregational Church, Concord, has sustained a Mission Sunday-school near Richardson's Mills, about five miles east of the city, since 1870, a period of fifteen years, contributing some one hundred dollars per year, besides supplying them with teachers and a superintendent. It is called the Memorial Sabbath-School. This school is in a prosperous condition, having an average of about one hundred members. There is a Union Church connected with this Sabbath-school, which was formed some ten or twelve years ago. The church has always been small, and numbers only about from twelve to fifteen members.

Congregational Church, East Concord.—This church was organized March 30, 1842, with forty-two members. Its history is thus related by Dr. Bouton:

In the year 1811 a new house for public worship was erected on the east side of the Merrimack River, principally by members of the First Congregational Church and Society there residing. In March, 1842, a request was presented to the First Church, signed by forty-four members residing in that part of the town, requesting letters of dismission and recommendation, for the purpose of being organized into a new church, which request was granted. The East Congregational Church was organized by a council of neighboring churches on the 30th of March, 1842, and Rev. Timothy Morgan, from the Theological Seminary at Gilmanton, was engaged to supply the pulpit. Mr. Morgan continued his labors about a year. Rev. Hiram Freeman was next invited to settle, and was ordained September 27, 1843, and was dismissed in June, 1845. March 24, 1847, Rev. Winthrop Fifield was installed pastor. Mr. Fifield continued his services about three years. June 25, 1851, Rev. Henry A. Kendall was installed pastor, who continued until May 1, 1858. His successors as pastors and acting pastors have been as follows: Revs. E. O. Jones, A. O. Baker, Norton Smith, George Smith, H. R. Hawes, A. Burnham, W. G. Schoppe, C. L. Tappan, A. F. Dannels and James T. Pyke. The latter was installed pastor October 16, 1874.

Congregational Church, West Concord.—The first church edifice was completed and dedicated January 15, 1833. The building was of wood, sixty-three by forty-three feet, with a projection of three feet in front, and cost two thousand dollars.

The formal organization of the church occurred April 22, 1833, with eighty-nine members dismissed from the North Congregational Church for the purpose. On the same day Rev. Asa P. Tenney was installed pastor and so continued until his death, March 1, 1867, a term of thirty-three years and eight months. During his pastorate three hundred and eleven were added to the church. His salary ever remained at four hundred and fifty dollars per year. After the death of Mr. Tenney the pulpit was supplied for one year by Rev. Dr. Bouton.

Mr. Hiram B. Putnam supplied the pulpit from August 9, 1868; was installed October 28, 1868; resigned and dismissed December 15, 1873.

Rev. Irving D. Adkinson supplied the pulpit from March 1, 1874; was installed May 6, 1874, and continued to his death, February 25, 1875.

Mr. Charles W. Cobwell supplied the pulpit from January 1, 1875, and was installed September 22, 1875; installed February 28, 1877; dismissed April, 1879, and during his pastorate fifty-seven were added to the church.

Rev. Cyrus M. Perry supplied the pulpit as acting pastor from July, 1879, to July, 1882.

Mr. Charles B. Strong was ordained as pastor September 6, 1882; resigned July 13, 1884, and dismissed March 30, 1885.

The church is at present (April, 1885) supplied by C. H. Roper, of Andover Theological Seminary.

DEACONS.—Abiel Rolfe, from 1833 until his death, in 1840; held the same office in North Church previously, from 1811 to 1833. Ira Rowell, from 1833 to 1875; resigned on account of extreme feebleness; died 1876; held same office in North Church previously, from 1829 to 1833. H. Rummels, from 1840 until his death, in 1859. From 1859 until 1875, Deacon Rowell was the only deacon. Stephen Carleton, from 1876 until his death, in 1884. Edward S. Barrett, from 1876 to present time. Cyrus Rummels, from 1876 to present time.

This first church was burned September 21, 1879, after having been thoroughly repaired, at a cost of fifteen hundred dollars. A new church was immediately commenced, built of granite and cost fifteen thousand dollars, and was dedicated June 14, 1871.

Penacook Congregational Church.—The Congregational Church in Penacook was organized November 6, 1850. Rev. Mr. Knight and other ministers were employed as preachers till 1857, when Rev. Albert William Fiske was installed pastor May 20th, and remained in that relation till October 16th, 1836.

The second pastor, Rev. William R. Jewett, was installed September 16, 1863, and dismissed September 10, 1874.

The third pastor, Rev. Marvin D. Bisbee, was installed September 10, 1874; dismissed April 10, 1877.

Rev. John H. Larry was installed December 21, 1882; dismissed May 15, 1883.

In 1876, Hon. John Kimball and Benjamin A. Kimball presented a bell to this church, which bears the following inscription:

"MEMORIAL BELL:
PRESENTED TO
THE CONGREGATIONAL SOCIETY
IN FERRISBURGH, N. H.,
JULY 4TH, 1876,
BY JOHN AND BENJAMIN AMES KIMBALL, SONS OF
THE LATE BENJAMIN KIMBALL OF BOSCAWEN.
Let him that hearth sing, Come."

Benjamin Kimball, whose name is inscribed thereon, was a native of Canterbury, born December 27, 1794, and remaining most of the time on the old homestead, with his father, until he was about twenty-five years old. He resided for a time in Northfield, whence, in the spring of 1824, he removed with his family to Boscawen, and settled on High Street.

Being inclined to mechanical rather than agricultural pursuits, and having made the acquaintance of Mr. John Clark—sometimes called "Boston John"—while at work on the new State-House in Concord, and other places, resolved to abandon his farm, and devote more of his time to mechanical labor. In 1824 he was employed by the late Nathaniel Rolfe to build a saw-mill on the site now occupied by Mr. Blanchard's Excelsior Factory, which was the only saw-mill ever erected on that spot.

It was here that he became acquainted with, and saw the advantages of, the great water-power on the Contoocook River. His means were small, but after the failure of Mr. Varney, who had commenced to improve the water-power here by building the upper dam, he sold his farm, and in the winter of 1829-30 bought of Hon. Jeremiah Mason, agent for the United States Bank, the property owned by Mr. Varney, which comprised all the water-power formerly and now owned by the Contoocook Company, the farm of Captain John Sawyer and the dwelling-house and lands now owned by the heirs of the late Ephraim Plummer and others.

He removed here with his family in November, 1830, and commenced immediately to make further improvement of the water-power by erecting a dam and building a grist-mill, which was successfully accomplished at the close of the next year. He was a member of the Congregational Church at Boscawen Plain, and always took an active part in all that was essential to the general and religious welfare of the town. He died July 21, 1834, aged thirty-nine.

Unitarian Church.—Early in the year 1827 several citizens of the town, who were dissatisfied with the Calvinistic doctrine preached in the churches of the place, met together, and, after consultation with each other, on the 4th day of April of that year, associated themselves together, agreeably to the laws of the State, under the name and title of the Second Congregational Society in Concord.

The formal organization took place, as we learn from the records, on the 8th day of August, 1827, at which time Richard Bartlett, Moses Eastman, William Kent, Sampson Bullard, Stephen Brown, John Leach, Woodbury Brown, William M. Virgin, Elijah Mansur, Joseph Manahan, Washington Williams, James Wilcomb, Joseph C. West, Timothy Chandler, Benjamin Grover and William Francis met at the court-room in the old town-house, and organized by the election of Major Timothy Chandler as chairman, and William Kent clerk. Moses Eastman, Richard Bartlett and Jacob B. Moore were chosen a committee to prepare by-laws and regulations for the society, and report at some subsequent meeting.

¹ Voted unanimously, That this society assume the powers and privileges of a corporation, under and pursuant to an act of the Legislature, passed May 3, 1827, entitled "An act empowering corporations and associations to assume and exercise corporate powers."

The clerk was directed to give public notice of the formation of the society, in the usual form. At the adjourned meeting, held August 25, 1827, a code of by-laws was reported by the committee chosen to prepare them, and accepted. At an adjourned meeting, held September 4, 1827, Moses Eastman, William Kent and Stephen Brown were elected a prudential committee, and Captain Jeremiah Pritchard treasurer. Thus the organization of the society was completed.

It being deemed desirable to secure preaching of the liberal faith so far as the means of the society would allow, Colonel William Kent visited Portsmouth, and arranged with Rev. Dr. Parker, of that place, to come to Concord and preach two Sundays during the session of the Legislature in June. The use of the Representatives' Hall was secured for the services, and there, on the 17th day of June, 1827, was preached the first professedly Unitarian sermon ever delivered in Concord. The services (says Colonel Kent) were highly appreciated, and the audience was highly respectable in numbers. Dr. Parker preached at the same place on the following Sabbath.

A wish being expressed to hear more of the liberal preaching, Colonel Kent visited Boston, and secured the services of several pastors of Unitarian Churches in that city and the adjacent towns for a Sunday each, the court-room being secured as a place of meeting. Rev. Dr. Barrett, of Boston, commenced under this arrangement July 8, 1827, and was followed by Rev. Messrs. Gannett, Pierpont, Tuckerman, Whitman and Ware. Messrs. Christopher T. Thayer, Ralph Waldo Emerson and Moses G. Thomas then preached with reference to settlement.

April 3, 1828, the society voted to raise three hundred dollars, by tax on the members, for the support of preaching the ensuing year. Rev. Moses G. Thomas was ordained pastor February 25, 1829. On the same day, previous to the ordination, a church consisting of eight members was formed.

A minister having been secured, the want of a permanent place of worship was felt. To encourage the effort to erect a church, Hon. William A. Kent proposed, if a sum of money sufficient for its erection could be raised, to donate a piece of land to the society on which to build it.

After a thorough canvass, three thousand dollars, just one-half of the amount needed, was secured,—a liberal subscription for those times in a society few in numbers and of limited pecuniary means. In this emergency, Colonel William Kent was dispatched to Boston to solicit aid from the wealthy friends of the cause in that place. Spending a fortnight in the work, he succeeded, to his great satisfaction, in raising the amount required. This being done, measures were at once adopted to secure the accomplishment of the object so much desired.

¹ Condensed from an able historical address prepared by David F. Secomb.

John Leach, Esq., a member of the society, was employed as master-builder, and under his direction the work went rapidly forward. The cornerstone was laid May 2, 1829, with appropriate services, and on the 11th of November following the church was dedicated "to the worship of the one living and true God." On this occasion the introductory prayer was offered by Rev. Ralph Waldo Emerson, the dedicatory prayer by Rev. Mr. Parkman, and a discourse was delivered by the pastor, Rev. Moses G. Thomas.

The house thus dedicated stood on the spot occupied by the present edifice. After doing service as a place of religious worship for the space of nearly twenty-five years, it was destroyed by fire on the evening of November 2, 1854.

Measures were at once taken to replace the church edifice. Plans having been procured, the services of Henry M. Moore, as builder, were secured. The foundation was laid under the direction of Luther Roby, Esq., and the work went forward. In eighteen months, lacking one day, from the time of the fire, the new house was completed and dedicated.

January 14, 1831. Voted, That the sum of seven hundred dollars annually be raised by the society for the next five years."

April 1, 1831, Jefferson Noyes was chosen librarian.

April 4, 1837, Simon Brown, since Lieutenant-Governor of Massachusetts, was elected clerk of the society, in place of Colonel William Kent, who had filled the office from its first organization. Mr. Brown left town shortly after, and at the annual meeting, held in April, 1838, Colonel Kent was again elected, serving until April 15, 1841. At the same meeting, Voted, That R. H. Sherburne be requested to take a seat in the gallery a few Sundays, and apply a corrective to the boys." Voted, That Mr. Thomas be released from his duties to the society for the term of ten Sabbaths for the year 1837, at such time as he may desire, and that the society supply the desk during said term."

Mr. Thomas resigned January 28, 1841.

May 15, 1841.—At a special meeting held this day, Voted, That the society are so well pleased with Rev. Mr. Tilden, of Norton, Mass., as a preacher, as to engage him to supply the desk for three or six months;" and the standing committee were directed to visit him and secure his services for the coming month of June.

April 1, 1845, an article having appeared in the Constitutional Journal, entitled "Parkerism in Concord," reflecting somewhat severely on the opinions held and preached by Mr. Tilden, a series of resolutions expressing the confidence of the society in him as a preacher was introduced by Lewis Downing, Esq., and passed by a unanimous vote.

April 25, 1845, the prudential committee were authorized to procure the services of Rev. Mr. Tilden to supply the desk the 1st of July next.

April 7, 1846, Mr. Tilden having expressed a wish to terminate his connection with the society at the end of his present engagement, the society, believing that a misapprehension existed on his part in regard to the true state of feeling existing towards him, Voted unanimously, that it is their earnest desire that his resignation be withdrawn, and that he continue with them for the coming year."

Rev. Mr. Tilden's services as pastor, which commenced in 1841, of the society closed July 1, 1847. He was never formally installed.

From this time forward, for more than two years, the desk was filled by various clergymen, Rev. Mr. Putnam officiating for several months, by temporary engagements.

Mr. Augustus Woodbury was ordained August 1, 1849.

July 27, 1851, Voted, That an alteration be made in the gallery;" and a committee was appointed to raise the money necessary to defray the expense of the same. At the same time, Voted, That Mr. Woodbury's salary be increased to eight hundred dollars per annum." Mr. Woodbury's connection with the society closed August 1, 1853.

Rev. Artemas B. Muzzey was installed March 29, 1854. The pastorate of Mr. Muzzey occurred during a time of trial to the society,—the destruction of the church edifice in the month of November following his settlement, and the building of the present one taxing their resources severely. But in all their efforts they met with the cheerful and hearty co-operation of the pastor and the members of his family, whose services deserve a lasting and grateful remembrance.

October 18, 1857, the prudential committee were authorized to invite Mr. Silas Farrington to preach to the society for one year; and the invitation being accepted, he was ordained early in the month of December following.

October 3, 1858, Mr. Farrington was requested to continue his services another year.

October 5, 1858, a legacy left the society by the late Timothy Walker, Esq., of twenty-one shares of stock in the Northern Railroad corporation, was accepted, and Benjamin Grover was appointed agent to receive and manage the same.

April 25, 1859, the society voted that the treasurer be directed to sell and convey the railroad stock left the society by the late Timothy Walker, Esq., and invest the proceeds in the purchase of pews numbered 21, 23, 39, 56, 63, 65, 67, 69, 71 and 73, in the church, the same to be owned by the society, and the rents received therefor to be appropriated annually to the support of preaching, agreeably to the provisions of the will of Mr. Walker.

December 25, 1859, Mr. Farrington was requested to continue as pastor another year.

November 25, 1860, Mr. Farrington resigned the office of pastor, the resignation to take effect January 1, 1861, and his resignation was accepted by the society at a meeting held December 2, 1860.

For some time after the withdrawal of Mr. Farrington the desk was filled by such supplies as could be obtained, Rev. Liberty Billings among the number, who, without formal installation, officiated as minister for about two years, until, having received an appointment as chaplain in the Fourth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, he resigned, and the desk was again left to be supplied by candidates.

December 27, 1863, Rev. T. J. Mumford received an invitation to take the pastoral charge, which he declined.

February 7, 1864, Rev. Junius L. Hatch was invited to become the minister of the society, which invitation was accepted, and he was installed in the month of June following.

June 24, 1865, difficulties having arisen between Mr. Hatch and the society, it was voted that the relation existing between them be at once terminated, and the committee were directed to notify the minister of this action of the society.

January 23, 1866, the society voted that Rev. J. F. Lovering be invited to become their pastor, which invitation he accepted. The formal services of installation took place February 27, 1866.

Mr. Lovering's labors with the society closed April 1, 1875, after having continued nine years. At that time the society voted him the use of the parsonage for the term of three months, free of rent. The resignation of Mr. Lovering opened the way for the employment of temporary supplies and candidates for a long time.

January 24, 1876, "Voted, That the committee be instructed to extend an invitation to Rev. W. G. Todd to become the pastor for one year." The call was accepted, and Mr. Todd entered upon the duties of his office without any formal introduction. During this season the church was repainted, and some necessary repairs were made.

March 1, 1877, Mr. Todd retired.

November 24, 1877, an invitation was extended to Rev. Samuel C. Beane, of Salem, Mass., to assume the pastoral care of the society. The invitation was accepted, and the services of installation took place January 9, 1878, and he is the present pastor.

The church organized February 25, 1829, and received gradual accessions to the number of its members, from the first of whom, Miss Ellen Louisa Tucker, afterwards Mrs. Ralph Waldo Emerson, it received a present of a set of vessels for the communion service.

On the 19th day of July, 1829, the first communion service was observed, prior to which, as we learn from the records, Brother William Kent was elected deacon, and accepted the office. Although his resignation was once offered, its acceptance was refused by the church, and he remains to this day its senior deacon. His services in the formation of the society and church entitle him to the grateful regard of the present members.

A Sunday-school connected with the society was organized by Colonel William Kent and others prior to the building of the first church edifice. Colonel Kent was for a long time its superintendent.

The Concord Female Benevolent Association was formed by ladies of the society, January 5, 1835, for the purpose of doing something towards relieving the wants and multiplying the comforts of the indigent and suffering members of the community.

Of the good done by these organizations, those who have been taught, and those whose wants have been relieved by them, can bear witness. Of the ladies who planned them, and by whose exertions they have been sustained, it may be truly said, their works praise them.

By the will of Lewis Downing, Esq., dated December 27, 1872, the society after his death became, after deducting some small legacies, the recipient of one-sixth of the income of his estate annually, the same to be appropriated to the support of the preaching of the Christian religion as taught by the late Dr. Channing,—the amount of the legacy being increased from time to time as the deaths of his children should occur, until at last the society should receive the income of two-thirds of the estate; the balance, over two thousand dollars annually, to be devoted to the support of a minister-at-large of the Channing-Unitarian faith, and in aiding and strengthening feeble societies of that faith in the State of New Hampshire.

St. Paul's Church.—The first meeting of individuals friendly to the organization of the Protestant Episcopal Society was held at the house of Albe Cady, on the 5th of January, 1817. At this meeting the basis of an organization was presented by a committee appointed for the purpose, which was subscribed by thirteen gentlemen, among whom were the Hon. Samuel Green, Albe Cady, the Hon. Isaac Hill and John West, Jr. They gave the organization the name of St. Thomas' Chapel. On the 24th of March, 1818, Rev. Charles Burroughs was chosen rector. It does not appear whether or not Mr. Burroughs accepted the rectorship. He, however, frequently officiated here, giving to the new parish whatever of service he could bestow in connection with his ministrations in St. John's Church, Portsmouth, of which he was rector, and in many ways, by advice and influence, contributed greatly to encourage and sustain the infant parish in Concord.

During 1817 and the three succeeding years the Rev. Messrs. Andrews, Searle, Herbert and Marshall held occasional services here, but the greater part of the time the services were conducted by lay readers. In April, 1821, the Rev. John L. Blake was chosen rector, and for more than two years officiated here, at the same time serving St. Andrew's Church, Hopkinton.

¹ Condensed from an historical sketch prepared by Hon. Horace A. Brown, in 1884.

For a part of the first year after the formation of the parish the services were held in Masonic Hall, over the Concord Bank, the present location of the First National Bank. Subsequently the town hall was occupied by the parish as a place of worship for about two years. Afterwards the services were held in a commodious hall, fitted up by Hon. Isaac Hill, in the upper part of a store occupying the present site of the opera-house.

This hall was used during the week by the Rev. Mr. Blake as a school-room.

Several ineffectual attempts were made during these years to build a church. As far back as 1819 a subscription was commenced for this purpose. The cost of the edifice was not to exceed six thousand dollars, and one-half of this sum was subscribed by twelve individuals. In the spring of 1823 the Rev. Mr. Blake resigned the rectorship and removed from town, and for about twelve years services of our church were only occasionally held in Concord, Rev. Moses B. Chase, of Hopkinton, now and then supplying a single service.

It appears that divine worship according to the forms and rites of the Protestant Episcopal Church was conducted here, almost without interruption, from the beginning of 1817 to the spring of 1823, a lay reader being employed when the ministrations of a clergyman could not be procured.

In 1819 a committee on the state of the church in the Diocese of New Hampshire, appointed by the Diocesan Convention, reported thirteen families and ten communicants in this parish. During its continuance as St. Thomas's Chapel the rite of confirmation was administered to seven persons, and there were about twenty baptisms.

On the 13th of July, 1835, St. Paul's parish was organized, and the Rev. Moses B. Chase was chosen rector. Mr. Chase held services once each month in this parish, from May, 1835, to March, 1836, and each Sunday evening during July and August of the latter year. He resided in Hopkinton, and was rector of St. Andrew's Church.

Rev. Petrus S. Ten Broeck became rector in November, 1836. The services at this time were held in the court-house, which occupied the site of the present city hall. At this time there were ten communicants.

In the summer of 1836, John West, a gentleman devotedly attached to the church, set himself about obtaining, by subscriptions and donations, funds to build a church, but had hardly more than made a beginning when sudden death brought his earthly labors to a close, and one of the first offices which the new rector was called upon to discharge in the performance of his sacred duty of consigning to the dust of the grave, was that of this warm and active friend of

The first church edifice¹ was completed near the close of the year 1839, and on the 1st of January, 1840, it was consecrated to the worship of Almighty God by the venerable and beloved Bishop Griswold, bishop of the Eastern Diocese, of which New Hampshire was a part. Bishop Griswold also, on the following day, instituted the Rev. Mr. Ten Broeck rector of the parish.

July 16, 1843, Albe Cady, for many years senior warden of the parish, deceased. Mr. Cady was among the first to move for establishing the church here and labored earnestly and faithfully for its success.

In October, 1844, Rev. Mr. Ten Broeck, on account of failing health, resigned his charge of the parish and removed to Danvers, Mass., where he resided till his decease, in 1849. He was a faithful minister. The number of communicants at the close of his labors in the parish was about forty, as against ten at its commencement.

Rev. Darius R. Brewer succeeded Mr. Ten Broeck, having been elected the 25th of November, 1844. Mr. Brewer reported to the convention, the following June, forty-five communicants, thirty families, and the number of persons attending public worship from one hundred to one hundred and fifty. After two years of faithful and devoted service, he resigned to take charge of Trinity parish, Newport, R. I. He has since died.

Mr. Brewer was succeeded immediately by the Rev. Thomas Leaver, from the Diocese of Rhode Island. Mr. Leaver's ministry in the parish was very brief. He commenced his labors here on the first Sunday in December, 1846, and conducted his last service on the first Sunday in December, 1847. After a severe illness of a few days, he died on the 23d of the same month. During the brief period of his ministry Mr. Leaver proved himself a faithful shepherd, and his death was a deep affliction to the parish.

On the 27th of February, 1848, the Rev. Newton E. Marble, of the Diocese of Massachusetts, was elected to the rectorship, and soon after entered upon its duties. At this date the number of communicants was forty-four, the number of families thirty. During Mr. Marble's ministry, of a little more than nine years, the parish had a steady growth in numbers and a correspondingly widening influence in the community.

Mr. Marble resigned the rectorship of the parish April 1, 1857, and soon after moved to Newtown, Diocese of Connecticut, to assume charge of Trinity parish, which relation he sustained during the remainder of his life. He died about three years since, much beloved by the people of his charge and by every one who knew him.

From Easter, 1857, to Easter, 1858, the parish was without a rector. For the first two months or more of this time the Rev. Dr. Henry A. Coit, either by himself or by the Rev. Francis Chase, his assistant at St. Paul's School, kindly supplied one service on Sundays. For the balance of the year the Rev. Edward Ballard, then residing at Hopkinton, filled the position of minister of the parish, accepting therefor, without stipulation, such compensation as the parish could offer. The ministrations of these clergymen, as well as their helpfulness in many ways, is gratefully remembered by the church people of those days.

¹The building committee consisted of Albe Cady, L. C. Virgil and Hon. Isaac Hill.

Rev. James H. Eames, D.D., entered upon his duties as rector on Easter Day, 1858, and continued until his death, which occurred December 10, 1877. The parish had granted Dr. Eames leave of absence for the winter, and, December 7th, in company with Mrs. Eames, he started from New York for the Bermudas, and died on the 10th of the same month, just as the vessel dropped anchor in the harbor of Hamilton.

Very soon after Dr. Eames began his work here signs of a new and deepening interest in the church's work were visible, and soon it became evident that the little church would not long accommodate the congregation. The following appears on the parish records:

"At a meeting duly notified, and held in the church, May 24, 1858, a committee was appointed, consisting of Rev. J. H. Eames, David Davis, E. Symmes, A. C. Pierce, John M. Hill, William L. Foster and Charles P. Gage, to take into consideration the expediency of enlarging the old church or building a new one, to report at an adjourned meeting to be held in one week."

It was finally decided to build a new church, and the following were appointed a building committee: Ebenezer Symmes, Augustine C. Pierce, George Minot, John M. Hill and Abel Hutchins. Of these gentlemen, John M. Hill survives.

On Wednesday, the 25th day of May, 1859, the corner-stone of the new church was laid. Two excellent addresses were delivered on the occasion,—one by the Rev. Dr. Burroughs, of Portsmouth, the other by Hon. Josiah Minot. Under the watchful supervision of the building committee the new church went on to completion, and on the 15th day of December, 1859, was consecrated to the worship of Almighty God by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Carlton Chase, of this diocese, the Rt. Rev. Bishop Clark, of the Diocese of Rhode Island, preaching the consecration sermon.

The cost of the church and furnishing was about seventeen thousand dollars.

A chime of nine bells was placed in the tower of the church in 1868, through the liberality of members of the parish. Three of these bells were given by the ladies of the parish; the others were personal gifts from John H. Pearson, Mrs. Eliza C. Davis, Edward L. Knowlton, Edward A. Abbott and Mrs. William Butterfield. They were first rung on Easter morning, April 12, 1868.

In the summer of 1877 extensive repairs of the church were made. While these repairs were going on services were held in Rumford Hall, kindly offered by Mr. Franklin Low, junior warden.

It had been arranged, by vote of the vestry previous to the departure of Dr. Eames, that the members of the diocese should have charge of the matter of supplying the services during his absence. This arrangement continued till the 24th of the following April, when, at the annual parish meeting, it was "Voted, That the Rt. Rev. the Bishop of the Diocese be invited to accept the rectorship of St. Paul's parish."

At a subsequent meeting the bishop nominated the Rev. Daniel C. Roberts, of Brandon, Diocese of Vermont, to be vice-rector, and the clerk was directed to notify the bishop that the wardens and vestry approve of the nomination, and that he is desirous to communicate with the Rev. Mr. Roberts accordingly. The Rev. Mr. Roberts, having accepted the vice-rectorship, entered upon its duties in June of the same year.

On the 2d day of December, 1879, the ceremony of unveiling the beautiful window to the memory of the Rev. Dr. Eames, which had been procured by the parish and placed in the front end of the church, was held. John M. Hill, in behalf of the committee appointed to procure the memorial, made an appropriate address and unveiled the window, after which Bishop Niles and the Rev. Mr. Roberts also made addresses.

At a meeting of the wardens and vestry, held November 14, 1882, the subject of a chapel, which had been discussed at the previous annual meeting of the parish, was further considered, and the Hon. Josiah Minot made a proposition that, with money then in the savings-bank belonging to the ladies of the parish, and designed originally for a like purpose, amounting to about $1000, he would agree that a chapel should be built, the cost not to exceed $3000. The wardens voted to accept the offer of Mr. Minot, and the following summer the chapel was completed at a cost of $3,926.86, Mr. Minot contributing $2,233.75; Mr. James R. Hill, for land, $300; Mr. John H. Pearson, for steam-heating, $300; Mr. John M. Hill, for gas-fixtures, etc., $147.50; ladies' fund in savings-bank, $945.61. Other individuals have contributed for settees for the chapel, and recently Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Stevens have contributed a beautiful lectern.

During all these years the parish has had, without stint, the services of members of the congregation in the important department of music. We have avoided, as far as possible, mentioning names, particularly those now living, who have contributed in their several ways to the church's work and worship, and that restraint is upon us now. But they are gratefully remembered by those who have witnessed their faithfulness and profited by their unselfish devotion.

In the latter part of the summer of 1883 a choir of boys was organized, under the direction of Mr. Frank E. Brown. The cost of the necessary changes in the chancel was defrayed by special gifts from generous friends, notably that of Mr. Henri G. Blaisdell, who gave the avails of an entertainment given by him with were Rev. J. G. Adams, now residing in Melrose, Mass., Rev. Thos. J. Whitmore, late editor of the Trumpet, one of the earliest religious papers of the New England Universalists; Rev. Hosea Ballou, Rev. Messrs. N. R. Wight, G. W. Anderson and William Bell.

In 1841 a vigorous attempt was made to sustain regular preaching services all the time, a thing then not easy to do, as there at this time were not many professed Universalists in Concord. Success, however, attended the effort, and Rev. N. R. Wight and Rev. G. W. Anderson supplied the society for one year.

In June, the first Sunday, Rev. Dr. Ryder, now of Chicago, Ill., then a student at the Gymnasium Academy, in Pembroke, preached for the society. Subsequently, and because of the impression then made, Mr. Ryder was settled as permanent pastor. The following article may be regarded as the basis of the society:

"Article 2. The object of this Society shall be the promotion of truth and morality among its members, and also in the world at large, and as the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ is calculated above all truth to inspire the heart with the emotions of benevolence and virtue, this Society shall deem it one of its main objects to support the preaching of the Gospel, according to the society's ability, and to aid in any other practicable manner in spreading a knowledge of it among men."

Among the most active and efficient of the early lay members of the society were S. S. Sweet, who was the society's first moderator; J. C. Danforth, the first clerk; A. B. Currier, Chase Hill, Aaron Carter, W. H. Wyman, J. Fox, Nathaniel White and others. The wives of these gentlemen were equally active and efficient in every good word and work.

December 28, 1843, under the ministry of Rev. Mr. Ryder, the church organization was formed, with about thirty members.

Rev. Ezekiel Dow, for a short time prior to Mr. Ryder's regular pastorate, served the society as a supply. Simultaneously with the organization of the society was a movement to secure the erection of a meeting-house. The first meeting-house was erected on the site of the present church edifice, and completed and dedicated in October, 1842, the dedicatory services occurring October 6th, Rev. Otis A. Skinner, of Boston, preaching the sermon. The new meeting-house cost four thousand dollars. Later, the society outgrowing its church-home, the building was sold to the Free-Will Baptist society, a new brick edifice taking the place of the frame one sold, at a cost of thirty thousand dollars. The clergymen who served the society as supplies and as pastors were Rev. Messrs. N. R. Wight, G. W. Anderson, E. Dow, J. F. Whitherell, Rev. W. H. Ryder (1843, the first pastor), Thompson Barron (1846), John Moore (1850), familiarly known as Father Moore. He was succeeded, in 1855, by his son, J. Hawly Moore, whose pastorate continued for eight years. In order, Rev. A. J. Canfield, 1862; Rev. Rowland Connor, in 1865; Rev. F. E. Kittridge, 1867; Rev. E. R. Sanborn, 1869;

Rev. E. L. Conger, 1873; Rev. A. P. Rein, the present pastor, who began his settlement January, 1881.

In 1841, Mr. and Mrs. Joel C. Danforth organized a Sabbath-school with but six members. The school now has grown to be one of the most efficient in the city.

In 1869, at the time of holding the annual meeting, an important departure was made in the management and membership of the society, ladies then, for the first time, being allowed to become eligible to membership in the parish and society organizations, Mrs. Armenia S. White, wife of Nathaniel White, becoming the first lady member of the prudential committee.

The Universalist society has always been an active and influential factor in the life of Concord, and its pastors, or the most of them, had many friends outside of their immediate parish and church associates. Rev. John Moore, who suddenly died in the street, of heart-disease, was a man highly respected and dearly beloved, and when his funeral was held, the trustees of the Baptist society offered the use of their church edifice in which to hold the funeral services, the auditorium of this church being larger than that of the Universalist Church.

During the anti-slavery agitation, and during the progress of the Rebellion, the friends of this society were loyal friends of the North, and advocates of the rights and helpers of the enslaved and unfortunate. Rev. J. H. Moore took an active part in the work of advocating the rights of the enslaved.

The Universalist society is at present in a most healthy and prosperous condition. The church edifice has just been remodeled at an expense of four thousand dollars, the improvements giving a chapel, a ladies' parlor, kitchen and dining-room and other necessary rooms, all of which have for some time been needed to keep pace with the wants and activities of the society. The parish at present contains many who are active in the commercial and active pursuits of life. Its church and Sunday-school organizations, and its Ladies' Aid Society, incorporated early in the history of the society, as well as its minor bodies, are large, active and efficient.

The First Methodist Episcopal Church.—The first Methodist services in this vicinity were held on the east side of the river as early as 1816. In 1822 the first class was formed on Stickney Hill by Jotham Horton and E. Stickney. March 12, 1825, the first Methodist society in Concord was formed, and among its first members were Stephen Webster, A. Webster, Philbrick Bradley, Timothy Bradley, B. H. Weeks, John Sherburne, James Goodwin, Richard Flanders, John Johnson, John Clough, David Culver and J. Abbott. Meetings were held only occasionally, however, until 1830, when S. Kelley was appointed pastor, who was the first Conference preacher stationed here. He was chaplain of the prison, and received for his services one dollar per week.

In 1821 the first church edifice was erected on the site occupied by the present building. It was dedicated December 1, 1831, and was about forty-two by fifty-four feet in size, with sixty pews. The church has several times been repaired and improved.

The following is a list of the pastors from its organization to the present time: Revs. Samuel Kelley, 1830-31 (D. C. Robinson, 1831, supply); John G. Dow, 1832; George Storrs, 1833-34; S. Hoyt, 1835; J. W. Mowry, 1836; J. M. Fuller, 1837-38; W. H. Hatch, 1839-49; John Jones, 1841-42; C. L. McCurdy, 1843; E. Smith, 1844; C. C. Burr, 1845; E. Peaslee, 1846-47; Charles Adams, 1848-49; F. A. Hews, 1850-51; W. F. Evans, 1852-53; S. Kelley, 1854-55 (Professor S. M. Vail, supply, 1855); S. Beedle, 1856-57; Elisha Adams, 1858-59; O. H. Jasper, 1860; J. H. McCarty, 1861-62; D. P. Leavitt, 1863-65; S. Holman, 1866; E. Adams, 1867-68; E. A. Titus, 1869-70; A. E. Drew, 1871-73; M. W. Prince, 1874; Leon C. Field, 1875-76; O. W. Scott, 1877-78; E. C. Bass, 1879-80; L. C. Field, 1881; J. H. Haines, 1882-84, present (February 26, 1885) incumbent. The present membership is about two hundred and fifty.

Baker Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church.¹—

The organization of a Christian Church in any community is an event worthy of note. The good influences it may exert in the formation of the character of the people in the place where it is located, the elevating power of the pulpit, together with the teachings of a Sunday-school in the giving of correct tone and purpose to the young, will be found salutary in every part of the world; truly radical in its opposition to vice, immorality and sins against the life and property of the individual, and strongly conservative in all things pertaining to faith and doctrine, such a church will materially assist in giving permanence, stability and peace to all.

For several years previous to the organization of Baker Memorial Church it had been manifest to all that something must be done to give additional church facilities to the increasing Methodist element in this city; the old church was small, the vestry accommodations had and insufficient and the location of the church was too far from the centre to accommodate the Methodist families in the south part of the city. Several attempts were made by some of the zealous friends of Methodism to have repairs made,—enlargement of the old house, or a new church built in a more central part of the city. To this end the Rev. Alfred E. Drew, then preacher in charge, by a strenuous effort, obtained a subscription of thirty thousand dollars for a new church, and many felt that relief was at hand. But some of those who opposed the proposed church sought to show that the subscription was only in name, particularly, and so earnest and personal, that the whole scheme failed, and all other efforts in every direction met a like fate. But early in the autumn of 1874 the following agreement was drawn up and circulated among the people:

"We, the undersigned, members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the city of Concord, believing that the cause of Christ and the best interests of Methodism in our city, as well as the pointings of Providence, demand that a new Methodist Society be established in Concord, and in order to test the feelings of our people in some tangible form, we agree that when one hundred or more of the membership of the church now existing, twenty-five of whom shall be adult male members, shall sign this agreement, we will ask for letters of dismission from the first Methodist Episcopal Church for the purpose of forming a new society."

The requisite one hundred was obtained, and on the evening of October 30, 1874, they met in Rumford Hall for the purpose of being organized. At this meeting, Rev. Theodore L. Flood, presiding elder of Concord District, officiated, making some appropriate remarks, setting forth the wishes of Bishop James, after which the people assembled, by a vote, accepted the conditions, and the church organization commenced by the appointment of Maurice W. Prince as preacher in charge, and he appointed Luther P. Durgin class-leader.

Immediately the first Quarterly Conference was held.—Present, Theodore L. Flood, presiding elder; M. W. Prince, preacher in charge; Rev. John W. Merrill, D.D., a superannuated Methodist preacher; and Luther P. Durgin, class-leader. L. P. Durgin was chosen secretary, when the following board of stewards was nominated and confirmed: Rensselaer O. Wright, George W. Marden, Robert Ramsdell, Jacob B. Gage, Henry C. Sanborn, Luther W. Durgin, A. C. Nash, Charles T. Watson, Hinman C. Bailey. The following board of trustees were also nominated and confirmed: Jacob B. Rand, George L. Reed, Daniel Widner, Osmore R. Farrar, Charles H. Russell, Daniel E. Howard, Peter W. Myers, William E. Hood, Timothy R. Elwell. Additional class-leaders, Frederick Ruggles, William S. Davis, Alexander Lane; treasurer and district steward, Henry C. Sanborn; recording steward, George W. Marden and the usual church committees.

At this first meeting it was voted unanimously to take the name of "The Baker Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church," in commemoration of the lamented Bishop Osmon C. Baker. We think it not only proper but important to this history to speak briefly of the life of Bishop Baker. Osmon Cleander Baker was born in Marlow, N. H., July 30, 1812. His father, Isaac Baker, M.D., was eminent in his profession. The bishop entered the academy at Wilbraham at the age of fifteen; Middletown in 1830; was principal of Newbury Seminary; entered the ministry; preached at Rochester and Manchester, and, after one year's service as presiding elder, was made professor at the institute in Concord, N. H. In 1852 he was elected bishop at the session of the General Conference, held in Boston, being the youngest of the Board of Bishops. For nineteen years he filled the office of superintendent in the church. Great in head, good in heart, pure in life, high in position, but humble in spirit, wise in counsel, yet modest and childlike, not given to show or egotism, he was dearly beloved most where he was best known—at home. On Wednesday, December 29, 1871, he quietly fell asleep in Him whom he fully trusted.

And it seemed just, appropriate and timely that a Methodist Church, organized so soon after his decease, in the city where so many years of his life had been spent,—the home of his now bereaved family,—should have the privilege of perpetuating his memory by a memorial church, which, it is hoped, will endure longer than monuments of brass or marble to bless and gladden the world.

It was voted to organize a Ladies' Benevolent Society.

The first public service was held in Phoenix Hall on the Sunday following the organization (November 1st), at 10.30 A.M., and at the close of the morning service all persons desirous of forming a Sunday-school were invited to remain. Rev. M. W. Prince took the chair, and the following persons were elected officers of the school: President, Maurice W. Prince; Superintendent, Luther P. Durgin; Assistant Superintendent and Chorister, Robert Ramsdell; Secretary, Ezra B. Crapo; Treasurer, Rensselaer O. Wright; Librarian, Timothy R. Elwell. The persons present were organized into classes and the work of a Sunday-school begun.

November 30, 1874, a committee was appointed to secure a lot, looking to the building of a church. On the 28th of December of the same year it was voted to secure the lot on the corner of State and Warren Streets,—the same that is now occupied by the chapel and parsonage.

In January, 1876, the church received the offer of the free use of the chapel on Green Street, the property of Theodore H. Ford, Esq., and immediately transferred its place of worship to that house. This was the first of very many helps, counsels and financial assistance received from the same Christian gentleman.

In the spring of 1876 the board of trustees chose a building committee, and proceeded to erect a chapel on the lot on the corner of State and Warren Streets, and on December 21, 1876, the house was dedicated by suitable services, the Rev. Bradford K. Pierce, of Boston, preaching the dedication sermon; and the dedicatory prayer was offered by the venerable Rev. John W. Merrill, D.D., of this city.

Some incidents of encouragement are worthy of mention in connection with the history of this church:

As the stated occasion for the celebration of the Lord's Supper came for the first time, the church was without a communion service, and the Unitarian society, through one of their officers, kindly volunteered the use of theirs; and at the service, members from nearly all the Christian Churches in the city were present, making it truly the Lord's table, to which all that love him were invited. Subsequently J. B. Stanley, Esq., a member of the Unitarian Church of Concord, volunteered and did present to the church a valuable communion service as a memorial of his mother, who was of the Methodist faith. A fine pulpit Bible and hymn-book were the gift of Mrs. Jacob B. Rand. The pulpit was made by John B. Watson, Esq., and presented to the church. The altar-chairs were the gift of the children of the Sunday-school.

The money to meet the various obligations of the church have all been voluntary offerings. In the dark days when financial difficulties arose, when doubt and uncertainty met the church officials on every hand, friends were raised up, the needed funds provided and the good hand of the Lord was plainly visible.

Among the valuable contributions in aid to the work was the gift of the frescoing of the chapel, by Rev. M. W. Prince, the preacher in charge.

At the close of the Conference year, in 1877, came one of those occurrences usual to a Methodist Church, a change of the pastorate. The relations between Rev. M. W. Prince and this people were very tender, and it was with feelings of deepest regret that they surrendered to the inevitable rule, and bade good-bye to one that had labored with and watched over this little branch of God's church very zealously and efficiently, and left it growing and prosperous, with a membership of one hundred and sixty-one, in full and fifteen probationers.

At the beginning of the Conference year the society welcomed its new pastor, Rev. William Eakins, who for two years filled the pastorate very acceptably. During his labors a very profitable revival occurred, and a goodly number were added to the membership of the church.

In April, 1879, the church was fortunate in securing the appointment of Rev. Charles E. Hall as their pastor.

During the two years of his work on the charge the Sunday-school was reorganized, and a reduction of two thousand dollars on the church debt was secured.

At the close of the Conference year, in the spring of 1881, Rev. C. E. Hall gave notice of his intention to make a change in his relations to this church, much to the regret of a large portion of the church and congregation.

Through the effort of Presiding Elder John W. Adams, Rev. Charles Parkhurst, of the Vermont Conference, was transferred and stationed with this church. Mr. Parkhurst brought many excellent qualities of head and heart to bear upon the work. The congregation was enlarged, the Sunday-school increased, two thousand five hundred dollars of the church debt canceled and a good spiritual interest manifested. But the sickness of his esteemed companion caused a breaking up of the pleasant relations that were then existing, and in August, 1882, Mr. Parkhurst removed to Washington, D. C., for the benefit of his wife's health. For twelve weeks the church was without a regular preacher. In the latter part of October the Rev. W. M. Sterling, of Minneapolis, was appointed to supply the remainder of the Conference year, and did remarkably good work for the time given him. But feeling called to return to his old Conference (Maine), Mr. Sterling declined a very decided vote to remain another year. On the first Sunday in May, 1883, the Rev. George W. Norris commenced his labors with this people. He came with an excellent reputation as a preacher and man of God, and during his two years' stay here his previous reputation was more than realized in building up the spiritual life and power of the church. In the spring of 1885 he was called to the office of presiding elder, and Rev. David E. Miller was transferred from the Vermont Conference, and is now preacher in charge.

The present condition of the church is as follows: Church property appraised at sixteen thousand dollars, upon which there is an indebtedness of five thousand dollars; church membership, one hundred and eighty-five in full, nine probationers; a Sunday-school of two hundred members, with a good and increasing congregation.

The location of the church property is good, its field for usefulness large, and with God's blessing it will fulfill its mission.

The system of voluntary contributions by the people, for current expenses of the church, was among the earliest measures adopted, and has been maintained to this day, making it as truly a free church as any can well be.

A building fund association was organized February 26, 1884, to aid in the erection of a prospective church edifice.

During the entire history of Methodism woman has held a prominent place in points of privilege and duty in her churches, materially assisting in the carrying on of all her great enterprises and endeavors to Christianize the world.

In the department of missions this church has not been behind her sister churches. October 16, 1877, the women of Baker Memorial Church united in forming an auxiliary to the Women's Foreign Mission Society, which has been increasing in numbers and efficiency until now.

Mrs. Rachel O. Badger has filled the responsible position of teacher of the juvenile class in the Sunday-school for nearly eleven years. Mrs. Emily H. Merrill filled the place of class-leader for a long time.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society has been an important factor in the various financial enterprises of the church, and in the promotion of the social element in the society.

Women have been very efficient as collectors of funds in times of emergency, and foremost in the various enterprises for spiritual growth and seasons of revival.

The First Methodist Episcopal Church in Penacook, N. H., was organized October 28, 1847, under Rev. Silas Quimby as presiding elder and Rev. Ebenezer Peaslee preacher in charge, he being the first regularly appointed Methodist preacher in the place. For several years after the church was supplied by students from the Concord Theological Seminary, after which the following persons have received appointments to this charge: Revs. Ebenezer Peaslee, John McLaughlin, Mr. Knapp, H. Loud, W. D. Cass, Mr. Sanborn, D. J. Smith, James Pike, J. C. Emerson, D. C. Babcock, Samuel Roy, N. P. Philbrook, N. Culver, S. P. Heath, W. H. Jones, L. E. Gordon, L. P. Cushman, H. Woodard, E. R. Wilkins, C. W. Taylor. Of its early members, many have passed away. They were earnest, faithful men and women, who dared stand for the truth as they believed it. Its present membership is about one hundred and sixty. With a full board of stewards and trustees and a good church property, they are considered a prosperous organization, with future years of usefulness. Pastor, 1885, Rev. C. W. Taylor.

First Baptist Church.¹—On the 20th of May, 1818, a number of persons residing in Concord, and belonging to different churches, met at the house of Richard Swain, in said town, for the purpose of ascertaining what degree of fellowship existed among them in the faith of the gospel, and also to consider what the prospects were of forming a church agreeable to the principles and practices of the Apostles of our Lord.

After a free and full consideration of the first object before them, the following persons gave to each other an expression of their Christian fellowship, viz.: James Willey, John Hoit, Sarah Bradley, Deborah Elliot, Sally Swain and Nancy Whitney.

Soon after others joined them in fellowship and by the advice of brethren from the church in Bow, they being present by invitation, and having well considered the subject, unanimously recommended the small band of disciples, fourteen in all, to embody and organize.

Accordingly, an ecclesiastical council, composed of members from neighboring churches, assembled at the house of Rev. William Taylor and there effected the organization.

The council was composed of the following: Pastors,—Ottis Robinson, of Salisbury; John B. Gibson, of Weare; Henry Vesey, of Bow. Deacons,—Cate and Severance, of Salisbury; Wood and Barnard, of Weare; Bryant, of Bow. Brethren,—Kensington and Fifield, of Salisbury; Samuel Gale, of Weare; Cains and Gile, of Bow.

¹By A. J. Prescott.

Prayer was offered, and the articles of faith adopted by the brethren seeking recognition, being read and considered, were approved by the council, and the body was unanimously declared to be a Church of Christ duly formed.

The public services were as follows: Sermon, by Elder John B. Gibson; hand of fellowship, by Elder Otis Robinson; prayer, by Elder Henry Vesey.

The church has settled seven pastors. Rev. Wm. Taylor served for seven years, to 1825, during which he received thirty into fellowship. The records prove him to have been a good minister, "a self-sacrificing man, the very kind needed to lay broadly and strongly the foundation of a new enterprise." Rev. Nath. W. Williams followed and served the church five and a half years, taking in the goodly number of fifty-four. It was said and recorded "He was a man of God, discreet, humble and spiritual." Rev. E. E. Cummings followed in 1832 and continued for eighteen years, during which nearly five hundred came into membership. The long continuance and abundant fruits of this pastorate must be regarded as especially favored, as one revival followed another through the very faithful efforts of all, with God's blessing, and the community around rejoiced indeed. As many enterprises of the church were carried forward under the leadership of Dr. Cummings, it must be a great pleasure to him, still living in his chosen home in Concord, at the age of eighty-four, to recall the past and contemplate the present prosperity of his long-time charge.

Rev. C. W. Flanders succeeded as fourth to minister to the church permanently in 1850, remaining sixteen years, and for the most part they proved to be years of the right hand of the Lord in our Zion. Revivals were enjoyed by the church at intervals not distant and souls saved through his faithful appeals from the pulpit, and in his pastoral ministrations, tender and timely, many will rise up in the sanctuary above and call the dear, good man blessed, while there remain others here below who yet cherish his memory with true and deep affection as their spiritual father, their ready and tender comforter in affliction.

The fifth, Rev. D. W. Fannce, D.D., present pastor of the E Street Baptist Church, Washington, D. C., and the sixth, Rev. W. V. Garner, retiring in July, 1884, had each of them about nine years of efficient service with this church, and are regarded by their brethren as among the abler preachers in our Baptist ranks to-day. Rev. Garner has good reports from his present field of labor at Bridgeport, Conn.

At the present time this church are listening with attention to the instructions and rejoicing in the ministrations of Rev. C. R. Cram, D.D., late of the First Baptist Church, Boston, with every token of favor and success in a happy and useful pastorate. The church has buried eight good and faithful deacons: Willey, Gault, Crockett, Damon, J. O. Gault, Prescott, Winkley and Elwell, the first in 1853, the last in 1872. The five living and serving during the last five to thirty years are Brethren Flanders, Norris, Humphrey, Prescott and Fairbanks.

Number of members reported at last association, three hundred and two, September, 1881. Whole number received in sixty-six years, eleven hundred and ninety.

In conclusion, we should state the fact that the Pleasant Street Church was formed in 1853, embracing thirty members dismissed from the parent church, and if a fair and full report should be made of all that has been sacrificed and accomplished through the Divine aid in sixty-seven years, we should have fresh courage and patience in laboring according to the plan set forth in Christ's Sermon on the Mount, (Matt. v. 16): "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven."

Pleasant Street Baptist Church.¹—This church began its career in the spring of 1853. The original members had formerly been identified with the First Baptist Church, of which Rev. E. E. Cummings had, for years, been the successful and beloved pastor. These brethren, from various causes, feeling that the time had come for the formation of a new Baptist interest within the city proper, undertook the arduous task of erecting a new house of worship. This work, begun and carried on in the midst of peculiar difficulties, was at length completed in January, 1854.

Rev. E. E. Cummings was, at this time, preaching in Pittsfield. So successful had his labors proved, and so strong a hold had he secured upon the hearts of the people in Concord, that they very naturally and unanimously turned toward him as the man who should be invited to the pastoral charge of the new church. Accordingly, an invitation was extended and accepted, the new house opened, and Mr. Cummings publicly installed January 11, 1854, at which time the church, consisting of thirty members, was publicly recognized. Great prosperity followed the church under the leadership of Dr. Cummings. For thirteen years he labored with untiring energy in this, his second pastorate in the city of Concord. His wise counsel, his faithful preaching and his devotion to the people whom he served marked this second chapter in his history as a minister of the gospel in New Hampshire as most eventful. Dr. Cummings resigned October 6, 1867; but the resignation was not accepted until April 12, 1868.

On the 18th of May following, Rev. H. G. Safford, of Amesbury, Mass., received from the church an invitation to become pastor in the field lately occupied by Dr. Cummings. Mr. Safford's pastorate began June 7th, and continued seven years and six months. During his labors, which were highly efficient, the church increased considerably both in numbers and influence. Sound and logical as a preacher, thoughtful and sympathetic as a pastor,

¹ By Rev. James K. Ewer.

Mr. Safford made for himself a host of friends not only in his own society, but throughout the entire community. His pastorate ended October 31, 1875.

Following his resignation was an interim of eight months, when, in March, 1876, a call was extended to Rev. E. C. Spinney, of the Newton Theological Institution. Having accepted this call, Mr. Spinney entered upon his labors in June following. His pastorate continued four years, and was eminently successful. Called to the church when the membership numbered one hundred and fifty-five, he succeeded in greatly augmenting its numerical strength, and left it, at the close of his pastorate, numbering two hundred and fifty-eight. Mr. Spinney labored ardently during his four years' residence with this people and greatly endeared himself to a large circle of friends. During his pastorate the house of worship was thoroughly renovated and beautified, and rendered more attractive and comfortable.

Mr. Spinney resigned April 31, 1880, to take effect on June 1st following.

On the 11th of July, of the same year, Rev. L. G. Barrett received and accepted a call to the pastorate. Mr. Barrett, who had previously preached in Massachusetts and New York, entered upon his labors September 1, 1880, and after a pastorate of four years, resigned July 12, 1884, to take effect September 1st following. Mr. Barrett was an able preacher and an ardent advocate of temperance reform. He left a membership of two hundred and seventy-five, the church having been built up and enlarged in its efficiency during his term of service.

The present pastor, Rev. James K. Ewer, entered upon his labors in this field January 1, 1885.

Free-Will Baptist Church.—(See appendix).

Baptist Church, Penacook.—(See appendix).

St. John the Evangelist—Roman Catholic.—It is impossible to give the exact date when Mass was first said in this city, but it was probably in about the year 1845. It was visited occasionally by various priests, among whom were Rev. Father McDonald, of Manchester, and Rev. Father O'Donnell, of Nashua. Very Rev. Father J. E. Barry, V. G., the first resident priest, came to Concord in September, 1865, and has remained to the present time. Services were first held in Phoenix Hall. Father Barry at once started the movement for the erection of a church building, which was rapidly pushed forward, and March 13, 1868, the present large and substantial brick structure was dedicated. The church now numbers about two thousand souls.

Very Rev. J. E. Barry, V. G., was born in Eastport, Me., in August, 1836. He was educated at Holy Cross College, Worcester, Mass., and spent nine years at St. Vincent's College and Seminary, at Montreal. The first year of his service in the priesthood he was assistant at Cathedral in Portland, Me., under Rt. Rev. D. W. Wilson, D.D., bishop of Portland. Upon the death of Dr. Bacon, Father Barry became the administrator of the diocese. June 10, 1875, he was appointed vicar-general by Rt. Rev. J. A. Healey, bishop of Portland. At the time of Father Barry's settlement here there were no Catholic Churches in New Hampshire north of Manchester, and his labors practically extended over the entire northern portion of the State. Father Barry is untiring in his church-work, and his sterling qualities and genial, courteous bearing have won for him hosts of friends, and he is one of Concord's most honored citizens. He has a commodious and pleasant residence, adjoining the church, which is tastefully furnished and replete with all the conveniences of the age.

St. John the Evangelist Church (Catholic), at Penacook, was organized in 1854, and the present church was dedicated in 1868.

CHAPTER III.

CONCORD—(Continued).

THE PRESS.¹

The Concord Herald and New Hampshire Intelligencer, commenced by George Hough, January 6, 1790, was the first paper printed in Merrimack County. It was on paper of bluish cast, twenty by fourteen inches. It was in a year or two enlarged, and appeared as the Courier of New Hampshire. It was discontinued October 30, 1865. Mr. Hough was one of the most accurate printers who ever lived in New Hampshire. He died February 8, 1830, aged seventy-three.

The Mirror, by Elijah Russell, was commenced October 29, 1792. Moses Davis was soon after associated with Russell in its publication. No. 130, now before the writer, is styled The Federal Mirror. May 13, 1799, the paper appeared as The Mirror, the word Federal being discarded. It was soon after discontinued.

The Republican Gazette, by Moses Davis, made its appearance November 29, 1796. Its dimensions were seventeen and a half by twenty-three inches. March 14, 1797, it appeared as Russell & Davis's Republican Gazette. It probably continued but a short time. The New Star, neither a large nor brilliant luminary, was issued a short time by the same publishers, in the year 1797. It was published only from April 14 to October 3, 1797.

The Republican Gazette, by Elijah Russell, made its appearance February 5, 1801. The name was afterwards changed to the American Republican Gazette. It was the first paper in Concord to advocate the views of the Jeffersonian Republicans. Mr. Davis, who was associated with Russell in publishing the Gazette, was at the same time publisher of the Dart- month Gazette, at Hanover, and espoused the Federal side, Russell styling Davis the "elbow-chair editor."

¹ The editor acknowledges his indebtedness in the preparation of this chapter to the late Asa McFarland, also to D. F. Seabury, P. B. Cogswell, H. H. Metcalf and George E. Jenks.

The Concord Gazette, by Hoyt & Tuttle, was commenced July 12, 1806, and discontinued with the thirty-seventh number. Mr. Hoyt resided in Concord many years, but finally died in Pembroke, December 24, 1854, aged seventy-one. His body was brought to Concord, and buried in the Old Cemetery, where a monument was erected to his memory by the printers of this city.

June 9, 1807, Jesse C. Tuttle resumed the publication of the Concord Gazette, and continued the paper until after the close of the war with England, in 1815, when it passed into the hands of W. S. Spear, and thence to Spear & Thayer, who continued it until 1819, when it ceased to be published. Mr. Tuttle died in Concord, December 10, 1834, aged fifty-five.

After leaving the Gazette, Mr. Hoyt commenced the American Patriot, October 18, 1808, which he published until April 18, 1809, when Isaac Hill, who, twelve days before, had completed a seven years' apprenticeship in the office of The Farmers' Cabinet, at Amherst, became its proprietor, and changed the name to New Hampshire Patriot. Walter R. Hill and Jacob B. Moore, brother and brother-in-law of Mr. Hill, were at times associated with him, but Mr. Hill was at all times its controlling spirit. He was a vigorous writer, an earnest Democrat, an honest man, who stamped his character upon the columns of the paper, and made it a power in the State as an exponent of the principles of Jeffersonian Democracy. Its patronage increased and its influence extended until it excelled all other papers in the State, and was recognized throughout the country as one of the ablest advocates of Democratic-Republican doctrines.

In March, 1829, he received an appointment in the Treasury Department at Washington, and the paper passed to Horatio Hill & Co., and April 27th, that year, their names appeared as publishers, Dudley S. Palmer being editor. July 6, 1829, Cyrus Barton, of Newport, became a member of the firm, and finally the editor. October 6, 1834, Horatio Hill retired, and Colonel Barton became sole proprietor. November 21, 1849, Henry H. Carroll became associated with Colonel Barton in the ownership and management of the Patriot. December 9, 1841, Colonel Barton retired from the establishment, having sold his interest to Nathaniel B. Baker, who, with Mr. Carroll, conducted the paper until November 6, 1845, when Mr. Baker retired, and his associate continued alone in the paper till his death, August 4, 1846. December 3d, same year, William Butterfield became proprietor of the establishment. May 27, 1847, Hill's New Hampshire Patriot was united with the New Hampshire Patriot, and William Butterfield and John M. Hill became the proprietors. May 18, 1853, Mr. Hill retired, leaving Mr. Butterfield as the owner until September 2, 1857, at which time Joseph W.

Merriam became associated with him. This arrangement continued until August 17, 1859, when Mr. Merriam retired, and Mr. Butterfield was alone until May 6, 1868, when Mr. Hill re-entered the firm, and the firm-name was Butterfield & Hill until February 29, 1873, when Edwin C. Bailey purchased the establishment and continued as proprietor until October, 1878, when it was purchased by the proprietors of The People, and the two papers were united under the name of the People and Patriot.

In March, 1883, upon the death of Charles C. Pearson, who had been the active manager of the establishment, the paper passed to the proprietorship and control of John H. Pearson and Lewis C. Patten, by whom it was conducted until April 16, 1885, the direct management being in the hands of Mr. Pearson.

It then passed into the hands of the New Hampshire Democratic Press Company, by whom it is now published.

The People, mentioned above, was established here June 10, 1868, by John H. and Charles C. Pearson, under the firm-name of Charles C. Pearson & Co.

The New Hampshire Magazine, probably the first magazine published in this State, was commenced June, 1793, in Concord, and discontinued the following November. It was a small octavo, each number containing sixty-four pages. Rev. Martin Ruter, then a resident of Canterbury, is said to have been the editor.

Hill's New Hampshire Patriot was commenced August 14, 1840, and conducted with the zeal and ability so obvious in the New Hampshire Patriot during the entire period that journal was in charge of its founder, Hon. Isaac Hill. In May, 1847, Hill's New Hampshire Patriot was united with the New Hampshire Patriot.

The Farmers' Monthly Visitor, commenced by Isaac Hill, January 15, 1839, and conducted by that gentleman several years, was an interesting and useful publication, in pamphlet form. Its publication in Concord ceased with the number for December, 1849, when it was transferred to Manchester.

The New Hampshire Courier was commenced by Palmer & Odlin, December 14, 1832.—Dudley S. Palmer, editor. August 8, 1834, it appeared as the Courier and Inquirer, printed and published by Odlin & Chadwick.—D. S. Palmer, editor. This paper was continued under various proprietors until May, 1842, when it was discontinued; but was revived October 4, 1844, by Augustus C. Blodgett, who had been for a time one of the proprietors of the New Hampshire Statesman. January 9, 1846, the Courier was united with the Concord Gazette, a journal then recently commenced by Charles F. Low. The connection of Mr. Low with the paper ceased October 21, 1846, and thenceforth, until its union with the Independent Democrat, May 6, 1847, Mr. Blodgett managed the paper.

The New Hampshire Observer was commenced in Concord, January 4, 1819, by George Hough, and was then entitled Concord Observer. March 25, 1822, it passed into the hands of John W. Shepard, who changed its name to New Hampshire Repository. Rev. John M. Putnam succeeded Mr. Shepard, changing the name of the paper to New Hampshire Observer. July 12, 1827, Mr. Putnam sold out to Tobias H. Miller, of Portsmouth, and the paper was transferred to that town. It was printed there and at Portland, Me., under several publishers and editors, until May, 1831, when Edmund S. Chadwick purchased a half-interest in the paper and returned it to its birth-place. June 11, 1831, ex-Governor David L. Morrill became half-owner. August 1, 1833, Charles H. Little purchased the interest of Governor Morrill, and the Observer was published by Chadwick & Little until February 6, 1835, when, Mr. Little having died, Rev. David Kimball became associated with Mr. Chadwick, who retired March 25, 1836. January 4, 1839, the name was changed to Christian Tatoply. January 1, 1841, the paper became the property of David Kimball and Henry Wood, Congregational clergymen, and the name was changed to Congregational Journal. After several changes, during which Rev. Benjamin P. Stone and Benning W. Sanborn were proprietors, December 25, 1862, its subscribers were transferred to The Congregationalist and Boston Recorder. Mr. Stone afterwards issued a small monthly publication, and continued it two years, with the title Christian Reporter.

The first number of the Abolitionist, published by D. D. Fisk and E. G. Eastman, appeared January 21, 1835. After four numbers it was published by Albe Cady, George Storrs, George Kent and Amos Wood, and issued as the Herald of Freedom, the first number being dated March 7, 1835. Joseph Horace Kimball became editor and Elbridge G. Chase printer. The connection of Mr. Kimball with the Herald continued until disease forbade his longer continuance. His valedictory appeared March 24, 1838, and he died on the 11th of the following April. N. P. Rogers then assumed the editorial management, and remained in that position until, in 1841, a misunderstanding arose between him and the managers of the New Hampshire Anti-Slavery Society, in regard to the property in the concern, which resulted in the appointment of Parker Pillsbury as editor and Jacob H. Ela publishing agent. Their first paper appeared December 29, 1841, and this arrangement continued about one year. In the mean time Mr. Rogers started another herald of freedom, with a prefix, The Herald of Freedom. In this sheet he sustained his side of the controversy. This paper he continued until near the time of his death, which took place October 16, 1846.

August 13, 1841, the first number of the People's Advocate made its appearance. Alanson St. Clair, publishing agent; G. J. L. Golby and A. St. Clair, editors. This was the organ of the political anti-slavery party in New Hampshire, and in those years met small encouragement. It seems to have been printed some time in Hanover, by J. E. Hood; for in the report of the Liberty Party State Convention, held June 5, 1844, it was stated that Mr. Hood had received no compensation, and was liable for debts contracted by former publishers to the amount of three hundred dollars. Nearly two hundred dollars was contributed at that meeting to discharge this liability. The paper was probably discontinued in January, 1844. A little sheet—the Family Visitor—was commenced at Hanover by Mr. Hood, February 7, 1844, and continued a short time in its place. Mr. Hood also started the Granite Freeman, a political anti-slavery paper, June 20, 1844, and continued the same until May 1, 1847, when it was united with the Independent Democrat.

The *New Hampshire Statesman*¹ was founded by Luther Roby, who moved from Amherst, N. H., to Concord, and became its printer and publisher. Amos A. Parker, in practice of law at Epping, was engaged to conduct it. The first number bears date Concord, January 6, 1825. Mr. Roby published the paper until June, 1823, when his connection with it ceased. He continued many years in the business of book-printing, until he abandoned it and engaged in developing the granite quarrying interest in Concord, in which he was the pioneer. In the later years of his life he engaged in the manufacture of glasswares in Lyndeborough, N. H. He returned to Concord, where he died February 22, 1883. He was born January 8, 1801.

June 1, 1823, the Statesman became the property of Amos A. Parker, its conductor during the five months of its infancy.

June 1, 1824, George Hough commenced and published the Concord Register, which was edited by George Kimball. Mr. Parker, October 17, 1825, transferred the Statesman property to George Kimball, to which he united the "list" of the Register, and continued the publication of a paper under the united name of the New Hampshire Statesman and Concord Register, the first publication bearing date October 22, 1825. Mr. Parker still lives, and resides in Glastonbury, Conn., at the age of eighty-nine.

December 3, 1825, Thomas G. Wells, publisher of the Amherst Herald, purchased an interest in the Statesman and Register, to which he united the subscription list of the Herald, and the paper was published by Kimball & Wells. February 11, 1826, Mr. Wells sold his interest in the paper to Asa McFarland and Moses G. Atwood, and the publishers were Kimball, McFarland & Atwood. July 29, 1826, Mr. Kimball disposed of his newspaper property to George Kent, and the publishers were Kent, McFarland & Atwood. July 28, 1827, Mr. Atwood conveyed his interest in the paper to Kent & McFarland, who continued its publication until May 21, 1831, on which date a paper called the New Hampshire Journal, established September 11, 1826, by Henry E. & Jacob B. Moore, was consolidated with the Statesman and Register. These papers, united, assumed the title of The New Hampshire Statesman and State Journal, and became the property of Asa McFarland and George W. Ela, who were its publishers until January 1, 1834. The paper bore this title for twenty years. George Kent died at New Bedford, Mass., November 8, 1884, in the eighty-ninth year of his age.

¹ By George E. Jenks.

January 1, 1834, Mr. McFarland sold his interest in the Statesman and Journal to George W. Ela, who became sole proprietor and publisher from said date to May 5, 1838. Mr. Ela then entered into a partnership with John W. Flanders, which existed until July 11, 1840, when Mr. Ela again became sole publisher to August 14, 1841. From August 14, 1841, to May 1, 1842, the Statesman and Journal was published by George W. & Jacob Hart Ela. From May 6 to June 25, 1842, the names of George W. Ela and Augustus C. Blodgett appeared as its publishers. From July 1, 1842, to April 14, 1843, the names of George W. Ela, Augustus C. Blodgett and John P. Osgood appeared upon the paper as its publishers. From the last date, for three numbers, no names appeared on the paper as publishers. From May 5, 1843, to February 23, 1844, the names of John P. Osgood and Frank S. West appeared as publishers and A. C. Blodgett as editor. From March 1 to July 18, 1844, the firm-name of Blodgett & Osgood appeared as publishers. Mr. Ela is understood to have retained an interest in the paper from April, 1843, to July 19, 1844, when it was by him conveyed to George W. Ollin & Co. Mr. Ela, now at the age of seventy-seven, is an active business man, and holds a residence in Concord.

The firm of George O. Ollin & Co. (John C. Wilson and John R. Osgood being the company) began the publication of the Statesman July 26, 1844, and continued it until July 4, 1851. Mr. Osgood remained one of the firm about three years. Asa McFarland was its political editor to July, 1850, and correspondent, while making a five months' trip in Europe, to January, 1851.

In July, 1851, Asa McFarland and George E. Jenks (firm of McFarland & Jenks, book and job printers) purchased the Statesman and assumed its publication under the title as above.—Asa McFarland, editor. The first publication under said proprietors bears date of July 12, 1851. January 1, 1858, Henry McFarland became associated with the said firm. January 1, 1868, Asa McFarland retired from the editorship of the paper, and January, 1869, the name was changed to The Republican Statesman. January 1, 1870, Rossiter Johnson purchased Asa McFarland's interest in the establishment, and the paper continued to be published under the firm-name of McFarland & Jenks, to October 1, 1871.

The paper was then purchased by a corporation known as the "Republican Press Association," who consolidated with it the weekly Independent Democrat; the same purchase included the Concord Daily Monitor. The weekly issue of the paper from the press of this corporation has, since October 1, 1871, borne the title of the Independent Statesman. Rossiter Johnson, P. B. Cogswell, George G. Fogg, William E. Stevens, Allan M. Jenks and Edward N. Pearson have been members of its editorial corps since October, 1871, and Edward A. Jenks has been its business manager.

Of those the longest identified with the Statesman, Asa McFarland was the veteran. His publication of the paper dates from February 11, 1826, to January 1, 1834, and from July, 1851, to January 1, 1868,—about twenty-five years. To this term of service may be added six years as political editor and correspondent while the paper was published by George O. Ollin & Co. After retiring from active service, he was a frequent contributor to the columns of the Statesman to the time of his death, December 13, 1879, in the seventy-sixth year of his age.

George E. Jenks was for more than twenty years a publisher of the Statesman, and Henry McFarland fourteen years. George W. Ela was a proprietor of the Statesman thirteen years, and George O. Ollin and John C. Wilson each seven years.

Of the men who have, at various times, been engaged in the earlier publication of the Statesman, there are living, A. B. 1885, Amos A. Parker, now of Glastonbury, Conn., aged about eighty-nine; George W. Ela, Concord, seventy-seven; and George O. Ollin, Union Grove, Ill.

The Statesman came into existence after the decease of the Federal party, and espoused the cause of Levi Woodbury as an independent candidate for Governor against Samuel Dinsmore. Mr. Woodbury was successful against his rival. Subsequently it supported the Whig party, and became the leading exponent of its principles; and later, an effective supporter of the Republican party, when it came into existence in 1856 from the wreck of the old Whig and Free-Soil parties, and since.

The Independent Democrat was commenced at Manchester, May 8, 1845, by Robert C. Wetmore. Subsequently it was transferred to Concord, where George G. Fogg, State Secretary, engaged in its editorial management, and May 6, 1847, the New Hampshire Courier, published by A. C. Blodgett, and the Granite Freeman, published by J. E. Hood, with their subscription lists, were merged with the Independent Democrat, and Mr. Hood became one of the editors and publishers of the consolidated journal, under the name of The Independent Democrat and Freeman. July 29, 1847, Mr. Wetmore retired therefrom, and the paper was published by J. E. Hood & Co. February 22, 1849, Mr. Hood retired from the paper, and James J. Wiggins became a partner, when the paper again assumed the name of The Independent Democrat, and appeared published by Fogg & Wadsworth.

January 1, 1832, Cyrus Barton, a former publisher of the New Hampshire Patriot, commenced the publication of a semi-weekly paper, called the State Capital Reporter. May 29, 1833, Amos Hadley became associated with Colonel Barton. A weekly edition of the Reporter was commenced July 16, 1833, and the semi-weekly Reporter was discontinued September 5, 1834. Colonel Barton died February 17, 1853, and Mr. Hadley conducted the establishment until January 8, 1857, when the paper was merged in The Independent Democrat, which was thereafter published and edited by George G. Fogg and Amos Hadley.

May 23, 1861, Parsons B. Cogswell and George H. Sturtevant commenced to publish the Concord Daily Monitor. October 15th a weekly edition of the Monitor was published, and continued until January 5, 1867; but January 20, 1867, The Independent Democrat and the Monitor establishments were united, and the Concord Daily Monitor and The Independent Democrat were published by the Independent Press Association until October, 1871, when The Independent Democrat and Republican Statesman establishments were consolidated. The combined weekly paper appeared under the name of the Independent Statesman, and the daily issue continued under the name of the Concord Daily Monitor. The new business combination was incorporated under the style and title of the "Republican Press Association."

Such have been the changes and affiliations of half a century, through which the Independent Statesman came into existence October 6, 1871. From this date there has been no change.

As connected with The Independent Democrat, Independent Statesman and Daily Monitor, George G. Fogg held a service of twenty-seven years. He died October 5, 1881. P. B. Cogswell's service with these papers has been continuous since May, 1861. Amos Hadley had a ten years' connection with the Reporter and Democrat.

The Independent Democrat was established to promulgate the principles of the Free-Soil party. Subsequently, from the consolidation of the opponents of the Democratic organization into the Republican party, in 1860, it gave firm support to the new organization, which embraced the principles of the Free-Soil party. These two leading papers, the Statesman and the Democrat, having accomplished their separate work, are now consolidated in one, to represent the great principles for which the two so long battled, side by side, in the city of Concord. Long may its name be a synonym for the rights of all mankind!

January 5, 1832, the Oliver Irons, a small quarto, issued once a week, made its appearance. It bore the name of Jacob Perkins, but was discontinued on the 23d of the following June.

November 1, 1832, Hill & Barton, proprietors of the Independent Statesman, published, commenced issuing that publication in weekly form, which, after trial of a year and a half, ceased to appear as a semi-weekly sheet.

The Star in the East and New Hampshire Universalist was first issued on April 12, 1832, by Kimball & Adams. It was conducted by Rev. John G. Adams until August 5, 1837, when it was merged in The Transcript, a Universalist paper, published in Boston, by Rev. Thomas Whittemore; Rev. Moses Ballou, of Portsmouth, was assistant editor.

The Balm of Gilead and Practical Universalist was commenced July, 1842, and continued two years or more,—J. F. Witherell, publisher; C. Philbrick, printer. It was a small weekly quarto paper, and advocated the principles of the religious denomination whose name it bore.

On March 1, 1831, Henry E. and John W. Moore commenced the Concord Advertiser, but the paper was soon abandoned, and J. W. Moore, May 10, 1834, commenced a semi-monthly called The Chameleon, but that also was short-lived.

Moses Eastman and Albert G. Chadwick, June 16, 1833, commenced, and published more than a year, a paper styled The Spirit of Enquiry.

The New Hampshire Baptist Register, Rev. Edmund Worth, editor; Eastman, Webster & Co., publishers, was issued here several years before and after the year 1834.

Priestcraft Exposed, a semi-monthly publication, was issued here in 1833, 1834 and 1835 by Hayes & Kimball, a part of which time it was published in an enlarged form as The Expositor.

The Literary Gazette, published weekly by D. D. Fisk, Asa Fowler and Moody Currier, was commenced August 1, 1834, and published about two years. Cyrus P. Bradley was also associated for a time with the paper.

Temperance Herald was the name of a paper published by the New Hampshire Temperance Society, at Concord, and furnished free one copy to every family in the State in 1834 or 1835. E. S. Chadwick continued the publication of the paper one year after the State society relinquished it. Mr. Chadwick also published the White Mountain Tocsin, a temperance sheet, about three years prior to July 20, 1846, when it was united with the Massachusetts Temperance Standard, and published in Boston.

The Loco-Motiv, a small semi-weekly paper, was commenced May 20, 1842,—John R. French, publisher; George Kent, editor. Only about twenty numbers were issued.

The Crusader of Reform, commenced January, 1852, was published about two years by Rev. Daniel Lancaster.

Rev. Daniel Lancaster and Charles L. Wheeler commenced, early in 1853, and published a few numbers of a paper bearing the name Northern Indicator.

The Undercurrent, a monthly paper, was commenced November 1, 1848, by Lewis Tower, but was soon discontinued.

The Democratic Standard was commenced June, 1856, by John B. Palmer, and continued until August, 1861, when, on account of its alleged disloyalty, the office was assailed by a mob, and the printing material destroyed. Its publication was not resumed. Edmund Burke, of Newport, was understood to have been a frequent writer for the Standard.

The Monitor, the organ of the Unitarian denomination in New Hampshire, commenced at Dover in 1831, was removed to Concord May 7, 1834. It was conducted until May 6, 1835, by a committee of the Unitarian Ministerial Association. Rev. Moses G. Thomas occupied the editorial chair at that time, and conducted the paper until it was discontinued, probably with the close of Vol. 5, May 20, 1835.

The New Hampshire Phoenix, a temperance sheet, conducted by D. & J. Lancaster, was commenced January 7, 1854. February 10, 1855, E. H. Cheney appeared as editor and proprietor. It was finally united with the Weekly Chronicle, at Portsmouth, and published there by Miller & Gray.

Campaign Papers.—These have been issued by several concerns, especially previous to the establishment of daily papers in Concord. These sheets had various titles, of which the following are specimens: Spirit of the Republican Press, from the office of the Patriot, in 1829, D. S. Palmer, editor; The Concord Patriot, by S. O. Diekey, 1855; The Transcript, 1855; The Advocate of Democracy, from the office of Hill's New Hampshire Patriot, 1843, Joseph Kidder, editor; The True Whig, D. S. Palmer, editor, 1847; The Willing and Ready, 1847-48, True Osgood, publisher; the Concord Tribune, Charles L. Wheeler, publisher; the Voice of the Stockholders, by E. E. Sturtevant, 1855; and the Willing and Steady, to match the Rough and Ready.

October 6, 1828, Moore & Patch commenced, but published only a few weeks, a paper entitled True's Mirror. Mr. Moore afterwards published a paper at Meredith Bridge (now known as Laconia). He died in Amherst, his native place, February 13, 1837, aged twenty-eight.

The New Hampshire Workman, devoted to Labor and Political Reform, was commenced at Concord, March, 1870, and continued a short time. No names appeared as publishers.

S. G. Noyes publishes a weekly paper in Fisherville, entitled Rays of Light.

The Veterans' Advocate was established January 1, 1884, and is devoted to the interests of the Grand Army of the Republic. H. F. W. Little and Ira C. Evans, editors; Ira C. Evans, publisher.

Amateur's Monthly Magazine, 16 pages. Edited and published by Frank A. Knight; commenced January, 1873, ceased April, 1874.

The Daily Press of Concord.—The history of the daily press of Concord may necessarily include newspapers which have been published during the sessions of the Legislature, and in political campaigns, occupying short periods of time usually. Files of most of these are preserved in the newspaper office of this city, and an examination of them will well repay any person interested in the progress of typography and journalism.

HILL'S DAILY PATRIOT. The first prospectus for a daily paper in Concord was issued by William P. & John M. Hill, publishers of Hill's New Hampshire Patriot, May 12, 1841. It provided for the publication of a paper during the session of the Legislature, six days in a week, to contain the proceedings of the Legislature as reported by Governor Hill, assisted by the publishers, and also the proceedings of Congress, then in session, having been called together in consequence of the death of President Harrison. Its terms were two cents a copy, delivered by stage-drivers and mail-carriers. The first number was issued June 3d, with a printed page measuring eleven by seven and a half inches, and presented a neat typographical appearance. It was continued until the close of the session, July 3d, making a volume of twenty-eight numbers. Vol. 2 was published in 1842, beginning January 1st and ending June 24th, the day of the close of the session, making twenty-one numbers.

The Daily Patriot was first issued June 2, 1841, by Barton & Carroll, and was continued through the session of the Legislature every morning, except Friday and Sunday. It was a small folio, the pages twelve by eight and one-half inches, with three columns of matter, and the subscription price was twenty-five cents for the session. The volume closed July 3d with the 21th number. The volume for 1842 is missing, but it was of the same size as Vol. 1, and published by Carroll & Baker. There were two sessions of the Legislature that year, the first beginning June 1st and ending June 24th, and the second beginning November 2d and ending December 23d. Vol. 4 (probably a mistake) began June 8, 1843, and ended July 1st, with the 21st number—Carroll & Baker, publishers. The volume for 1844, by the same publishers, is numbered Vol. 4, and covers two sessions of the Legislature, the first beginning June 6th and ending June 19th, with the 12th number, and the second beginning November 21st and ending December 28th, with Number 33. Vol. 5, by the same publishers, beginning June 5, 1845, and ending July 3d, contains twenty-five numbers.

Vol. 6, beginning June 1, 1846, and ending July 19th, contains thirty-one numbers, and was published by H. H. Carroll. Vol. 7 appeared in an enlarged form, four columns to a page, and the pages sixteen by twelve and one-half inches. It began June 3, 1847, and ended July 5th, with the 27th number—Butterfield & Hill, publishers. In 1848 there were two sessions of the Legislature and two volumes of the paper.—Vol. 8, beginning June 8th and ending June 24th, containing fifteen numbers, and Vol. 9, beginning November 23d and ending January 5, 1849, containing thirty-two numbers. Butterfield & Hill, publishers.

In 1849 the paper took the name of Legislative Reporter, and was published by N. B. Baker, as Vol. 1, beginning June 7th and ending July 7th, with the 26th number.

Vol. 10 of The Daily Patriot began June 6, 1850, and ended July 13th, containing thirty-one numbers, and was published by Butterfield & Hill. During this year the Constitutional Convention was held, and the daily is numbered Vol. 12, beginning November 7, 1850, and ending January 4, 1851, with the 36th number. This volume appears in enlarged form, the pages measuring nineteen and one-fourth by thirteen inches, and five columns to a page.

Vol. 13 began June 5, 1851, and ended July 5th, with the 24th number, with no change in publishers. Vol. 14 began June 3, 1852, and ended June 19th, with the 13th number. This was a Presidential election year, and the nomination of Franklin Pierce for the Presidency necessitated better facilities than a weekly paper afforded for conducting the campaign at his home, and, therefore, Messrs. Butterfield & Hill decided to issue a daily through the campaign for one dollar, and Vol. 15 began July 12th and ended November 3d, the day after the election, making ninety-seven numbers. It was the first paper printed six days in a week, in this city, except during legislative sessions. A second session of the Legislature was held the same year, and Vol. 16 began November 18th and ended January 19, 1853, making thirty-seven numbers.

Vol. 17, beginning June 2, 1853, and ending July 2d, with the 24th number, was published by William Butterfield, as were the seven succeeding volumes, viz., Vol. 18 began June 8, 1854, and ended July 5th, comprising twenty-five numbers. Vol. 19, a campaign paper, published six times a week, began November 9, 1854, and ended March 10, 1855, comprising eighty-six numbers. Vol. 20 began June 7, 1855, and ended July 11th, with the 27th number. Vol. 21, published as a campaign paper, began January 9, 1856, and ended March 8th, comprising forty-three numbers. Vol. 22 began June 5, 1856, and ended July 12th, with the 24th number. Vol. 23 was published as a Presidential campaign paper from September 11, 1856, to November 1st, of the same year, making thirty-three numbers. Vol. 24 began June 1, 1857, and ended June 27th, making only sixteen numbers.

Vol. 25, beginning June 3, 1858, and ending June 26th, comprising seventeen numbers, was published by Butterfield & Merriam, as also was Vol. 27, beginning June 2, 1859, and ending June 28th, with seventeen numbers. We find no file of Vol. 26, and presume there was no error in numbering Vol. 27.

Vol. 28, beginning June 7, 1860, and ending July 5th, comprising twenty numbers, was published by William Butterfield, as also was Vol. 29, beginning June 6, 1861, and ending July 4th, comprising twenty numbers.

The publication of The Daily Patriot regularly through the year was begun January 3, 1868, by Butterfield & Hill, the volume being numbered 30, and was continued by them to February 1, 1873, when E. C. Bailey became its proprietor and publisher, and continued its publication to November 1, 1877, when it was stopped. During the legislative session of 1878 the paper was published by F. P. Kellom, with William P. Bailey, editor, beginning June 5th and ending August 19th, making sixty-four numbers.

During the legislative session of 1879 the People and Patriot, Vol. 1, was published by C. C. Pearson, beginning June 5th and ending July 21st comprising forty numbers. December 1, 1879, the publication of the paper, under the same title, six issues a week, was resumed by C. C. Pearson, and continued until September 3, 1881, when it was discontinued. The People and Patriot was re-established by the Democratic Press Association, 1885.

DAILY PEOPLE.—Another legislative paper was the Daily People, published by Charles C. Pearson & Co., a folio sheet, with pages twenty-one by fourteen inches. Nine volumes were issued, as follows: Vol. 1, from June 1, 1870, to July 1st, comprising twenty-three numbers. Vol. 2 from June 7, 1871, to July 18th, twenty-seven numbers. Vol. 3, from June 6, 1872, to July 9th, seventeen numbers. Vol. 4, from June 5, 1873, to July 2d, seventeen numbers. Vol. 5, from June 3, 1874, to July 19th, twenty-six numbers. Vol. 6, from June 2, 1875, to July 3d, twenty-three numbers. Vol. 7, from June 8, 1876, to July 21st, thirty-two numbers. Vol. 8, from June 7, 1877, to July 21st, thirty-two numbers, and Vol. 9, began June 6, 1878, ending August 20th, with fifty-three numbers.

DAILY DEMOCRAT AND FREEMAN.—During the legislative session of 1847 a daily was published by Wetmore & Hood, called the Daily Democrat and Freeman. It was a small sheet, eleven by fifteen and one-half inches, four columns to a page. The first number was dated June 3, 1847, and the last number July 5th, and twenty-six numbers were issued.

DAILY INDEPENDENT DEMOCRAT.—Dailies were issued from the Independent Democrat office during the sessions of the Legislature, as follows: Vol. 3 began June 7, 1855, and closed July 14th, with probably twenty-seven numbers. We do not know that a file of it is in existence, but the files of the weekly edition contain the proceedings of the Legislature quite fully, which were taken from the daily. Vol. 4 began June 4, 1857, and ended June 27th, comprising seventeen numbers. It was published by Fogg & Hadley. Vol. 5 began June 3, 1858, and ended June 26th, comprising seventeen numbers. Vol. 6 began June 2, 1859, and ended June 29th, comprising seventeen numbers. Vol. 7 began June 7, 1860, and ended July 5th, comprising twenty numbers. The size of the pages was twelve and three-fourths by nineteen and one-half inches. Vol. 8 began June 6th, 1861, and ended July 5th, comprising twenty numbers.

*Copyright
P. B. Colver Co.*

DAILY STATESMAN.—Vol. 1 of the Daily Statesman was begun by McFarland & Jenks, June 2, 1852, and ended June 19th, comprising only fifteen numbers, the session being a short one. Vol. 2 began June 8, 1854, and ended July 15th, comprising twenty-six numbers. Vol. 3 began June 7, 1855, and ended July 14th, comprising twenty-seven numbers. Vol. 4 began June 5, 1856, and ended July 12th, comprising twenty-four numbers. Vol. 5 began June 4, 1857, and ended June 26th, comprising sixteen numbers. Vol. 6 began June 3, 1858, and ended June 26th, comprising seventeen numbers. Vol. 7 began June 2, 1859, and ended June 28th, comprising seventeen numbers. Vol. 8 began June 6, 1860, and ended July 5th, comprising twenty numbers. Vol. 9 began June 6, 1861, and ended July 5th, comprising twenty numbers.

LEGISLATIVE REPORTER.—In 1862 a joint arrangement was made by William Butterfield, of the Patriot, McFarland & Jenks, of the Statesman, and Fogg & Hadley, of the Independent Democrat, for the publication of one daily during the session of the Legislature, under the title of Legislative Reporter. Vol. 1 began June 5, 1862, and ended July 10th, comprising twenty-five numbers. Vol. 2 began June 4, 1863, and ended July 1st, comprising twenty-four numbers. Vol. 3 began June 3, 1864, and ended July 16th. Vol. 4 began June 8, 1865, and ended July 3d, comprising seventeen numbers. Vol. 5 began June 7, 1866, and ended July 9th, comprising twenty-one numbers. This was the last volume issued, the Daily Monitor and Daily Patriot being published regularly, rendering it unnecessary for the weekly papers to continue the publication of a daily solely for the purpose of giving the legislative proceedings.

There may have been other legislative dailies published, but no files of them are in existence to our knowledge. In 1846 the Granite Freeman and New Hampshire Courier announced that dailies would be issued by their publishers for the session, but whether the promise was fulfilled is more than we know.

CONCORD DAILY MONITOR.—Early in the spring of 1864 several gentlemen of this city, who felt the need of a permanent daily paper at the capital of the State, took steps looking to the securing of that object. Estimates of expense for an evening paper were obtained, and a guaranty fund of three thousand dollars was subscribed by some forty or more gentlemen interested in the movement, chiefly through the solicitation of the late Governor Joseph A. Gilmore. A contract was made with P. B. Cogswell and George H. Sturtevant, book and job printers, under the firm-name of Cogswell & Sturtevant, to print and publish an evening daily, for a fixed compensation, for a specified number of copies, they to have no editorial responsibility. On May 23, 1864, the Concord Daily Monitor made its appearance from the office of Cogswell & Sturtevant, and bearing their names as publishers. The services of the late William S. Robinson, then clerk of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, were secured for a few weeks as editor, and J. M. W. Yerrinton as legislative reporter. The paper published full telegraphic reports, and made a special point of giving news from the New Hampshire soldiers in the field, which helped to increase its circulation.

It is perhaps needless to say that all the verbal conditions of the contract for publishing the paper were broken almost from the start, and the promised written contract was never furnished. The local editorial work fell at once upon the senior publisher, and at the end of six or seven weeks Mr. Robinson returned to his home, and J. Henry Gilmore, the private secretary of his father, Governor Gilmore, assumed the editorial work in part, and continued his connection with the paper about one year. Of the subscribed guaranty, only about one-half was ever collected, and not a dollar of it was ever received by the publishers. Near the end of August, 1865, the paper and its accounts were turned over to Cogswell & Sturtevant, in part payment of their claim for printing, and they assumed its editorial and business management, which they continued until January 2, 1867. During the falls of 1865 and 1866, George A. Marden, now of the Lowell Courier, and Speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, was employed in editorial work on the Monitor, and William B. Smart, now of the Boston Post, for a short time in the fall of 1864 had charge of the local work. On January 2, 1867, the Monitor and Independent Democrat offices were merged under the name of "The Independent Press Association" for the term of five years. The association was composed of George G. Fogg, Anos Hadley, P. B. Cogswell and George H. Sturtevant, and they continued the publication of the Monitor and the Independent Democrat, the Weekly Monitor, which had been published for fifteen months, being united with the latter paper—Mr. Hadley retired from the paper after a few months, and part of his interest was taken by S. C. Eastman. On January 1, 1868, the Monitor was enlarged, to accommodate the increasing advertising patronage. In 1870, Mr. Sturtevant sold part of his interest to John W. Odlin, and the association continued without further change until October 1, 1871, when the Republican Press Association was formed.

PARSONS BRAINAUD COGSWELL was born in Hemenicker, N. H., January 22, 1828. His parents were David and Hannah (Haskell) Cogswell, who removed from Gloucester, Mass., to Hemenicker early in 1815, and he was the eighth in a family of twelve children. He was also of the eighth generation of descendants of John Cogswell, ancestor of the Cogswell family, who settled in Old Ipswich, Mass., in that portion now known as Essex, in 1635. His early life was spent in farming principally, occasionally helping in his father's blacksmith-shop. His education was ob-joined in the common school and an occasional term of a few weeks in the academy, until nearly nineteen years old, when he attended Clinton Grove School eight months, under the instruction of Moses A. Carland, a noted teacher and cousin of John G. Whittier. In the fall of 1847 an opportunity occurred for him to gratify a long-felt desire to learn the printer's trade, and November 29th he entered the Independent Democrat office, then owned by Hon. George G. Fogg (afterwards minister to Switzerland and United States Senator) and Joseph E. Hood (afterwards on the editorial staff of the Springfield Republican for many years). In the spring of 1849 he was employed in the New Hampshire Patriot office, and continued there for three years, with the exception of six weeks in the Gloucester Telegraph office at the close of 1849. In 1852 he entered the employ of Tripp & Osgood as a book compositor, and so continued for two years. Later, in March, 1854, in company with A. G. Jones, he purchased the printing-office of Tripp & Osgood, and the partnership continued for some four and one-half years, when he conducted the business alone for several years. May 23, 1864, in company with George H. Sturtevant, he started the Concord Daily Monitor, which was the first permanent daily paper published in Concord, and has been connected with it ever since, as local, associate and managing editor, holding the latter position at the present time. The weekly issue is the Independent Statesman, and the papers are owned and published by the Republican Press Association, he being the second largest owner in the stock of the same. He was elected a member of the superintending school committee of Union School District, which embraces the compact part of the city of Concord, known as the State-House Precinct, in March, 1858, and when the Board of Education of the district was created, in August, 1859, he was chosen for a two-years' term, and has been successively re-elected since for nine terms of three years each. For eighteen years he served as financial agent of the board, and is president of it at the present time, it being his fourth year of service in that capacity. He was elected a Representative to the Legislature from Ward Four in 1872 and 1873, and State printer in 1881 and 1883, and served as one of the State auditors of printers' accounts and trustee of State Library for several years. He has been a member of the New Hampshire Historical Society for many years, four of which he was its secretary; is a member of the New Hampshire Antiquarian Society; was president of the New Hampshire Press Association in 1872, '73, '74, '75, and recording secretary of the same since 1876; and is a charter member of the Appalachian Mountain Club, Boston. He spent nearly a year in the Old World in 1878-79, and his letters to his papers were published in an octavo volume of four hundred and fifty-five pages, under the title of "Glimpses from Over the Water."

THE REPUBLICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION which was formed Oct. 1, 1871, bought the papers and business of the Independent Press Association and of the Republican Statesman proprietors, and consolidated the two offices. The publication of the Concord Daily Monitor has ever since been continued by the Republican Press Association, and its circulation has yearly increased, and bids fair to continue to do so in the future.

At the time of the consolidation of the papers, George G. Fogg was chosen political editor, Rossiter Johnson managing editor and P. B. Cogswell local editor, with Edward A. Jenks business manager. Early in 1872, Mr. Fogg retired from editorial labor and from the association, and in October 1st of the same year Mr. Johnson also retired. No one was selected to fill his place for a few months, Asa Fowler, then president of the association, performing considerable editorial work. In January, 1873, William E. Stevens became managing editor, and so continued until the middle of August, 1882, when he retired to accept the United States consulship at Smyrna. Allan M. Jenks was local editor during the absence of Mr. Cogswell in 1878-79, a period of more than a year. At the present time the editors are P. B. Cogswell, who has been connected with the paper from the first number, and Edward N. Pearson. The Monitor was enlarged for the second time March 28, 1882, and a third time March 15, 1884, when it commenced a morning edition, also, which was continued till November 15, the same year.

Of the struggles of the paper during its early years it is not necessary to speak in detail. Commenced, as it was, when war prices ruled in everything,—white paper costing from twenty-seven to thirty cents a pound, and composition by the piece reaching a higher price than ever before or since,—nothing but hard work and a great deal of it carried it through successfully, and made it the first permanent daily paper in Concord.

CONCORD DAILY BLADE was started by the Blade Publishing Company September 1, 1880, and discontinued December 7, 1880. Subsequently, the Weekly Blade was published by E. P. Gerould, for some time, when it was suspended, and afterwards resuscitated as the Concord Tribune, since which it has been published in Canaan and Concord.

CHAPTER IV.

CONCORD—(Continued).

BANKS, ETC.

The Concord Bank—The Mechanics' National Bank—National State Capital Bank—First National Bank—The New Hampshire Savings-Bank—The Merrimack County Savings-Bank—Loan and Trust Savings-Bank—Pencook Savings-Bank—Count. Rumford—Committee of Rumford—The Rolfe and Rumford Asylum—The New Hampshire Bible Society—Physicians—City Hospital—Fire Department—Water Works—Pencook—Concord Horse Railroad—Contemarians—Slavery in Concord—Manufacturing Interests—Miscellaneous.

The first banking institution in this town was the Concord Bank, which was incorporated June 18, 1806. "Timothy Walker, Caleb Stark, John Bradley, John Mills, Robert Harris, Ebenezer Peasley, Richard Ayer, William Whittle, William A. Kent, Joshua Darling, Thomas W. Thompson, Aquila Davis, John Chandler, Baruch Chase, Joseph Towne and Joseph Clough and their associates" were incorporated "by the name of the President, Directors and Company of the Concord Bank."

In proceeding to organize for the transaction of business under their charter, special difficulties were encountered, growing chiefly, it is said, out of questions of location and management. Already there was a "north end" and a "south end" interest. In the former was Hon. Timothy Walker, and in the latter Colonel William A. Kent, with whom, respectively, others took sides, according to their own ideas of interest. The result, however, was, two banks went into operation under the same charter, one called the Upper Bank and the other the Lower Bank, each claiming exclusively to be the Concord Bank. Of the Upper Bank, Timothy Walker was first president and Samuel Sparhawk, from Portsmouth, cashier. Of the Lower Bank, Joseph Towne, of Hopkinton, was president, and William A. Kent cashier. For several years a disagreeable competition existed between them. On the part of the Upper Bank a run was made upon the Lower, for the payment in specie of their bills. By the Lower Bank, or by persons interested therein, suits were commenced against the other for issuing bills contrary to law; and hence a litigation as to which was the lawful Concord Bank was continued for a considerable time. In 1808 one Nehemiah Jones commenced a suit against Timothy Walker, containing more than a hundred counts, which embraced all the questions at issue. In these suits the late Jeremiah Mason was employed as Jones' counsel. Tradition says that, after a while, Mason, perceiving the difficulties of the subject, and disposed to adjust the matter between the parties, signified to his client "that as he had got into gentlemen's company he must expect to pay a gentleman's price." Soon after, the rival banks came to an agreement, at least so far as to cease from vexing one another; both obtained credit with the public, and continued to do business under one charter till the expiration of twenty years; then the Upper Bank obtained a new charter and took the name of Merrimack County Bank.

The Lower Bank obtained a modification and extension of its charter in 1826, and continued to do business till 1840, when it failed.

The Mechanics' Bank was incorporated July 5, 1834, and charter extended June 22, 1853. Incorporators: Peter Renton, Abner B. Kelley, Horatio Hill, Joseph M. Harper, Nathaniel G. Upham, Abel Baker, Benjamin Evans, William Low, Joseph Low, Cyrus Barton, Ralph Metcalf, Nathaniel Curtis, James Minot, Arnold Carroll, Moody Kent, Ezra Carter, William Richardson, Isaac F. Williams.

Original officers: Nathaniel G. Upham, president; George Minot, cashier. Original directors: N. G. Upham, Peter Renton, Horatio Hill, J. M. Harper, N. Curtis, A. B. Kelley. Original capital, $100,000.

Closed its affairs, 1865. Last officers: Josiah Minot, president; Charles Minot, cashier.

Minot & Co., bankers (Josiah and Charles Minot) commenced business January, 1866.

Reorganized as Mechanics' National Bank January 3, 1880. Capital, $100,000. Officers: Josiah Minot, president; B. A. Kimball, vice-president; James Minot, cashier. Directors: Josiah Minot, Benjamin A. Kimball, Joseph B. Walker, Edward H. Rollins, Chas. H. Amsden, John M. Hill, Sargent C. Whitaker.

Officers, 1885: B. A. Kimball, president; Joseph B. Walker, vice-president; James Minot, cashier. Directors: B. A. Kimball, Joseph B. Walker, Josiah Minot, Charles H. Amsden, Edward H. Rollins, John Kimball, John M. Hill.

National State Capital Bank was originally organized as State Capital Bank January 26, 1853. The first directors were Samuel Butterfield, Abram Bean, R. N. Corning, Hall Roberts, Ebenezer Symmes, Asa Fowler, Enos Blake. Hon. Samuel Butterfield, president; Edson Hill, cashier. Capital stock, $100,000; increased to $150,000 August 28, 1854.

Presidents.—Samuel Butterfield, to 1860; Hall Roberts, from 1860 to 1862; John V. Barron, from 1862 to 1865.

Cashiers.—Edson Hill, to 1858; Jonas D. Sleeper, from 1858 to 1859; P. S. Smith, from 1859 to 1865.

January 1, 1862, the capital stock was reduced to $120,000; January 1, 1863, to $100,000.

The bank was reorganized as National State Capital Bank January 2, 1865, with the following directors: John V. Barron, Robert N. Corning, James Peverly, Jonas D. Sleeper and James S. Norris. President, John V. Barron; Cashier, Preston S. Smith. Capital stock, $100,000; increased to $150,000 April 17, 1865; to $200,000 May 31, 1872, by purchase of bonds and right of circulation of Carroll County National Bank, at Sandwich, N. H.

John V. Barron, president to 1878; Lewis Downing, Jr., from 1878 to present time.

P. S. Smith, cashier to 1872; Henry J. Crippen, from 1872 to 1882; Josiah E. Fernald, from 1882 to present time.

The present directors are as follows: Lewis Downing, Jr., James S. Norris, Lyman D. Stevens, J. Everett Sargent, John H. Pearson, John Jones, Henry J. Crippen.

The First National Bank of Concord was organized in March, 1864, with Asa Fowler, Enos Blake, Edw. H. Rollins, William Walker, Benning W. Sanborn, George A. Pillsbury and Moses Humphrey as directors.

The first president was Asa Fowler, who continued in office until 1867, when George A. Pillsbury was elected as his successor.

In March, 1878, Mr. Pillsbury being about to leave the State for a permanent residence at the West, resigned his office and A. C. Pierce was elected to fill the vacancy, which position he occupied until December, 1882, when, at the advanced age of eighty-two years, he resigned, and William M. Chase was elected and held the office until January, 1885, when William F. Thayer was chosen his successor.

Woodbridge Odlin, the first cashier, held his position but one month when he resigned to accept the appointment of assessor of internal revenue. William W. Storrs was elected to the office, and filled the position until January, 1874, when he was succeeded by William F. Thayer.

The present board of directors are Thomas Stuart, William M. Chase, Solon A. Carter, Charles H. Roberts, William F. Thayer, William P. Fiske and E. H. Woodman.

The bank has a capital stock of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and a surplus of nearly the same amount after having paid dividends of over three hundred and twenty thousand dollars. The report of the comptroller of the currency shows this bank to have the highest per cent. surplus of any bank in the State.

WILLIAM F. THAYER, one of the leading financiers of New Hampshire, was born in Kingston, N. H., March 13, 1816. His grandfather, the Rev. Elisha Thayer, D.D., was pastor of the church in Kingston for a period of more than thirty years, and was a leading and influential citizen of that portion of Rockingham County. The parents of William F., Calvin and Sarah Wheeler (Fiske) Thayer, removed to Meriden, N. H., in about 1855. William F. received his education at Kimball Union Academy, and in 1865 came to Concord and accepted a position as clerk in the post-office, Robert N. Corning being at that time postmaster. He soon became chief clerk, and remained in that position four years. He then spent a few months in the West, and upon his return to Concord entered the counting-room of the Elwell Furniture Company, where he continued about eight months. He then became a clerk in the First National Bank in this city, and his strict integrity, conservatism and financial ability won for him rapid promotion in this institution. He was appointed assistant cashier in 1873, and cashier in 1874. He remained in this position until January, 1885, when he was chosen president.

Mr. Thayer is clerk and director in the Contoocook Valley Paper Company; director, clerk and treasurer of the Concord Cattle Company; director in the Lombard Investment Company; treasurer of the city of Concord since 1879; and treasurer of the Concord Shoe-Factory and of the Hospital Association. He is a Republican in politics, and a member of the South Congregational Church. Mr. Thayer is a member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to Blazing Star Lodge and Mount Horeb Commandery.

October 20, 1874, Mr. Thayer united in marriage with Sarah Clarke Wentworth, daughter of Colonel Joseph Wentworth, brother of Hon. John Wentworth of Chicago, and their family consists of two children, —Margaret and William Wentworth.

Mr. Thayer's career as an officer and manager of the leading discount bank in the city and State (the First National) has been remarkable and highly creditable to his ability as a financier. Entering the institution in 1871, in the subordinate position of clerk, his faithful and efficient service led to his promotion to assistant cashier, in 1873, and to the responsible position of cashier the following year.

His industry, good judgment and pleasing address won for him the favor of his employers and the patrons of the bank, and under his management, as its executive officer, the institution soon attained a leading position among the national banks of the State.

After ten years' service as cashier he was, in January, 1885, elected to the presidency of the bank, in recognition of his great ability and eminent fitness for the position.

There is probably no other instance in the history of similar institutions in New Hampshire where so young a man as is Mr. Thayer has won such a position as he occupies at present, solely upon his merits, which are universally acknowledged by his associates and the community where he has made his reputation.

The New Hampshire Savings-Bank was organized in July, 1830, the incorporators being Samuel Green, Timothy Chandler, Joseph Low, Nathan Ballard, Jr., Samuel Morrill, Nathaniel Abbott, William Low, Jonathan Eastman, Jr., Nathaniel Bonton, Moses G. Thomas and David L. Morrill.

At a meeting held the 21st day of July, 1830, the bank organized with Hon. Samuel Green as president, and Samuel Morrill clerk, with a board of eighteen trustees, viz.: Timothy Chandler, Nathan Ballard, Jr., Samuel Fletcher, Francis N. Fisk, Samuel A. Kimball, Jonathan Eastman, Jr., Nathaniel G. Upham, Isaac Hill, Richard Bradley, William Low, Robert Ambrose, Ezekiel Morrill, Hall Burgin, William Gault, Stephen Brown, David George, William Kent and Richard Bartlett.

John
H. Hayes

The bank has had six presidents—Samuel Green, Joseph Low, Francis N. Fisk, Samuel Coffin, Joseph B. Walker and Samuel S. Kimball—and four treasurers,—Samuel Morrill, James Moulton, Jr., Charles W. Sargent and William P. Fiske.

The present organization is as follows: President, Samuel S. Kimball; Treasurer, William P. Fiske; Trustees: Samuel S. Kimball, Joseph B. Walker, Jesse P. Bancroft, Francis A. Fiske, Seth Eastman, Enoch Gerrish, Sylvester Dana, Moses H. Bradley, John Abbott, John H. George, Mark R. Holt, Charles T. Page, John H. Stewart, George H. Marston, Parsons B. Cogswell, Oliver Pillsbury, William G. Carter, John C. Thorn.

The deposits of the bank amount to $2,350,000, with six thousand one hundred and twenty depositors; a guaranty fund of $125,000, and an undivided surplus of $118,000. The bank has paid its depositors, during the fifty-five years of its existence, $1,343,095.30 in dividends, and $156,321.32 in extra dividends, the rate of interest being at four and five per centum per annum during this period.

The Merrimack County Savings-Bank was incorporated July 2, 1867, and organized May 3, 1870. The first officers were as follows: President, Lyman D. Stevens; Vice-President, David A. Warde; Secretary and Treasurer, John Kimball; Trustees: John M. Hill, Abel B. Holt, Woodbridge Odlin, George A. Cummings, Calvin Howe, Moses T. Willard, E. W. Woodward, William M. Chase, Henry McFarland, George W. Crockett, Daniel Holden, Isaac A. Hill, Benjamin A. Kimball. Lyman D. Stevens is the only president, and John Kimball the only treasurer, from the organization to the present time.

The first deposit was made June 1, 1870, by Isaac Andrew Hill, of Concord. The amount of deposits, June 1, 1885, was $797,665.17; the amount of surplus, June 1, 1885, was $60,000.

The present board of trustees are Lyman D. Stevens, William M. Chase, John Kimball, John M. Hill, Woodbridge Odlin, George A. Cummings, James L. Mason, George W. Crockett, Daniel Holden, Isaac A. Hill, Leland A. Smith, Lysander H. Carroll, Benjamin A. Kimball, Henry W. Stevens, Charles H. Amsden.

The present officers are: President, Lyman D. Stevens; Vice-President, William M. Chase; Secretary and Treasurer, John Kimball; Teller, Frank P. Andrews.

Loan and Trust Savings-Bank was incorporated at the June session of 1872, with the following incorporators: J. Everett Sargent, Asa Fowler, George G. Fogg, William Butterfield, John V. Barron, James Peverly, Nathaniel White, James S. Norris, Calvin Howe and others.

Hon. J. Everett Sargent was elected president at the first meeting of the bank, and has held the office ever since. John V. Barron was first treasurer, holding the office till 1878.

George A. Fernald treasurer from 1878 to present time.

The present trustees are J. Everett Sargent, James S. Norris, Lewis Downing, Jr., John F. Jones, Silas Curtis, Howard A. Dodge, John H. Barron, George A. Fernald, Leander W. Cogswell, William K. McFarland, Paul R. Holden and Howard L. Porter.

Committee of investment,—Sargent, Norris, Downing, Jones and Dodge.

The amount of deposits May 2, 1885, was $1,561,828.17.

The amount of assets, same date, was $1,689,758.25.

The Penacook Savings-Bank was incorporated in 1869. The original incorporators were Isaac K. Gage, Henry H. Brown, Calvin Gage, Henry H. Amsden, John S. Brown, Nehemiah Butler, William H. Allen, John C. Gage, David A. Brown, Ezra S. Harris, John Sawyer, Austin G. Kimball, Moses H. Bean, John S. Moore, John A. Holmes, Healy Morse, Samuel F. Brown, George Hepler and David Putnam and associates.

The following were the first board of trustees: Nehemiah Butler, Henry H. Amsden, Henry H. Brown, Isaac K. Gage, John C. Gage, John A. Holmes, John Sawyer, John S. Moore, Ezra S. Harris, W. H. Allen, Enoch G. Wood, John C. Linchan, David Abbott, Moses U. Bean, John S. Brown.

The first meeting to organize was held August 14, 1869. Henry H. Brown was chosen president, and held the office until his death, in September, 1873. Isaac K. Gage was chosen president October 13, 1873, and is the present incumbent.

Samuel F. Brown was chosen treasurer and secretary at the organization of the bank, and has continued in that capacity to the present time.

The present board of trustees are Isaac K. Gage, John S. Brown, Charles H. Amsden, Charles E. Foote, Thaddeus O. Wilson, John A. Coburn, Rufus D. Seales, Charles H. Sanders, William H. Allen, John C. Linchan, Nathaniel S. Gale, Charles M. Rolfe, John E. Rines, Abial W. Rolfe.

In December, 1878, on account of losses by a failure in the place, also a law-suit pending, the court ordered a scale down of deposits of thirty per cent. In July, 1881, fifteen per cent. of scale down was restored to the depositors.

Depositors continued still to withdraw their deposits, so that in April, 1884, the bank commissioners petitioned the court to appoint an assignee to close up the bank. The court appointed E. H. Woodman and S. F. Brown assignees.

After the scale down of the old account in 1878, a "new account" was opened to those who wished to deposit, which is operated by the officers of the bank at the present time; this new account has never been large, never exceeding thirty-five thousand dollars, and is gradually being withdrawn, the depositors receiving their principal and interest in full.

Count Rumford. A history of this town would not be complete with the name of Major Benjamin Thompson (afterwards Count Rumford) omitted. In 1775 the spirit of liberty ran high, and Major Thompson seems to have fallen under suspicion of Toryism, which finally resulted in his flight from the town. He was a native of Woburn, and in 1775 had been in Concord about three years engaged in teaching school. He married Sarah, widow of Colonel Benjamin Rolfe,¹ and daughter of Rev. Timothy Walker. In 1774 he received a commission as major in the New Hampshire militia from Governor John Wentworth; but as Governor Wentworth was known to favor the cause of the crown, the people became suspicious of Major Thompson because he held a commission under him. Other slight causes increased the feeling against him in the minds of his fellow-townsmen, and he finally left Concord and placed himself under the protection of General Gage, in Boston.

His subsequent fortunes (says Dr. Bouton, in speaking of this remarkable personage) are the most remarkable that ever attended any person whose name is recorded in our history. Driven by unreasonable suspicions from his home, his wife and infant child, forsaking his native country for a foreign service, he became the associate of princes, the honored favorite of kings and the commander of armies. As the promoter and founder of public institutions of learning and beneficence, his genius shone resplendent among the literati and philosophers of Europe. His name, invested with honors which royalty alone can confer, is transmitted to posterity as that of the friend of mankind.

In January, 1776, he was entrusted by General Gage with dispatches to Lord Germaine, in England, then Secretary of State for the department of the colonies. In 1780 he was appointed under-secretary in that department. Toward the close of the Revolutionary War he obtained the commission of lieutenant colonel, and was sent to New York in command of a regiment. In 1781 the King conferred on him the honor of knighthood. Subsequently he went to Germany, and at Strausbourg was introduced to Prince Maximilian, and then to His Serene Highness, the Elector Palatine, reigning Duke of Bavaria. From the Elector he received all the honors that could be conferred, and, among others, that of Count "of the holy Roman Empire," to which Mr. Thompson added the title, Rumford, in remembrance of his former residence. Under the patronage of the Elector, Charles Theodore, he introduced great improvements in the condition and discipline of the army. At Munich, in 1790, he suppressed the system of mendicancy which widely prevailed, and provided houses of public industry, in which beggars were supported and required to labor. Two thousand and six hundred of this class were put in in a single week, and the industrial establishment for them, which at first was supported by voluntary contributions, came to yield to the State a net income of one hundred thousand florins. In grateful remembrance of his services and benefactions, a monument is erected in Munich to his honor. Inscribed beneath his bust is the following:

"To him
Who rooted out the greatest of public evils,
Idleness and Mendicancy;
Rebellowed and instructed the Poor,
And founded many institutions for the education of our Youth.
Go, wanderer,
And strive to equal him
In Genius and Activity, and in His GRATITUDE."

On the other front is inscribed,—

"Stay, Wanderer!
At the creative bid of Charles Theodore,
Reverently the Friend of Mankind,
By Genius, Taste and Love inspired,
Changed this once desert place
Into what thou now beholdest."

He became almost the object of idolatrous regard by the poor. At one time, when dangerously ill, they formed processions, and went to the church to pray for his recovery. When sick at Naples they devoted an hour each evening to join in supplications for his restoration to health. About 1794¹ he sent to this country for his daughter, who met him in England, accompanied him to Munich, and for several years afterwards shared his fortunes. For his services in Bavaria the Elector settled on him a pension for life of nearly two thousand dollars, one-half of which descended to his daughter, as Countess of Rumford, during her life. Returning to England, he assisted in putting in operation the society known as the Royal Institution, in London, about 1799. He afterwards located himself at Paris, married the widow of the celebrated chemist, Lavoisier, and with her resided at Auteuil, on the estate of her former husband, where he died of fever, August 21, 1811, in the sixty-second year of his age.

He bequeathed the annual sum of one thousand dollars to Harvard College, with other reversions, to found the Rumford professorship. To the American Academy he also made a liberal bequest.

Sarah, Countess of Rumford, was born in Concord, October 18, 1774. A portion of her early life was spent with her paternal grandmother, at Woburn. After the death of her mother, in 1792, she went to Europe, at her father's invitation, and was introduced into the polite and fashionable circles of Bavaria, of Paris and of London. Between the death of her father and her own decease she visited this country two or three times; but her principal residence was at Brompton, near London, in a house which she inherited from her father. A portion of her time she spent in Paris, where she had funds invested. In 1845 she returned to the spot where she was born, to live and—to die. Occasionally the countess attended public worship at the North Church, and visited her family relatives and friends, but spent most of her time in adorning the grounds about her house. By her habits of strict economy the property she inherited, together with her pension of about one thousand dollars, had accumulated to a very considerable sum at the time of her decease, all which she disposed of by will, partly to family connections, but mostly for charitable objects, as follows:

¹ Colonel Benjamin Rolfe was one of the most prudent and influential of Concord's earliest citizens. He was born in Newbury, Mass., in 1730, and was graduated at Harvard College in 1757. He came to Concord to settle, and from 1761 to 1770 was clerk of the proprietary. In 1770 he was made clerk of the Massachusetts and New Hampshire land commissions, appointed to determine the line between the two colonies. He was also for many years town clerk, a colonel of the militia, and a representative in the General Assembly. He died in 1811, and his property, and was ever active, not only in his own town, but in that of his town and province, as well.

¹ Perhaps as early as 1792.

To the Rolfe and Rumford Asylum, in Concord, which she founded, $5000; with all her real estate, appraised at $5000; to the New Hampshire Asylum for the Insane, $15,000; to the Concord Female Charitable Society, $2000; to the Boston Children's Friend Society, $2000; for the Fatherless and Widows' Society, Boston, $2000.

Several rare paintings, which she inherited from her father, were given to Joseph B. Walker, Esq., of this city.

The Rolfe and Rumford Asylum was opened for the reception of beneficiaries January 15, 1880. Its benefits are confined to native female children of Concord.

The germinal idea of this institution may probably be found in a circumstance which occurred more than eighty years ago at Munich, in Bavaria, where Count Rumford, then in the service of the reigning Elector, was living with his daughter.

One of the most important enterprises which the count had originated, and carried to full success in that country, was the establishment of an institution known as the House of Industry. Through its agency large numbers of idle beggars had been converted to respectable and self-supporting citizens. It became very popular, and excited much interest in all Europe.

To pay her respects to her father, on his forty-fourth birthday, the countess called upon him on the 26th of March, 1797, accompanied by a dozen boys and girls from the House of Industry. The count was so much affected by this incident that he resolved that it should not be forgotten. He made the countess a present of two thousand dollars in three per cent. stock of the United States, the income to be appropriated to clothe, annually, October 25d, forever, twelve poor and industrious children. The count and countess decided that the place for the bestowal of this charity should be the town of Concord.

Some correspondence took place with the selectmen of Concord in relation to the subject, but nothing further was done during the life-time of the count. His daughter cherished through life the purpose of ultimately carrying into effect the original design of her father, or of establishing some equivalent substitute for it.

By her will, she gave to it all her real estate and a cash endowment of fifteen thousand dollars. The latter, deemed inadequate for the support of the institution contemplated, has been carefully cared for, and now forms a fund affording an income sufficient for its support.

The building thus far used was formerly the mansion-house of the Rolfe and Rumford families. In it the founder was born, October 18, 1774. In it, after a long and varied life in this country and in Europe, she died, December, 1852.

About 1764, Colonel Benjamin Rolfe erected on the west bank of the Merrimack, at the Eleven Lots, the house now occupied by this institution. For that time and this locality it was an elegant mansion, and the best, doubtless, in this section of New Hampshire. Soon after its completion, wearied of his bachelor life, he married Sarah, eldest daughter of the town minister, Rev. Timothy Walker, and set up therein his household gods. At the time of their marriage he was some sixty years of age, and his wife about thirty. They had lived together but two or three years when Colonel Rolfe died, leaving to his widow and their only son, Paul, the largest landed estate in Concord.

The asylum was incorporated as the Rolfe and Rumford Asylum, July 3, 1872, the following persons being named a body corporate: Joseph B. Walker, Ebenezer S. Towle, Enoch Gerish, Jesse P. Bancroft and Francis A. Fisk.

New Hampshire Bible Society.¹—The suggestion to form a Bible Society for the State of New Hampshire was first made at the meeting of the General Association of Congregational Ministers, at Exeter, in 1810.

The next year, at the meeting of the same body, at Dunbarton, it was decided to form such a society. A committee was appointed to prepare an address to Christians of all denominations, inviting them to unite in such an organization, to draw up a constitution and to call the first meeting of the society. This meeting was held in Concord, June 3, 1812. The constitution reported was adopted, and the following officers were chosen: Hon. John Langdon, president; Rev. Seth Payson, D.D., vice-president; Rev. John H. Church, secretary; Jonathan Wilkins, Esq., treasurer; Daniel Emerson, Esq., Rev. Joseph Smith, Major John Mills, Rev. Reed Page, directors.

The object of the society was "to promote the more extensive distribution of the Holy Bible." This was to be pursued by distributing, gratuitously, among the destitute and needy, and by selling at reduced price to all, Bibles and Testaments.

¹By Rev. F. D. Ayer.

The method of work adopted, was to carry copies of the Bible to every home in the State, and offer, by sale or gift, these to every family.

The conviction from which the work started has continued it, viz., that every individual, every family, needed the Bible, and, in some way, should have it.

The feeling was that the home and the State could be safe only as the people were familiar with, and obedient to, the truths of God's word.

This widespread feeling gave the society at once the hearty support of the different denominations, and of the great body of the people. In four years from its formation, four thousand six hundred Bibles and one thousand five hundred Testaments had been placed in the homes of the State. This was more than it now seems, for the greater part of the State was new and books expensive.

In 1815 a young man in New Ipswich printed an edition of the New Testament, five thousand copies, and the society purchased one thousand copies, which cost, when bound, fifty cents a copy.

This year Hon. Timothy Farrer received a communication from the president of the New Jersey Society, proposing a union of the Bible Societies of the country. There were then one hundred and thirty local societies.

According to this suggestion, the American Bible Society was organized May 8, 1816, in New York.

Of this society Bibles were purchased, and to it surplus funds donated by the State Society.

Rev. Nathan Lord, in the report of this society in 1824, suggested that Ladies' Bible Societies should be organized, and in a few years there were more than one hundred in the State, the contributions from which were not far from one thousand dollars a year.

County Bible Societies were formed as early as 1828.

The American Bible Society voted, in 1829, to furnish every destitute family in the United States with a copy of the Bible within two years. This society heartily joined in that work, and pledged twelve thousand dollars to aid it. In 1836 it was reported that this society, in the twenty years since the organization of the American Bible Society, had paid into its treasury $16,922.18 as donations, and $18,949.66 for books.

In 1845, Rev. Henry W. Adams was appointed agent of the American Bible Society for New Hampshire and Maine.

In 1850, Rev. Isaac Willey was chosen secretary, with instructions to watch over the interests of the society, and to present its claims at the various public meetings of the different denominations in the State. Rev. Joseph Lane, the secretary for ten years preceding, had, by great fidelity and industry, prepared the way for the work which Mr. Willey took up with devotion and energy.

The annual meetings were held in connection with the General Association of Congregational and Presbyterian Churches without dissent till 1852, when it was proposed to hold them, as mass-meetings, at Concord. The proposition was not adopted till ten years later.

Deacon William G. Brown began his work as agent for the society in 1852, and as agent and superintendent has continued in its service.

Rev. Isaac Willey accepted an appointment as agent of the American Bible Society for New Hampshire, and began work April, 1853.

This society entered heartily into the second general canvass of the whole country, by the American Society in 1856, and entered vigorously into the supply of the State, and contributed to the general fund.

This year it was proposed to form county societies where none existed, and reform such as were inefficient. Rev. Isaac Willey entered earnestly into this work, presenting it to the people and arranging for organization. The plan was to unite all denominations, organize the work, report methods and the work done, awaken interest by discourse and discussion and thus give efficiency to the work, and raise money to carry it on. Fifteen of these societies were organized, and they continue to be of great aid in the work, and the meetings are now, often, gatherings of great spiritual blessing and power.

The work of supplying the State by visiting every family in it is steadily pursued. About one-third of the State is visited yearly, and all the destitute who will, by purchase or gift, accept a Bible are supplied. Each canvass of the entire State reports about seven hundred Protestant families destitute. This work is now under the charge of the efficient superintendent, Deacon William Brown, who has had full care of it since the resignation of Rev. I. Willey as agent in 1873. The faithful labor of Mr. Willey for so many years in all parts of the State is still fruitful of good, and the work for years to come will be largely upon foundations which he laid. He died at Pembroke, October 25, 1883, aged ninety years. The report of 1871 records the death of Rev. Benjamin P. Stone, D.D., who was treasurer and depository of the society for sixteen years.

The third general canvass of the country, in 1866, and the one began in 1882, were accepted, as were the preceding, and this society not only cared for the State, but generously aided in the general supply.

In this last canvass of this State, just completed, the superintendent reports: 246 towns visited; 76,760 families called upon; 794 Protestant families found without a Bible; 4143 copies given away; 18,356 copies sold.

At the seventy-third annual meeting, held in Concord June, 1884, it was reported that the receipts of the society since its organization amounted to $310,667.13. It has distributed about five hundred and twenty-five thousand copies in this State.

The present officers are: President, Hon. Edward Spalding, Nashua; Vice-Presidents, Hon. J. E. Sargent, Rev. Silas Curtis, Rev. Sullivan Holman; Directors, Rev. G. W. Norris, John C. Thorn, Moses B. Smith, A. J. Prescott; Secretary, Rev. F. D. Ayer; Treasurer and Depository, Hon. John Kimball; Superintendent, Deacon W. G. Brown; Auditors, Woodbridge Ollin, Hon. L. D. Stevens.

Physicians.—The first physician in what is now Concord was Dr. Ezra Carter, who settled here in about 1740. In 1742 he married Ruth, only daughter of Captain Ebenezer Eastman, who, at the time of her marriage, was but thirteen years of age. According to family tradition, their first child was born before she was fourteen years old. After marriage Ruth retained her love for childish sports; and, on one occasion, the doctor, on returning home, found his wife playing with other children on the hay-mow.

A DR. EMERY resided here a short time, and moved to Fryeburg, Me.

DR. EBENEZER HANDEY GOSS, of Bolton, Mass., settled in Concord about 1770, and married a daughter of Rev. Timothy Walker. He lived at the north end of Main Street, where Mr. Charles Smart resides; set out the elm-trees before the house; held important offices in town; was surgeon in the army under General Stark; a man of eccentric habits; tall, and of strongly-marked features. He moved to Brunswick, Me., where he died at an advanced age.

DR. PHILIP MACCARRIGAN, of Scotch descent, born in the city of New York, 1746; studied medicine in Haverhill, Mass.; came to Concord, 1768; died August, 1806. He married a daughter of the late Thomas Clough, Esq., of Canterbury. Dr. Carrigan had an extensive practice, and was famous for surgical skill.

DR. PETER GREEN came to Concord in 1772.

DR. SAMUEL ADAMS, from Lincoln, Mass., was a resident in Concord about 1796.

DR. G. GRIDLEY was in Concord about 1798; married a daughter of David George, Esq.

DR. ZADOK HOWE, from Franklin, Mass., was in practice in Concord about twelve years prior to 1814, when he relinquished his business to his partner, Dr. Thomas Chadbourne, and moved to Boston. He was distinguished for scientific skill.

DR. THOMAS CHADBOURNE, son of the late Dr. William Chadbourne, of Conway, came to Concord, 1814; married a daughter of Dr. Peter Green.

DR. BENJAMIN PARKER, from Bradford, Mass., was in Concord a short time—not far from 1818. He lived in a house on Pleasant Street, afterwards owned by Samuel Fletcher, Esq., where the Baptist Church stands.

DR. ALEXANDER RAMSEY, a native of Scotland, delivered lectures on anatomy and physiology in Concord and other places in New Hampshire from 1808 to 1823. He died at Parsonsfield, Me., 1824.

DR. MOSES LONG, a native of Hopkinton, N. H., commenced practice in Concord East village, in 1813. He moved from Concord, 1821.

DR. HENRY BOND was a native of Livermore, Me.; graduated at Dartmouth College, 1813; was tutor, 1815; received his medical degree in 1817. He practiced in Concord from 1816 until 1829, when he removed to Philadelphia.

DR. MOSES CHANDLER, a native of Fryeburg, Me., commenced practice in Concord, 1816; was a surgeon on board of a privateer that sailed out of Portsmouth in 1813. He was a tall, stout, athletic man, and devoted to his profession. He died September 2, 1825.

DR. PETER RENTON came from Scotland and settled in Concord, 1822. His practice soon became very extensive, both in Concord and neighboring towns. He removed to Boston in 1843 or 1841, where he has an extensive and lucrative practice.

DR. SAMUEL MORRILL, a brother of Hon. David L. Morrill, came to Concord, 1819, from Epsom, where he had practiced nineteen years, and held important offices. In 1826 he received the honorary degree of M.D. from Dartmouth College; was appointed justice of the Court of Sessions for the county of Rockingham, 1821; register of deeds for the county of Merrimack, 1823, which he held till 1828, when he was elected State treasurer. In 1829 he was chosen treasurer of the New Hampshire Branch Education Society; in 1830, treasurer of the New Hampshire Savings-Bank. He was a deacon of the First Congregational Church.

DR. RICHARD RUSSELL resided in Concord about three years previous to 1824, but spent most of his life in practice in Wakefield and Somersworth, at which latter place he died, May 22, 1855, aged about seventy.

DR. ELIJAH COLBY, son of Isaac Colby, of Hopkinton, N. H., born June 18, 1798; graduated at the Medical College in Hanover, 1823, and the same year commenced practice in the East village of Concord. In April, 1838, he moved to New Bedford, Mass.

DR. EZRA CARTER received the medical degree of M.D. at Bowdoin College in 1824; commenced practice in 1825, in his native town; next year he removed to Loudon; returned to Concord in 1828, where he has remained in large practice till the present time. Representative in 1836 and 1837. He was commissioned justice of the peace in 1837; in 1844 and 1845 was president of the Centre District Medical Society, and in 1852 president of the New Hampshire Medical Society. He was father of Dr. William G. Carter.

DR. EDWARD B. MOORE, of Lancaster, practiced in Concord about six months, in 1828.

DR. JOSEPH REYNOLDS came to Concord in 1828.

DR. NATHANIEL WHEAT came from Candia to Concord in 1834, and remained till 1837.

DR. JOSIAH KITTREDGE came to Concord in 1837, remaining a year or two.

DR. ROBERT LAMB, of Sutton, came to Concord about 1837, but remained only a short time. His daughter married George W. Ela, Esq.

DR. THOMAS BROWN was in practice in Concord from 1831 till 1837.

DR. TIMOTHY HAYNES, a native of Alexandria, N. H., born September 5, 1810; took his medical degree at the Jefferson Medical College, in Philadelphia, 1836, and immediately after commenced the practice of medicine and surgery in Concord, where he resided until his death, a short time since.

DR. CHARLES PENSCKNEY GAGE, born in Hopkinton April 5, 1811; took his degree at the Medical College in Cincinnati, Ohio, 1837, and remained in that city a year, when he came to Concord, where he still resides in active practice, and is the oldest physician in the city.

DR. HENRY O. STONE, from Salem, Mass., had an office in Concord in 1845, and remained four or five years.

DR. DANIEL J. HOYT studied medicine with Dr. Peter Reuton, and commenced practice in Concord in 1840; next year he removed to Manchester, where he died July 13, 1847.

DR. ISAAC COLBY came to Concord in the fall of 1839, and remained about one year and a half. In 1854 he returned to Concord.

DR. MOSES CARPER came to Concord, in poor health, 1842. He had a large experience in small-pox, and was usually employed as town physician for persons in that disease. He resided in Concord till 1854, when he moved to Sanbornton Bridge.

DR. JONATHAN C. PRESCOTT came to Concord in 1843. He died, after a most distressing sickness, of disease of the kidneys, February 13, 1844, in the forty-ninth year of his age.

DR. ERENEZER G. MOORE, a native of Dorchester, N. H., came to Concord in 1844, where he resided until his death.

DR. GEORGE CHANDLER came to Concord, from Worcester, Mass., in October, 1842, as the first superintendent of the New Hampshire Asylum for the Insane, and continued in charge of that institution until 1845, when he was appointed superintendent of the State Lunatic Hospital of Massachusetts.

DR. BENJAMIN H. TRIPP came to Concord in 1843. He left in 1849.

DR. WILLIAM PRESCOTT, born in Sanbornton December 29, 1788. He came to Concord in 1845.

DR. MOORE RUSSELL FLETCHER opened an office in Concord in 1845. Here he remained two years.

DR. ANDREW McFARLAND was appointed superintendent and physician of the New Hampshire Asylum for the Insane in August, 1845. In 1850 he made a tour in Europe, and after his return published an entertaining volume, called "The Escape." Dr. McFarland resigned his office at the asylum in 1852, and in 1853 was appointed superintendent of the State Lunatic Hospital of Illinois, at Jacksonville.

DR. JAMES F. SARGENT, born in Warner July 4, 1810; came to Concord 1847.

DR. EBRAHIM F. WILSON came to Concord East village, 1849. In 1854 he removed to Rockville, Conn.

DR. WILLIAM H. SMART was born in Hopkinton April 8, 1810; came to Concord 1849.

DR. EDWARD H. PARKER, son of Isaac Parker, Esq., of Boston, opened an office in Concord 1850; removed to New York.

DR. ALPHIUS MORRILL, a native of Canterbury, came to Concord 1849. He was the father of Drs. Shadrack and Ezekiel Morrill.

DR. BENJAMIN S. WARREN, a native of Peacham, Vt.; graduated at the Medical College in Cincinnati, Ohio; came to Concord in 1849, and is still in practice.

DR. JOHN EUGENE TYLER was superintendent of the New Hampshire Asylum for the Insane, at Concord; was born in Boston December 9, 1819.

WILLIAM H. HOSMER graduated from Dartmouth College in 1838; has practiced in Fisherville thirty-seven years.

C. A. LOCKERBY, Dartmouth Medical College, settled here in 1854.

J. P. BANCROFT graduated from Dartmouth Medical College in 1845; was superintendent of the State Insane Asylum for years.

C. C. TORLIFE, Fisherville, since 1858.

H. G. McINTIRE graduated from Harvard Medical College; settled here in 1860.

J. H. GALLINGER graduated from Ohio Medical College in 1858; settled here in 1862.

S. C. MORRILL graduated from Harvard Medical College in 1862, and has practiced here since.

G. P. COXN graduated from Medical College in 1855; settled in 1863.

A. H. ROBINSON graduated from Yale Medical College in 1863; practiced here since.

A. H. CROSBY graduated from Dartmouth Medical College in 1857; settled here in 1864.

H. B. TERRELLS, Harvard Medical College in 1835; not in practice.

J. C. W. MOORE graduated from Bowdoin Medical College in 1865, and has practiced here since.

E. W. ARBOTT has been here about twenty years.

MOSES W. RUSSELL graduated from Dartmouth Medical College in 1863; settled here in 1867.

J. W. VARNEY graduated from University of Vermont in 1841; settled here in 1869.

WILLIAM G. CARTER graduated from Harvard Medical College in 1869, and has practiced here since.

E. H. FOSTER graduated from Bowdoin Medical College in 1866; settled here in 1872.

F. A. STILLINGS graduated from Dartmouth Medical College in 1870; located here in 1872.

E. MORRILL graduated from Castleton (Vt.) Medical College in 1857; settled here in 1874.

GEORGE COOK graduated from Dartmouth Medical College in 1868; located in Concord in 1875.

B. R. BENNER graduated from College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, in 1875; was assistant physician at Insane Asylum.

A. R. DEARBORN graduated from Bowdoin Medical College; settled here in 1876.

C. R. WALKER graduated from Harvard Medical College in 1877, and settled here soon after.

D. E. HARRIMAN graduated from Dartmouth Medical College in 1877.

CHARLES I. LANE graduated from Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1878.

E. O. PIERSONS graduated from Dartmouth Medical College in 1878; was assistant physician at asylum.

A. E. EMERY graduated from University of Vermont in 1865; located in Fisherville in 1879, where he is still in practice.

HENRY M. FRENCH graduated from Dartmouth Medical College in 1878; settled in Concord in 1882.

The following is a complete list of the present physicians:

E. W. Abbott, Anson C. Alexander, Jesse P. Bamruff, William G. Carter, Joseph Chase, Jr., A. P. Chesley, G. P. Conn, George Cook, A. H. Crosby, Herbert C. Cummings, Alfred E. Emery, Edward H. Foster, Henry M. French, C. P. Gage, Jacob H. Galtinger, John B. Grimes, E. E. Graves, Mrs. Luanda S. Hall, Robert Hall, Fred A. Holt, W. H. Hosmer, S. D. Marden, Harvey G. McIntire, John C. W. Moore, Ezekiel Morrill, S. C. Morrill, S. C. Notting, Abraham H. Robinson, Julia Wallace Russell, Moses W. Russell, F. A. Stillings, Hiram B. Tiddels, Charles R. Walker, Benjamin S. Warren, Irving A. Watson.

City Hospital.—The first meeting of the citizens of Concord interested in the establishment of a hospital was called July 3, 1884. At a subsequent meeting the Hospital Association was organized, a board of officers elected and a committee appointed to find a suitable location or house for a hospital. The house situated on the corner of Allison and Turnpike Streets was eventually leased for that purpose, for a term of two years from October 1, 1884, with the privilege, during that time or at the expiration of it, of buying the house and land for six thousand dollars.

Early in October work began upon the premises, and changes and improvements have been made since, from time to time, as the necessities of the hospital required.

The hospital opened October 20th, and nine patients have been treated since that time.

The present officers are as follows: Oliver Pillsbury, president; Francis L. Abbot, clerk; William F. Thayer, treasurer. Trustees: For the term ending January, 1886, Henry J. Crippin, P. B. Cogswell, Mrs. Elizabeth P. Schütz; for the term ending January, 1887, John A. White, Joseph C. A. Hill, Mrs. F. C. Stevens; for the term ending January, 1888, Samuel C. Eastman, Mrs. Mary Stearns, Mrs. Lydia P. Lund.

Fire Department.—In about the year 1825 the Fire

Department was managed by what were called "wards," appointed by the town, who, on occasions of fire, bore aloft the distinguishing badge of their office, a staff five feet long, painted red and headed with a bright spire six inches long, with a blue ribbon streaming from the apex. In 1825, and for some years later, there were only two small fire-engines in the main village, one of them called the "Literary," which was worked by a brake, six men on each side, with a hose from twenty to thirty feet in length, without any suction hose. Among the engine-men of 1827 were Francis N. Fisk, John George, John Nast, Dr. Moses Chandler, Jeremiah Pecker, Orlando Brown, Richard Bradley, Robert Davis, Samuel Collin, Charles Herbert, Richard Herbert, Luther Roby (chief engineer, 1827), James Bushnell and S. A. Kimball.

The present Fire Department is one of the most efficient in the State. It is under the management of the Hon. John M. Hill, than whom there is no more capable or efficient fire officer in New Hampshire.

The force of the department is as follows: In the precinct, at the Central Station, two second-class Amoskeag steamers,—“Kearsarge,” with “Kearsarge Hose” (sixteen men), and “Governor Hill,” relief steamer, with “Eagle Hose” (thirteen men). The hose-carriages are both of Amoskeag manufacture, first-class, and drawn by horses. Hook-and-ladder carriage, “City of Concord” (twenty men). All the men in these companies are call men. The permanent employes are steward, assistant steward and three drivers. There are six horses, besides the steward’s horse, always held within reasonable distance to respond to an alarm.

The “Alert Hose” (twelve men), at the north end, and the “Good-Will Hose” (twelve men), at the south end, are each provided with a horse, kept constantly at a hack-stable adjoining the hose-houses. The “Alert” uses a modern department wagon, and the “Good-Will” a second-class Amoskeag four-wheel carriage. Each has the swinging harness. The men are all call men.

The “Pioneer” steamer, at Penacook (thirty men), is a fourth-class Sibley, with a second-class Amoskeag hose-carriage. The steamer can be drawn by horses or by hand, as necessity may require. Horses are held available.

The “Old Fort,” at East Concord, and the “Cataract,” at West Concord, are hand-engines, with jumpers for hose. Their complement of men is thirty each.

The board of engineers consists of chief and three assistants in the precinct, and one assistant each at Penacook, East Concord and West Concord. The entire force numbers one hundred and seventy-five men.

The following is the list of officers of the department for 1885:

Chief Engineer, John M. Hill, Assistant Engineers—Precinct, Joseph S. Morrill, Daniel B. Nowhall, Benjamin F. Tucker; Ward 1, William W. Allen, Walter John T. Lee, Walter H. Harris, Patrick D. B. Newhall, Edward Leonard, Eben F. Richardson, James C. Child, Eric Stratton and Eugene Hild of New Adams, George E. Osgood, assistant of Central Station.

Keosauke Steam Fire-Engine and Hose Company, No. 2.—John J. McNulty, foreman; Charles H. Blanchard, assistant foreman; William C. Brown, clerk; James H. Sanders, engineer; and treasurer, Steamer "Keosauke" is a second-class Amoskeag, drawn by four horses. Hose-carriage is a four-wheeled first-class Amoskeag, drawn by single horse.

Lough Hose Company, No. 1.—Robert Steiner, "Governor Hill," No. 1, is assigned to this company; Charles H. Sanders, engineer; John H. Toof, foreman; George W. Johnson, assistant foreman; James Holt, clerk and treasurer; Steamer "Governor Hill" is a second-class Amoskeag, drawn by four horses. Hose carriage is a four-wheeled first-class Amoskeag, drawn by a single horse.

Alert Hose Company, No. 2.—Charles A. Davis, foreman; Henry Tucker, assistant foreman; Fred. English, clerk; Fred. S. Johnson, treasurer; Fred. Earl, steward. Hose wagon is a modern department wagon of Concord manufacture, W. S. Davis & Son. It is drawn by a single horse.

Good-Will Hose Company, No. 1.—William A. Bean, foreman; John C. Mills, assistant foreman; Frank H. Blanchard, clerk; Samuel D. McLaughlin, treasurer. Hose-carriage is a four-wheeled second-class Amoskeag, drawn by a single horse.

City of Concord Hook-and-Ladder Company, No. 1.—Andrew E. Lane, foreman; Napoleon B. Birtleigh, assistant foreman; Edward E. Lane, clerk; Frank T. Bean, treasurer. Hook-and-ladder truck is of Concord manufacture, Abbott Downing Company. It is drawn by double horses.

Pioneer Steam Fire-Engine Company, No. 3, Penacook.—John H. Belle, foreman; D. Warren Fox, assistant foreman; John B. Dodge, clerk and treasurer; John W. Powell, foreman of hose; George S. Locke, engineer; Enoch E. Belle, steward. Steamer "Pioneer" is a fourth-class Sibley; hose-carriage is a four-wheeled Amoskeag; both drawn by hand or horse.

Old Foot Engine Company, No. 2, East Concord.—Joseph E. Plummer, foreman; Harrison H. Carpenter, assistant foreman; Clarence E. Robinson, clerk; John C. Hutchins, treasurer; Charles C. Chesley, steward. Himmennann six-inch cylinder hand-engine, with hose pump, drawn by hand.

Canaan Engine Company, No. 1, West Concord.—James M. Crossman, foreman; Simon Partridge, assistant foreman; John E. Gay, clerk and treasurer; William A. Martin, foreman of hose; Abner C. Abbott, steward. Himmennann six-inch cylinder hand-engine, with hose pump, drawn by hand.

SUMMARY OF MEMBERS.

IN PRESENCE.

Engineers	4
Steamer and hose members	16
Hose members	47
Hook-and-ladder members	20
Steward, assistant steward and regular drivers	5

82

WITHOUT PRESENCE.

Engineers	4
Members at Penacook	20
Members at East Concord	20
Members at West Concord	20

91

Total

173

Fisherville (or Penacook, as it is now called) is a thriving village, about six miles from the city, and is named in honor of the Fishers, who erected the first mill at this point. It was on an island near here where Mrs. Hannah Dustin, in 1697, killed and scalped ten Indians. The following account of this daring exploit is thus related by Dr. Bouton:

Mrs. Hannah, wife of Mr. Thomas Dustin, was confined to her bed with an infant child, seven days and attended by a nurse, Mary Neff. Hearing the war-whoop of the savages as they approached,

Mr. Dustin ran from the field, where he was at work, to his house, and ordered his children—seven in number—to flee; while he seized his gun, and finding it impossible to remove his wife and infant, mounted his horse and rode after his children—defending them against the savages, who were in pursuit. Supposing it impossible to save them all, his first thought was to catch up one of them—even the one that he loved the most—and save that; but he was unable to make a choice, and, keeping in their rear, he retreated and fired, sometimes with fatal effect, till the Indians gave over their pursuit.

In the mean time a small party of Indians entered the house, took Mrs. Dustin and nurse prisoners, and set the house on fire. The babe was snatched from the hands of the nurse, and its brains dashed out against an apple-tree. Feeble, and with but one shoe on, Mrs. Dustin was compelled to travel through the wilderness, in this inclement season, till they reached the home of her Indian captors, on the island above named. The Indians on the island were twelve in number,—two men, three women and seven children,—and with them an English boy, named Samuel Lannardson, who was taken prisoner about a year before at Worcester.

After a few days the women were informed by the Indians that they would soon start for a distant settlement, and when they arrived there would be obliged to submit to Indian customs, of which one was to run the gauntlet, naked, between two files of Indians. On learning this, Mrs. Dustin formed her deadly plan. She told the boy Lannardson to ask his master where he would strike a man if he wished to kill him instantly, and how he would take off a scalp. The Indian laid his finger on his temple. "Strike 'em there," said he, and then instructed the boy how to scalp. Engaging the nurse and the boy in her plot, they waited the midnight hour for executing it. With tomahawks in hand, they struck the fatal blows on the heads of the Indians as they lay fast asleep. Ten were killed at once. Mrs. Dustin killed her master, and Samuel Lannardson dispatched the very Indian who told him where to strike and how to take off a scalp. A favorite Indian boy was spared, and one of the squaws whom they left for dead jumped up and ran into the thicket. Mrs. Dustin, gathering up what provisions there were in the wigwam, taking the gun of her dead master and the tomahawk with which she killed him, and, to prevent pursuit, scuttling the Indian canoes, except one, she embarked in that, with the nurse and boy Lannardson, on the waters of the Merrimack, to seek their way to Haverhill. They had not proceeded far, however, when Mrs. Dustin, perceiving that they had neglected to take the scalps, and fearing lest her neighbors—should she ever arrive at her home—would not credit her story, hastened back with her companions to the scene of death, took off the scalps of the slain, put them "into a bag, and, with these bloody witnesses of their feat, hastened again on their downward course to Haverhill. There they safely arrived." On the 21st of April following, Mrs. Dustin and her two attendants went to Boston, carrying, as proofs of their exploit, the gun, tomahawk and ten scalps, and received, as a reward from the General Court, fifty pounds, besides many valuable presents from others.

Moses Humphreys

The Dustin Memorial.—On the island at the mouth of the Contoocook River stands the granite memorial erected to commemorate this achievement. The statue was erected mainly through the efforts of Robert B. Caverly, of Lowell, and E. S. Nutter, of Concord. The first step to that end was the conveyance, by Messrs. John C. and Calvin Gage, to Rev. Nathaniel Bouton, E. S. Nutter and R. B. Caverly, in trust, all of the land lying east of the Northern Railroad, upon the island, for the purpose of establishing a memorial. Funds to the amount of six thousand dollars were raised by subscription. The statue and pedestal are of Concord granite, after a design by William Andrews, of Lowell. The sculptors were Andrew Orsolini, James Murray and Charles H. Andrews; the builder, Porter E. Blanchard.

The monument was unveiled June 17, 1874, with appropriate ceremonies. There was a large gathering of people. Addresses were made by Rev. N. Bouton, of Concord; R. B. Caverly, Esq., of Lowell; Hon. G. W. Nesmith, of Franklin; Major-General S. G. Griffin, of Keene; D. O. Allen, of Lowell; Hon. B. F. Prescott, of Epping; Colonel J. H. George, of Concord; Rev. Elias Nason, of Billerica; Charles C. Coffin, of Boston; Rev. W. T. Savage, of Franklin; ex-Governor Onslow Stearns, of Concord, and others. Governor James A. Weston accepted the deed, in trust, for the State.

The Concord Horse Railroad.—This road was organized in 1880, and was running in April, 1881. The road was started with five cars, and now has ten. In 1885 the company added to their stock two steam motors, which are designed to supersede the use of horses. The line extends from South Main Street, or the "South End," as this part of the town is called, through West Concord to Penacook. Hon. Moses Humphrey is president and superintendent.

HON. MOSES HUMPHREY, ex-mayor and one of Concord's leading citizens, was born in Hingham, Mass., October 20, 1807; son of Moses Leavitt and Sarah (Lincoln) Humphrey, who were descendants of the first settlers of that ancient town. He attended the common schools of his native town until 1821, when he commenced following the sea, at that time a leading branch of industry of Southeastern Massachusetts. He continued in this occupation twelve years, seven of which he was master of the schooners "Ann" and "Climax," of Hingham, and other vessels. He then, in company with his brother, engaged in commerce, — owning a number of vessels, — the mercantile business and coöperation on an extensive scale, and the practical management of the business devolved upon Mr.

Humphrey. He was the originator of the manufacture of "kits" by machinery, and upon his removal to Croydon, N. H., in 1843, commenced their manufacture, which was continued there until 1851, when he removed the business to Concord, where he has conducted it to the present time, and from that time to the present has been prominently identified with the progress of the city. He was a member of the first City Council in 1853, and in 1851 was elected president of the Council; in 1855 was elected to the Board of Alderman, and during Mayor Clement's sickness for several months, Mr. Humphrey was chairman of the board and acting-mayor. He was re-elected in 1856. In 1857 was a member of the House of Representatives, and chairman of the committee on towns and parishes. In 1860 was elected president of the Merrimack County Agricultural Society, and held the position several years. He was chosen a director in the First National Bank in 1864.

In March, 1861, Mr. Humphrey was elected mayor, and, in March following, upon the eve of the breaking out of the Rebellion, was sworn into office. President Lincoln's first call for troops occurred soon after, and Mayor Humphrey at once suggested to Captain Sturdevant, a prominent police officer, that he recruit a company for immediate service, which was done, and mustered into the United States service as Company A of the First Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteers. Concord subsequently became the headquarters of the army for the State, and was also the general recruiting station. Here were rendezvoused the First, Third, Fifth, Ninth, Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth and Sixteenth Regiments. This brought together different elements of society, and devolved great responsibility upon the head of the city government. The June session of the Legislature in 1861 passed an act authorizing cities and towns to pay State aid to volunteers. The cities generally appointed agents to disburse this fund, but in this city the duties were assumed by Mayor Humphrey, who paid out the sum of $23,330.29. He discharged the duties of this trying period with courage and to the welfare and honor of his adopted city. In addition to the duties which the war devolved upon him, he was also overseer of the poor, superintendent of highways and bridges, etc. He was, also, the city's authorized agent for filling the quotas in 1861, '62 and '65, and, at the close of his administration in 1862, he had eighty-two men credited to the city above the quotas. He was also chairman, in 1863, of the High School building committee. He was re-elected mayor in 1865.

He was foremost in the movement which resulted in the rebuilding of the State-House in 1865, and in the following year he was appointed by Governor Smyth one of a committee to build the State-House fence, beautify the grounds, etc. The labor of this committee, however, chiefly devolved upon Mayor Humphrey. He was a member of Governor Stearns' Council in 1869, and was an earnest advocate of the movement for building the new State Prison, and also for changing the method of appointment of the warden, transferring the power from the Legislature to the Governor and Council. He has also represented Ward Five in the Legislature, and has been chairman of the Board of Agriculture since 1870. Mayor Humphrey is the present president and superintendent of the Concord Horse Railroad, and the success of this enterprise is largely due to his untiring efforts. Although beyond the scriptural age of threescore and ten, he still retains the vigor and elasticity of youth. He is a Republican in politics, and a member of the Universalist Church.

In 1831, Mayor Humphrey united in marriage with Lydia Humphrey, and they had one daughter, who died in 1850. Mayor and Mrs. Humphrey celebrated their "golden wedding" in 1881.

Centenarians. The following is a list of centenarians who have died in Concord:

Elizabeth (Abbott) Hazeltine, died February 25, 1834; daughter of Nathaniel Abbott, one of the original proprietors of Concord (then Penacook), where she was born July 1, 1733.

Mrs. Willey died in Concord April 11, 1847, aged one hundred years, three months and seventeen days.

Theodosia Smith died in Concord, 1839, aged one hundred and one years.

Lydia (Goodwin) Elliott died June 24, 1856, aged one hundred and three years, four months and twenty-five days; born in Newton, Mass., January 30, 1753. One of her brothers died at the age of ninety-seven; one sister at ninety-nine years and eight months, and one at ninety-seven; another was living in January, 1853, at the age of ninety-six; four of her children, seventy grandchildren, one hundred great-grandchildren, and at least eight great-great-grandchildren were living at her centennial.

Margaret (Sargent) Evans died March 28, 1877, aged one hundred and one years, eight months and twenty-one days. She was born in Chester July 7, 1775; of her eight children, four survived her, two of the number being over seventy years of age. She had been a resident of Concord nearly eighty years.

Slavery in Concord. In the early days slavery was not unknown in this section, as the following documents show:

"Concord, March 4, 1767.

"Received of Andrew McMillan the sum of forty-seven pounds five shillings, lawful money, in full consideration for my Negro Boy slave who he was aged about eleven years, which Negro Boy I have this day sold to the said McMillan, and promise to warrant and defend the property of said Negro Boy to him, the said McMillan, and his heirs forever, against the claims of any other person or persons whatsoever."

"Witness my hand and seal, this 4th day of March, 1767."
"PATRICK X GALLY, MAYOR."

"In presence of P. BARKER, J. WALKER, and J. BOWERS."

"Billed for by D. C. Second.

"Know all Men by these Presents,

"That I, Patrick Gally, of Chester, in His Majesty's Province of New-Hampshire, in N. w. England, husbandman, for and in consideration of the sum of twenty pounds, lawful money, to me in hand before the delivery hereof, well and truly paid by Andrew McMillan, of Concord in the Province aforesaid, the receipt whereof I do hereby acknowledge, have bargained and sold, and by these presents do bargain and sell unto him, the said Andrew McMillan, my Negro girl named Joan, aged about eight years, to have and to hold the said Negro Girl Dinah, by these presents, to him, the said Andrew McMillan, his heirs, administrators and assigns; and I, the said Patrick Gally, for myself, my heirs and administrators, shall and will warrant, and forever defend her, the said Negro Girl, unto him, the said Andrew McMillan, his heirs, administrators and assigns, against all the claims and demands of any person or persons whatsoever, and have put her, the said Negro Girl, into his, the said Andrew McMillan's, possession, by delivering her into him, the said McMillan, at the time of sealing hereof. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal, this 24th day of May, and in the eighth year of His Majesty's reign, A. D. one thousand seven hundred and sixty-eight.

His
"PATRICK X GALLY
mayor

"In presence of us, THASNAH McMILLAN, SAMUEL NOYES."

"Billed for, May 2, 1764.

"Know all Men by these Presents, That I, Hannah Bowers, of Belknap, widow, have sold unto Lot Colby, of Rumford, in the Province of New Hampshire, a mulatto Negro Boy, named Solen, and have received forty-five shillings sterling, in full consideration for the said boy, as witness my hand.

"HANNAH BOWERS.

"Test, JOSEPH WALKER, JOSEPH BOWERS."

The "Negro Girl Dinah" lived to an advanced age, and was known as "Mother Osgood."

The "Boy Caesar" died in 1847 or 1848, in the ninety-second year of his age.

Aaron Stevens had a negro man who was the town "dog-whipper," it being his office to scourge dogs out of the meeting-house on the Sabbath, for which he received a few pennies from such as were disposed to pay him. The faithful discharge of his office afforded fine amusement for the children during Sabbath hours.

Captain John Roach also owned a negro woman.

Deacon Joseph Hall, Sr., had a slave woman who had two children, one named Lois and the other John Brown. John was given to Deacon Jonathan Wilkins, who married a granddaughter of Deacon Hall. John was non compos, and gave the deacon so much trouble that at last he threw him on the town for support.

At one time John was put to hoeing potatoes alone; but it was found he skipped over every other hill. Being asked what he did it for, he said, "So as to keep up." He was once sent to turn out calves from the stall, but, not succeeding in unfastening their yokes, the deacon's hired man turned the calves out and yoked John up.

Of other slaves in Concord about this time, tradition has preserved some interesting reminiscences. Ephraim Farnum, grandfather of Moses H. Farnum, and living on the same spot, owned a black boy named Caesar.

Abraham Bradley had a negro slave named Pompey—commonly called "Pomp"—for whom he paid thirty bushels of corn. "Pomp" was quite a favorite in the family. He was the attendant and sort of life-guard of John Bradley in his boyhood. In his last will Mr. Bradley gave Pompey to his grandson, John, and ordered his executor "to take especial care that my said negro be not wronged by my aforesaid grandson in any ways, and if he should wrong him, I give him power to do him justice." Mr. Bradley also gave Pompey "the use and improvement of one-half acre of land," near his dwelling-house, during his natural life.

Colonel Benjamin Rolfe owned a negro, who, in 1772, when the inventory of Colonel Rolfe's property was taken, was valued at fifty-five pounds, lawful money.

William Coffin, the grandfather of Samuel Coffin, Esq., owned a negro woman named "Lucy." "Sampson," a negro belonging to Archelaus Moore, of Canterbury, wanted her for his wife, and there was an agreement that Sampson should work one year for Mr. Coffin to pay for her. A man's wages at that time were about forty dollars a year, or the price of a yoke of oxen. Sampson was a famous fiddler, and for many years afforded fine fun for frolicsome fellows in Concord with his fiddle on election days.

Rev. Timothy Walker had three slaves,—a man called Prince and two women, Luce and Violet.

Lieutenant Richard Herbert had a slave named Nancy, who was said to have been born in Boston about 1766, and when nine days old was given to a man resident in Bow, who, wishing to remove from the vicinity, brought her to Rumford, and, in 1768, sold her to Lieutenant Herbert for about five dollars.

Manufacturing Interests.—THE PAGE BELTING COMPANY is a representative establishment. The goods manufactured by this company have taken high rank in the commercial world, and branches for the sale of the goods are now established in Boston, St. Louis, New York and Chicago. This company was incorporated in 1872, and has a capital of two hundred thousand dollars. The officers are as follows: George F. Page, president; Charles T. Page, treasurer; George F. Page, Charles T. Page, Theodore H. Ford, Lyman D. Stevens, John Abbott, Benjamin A. Kimball, E. G. Wallace, directors; Daniel Barnard, clerk of corporation; L. D. Stevens, clerk of the directors.

PORTER BLANCHARD'S SONS make the celebrated "Blanchard Chuck," which has been manufactured since about the year 1855. The business of chuck-making, however, has been carried on by the Blanchards, father and sons, since 1818.

JAMES R. HILL, a man who, entirely by his own efforts, rose from the humbler rank of an apprentice to affluence and social position, and through all the changing events of an active business life preserved his integrity unimpeached, well deserves the pen of the biographer. The life of the late James R. Hill is a well-rounded example of such a career. Without the advantages of inherited aid, he worked the problem of his own fortune and lived to enjoy the fruition of a successful business career.

Mr. Hill was born in Stratham, N. H., December 17, 1821. He remained in his native town until 1836, when he came with his parents to Concord. He soon after entered the employ of Abbot & Downing, and later served an apprenticeship with Greeley & Morrill, harness-makers. In 1842, in company with Oliver Greeley, he commenced the harness business under the firm-name of Greeley & Hill. A few years later he purchased Mr. Greeley's interest, and continued the business as sole proprietor until 1865. Several times during this period his establishment was destroyed by fire, but with characteristic energy the buildings were immediately rebuilt. In the mean time Mr. Hill had become interested in various enterprises in the city, which necessarily demanded a large share of his time, and he was forced to relinquish the active management of the harness business, whereupon the firm of James R. Hill & Co. was organized, in 1865, consisting of Mr. Hill, George H. Emery and Josiah E. Dwight; and the fame of the "Concord harness," through Mr. Hill's wise foresight and characteristic energy, became almost a household word throughout the civilized world. Mr. Hill spending a large portion of his time daily in the manufactory, giving his personal attention to the business until his decease.

In 1849 he made the first shipment of harness to California from the East, and in 1853 he made a shipment to Chili.

But it was not solely as a manufacturer that Mr. Hill made his influence so largely felt in this city. He amassed a fortune, which was expended almost entirely in the building up of the city, thereby adding largely to its past, present and prospective growth and advancement. To him, more than to any other man, the city is probably indebted for its substantial business blocks. Among the blocks erected by him were the State, Columbian and Centennial Blocks, etc., and he purchased the Phoenix Hotel property in 1866, and at the time of his death owned more real estate in this city than any other person who has ever lived in Concord. For several years previous to his death Mr. Hill was proprietor of the Phoenix Hotel, and the present reputation for excellence of this popular hostelry is largely due to his judicious management. Although a Democrat in politics and actively interested in the success of his party, he was not a politician and never sought official recognition at the hands of his fellow-citizens. He was emphatically a business man, and his life was one of steady and active devotion to business, and his success was the natural result of his ability to examine and readily comprehend any subject presented to him, power to decide promptly and courage to act with vigor and persistency in accordance with his convictions. At the time of his death he was a member of the Board of Water Commissioners and of Blazing Star Lodge of Masons.

Mr. Hill was twice married, his second marriage being to Miss Sophia E. Pickering, in 1854, who survives him. Also five children survive him, Mrs. Josiah E. Dwight, by his first wife, and the following by his second wife, viz.: Edson J., manager of the Phoenix Hotel, Solon P., Joseph C., and Cora, all residents of this city. The death of Mr. Hill was a peculiarly sad one. September 2, 1884, he was thrown from a carriage in Main Street, Concord, receiving injuries which, ten weeks later (November 10th), resulted in death.

The business men of Concord subsequently held a meeting, to express their respect for the memory of Mr. Hill, and Mayor Woodman was chosen to preside. Upon taking the chair he spoke as follows:

"ellow citizens:—The occasion which draws us together is one of extreme sadness. Our city mourns the loss of one of her foremost citizens, and one whose place cannot well be filled. It is fitting that at such a time we should withdraw from the ordinary routine of business, and give a few weeks in participation of the memory of one to whom our city and our citizens are so much indebted, and whose death is a genuine loss.

"The comparative suddenness of the death of James E. Hill makes it impossible fully to realize the importance of the position which he occupied in this community. It is only a few days since he was with us attending to his customary avocations with his energy and earnestness for which he was particularly noted, to-day he sleeps the sleep that knows no waking.

"His life was no exception to the rule that nothing comes without effort, and to his persistent labor and undoubted will we may largely credit his business prosperity. He was, in truth, a self-made man, and his success has added materially to the growth and adornment of our city. The various business blocks which have been erected through his instrumentality upon our principal streets form enduring monuments to his public spirit, and will cause his memory to be long cherished by all who take an interest in our city.

"When we consider how few of our residents are likely to continue so largely a local investment of their capital, in the direction followed by our lamented townsman, we see that our loss is almost irreparable. But it is not alone for his vital relations to the public that he is mourned by those who knew him as a citizen, a neighbor and a friend. They appreciate his many virtues and revere his worth as a man of strong convictions, earnest purposes, and excellent judgment. He was quiet and unobtrusive in manner, and as his extensive private interests demanded his full attention, he did not seek office, but he had the qualities which would have made him a valuable assistant in the administration of public affairs. His keen perceptions, unyielding courage, business sagacity and untiring energy fitted him for any duty which he could be induced to assume.

"It is in the fullest and sincerest sympathy that I join in the expressions of sorrow and tender tribute to the memory of so good a citizen as James E. Hill.

John M. Hill, Esq., offered the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That we are deeply sensible of the loss to this community from the absence of Mr. James E. Hill, whose connection with the business interests of Concord for a period of more than forty years, has been marked with great industry, ability and enterprise; and who, struggling against the usual adversities of early life, by force and energy of character, out of a small and slender pecuniary foundation, bringing to himself a fortune which he expended liberally in the building up of our city, thereby adding to the wealth and grandeur and prosperity of our community.

"Resolved, That the members and secretaries of this meeting be and they are authorized to call upon the family of the deceased with the view of procuring a suitable epitaph and

The resolutions were seconded by several gentlemen, the first of whom was Hon. J. E. Sargent, who spoke as follows:

"Mr. Chairman: I received an invitation from your committee to be present this evening, and have gladly accepted the invitation. We meet for the purpose of expressing our respect for the memory of the late James E. Hill, who died on the 10th day of November instant, at his home in this city. With the circumstances of peculiar sadness to his family and to the public which attend his death, we are all familiar. We have seen and read a brief biography of him in the daily papers, which I am informed is substantially correct, except that when he was a small boy, his father and family moved to Exeter, N. H., where they lived some dozen years or more, and moved from there to Concord in 1826 or 1827, when he was about sixteen years old. He has lived in Concord ever since, and all his business has been done here. He learned his trade here, and commenced business for himself in 1842, when twenty-one years of age. I am also informed that since the formation of the firm, in 1857, of which he was last a member, while giving up somewhat the management of details, he has, however, had the general management and the paternal supervision of his business down to the time of his injury. Solon was there a day when he was about home that he was not at the shop, looking after the business and making himself useful.

"One additional statement I wish to make to that in the paper—Mr. Hill has had six children, two by his first wife and four by the second. The one not mentioned in the paper was one of the daughters by the first wife, who died a few years since, the wife of Mr. H. J. Eaton, of this city, who left three children, who now reside with their father, and who should be mentioned as a branch of the family tree. The biographical sketch in the paper has told us of Mr. Hill's success in his special business, and also his success and influence as a business man generally; how much Concord owes him for her substantial business blocks and the improvements on its main business street, and too much has not been said in his praise in these particulars. But I do not propose to enlarge in that direction.

"One subject I think is particularly worthy of mention, and that is the relations that Mr. Hill always maintained with his help in the shop. He knew what good work was, and when he found a man that could do good work and understand his business, he kept him. He was willing to pay him such a price that he could afford to stay, and his regular men became attached to him and he always treated them with great kindness and respect. There were no strikes among his men. A man that did not suit him he discharged at once, but if a man suited him, he was willing to make it for his interest to stay with him. I am told that the relations between him and his workmen have always been of the most friendly and intimate kind, and this accounts for the fact that such men as Rollins and Phillips and Chandler and Everett and Kimball and Dunn and Beach and Rivers have been in his employ about twenty-five years each, and some of them more than thirty years, while a large number of others have been there from twelve to twenty years. This is the best evidence in the world not only that these men are good and faithful men, but also that they had a kind and considerate and worthy employer, whom they liked and in whom they had confidence.

"I have known Mr. Hill for more than twenty years, more intimately for the last fifteen years, since I came to Concord to live. Ten years ago I began to occupy an office in his block, and continued its occupancy for five years, was successful in several important suits and have ever since been on terms of intimacy with him. We never exchanged an unpleasant word. I always found him prompt and ready to do everything as he agreed, and nothing would make him more angry than to have a man whom he had trusted deceive him and forfeit his word and his honor. Mr. Hill had his faults, otherwise he would have been more than human.

"The young men and youth of to-day may profit by his example in this, that any calling or trade is honorable if it is honest and useful, honest laborious, and whether mechanical or agricultural. It is not the trade or occupation that makes the man honorable, but the manner in which he follows his occupation.

"Honor and shame from no condition rise;

As well your part, there all the honor lies."

"When Mr. Hill entered the shop as an apprentice to learn his trade how many of the boys and young men of his age here in Concord would have been willing to have done the same? They look for something that they call higher, because it was less laborious, forsooth. But how many of them have done as well as he, even though their advantages may have been much better than his? What a vast majority of them all have made a failure of life, because they were not quite willing to take hold of anything that had hard work in it? Mr. Hill's example tends to enable labor, to make hard work honorable as well as successful. Let the young men of to-day heed the lesson, and remember that nothing valuable can be acquired without labor of some kind, and that manual labor may be just as honorable and sometimes more successful than mental or intellectual work."

James R. Mill

Hon. John Kimball spoke of the relations which he had held with Mr. Hill, as a member of the Board of Water Commissioners, for several years. He was a valuable member, taking active and earnest interest in the business of the board. When it was found necessary to increase the water-works of the city, he was among the first to give his support to the enlargement. Mr. Hill's aim was to build up the city rather than break it down. He was in favor of the best thing to be had at a fair and reasonable expense. He had strong ability to make business, even from small beginnings, to overcome difficulties and win success where many other men with the same opportunities would fail. He had a love for construction of buildings and of making improvements, and in gratifying this love he did not remove good buildings, but built up waste places with new blocks. We are indebted to his ability, industry and strength of character for many of the beautiful buildings that adorn our Main Street.

Mr. Lewis Downing, Jr., said,—

"Mr. Chairman,—I can add only a word to what has already been said, but that is sufficient. I first remember Mr. Hill as being at work in a long, narrow room, in what was called the Williams Block, standing on the site of the present Merchants' Exchange, or if not in that block, in a small shop adjoining, and that must be more than forty years ago. I have known him ever since, and have had business connections with him continually, so I am prepared and competent to say that as a business man he has ever been prompt, reliable and faithful to all his agreements and trusts. He, of course, was ready at all times to make a good bargain, and knew how, or he could not have left such results as he has, and from which the city of Concord has derived so much benefit. The business in which I have been engaged for the past forty-seven years has been more or less connected with Mr. Hill's, and perhaps it may not be unjust to say, that in all probability, but for the success of the one, the other would never have developed itself as it has, as the interests of both were mutual. The founders of the present Abbott-Downing Company were, however, the pioneers, exploring new countries where carriages and harnesses were wanted, but the quality of the work, in both departments, Mr. Hill sustaining his own with unflinching fidelity, was the real key to the success of each. That the city of Concord has been greatly benefited by the enterprise is not to be questioned, when you look at the magnificent buildings erected by Mr. Hill, to which he was continually adding improvements, so that as business citizens we should feel of doing our duty did we not at this time express our appreciation of, and gratitude for, the many benefits conferred on us by our departed friend, James R. Hill. I shall most assuredly join in passing the resolutions offered when the vote is taken."

William M. Chase, Esq., spoke of his relations with Mr. Hill for a period of nearly twenty-one years, during which time he had occupied his present law-office, as Mr. Hill's tenant. He had seen a good deal of the man, and he desired to call attention to one important trait of his character, and that was that while he was attentive to the greater interests of business, he was also attentive to the little things, and was a very hard-working and busy man from early morn to night. Everything received its due attention from him. He has benefited this city not only by building up fine business blocks, but even more by establishing and continuing the firm of J. R. Hill & Co., thus bringing men to our city and giving them employment, whereby the city was the gainer.

WILLIAM P. FORD & Co., iron founders, manufacture stoves, ranges and agricultural implements, etc.

FORD & KIMBALL, brass and iron founders, are doing a large business. This establishment was founded in 1865. The firm consists of Theodore W. Ford and Benjamin A. Kimball.

CONCORD MACHINE-WORKS, Colonel John A. White, proprietor, were established in 1877. Manufacture wood-working machinery.

Other iron founders are Clapp & Co., Concord Axle Company, Hobbs, Gordon & Co., N. P. Stevens.

THE PRESCOTT ORGAN COMPANY was incorporated in January, 1880, with a capital of thirty thousand dollars. This business is one of the oldest established of its kind in the United States. It originated in 1836, although the founder had made musical instruments as early as 1814. The present officers of the company are A. J. Prescott, president; George D. B. Prescott, treasurer; D. B. Conser, superintendent.

THE CONCORD AXLE COMPANY, located at Penacook, was organized in 1880 with a capital of fifty thousand dollars. Its officers are as follows: C. H. Amsden, president; D. Arthur Brown, treasurer; Edmund H. Brown, clerk; Charles H. Amsden, D. Arthur Brown, E. H. Brown, John Whittaker, J. C. Pearson, directors. This company manufactures the original Concord axle.

CONCORD GRANITE QUARRIES.—The quarries of the celebrated Concord granite are located on Rattlesnake Hill, which is literally one vast bed of granite. The superior value of this granite is due to its freedom from all mineral impurities, which so often mar the beauty of this stone.

Among those engaged in this business are Concord Granite Company, Patrick Crowley, Crowley & Quinn, Donagan & Davis, Fuller & Co., Asa L. Gay, Granite Railway Company, Abijah Hollis, M. H. Johnson, Lyman Knowles, Putney & Nutting, Sargent & Sullivan.

THE CONCORD MANUFACTURING COMPANY, of West Concord, was incorporated in 1873. Capital, one hundred thousand dollars. Manufacture all-wool flannels and heavy twilled goods. Capacity, eighteen thousand five hundred yards per week. A. W. Sawyer is president; G. F. Blake, clerk; Daniel Holden, treasurer and agent; P. R. Holden, superintendent.

THE CONCORD MANUFACTURING AND MECHANIC COMPANY is located in Penacook; manufactures of print cloths. Cotton used annually, 300,000 pounds; number of yards of cloth made, 1,600,000; number of looms, 163; number of spindles, 6200; number of hands employed, about 100.

THE PENACOOK MILL is located in East Canal Street, Penacook; John S. Brown, proprietor; manufactures print cloths. Number of pounds of cotton used per year, 525,000; number of yards of cloth made per year, 3,000,000; number of looms, 330; number of spindles, 13,964; number of hands employed, 190.

WILLIAM B. DUBOIS, manufacturer of solid silver-ware, commenced this business in 1854, and it has grown from small proportions to rank among the representative establishments of the city.

THE CONCORD SHOE-FACORY has a capital of twenty-five thousand dollars. Its officers are George A. Cummings, president; W. F. Thayer, treasurer; N. E. Martin, clerk; Oscar V. Pitman, W. G. Shaw, L. D. Brown, Edward Dow, directors.

THE CONCORD CATTLE COMPANY was incorporated in February, 1883.

THE CONCORD GAS-LIGHT COMPANY was incorporated in 1854. Capital, one hundred thousand dollars. John Kimball, president; Sylvester Dana, clerk; John M. Hill, treasurer and agent; William Badger, superintendent; Seth Eastman, John Kimball, John H. George, Josiah Minot, Edward H. Rollins, Sylvester Dana, Josiah B. Sanborn, directors.

The company has laid more than seventeen miles of main-pipe. There are about eleven hundred consumers and one hundred and ninety street lights.

Town Accounts. The following are extracts from accounts from 1771 to March, 1775:

	£	s.	d.
To Abel Chandler, for keeping school and surveying for the parish	11	2	2
To do Timony, for keeping school	10	6
Patrick Condon, for keeping school	17	6
John Blanchard's order for boarding a school mistress	7	6
Rbert Hoag, for keeping school two years at 600	00	0
Francis Abbot, for a wolf's head	10	0
Dr. E. H. Goss, for taking care of Jacob Pillsbury and wife	2	7	8
Rev. Mr. Timo Walker, for procuring the incorporation of Concord	5	5	0
Joseph Eastman, jr., for a wolf's head	0	1	0
Timo Walker, jr., for a set of measures, arrows, beads, articles supplied Pillsbury, and his services as selectman and clerk	7	1	6
Abel Chandler, for surveying	0	6	0
Ben. Timony's order for carrying out a lame man, and his services as selectman	2	8	0
1772 To the Rev. Mr. Timo Walker, for preaching from 20th day of Jan'y, 1772, to 20th Jan'y, 1773	17	1	0
To John Kimball, for making 12 staves for the tything men	0	6	3
To sundry articles supplied Elizabeth Rose and Samuel Walker	1	7	3
To Noah Parker, for one new weight, and sealing the others	0	12	0
To William West, for making nails for the meeting house	0	5	5

From 1774 to 1775:

To Abel Chandler, for surveying roads and taking the census of the people	7	10	6
To do do do, for mending the meeting-house, and for other articles	0	11	0
To do do do, for Est. for purchasing the General Assembly's printing, in—(Hins) Mr. Walker's salary	6	0	0
To do do do, for other for the body of Samuel Walker	0	6	0

Timothy Walker, jr., for his bill against the parish the year 1775	£	s.	d.
Do. for journey to Exeter, to attend the Congress, 5 days at 6s. travel 1s. 6d.	2	13	3
To cash paid John Golding, for the support of the delegates at the Continental Congress, as per rec'd.	1	18	1
To cash paid John Golding, for the support of the delegates at the Continental Congress, as per rec'd.	6	4	0
Rev. Mr. W. Walker, for three journeys to Exeter, to attend the Congress	3	16	0
To cash paid John Golding, for the support of the delegates, as per rec'd.	4	10	0
To a horse the above four journeys, at 6s. per day	1	4	0
To cash paid Mr. John Fosdy, for taking care of Dr. Carrigan, when sick of the small pox, as per rec'd.	3	0	0
To 714 feet of plank for bridges	2	1	0
Abner Nath'l Chandler Abbot	0	2	6

In 1762 the principal merchant in the new town (then Rumford) was Andrew McMillan, whose store was located on the corner of Main and Pleasant Streets. Illustrative of the price of various commodities at that date, the following charges from his ledger are sub-joined:

Rec. Mr. Timothy Walker, master, Dr.

	£	s.	d.
Decemb. To 1 lb. of Colby	1	06	0
" " 1 scan of silk	0	11	0
" " 1 yd. of bearskin, at 8s.	6	00	0
" " 1/2 gall. of wine, at 7s.	1	10	0
" " 1/2 gall. of W. I rum	3	00	0

1764
Jan. 10	To 1 lb. of coffee, by John Colby	1	06	0
" "	" 12 pipes	0	12	0
" 18	" 1 cund, 20s.	1	00	0
" "	" 1/2 lb. of tea, at 12s.	6	00	0
" "	" 1 quart of post paper, at 48c.	2	10	0
Feb. 9	" 4 lbs. of sugar, at 11s.	2	16	0
Mar. 6	" 1 quart rum, at 7s.	2	10	0
" 9	" 1 pint of brandy, by John Colby, 21s.	1	01	0
May	" 1 yd. of blue lawn, by Judith	1	00	0
" "	" 1 handkerchief, by Judith	8	00	0
" "	" 1 pint W. I. rum	0	10	0
July	" 1 gall. W. I. rum, by John Colby	6	00	0
" "	" 1 lb. of powder, by John Colby	1	05	0

By Isaac Ferriss, Dr.

	£	s.	d.
Jan. 13	To sundries brought from old ledger, p. 196, 211	11	6
" "	" 1/2 gall. and pint of N. E. rum	2	19	0
" "	" 1 lb. of coffee, at 26s.	1	06	0
" "	" 1 glass of brandy	0	04	0
" "	" 1 qt. of wine, at 28s.	2	02	0

Feb. 1	" 1/2 gall. of brandy	1	10	0
" "	" 1 pint of brandy	1	04	0
" "	" 1 glass of brandy	0	03	0
" 8	" 2 lbs. of brown sugar, at 11s.	1	08	0
" 16	" 1 glass of brandy	0	04	0
Mar. 1	" 1/2 gall. of brandy, at 28s.	1	10	0
" "	" 3/2 lb. of tansons	1	00	0
" 11	" 1 pair of men's gloves, at 6s.	12	10	0
" "	" 2 pair of woman's black do., at 20s.	5	00	0
" "	" 1 pair of woman's white do.	2	10	0
" "	" 3 yds. of hat straps, at 20s.	7	10	0

By contra. Rumford, January 13, 1763. C)

	By sundries brought from old ledger	£	16	08	8
April 5	" cash	12	17	0
June 6	" cash, in full	31	00	10

By P. W. Coker, Dr. In

	£	s.	d.
1764
Jan. 21	To sundries brought from p. 11	192	15	6
" 22	" 1/2 gall. of brandy	4	10	0

After Timothy Walker, Jr., was licensed to preach, September 11, 1779, he remained in Concord, and was a while in company with Andrew M. Millan.

		£	s.	d.
Jan. 25	" 1/2 gall. of brandy	4	10	0
" 26	" 1/2 gall. of brandy	4	10	0
" 27	" 1/2 gall. of brandy	4	10	0
" 28	" 1/2 gall. of brandy	4	10	0
" 29	" 1/2 gall. of brandy	4	10	0
" 31	" 1/2 gall. of brandy (for medicine)	4	10	0
	" 5 lbs. of sugar	2	16	0
Feb. 4	" 1/2 gall. of brandy	4	10	0
" 8	" 5 do. of thread, at 3s.	0	15	0
" "	" 6 sheets of paper, at 16d.	0	09	0
" "	" 1/2 gall. of snuff	4	05	0
" 11	" 1/2 gall. of W. I. rum	5	00	0
" "	" 1/2 gall. of clove water	1	15	0
" 12	" 1/2 gall. of W. I. rum, half a dollar	5	00	0

John Chandler, Dr.

		£	s.	d.
1765
June 13	To 4 bottles	1	00	0
	" 1/2 bowl of toly	0	07	0
Mar. 11	" 1 1/2 yds. of blue broad cloth, 17s.	25	10	0
	" 2 doz. buttons, at 30c.	3	00	0
	" 8 jacket do.	0	10	0
	" 1 1/2 yds. of blue cambric	6	00	0
	" 1 qt. of rum, at 24s., and 2 bowls of toly	2	12	0
July 22	" 1 gall. of W. I. rum, 6s.	6	00	0

Rev. Timothy Walker, Dr.

		£	s.	d.
1763
Dec. 9	To the balance of your account	26	15	0
	" 3 yds. of red show-banding, by Judith	0	09	0
Dec. 8	" 1 1/4 lb. of chalk, at 30c.	2	10	0
" "	" 2 qts. rum	3	00	0

1764.

Jan'y 2	" 1 lb. of pepper, 18s.	0	18	0
Feb'y 2	" 1 quart of W. I. rum, 35s.	1	15	0
" "	" 1/4 of buckram	0	12	0
" 16	" 1 gall. of W. I. rum, by Mr. Tom	6	00	0
June 2	" 1 1/2 yd. of cambric, by Judith, at 11s.	1	08	0
" "	" 1 patch bowk, at 15s.	0	15	0
" "	" 1 yd. of gauze, and to 1/2 skein of silk	1	04	0
" "	" 2 qts. of rum	3	00	0
Aug. 9	" sundries paid Mr. Paul Barbeau	50	00	0
" 11	" 1 gallon of rum, at 6s.	6	00	0

Concord Railroad.—The first passenger depot of the Concord Railroad was erected in 1849. The present depot building was completed in 1885, and is a large and commodious brick structure, and is supplied with all the modern improvements.

The Penacook Academy was established in 1866. Hon. William H. Gage generously contributed a large lot of land, and the school was opened November 6, 1866, the same year. The first board of instruction consisted of M. Weed, A.M., Mrs. Mary A. Weed and Miss Eliza T. Moore.

The New Hampshire Historical Society¹ was formed at Portsmouth, May 20, 1823. The number of original members was thirty-one, of which George Kent, Esq., the last survivor, died at New Bedford, Mass., in the winter of 1884-85.

An act of incorporation was passed by the Legislature June 13, 1823, and the first meeting of the members under its provisions was held in the council chamber in the State-House on the evening of the same day, when a constitution was adopted. A code of by-laws was adopted at a meeting held at Exeter September 17, 1823.

The object of the society is to discover, procure and preserve whatever relates to the natural, civil, literary and ecclesiastical history of the United States in general and the State of New Hampshire in particular.

John Farmer, Esq., the noted antiquarian, historian and genealogist, was one of its original members, and to his exertions as its corresponding secretary much of its early success is due.

Hon. William Plumer was its first president; his successors have been Levi Woodbury, in 1825; Jehud Bartlett, 1826; Salma Hale, 1830; Matthew Harvey, 1832; Charles H. Atherton, 1834; Joel Parker, 1838; Nathaniel Bouton, 1842; Nathaniel G. Upham, 1844; Samuel D. Bell, 1847; Charles Burroughs, 1849; Levi Chamberlain, 1852; William Plumer, Jr., 1854; Chandler E. Potter, 1855; Edwin D. Sanborn, 1857; Joseph Dow, 1860; William H. Y. Hackitt, 1861; Joseph B. Walker, 1866; Charles H. Bell, 1868.

The semi-centennial of the society was celebrated May 22, 1873, at which time the society's building—then recently purchased and fitted up—was dedicated to its use. A dedicatory address was delivered by Joseph B. Walker, Esq. Addresses were also made by other honorary and resident members, and an ode written by George Kent, Esq., of Washington City, was sung.

The semi-centennial address was delivered by the president of the society, Hon. Charles H. Bell, and a poem written by Edna Dean Proctor was read.

Eight volumes of valuable historical matter have been published by the society, and a ninth is in course of publication.

The library now contains about eight thousand volumes, twelve thousand pamphlets, one hundred thousand newspapers, a valuable collection of manuscripts and a large number of ancient and curious articles, which are kept at its rooms, 212 and 214 North Main Street.

The present number of resident members is about one hundred and fifty.

CHAPTER V.

CONCORD (Continued).

The State Prison—United States Court-House and Post-office—St. Paul's School—Water-Works—Walker House—Mason's—Hotel—F. I. House—Other Societies.

State Prison.—The old State's Prison, on Main Street, was erected in 1811 or 1812 on land given by Joshua Abbot. The location was thought to be secluded, quite out of the way of business and of population. It was erected under the supervision of Stuart J. Park, and was built entirely of granite, quarried from Rattlesnake Hill. It contained originally thirty-six cells. Its cost was about thirty-seven thousand dollars. It was subsequently greatly enlarged and improved.

¹ By D. E. Scoville.

² See appendix.

The present prison is located about two miles north of the State-House, on the road to Penacook, and was completed in 1878 at a cost of about two hundred and thirty thousand dollars. It is a massive and imposing structure. It was erected under the supervision of Prison Commissioners John Kimball, Albert M. Shaw and Alpha J. Pillsbury.

The whole number of convicts in prison is 127.—116 white and 11 black, 126 males and 1 female. Only 35 persons were committed to the prison during the past year, being the smallest number for twelve years.

The earnings of the institution for the year were $18,751.21, and the expenses have been $20,319.25, leaving a balance against the prison of $1,568.04.

The number of prisoners discharged during the year was 48,—7 being pardoned, 36 released on account of the expiration of their terms of sentence and 5 died.

Of the 127 inmates, April 30, 1885, 43 were married and 81 single; 33 claimed to be temperate, and the remainder admitted themselves to be intemperate; 12 were under 20 years of age when committed, 66 between 20 and 30, 31 between 30 and 40, 8 between 40 and 50, and 10 over 50; 109 can read and write, 11 can read only and the remainder are unable to do either; 23 were convicted in Rockingham County, 10 in Stratford, 5 in Belknap, 6 in Carroll, 4 in Merrimack, 33 in Hillsborough, 7 in Cheshire, 9 in Sullivan, 7 in Grafton, 5 in Coos and 18 in the United States Courts; 1 are serving time for murder in the second degree, 4 for manslaughter, 5 for attempt to kill, 2 for rape, 3 for arson, 1 for highway robbery, 29 for burglary, 11 for horse-stealing, 3 for stealing cattle, 3 for forgery, 1 for breaking and stealing, 9 for breaking and entering, 28 for stealing, 1 for stealing from person, 1 for obtaining goods by false pretences, 1 for poisoning cow, 7 for robbery, 3 for attempt to rape, 1 for assaulting officer, 1 for robbing post-office, 3 for being tramps, 1 for false entry in bank ledger, 1 for false affidavit to obtain money and 1 for falsely personating another to obtain money.

Ninety-eight are natives of the United States, 11 of Ireland, 1 of England, 1 of Scotland, 6 of Canada, 2 of Nova Scotia, 2 of Sweden and 3 of Germany. Four were sentenced for 30 years, 1 for 25, 4 for 20, 1 for 15, 1 for 13, 5 for 10, 1 for 9, 4 for 8, 7 for 7, 1 for 6, 15 for 5, 2 for 4½, 13 for 4, 35 for 3, 3 for 2½, 20 for 2, 1 for 1½, 1 for 1 and 7 for 1 year and a day.

The smallest number committed during any twelve-month was 1 in 1812, and the largest 76, in 1878. The total commitments aggregate 2306, of whom 1211 were discharged, 633 pardoned, 149 removed to the asylum for the insane, 189 died and 20 escaped. The last escape was in 1870.

The financial statement is as follows: Earnings,—labor of convicts from May 1, 1881, to May 1, 1885, $17,466.75; visitors' fees, $392.10; rent, $292; board,

United States prisoners, $392.31; gain in inventory, $401.08. Total, $18,754.24.

Expenses,—deputy warden's salary, $1000; physician, $500; overseers, $9761.17; clothing, $1530.23; discharged convicts, $126; furniture, $154.03; subsistence, $3966.36; light, fuel and water, $1450.62; hospital supplies, $261.09; funeral expenses, $38; repairs, $867.87; incidentals, $690.88. Total, $20,319.25; excess of expenses over earnings, $1568.01.

The officers of the prison are as follows: Warden, Frank S. Dodge; deputy warden, Thomas A. Pillsbury; physicians, H. M. French, M.D., C. R. Walker, M.D.; chaplain, Rev. E. R. Wilkins; overseer of cook-room and hall, F. L. Robinson; overseers of shops, F. J. Sanborn, David Sanborn, M. B. Smart, J. B. Groaton, W. H. Stevenson, Fred. Peaslee; guards, S. N. Allen, Fred. L. Sabin, J. E. Morrison, J. A. Pillsbury, Joseph Martin, George M. Colby; night watchman, J. L. Jones, N. W. McMurphy.

United States Court House and Post Office.—June 10th, 1882, Congress made an appropriation of two hundred thousand dollars for an "United States court house and post office" at Concord, N. H. Owing to vexatious delays in securing a satisfactory site and acceptable plans, very little visible progress has been made at the present writing (August 27, 1885). A lot satisfactory to all the citizens of Concord was secured. It embraces an entire square, and is two hundred and twenty-three by two hundred and sixty-seven feet. It fronts on State Street, and is bounded on the north by Park Street, on the west by Green Street, and on the south by Capitol Street. The building is designed to be Gothic in style of architecture, with pitch roof and dormer windows. It will have a frontage of one hundred and seventeen feet. Giles Wheeler, of Concord, is the superintendent, and received his appointment from Secretary Manning. An excavation for the cellar has been made, and a concrete floor laid. The contracts for the building are not yet awarded.

Public Schools.—The history of the public schools of Concord for the first century of its existence as a town is not unlike that of other towns of its population and wealth. Up to 1805 there was no such organization as a school district known to our statutes. The several towns, by their selection or by committees, had been divided into sections for school purposes, as convenience required, and the school money raised by law was parcelled out to them. In 1805 an act was passed which authorized the division of towns into school districts, to be accurately defined and bounded, and empowered to hold meetings and raise money for the purchase, repair and erection of school-houses.

The first school established in Concord was in 1731, and its support was assumed by the town in 1733. It was taught by a master hired by the selectmen, and for many years was kept in four different sections of the town, viz.: East Concord, West Concord, Hopkinton road and Main Street. After 1766 winter schools were supported in each of those localities. The first school-house in Concord was built in 1742, and stood at a point near the northeast corner of the State-House park. There it remained until near the close of the last century, and at the beginning of the present century there were only about nine school-houses in Concord owned by the town.

As early as 1800 an unsuccessful effort was made by the town to divide the territory of Concord into school districts and to raise money for the building of school-houses in such districts. This effort was successfully renewed in 1807. The town appointed a committee of twenty, with the selectmen, to divide the town into school districts, in accordance with the law passed two years before, and that committee reported sixteen districts definitely described.

The first committee to visit schools, appointed by the town, was in 1818, and the report of such committee was first ordered to be printed in 1827, for distribution among the inhabitants.

In 1845 the Legislature passed a law for the establishing of High Schools, and in 1848 the Somersmith Act. In the compact part of the town there were at that time three school districts, numbered nine, ten and eleven, and the school-house accommodations were very limited. An unsuccessful attempt was made, in 1847, to unite the three districts for the support of a High School. In 1850, District No. 10, the central one, adopted the Somersmith Act, and established a High School in a brick building erected in 1846, on the site of the present High School building, School Street, and which was taken down in 1863. In 1856 the effort to consolidate the three districts proved successful, and the result was the establishment of UNION SCHOOL DISTRICTS, from which date there was rapid improvement in our schools and school buildings. At that time the management of the schools was placed in the hands of a prudential and superintending school committee. In 1859 an act was passed by the Legislature authorizing the election, by the district, of a Board of Education, to consist of nine persons, the terms of office of three of whom should expire each year. The object of this was to secure more permanent management of the schools, and avoid sudden change in teachers and methods of instruction. The Board of Education discharged the duties of both prudential and superintending committees, through a financial agent and sub-committee. Their duties becoming onerous with the increase of schools, two attempts were made to place a large share of the work in the hands of a superintendent of schools. In the fall term of 1862 and winter term of 1863, Henry E. Sawyer, principal of the High School, was directed to spend part of his time in the lower grades of school, and did so, performing efficient service in the grading of these schools. In the fall term of 1873, Amos Hadley, a member of the Board of Education, was elected as principal of the grammar schools, with power to supervise the schools of other grades, and continued in that position until March, 1874. In July, 1874, an act was passed authorizing the appointment of a superintendent of schools, and the office has been filled by Daniel C. Allen and Warren Clark, respectively, to August 1st, this year, when Louis J. Rundlett entered upon the discharge of the duties of superintendent.

The following gentlemen have served upon the Board of Education since its creation, the first nine named being elected September 10, 1859, and having their terms of office determined by lot:

Henry E. Parker, David Patten, Josiah P. Nutting, Caleb Parker, John P. Baneroff, Peletiah Brown, P. B. Cogswell, Asa Fowler, Joseph B. Walker, Samuel C. Eastman, Hazen Pickering, John V. Barron, Lyman D. Stevens, Abraham J. Prescott, Amos Hadley, Elisha Adams, William M. Chase, Henry J. Crippen, Albert H. Crosby, Oliver Pillsbury, Charles P. Sanborn, Samuel B. Page, Daniel C. Allen, Warren Clark, J. C. A. Hill, A. B. Thompson, S. C. Whiteher, John H. George, Everett L. Conger, George W. Crockett, Daniel B. Donovan, John C. Thorn, Charles R. Corning.

The present members of the board are P. B. Cogswell, Henry J. Crippen, William M. Chase, George W. Crockett, Charles R. Corning, Daniel B. Donovan, J. C. A. Hill, A. B. Thompson and John C. Thorn. The officers are P. B. Cogswell, president, and Daniel B. Donovan, secretary.

Since the creation of Union School District there has been almost a total revolution in the school-houses of the district. At the present time only three rooms are occupied which were in existence previous to 1856,—two on Union Street and one on Spring Street. In 1858 the Merrimack and Rumford Grammar School-houses were erected; in 1863-64 the High School building and the Bow Brook house; in 1865 the Franklin Street house; in 1870-71 the Penacook house; in 1873 the Plains and Fair-Ground house; in 1873-74 the Walker house; in 1878 the Chandler house. The cost of these houses has been about one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, all of which has been raised and paid by the district, so that it is free of debt.

There were 32 schools in the district the past year, viz.: 1 High, with 4 teachers; 10 grammar, 9 intermediate, 11 primary and one mixed, with one teacher each. There was also employed 1 teacher of drawing and 1 of music. The High School has three courses of study,—English of three years, and academic and clerical of four years each. The number of pupils in the several grades the past year were,—High, 199; grammar, 495; intermediate, 447; primary, 675; mixed, 26,—total, 1842, which is about nine-elevenths of the whole number of pupils attending the public schools in the city. The graduates of the High Schools take and hold good lead in the colleges and other institutions of learning which they enter, and the school is steadily increasing in reputation for thoroughness of instruction. Nearly two-thirds of the teachers now employed in the district are graduates of the High School. The average expenditure for the schools, exclusive of free text-books, is about twenty-five thousand six hundred dollars a year, of which sum the district raises one-fourth or more by extra tax beyond what the law requires. It also furnishes text-books free to the pupils of the school.

Outside of Union School District there are three districts, with Boards of Education and graded schools, viz.: No. 3, at West Concord, with primary, intermediate and grammar schools; No. 12, at East Concord, with primary and grammar schools; No. 20, at Penacook, with primary, intermediate and grammar schools. There are also fourteen outlying districts, with from one to three terms of school a year, and with from three to twenty-seven pupils each. The appropriation of the city for schools is twenty-two thousand two hundred and twenty-five dollars yearly, to which is added extra tax raised in three districts, literary fund, etc., making altogether about thirty-one thousand six hundred dollars.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL,¹ is one of the best known of all church classical schools, as distinguished from colleges like Trinity, Hobart and Racine. It was founded and partially endowed by a distinguished layman of Boston, Mass., George Cheyne Shattuck, M.D., who has so generously used his wealth for the benefit of the church, not only in New England, but also in Maryland, Minnesota and other dioceses.

St. Paul's, whose buildings are now about twenty in number, presenting, as one approaches, quite the appearance of a little village, is situated in a charming and salubrious region about two miles from the centre of the city. There, in a lovely, picturesque valley, by the borders of a pretty little lake, surrounded by lofty hills, Dr. Shattuck founded his institution. From small and modest beginnings it has grown in less than thirty years not only to take its place in the front among church schools, but also, as the honor lists in our leading colleges and universities show, it sends out, year by year, pupils who rank not below those who come from Exeter, Andover or any of the oldest and most famous academies of the country.

Dr. Shattuck was a firm believer in the church as an educator; to him education meant character, and included something far beyond mere book-learning. His desire was that the spirit of the Book of Common Prayer should be the foundation of the work to be done, and that the sort of tone which we understand by the word gentleman, in its best and highest sense, should pervade the establishment and insensibly would all who came under its influence. In short, a public school of the same general character as Eton, Harrow, Rugby and Winchester was in his mind, though he was too wise to have any idea of extemporizing any of these growths of centuries under such totally different social and political circumstances. His purpose was admirably expressed by the following words in the deed of gift:

"The founder's selections of endowing a school of the highest class for boys, in which they may obtain an education which shall fit them for college or business, including thorough intellectual training in the various branches of learning; gymnastic and manly exercises adapted to preserve health and strength the physical condition; such æsthetic culture and accomplishments as shall tend to refine the manners and elevate the taste, together with careful moral and religious instruction."

This brief statement is itself worth a passing notice for its modesty and reticence. There are not a few occasions when "the unsaid is better than the said." There are here no grandiloquent promises (so easy to make on paper) of the great results that are going to be accomplished; no baits thrown out to entice parents and pupils. The church (which was to be the corner-stone of all) is not only not thrust prominently forward, it is not even mentioned. Only such matters are spoken of as all judicious parents would agree upon as desirable. In short, it is implied that deeds, not words, are the only test, for "every tree is known by his own fruit."

With these general views, Dr. Shattuck, in the year 1855, devoted what had previously been his country-seat to be the nucleus of the school which he contemplated. But it need hardly be said that no buildings, however costly or commodious, can make a school. There can be no school without a master, and the master is useless unless boys come to be taught and trained. After several attempts to satisfy himself, the founder at length succeeded in securing, to preside over the first organization of the scheme, the Rev. Henry Augustus Coit, M.A., now Doctor in Divinity, by diploma from Columbia College, New York. This gentleman, the present head-master—or, as he is called, rector—of St. Paul's School, a Southerner by birth, and educated by Dr. Muhlenberg at College Point, may, with strictest propriety of speech, be considered the second founder, and, in a true sense, the veritable creator of the institution which has become so celebrated. Though then only about twenty-six years of age, he was already a fine classical and belles-lettres scholar. He fully entered into the enlightened views of Dr. Shattuck, and brought to the work even a more enlarged conception of what such a school, rightly and cautiously conducted, might eventually become. This conception was, perhaps, increased or intensified by a visit to England made by Dr. Coit in 1868, during which some of the English public schools were inspected. St. Paul's opened in 1856 with some five or six boys, sons or relations, and friends of the founder. It was from the first an incorporated institution, and the act of the Legislature of New Hampshire bears date June 29, 1855. No advertisement setting forth the claims or supposed merits of the school ever appeared. There was at the very beginning a simple statement in the church papers of its title, its situation, and the names of the rector and members of the board of trustees. Among these there have always been some names well known among churchmen, such as Bishops Chase, Niles and Neely, Judge Redfield, E. N. Perkins, Esq., Dr. Samuel Eliot, Richard H. Dana, Esq., C. P. Gardner, Esq., John H. Swift, Esq., of New York, etc. The founder himself was not a member of the board, and, with his usual modesty, never allowed his name to be prominent, though ever ready to give his advice and assistance.

Among these trustees it will not be considered invidious to name specially Dr. Samuel Eliot, formerly president of Trinity College, Hartford, and more recently superintendent of public schools in the city of Boston, whose zeal for the cause of sound education is equaled only by his profound knowledge of the subject and his practical acquaintance with the best methods to be pursued. His reports, as superintendent, are written in the choicest English, and will be found full of wise suggestions to parents and teachers. They are worth keeping for reference.

The rector was aided at first by only one or two masters, and everything was necessarily on the smallest scale, while the first foundations were carefully laid. But the boys who left him showed so manifestly the good results of their education in the large sense of the term, as well as the soundness of their instruction in the various branches of the curriculum, that the reputation of the school rapidly spread; applications for admission began to pour in, and these chiefly from families of culture and good standing in various sections of the country. These applications have kept up without break ever since, to a degree almost, if not quite, unprecedented. The writer has frequently heard of parents who would enter the names of sons only seven or eight years old, that they might be ready to secure expected vacancies five or six years later. There has never been the least occasion to solicit scholars, the buildings, after the first two or three years, being always filled to their utmost capacity. There was a nameless something about the tone and manners of the pupils—a bracing influence about the moral atmosphere which the boys breathed—that was very taking with people of culture and refinement; and the more the pupils were known, the more eager did the parents of others become to secure these same advantages for their sons. In a word, the boys themselves became, unconsciously, the very best advertisement, and no other ever was needed.

What special principles of management have produced these happy results it would not be easy, and would certainly take too long to tell. When Dr. Arnold introduced his quiet, but still almost revolutionary reforms, upon taking charge of Rugby in 1828, the boys used to say, "It is a downright shame to tell Arnold a lie, for he believes it." So, for one thing, it may be said that at St. Paul's the boy is trusted from the moment that he sets foot upon the grounds. It is quietly assumed that he will conduct himself as might be expected of a gentleman's son, and there is everything in this assumption as a power in governing. Saving the necessary mapping out of the day for study, and the requirement of strict punctuality, there are probably not many homes where there are fewer arbitrary rules than suffice for the St. Paul's boys.

The writer well remembers standing among a group of visitors in 1865, on the occasion of Dr. Muhlenberg's first and only visit to St. Paul's. Dr. Kerfoot, then president of Trinity, and Dr. Coit were standing by. Dear old Dr. Muhlenberg (whose name can never be mentioned without reverence) called himself the school-father of Drs. Kerfoot and Coit, and surveyed St. Paul's with no little pride and affection. At last he broke out with this: "Henry, I have been walking all around, watching the boys, and talking with a good many of them, and I want you to explain something. I have seen a good deal of boys at old College Point, but I appeal to you and Kerfoot if we ever had anything like this. Why, I had some very hard cases, there—really troublesome fellows; but your boys are all gentlemen. Now, how do you manage it? What's your secret?" The reply I have forgotten. It was probably a gentle suggestion that the old gentleman, in the kindness of his heart, was taking too favorable a view of what he saw, notwithstanding that he insisted that he knew how to look below the surface. Such, however, was the impression made on Dr. Muhlenberg as he walked over the grounds and freely mingled, in his inimitable way, with the boys, watched their sports and overheard their careless talk with one another.

On St. Peter's Day, 1858, the corner-stone of a chapel was laid—the gift of the founder—and on St. Paul's Day, in the year 1859, the building was consecrated by the bishops of New Hampshire and Connecticut. This chapel has ever been the centre, so to say, of the holy and peculiar influence of the place. The services have always been reverent and beautiful, the music (under the charge of Mr. James C. Knox, a graduate of the school), in which the boys naturally take great interest and delight, has been church-like and elevating, and the Sunday sermons of the rector (who, like the late Dr. De Koven, is a preacher of rare power) have been peculiarly adapted to inspire his hearers, older and younger, with a love of virtue and religion and an ardent desire to reach the highest excellence in all things. There never was any approach in the chapel services to excess in what is now called "Ritualism," but there was always the trust reverence and dignity, and a hearty obedience to the spirit of the Prayer-Book. The Church Catechism was the basis of all the religious instruction. With a rare perception both of the desirable and the attainable, the rector seems to have felt that, while a large company of loyal and impressive boys could be very easily made "ritualistic," it was a harder and a far worthier task to try to make them moral and religious—manly and healthy in their piety. Nor will those who understand the character of boys doubt for a moment that his instinct was an eminently wise one. The original chapel was intended to accommodate about forty boys; it was enlarged to more than double its former capacity in 1816, and being now (1884) wholly inadequate, preparations are making by the alumni to build an entirely new and extremely beautiful structure at a cost of seventy-five thousand dollars. This amount is already raised, but the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars in addition is needed for the endowment of the chapel, to provide for heating, lighting and repairs.

In the year 1865, after the breaking up of St. James' College, in Maryland, Dr. Coit was happily joined by his brother, the Rev. Joseph Howland Coit, M. A., who had been professor of mathematics and natural science in that institution. A teacher of the very first order, of wide and varied culture and of the same general educational views as his brother, he became vice-rector, taking charge of the scientific side of the school, and proving an invaluable addition to the corps of masters, as well as a judicious adviser on the board of trustees. At this period the school numbered between seventy and eighty; in the chapel the boys had overflowed into the seats designed for the neighboring population, who loved to attend the services, while for additional dormitories various adjoining houses were gradually purchased and added to the school property. In 1869 the Upper School, a handsome three-story granite building, was erected, with kitchen, dining-room, matron's apartments, etc., in a separate house near by. To this were added the Lower School for the youngest boys, in 1870; the Rectory, in 1871 or 1872; the large school-house, with school-room and recitation-rooms, in 1873; the Infirmary or Sanatorium in 1877. The last large edifice, called "The School," in which the vice-rector resides with the main body of the boys, is pronounced by competent judges to be one of the most complete school buildings to be found anywhere in the country. This takes the place of the original house of Dr. Shattuck, which was destroyed by fire in 1878.

The funds for these numerous and costly structures have been, to some considerable extent, given by the founder and other generous friends of St. Paul's, but they have also been in large measure derived from the income of the school itself, which the rector has expended, as far as possible, for the permanent improvement and growth of the institution. The salaries of the various masters, several of whom are married, — and their rooms and houses, are probably larger and more comfortable than in many other schools and colleges. But, obviously, St. Paul's could not have grown to such a size in so short a time without the wisest financial management; for the fortune of the generous founder was not at all one of those colossal ones by means of which, in some few instances, a school or university has been launched into life with every material equipment, including a sufficient endowment to pay the salaries of professors and teachers. St. Paul's has been built up rapidly, indeed, but still gradually, by the wise economy and increasing labor of the rector and his able assistants.

The course of study includes six forms, of which the sixth is the highest, and a preparatory or "shell," thus covering in all seven years. The students are prepared to enter the freshman and sophomore classes in Harvard or in any American college. Not a few, after completing the extended course, enter upon business without proceeding to college. There is also a fine gymnasium and all the usual athletic sports, especially the famous English exercises of cricket and rowing have been encouraged from the very start. A stranger is generally much struck with the happy home-like life of the place, and the healthy, manly, ingenuous appearance of the boys as he sees them gathered in the chapel or engaged in sports upon the spacious playgrounds.

The daily routine is, generally speaking, as follows: Rise at 6:30 (a little later in winter); breakfast at 7; short morning prayers in the chapel for the whole school at 8; school-work until 12; 12 to 1, recreation; 1, dinner; 2 to 4, recreation; 4 to 6, school-work; 6 supper, followed immediately by short evening prayers; after which the boy is free to use his time as he pleases (except one hour of study) until bed-time, which is 9 o'clock for most, and 10 or 10:30 for the oldest pupils. Immediately before bed-time, at 9 o'clock, a short space of some ten or fifteen minutes, known as "Bible-hour," is invariably devoted to the silent reading of the Holy Scriptures—generally the appointed Gospel lesson of the day. This custom was probably inherited from Dr. Muhlenberg's school, at College Point, Long Island, where Dr. Coit received his earliest school education, from which place Bishop Kerfoot also had previously transplanted the usage to the College of St. James, in Maryland.

There are three separate refectories or dining-rooms. One at the Upper School, one—the largest—at "The School," and a third at the Lower School. This arrangement, while considerably increasing the expense, contributes greatly to the comfort and home-like character of the daily life. The dormitories are admirably arranged, each "alcove" being practically a small private room, while the older boys in the sixth form have bed-rooms combined with their "studies" in the Upper School. The Anniversary Day, also called Founder's Day, is celebrated early in June every year. It is a great fête-day for the boys, their parents and their friends; there is a grand cricket-match and feast, and a special sermon and service in the chapel. The "old boys" assemble in force, thus keeping up their own boye for the "happy hills."

"Where once their careless children stray,
A stranger yet to pain, and encouraging in the younger generation a proper and pleasing pride in their Alma Mater, the effect of which is every way beneficial.

The present number of pupils is about 280, the number of masters 20, many of them graduates of the school. Among the masters now resident at St. Paul's, and who have for many years past been identified with its history and prosperity, may be mentioned the Rev. Robert A. Benton, M.A., of Trinity, Hartford; the Rev. T. G. Valpey, M.A., of Yale; Mr. Charles S. Knox, M.A., of Columbia College, New York; the Rev. Charles A. Morrill, M.A., of Harvard; the Rev. Thomas J. Drumm, M.A.; Mr. James C. Knox, M.A.; the Rev. John Hargate, M.A.; Mr. James Milnor Coit, Ph.D.; the Rev. Edward M. Parker, M.A., Keble College, Oxford; Mr. Augustus M. Swift, M.A. The last five of these are graduates of St. Paul's. The terms of admission were originally three hundred dollars per annum; then four hundred; they are now, and have been for some years, five hundred. There are a few scholarships (which the authorities are anxious to increase), the holders of which receive all the benefits of the school free of charge. The terms for board and tuition are not considered excessive by the families from whom the scholars are drawn, and, considering the comfortable style of living which is both expected and maintained, it is really moderate. The average cost of a boy's education at Eton may be safely put down as not less than one hundred and seventy-five pounds, or eight hundred and seventy-five dollars. At schools like Marlborough and Wellington (where there is a common hall for meals), the cost more nearly approaches, but still somewhat exceeds, what has been mentioned as the charge at St. Paul's.

It has been said that no school ought to be regarded as a well-established public institution until it has been tried long enough to see whether its own pupils, when they become fathers, retain their attachment and their belief in the methods pursued, so far as to send their own sons to the old place where they themselves were educated. This final test St. Paul's has already met. For some time past there have been on its roll pupils whose fathers were themselves old St. Paul's boys twenty years ago and more, and the number is certain to increase as each year goes by. The long list of its alumni, moreover, includes the names of not a few of the rising young lawyers, physicians, clergymen and business men in most of our great cities.

Looking, then, at these various and really remarkable results, and calmly weighing the excellencies of the system of St. Paul's, there is every reason to hope and believe that Dr. Shattuck and Dr. Coit have succeeded in founding in the United States a distinctively church school, which gives every promise of enduring, and will prove, in time, worthy to be compared with those famous English schools which have been carried into the very heart of the national life and conscience. The foundations have been so well laid, that, by the protection of a good Providence, no one can say they cannot easily be overthrown. No doubt, in this case, as in all similar undertakings, a great deal may be said must be due to the personal influence and magnetism of the present and first head master, which seems, in its way, to resemble that of the celebrated Dr. Arnold at Rugby. It is plain enough that he must be a man of peculiar gifts and powers, and not only such as impress and charm the young. To bring St. Paul's to its present high efficiency and celebrity, the rector must necessarily have been able to work harmoniously with a large corps of masters, themselves men of culture and acquirement, with the distinguished gentlemen who are the trustees of the school, and with the numerous parents of the pupils, not a few of whom are known among the most influential people of the land. But after making all this allowance for these personal qualifications, which it might indeed be difficult to replace, it is quite certain that if anything like the wise judgment and unselfish labor of the past quarter of a century shall mark the administration of Dr. Coit's successors, St. Paul's, Concord, will more and more take a leading rank among those noted places of education which, at or all, are the true glory of our country, because they are the best security that we have for the cultivation of those virtues which lie at the foundation of the safety, honor and welfare of our people.

Concord Water Works.—The supply of water for Concord, previous to 1873, was obtained from springs near the base of "Sand Hill." As early as July 2, 1829, William Low, Jacob B. Moore, Stephen Brown, Joseph Low and associates were constituted a corporation, with a capital of two thousand dollars, called the "Concord Aqueduct Association," empowered to take water from the springs before mentioned and deliver it to takers on Main, State and other streets, and charge such price as they deemed expedient. It is not now known that the association ever did any business.

Soon after, Mr. Amariah Pierce supplied water, through an aqueduct made of logs, to the distillery which was located near the Iron-ore of Walker & Co., and to other customers. Mr. Nathan Call succeeded Mr. Pierce, and being desirous of extending his works, and needing more capital, he obtained a charter, July 7, 1849, incorporating himself, George Hutchins and others under the name of the "Trent Aqueduct Association," with a capital of twenty thousand dollars. Mr. Call was made agent and treasurer of the company, and, being a man of great energy, he made the enterprise successful. After his death the affairs of the association were conducted by his son, Horace, until the stock, owned by his heirs was sold land damages. The total cost of the works, Dec. 31, 1874, was $951,293.45.

Mr. Vincent C. Hastings, who had been employed as an inspector during the construction of the works, was elected superintendent, and is still in the office.

Water was admitted into the pipes January 14, 1875, being only eight months from the time the contractors commenced work. The commissioners, in their report for 1875, say,—

"We are gratified to state that, except in a few cases, the pressure of our hot and cold water has been found to be equal to that of the city supply, and that the quantity of water supplied has generally met the requirements of the city. The cost of the water works has been $951,293.45, and the amount of the interest which has been paid on the same $1,000,000, is $1,000,000.

In their report for 1877 they say,—

"Five years have elapsed since water was supplied to the works, and the cost of time has been expended in the purchase of land and labor, if there is

In their report for 1879 they say,—

"We are gratified to report that the water works have in five years had no serious repairs, and the number of families supplied with water has increased to 11,000.

After an experience of eight years, it was found that the demand for water had so increased that the fourteen-inch main-pipe was not sufficient to furnish a continuous supply of water to the higher points of the Precinct. The board, after a thorough investigation and careful consideration of the subject, voted to lay a second and larger main-pipe of eighteen inches in diameter from the dam to State Street.

Contracts were immediately made, and the pipe completed, ready for use, during the summer of 1882, at a cost of forty-seven thousand dollars.

Other additions and improvements have been made from time to time, and the water-works are nearly complete, at a cost of about four hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, supplying two thousand two hundred and fifty families.

Since the settlement of the town no improvement within its limits has been made that has brought to its citizens greater blessings than this. Pure water from Long Pond now flows in abundance to almost every dwelling, not only supplying their necessities, but furnishing the means of beautifying their surroundings.

The following mayors have held the office of water commissioner: Abraham G. Jones, John Kimball, George A. Pillsbury, Horace A. Brown, George A. Cummings, Edgar H. Woodman.

The following citizens have been appointed commissioners by the mayor and aldermen: Josiah Minot, Benjamin A. Kimball, John M. Hill, David A. Warde, Edward L. Knowlton, Benjamin S. Warren, John Abbott, Abel B. Holt, John S. Russ, Samuel S. Kimball, Luther P. Durgin, John Kimball, William M. Chase, James L. Massey, James R. Hill, Joseph H. Abbot and George A. Young.

The following have been the officers of the Board: Josiah Minot, president, two years; Benjamin A.

Kimball, vice-president, two years; George A. Pillsbury, one year; John M. Hill, one year; William M. Chase, one year; John S. Russ, one year; and John S. Kimball, three years.

The Walker House.—This is the residence of Rev. B. Walker.

In the corner of the Directory of 1825, Mr. Walker writes that this house, which was built by his father, is a large one, now standing on the Water-street Wharf, between Hay-street, Mass., and the City. It was built by Rev. Timothy Walker, one of the founders of Newbury, the first minister in the town in 1734. The house being generously walled had 2000 square feet of wall, a dwelling-house in Peterborough. Its dimensions were twenty by forty feet, 1000 stories in height, with an ell adjoining on the east of 600 stories, 1000 parts being covered by a gambrel roof. The chimneys were very large. One of them, which remained originally built until 1847, was removed on its removal, to be about five feet square and constructed of large stones, laid in clay mortar and plastered on the inside with a composition of clay and chopped straw. Another, of brick, was still larger.

Only the ell was entirely finished at first, and contained but three rooms on the first floor. The great part remained in an unfinished state until 1757, when, with the assistance of Lieutenant Webster, of Bradford, Mass., a joiner of higher repute in those days, it was also completed. Then arose, as appears from a letter dated September 9, 1757, addressed by Rev. Mr. Walker to his son Timothy, then teaching school at Bradford, a grave question as to the propriety "of painting ye outside." The decision arrived at is not now known, but either at that time or a few years subsequent, it was painted a light yellow, which continued to be its uniform color for at least seventy years. The interior was finished in a style similar to that found in the better class of dwelling-houses of that period. Most of the partitions were of wainscot panel-work; the front hall was adorned with paneling, and the front stairs were in three short flights, connecting colored landings, being guarded by a moulded rail supported upon curiously-wrought balusters.

The rooms were painted in various colors, the north parlor and south parlor chamber being green, the south parlor blue, the north parlor red or orange, the 11 people's bedroom white, and the kitchen red. Thus constructed and finished, it remained without outside alteration, with the exception of an enlargement of the ell until 1848, when it was remodelled in some parts, the old chimneys being walled up and the roof largely repaired by its present proprietor. A few other alterations have been made at successive times. With the exception of a few small additions, it remains as originally built.

The rafters of this ancient house, now one hundred and thirty-one years old, are made of white oak and pitch pine. The rafters, sills and temporary floor timbers were dressed by the broad-axe. The oak floor-joists of the second story afford evidence of the existence of good saw-mills in Ferrisburgh at this early day. The outside was covered with wide, feather-edged white-pine boards, such as our forests no longer supply. The clapboards, riveted on the logs and sawed, were laid about four inches to the weather, and with scarfed joints at the ends. Both eaves and clapboards were held in place by wrought-iron nails, made, doubtless, by a local blacksmith of approved skill. The cracks between the boards of the roof were battened by strips of birch bark before it was shingled. These are still in position, and in as good condition, apparently, as when first torn from their parent trees.

than the other. The fire-places, with one of which every important room was furnished, were of exceedingly generous proportions, and must have aided largely in the important work of reducing the forest area of the township. The old granite hearth-stone of the kitchen, still in constant use, is nine feet and nine inches long by two feet and six inches wide.

In 1746 this house was "appointed" a garrison-house, and fortified "at the town's cost" by the erection about it of a wall of timbers lying in contact, one upon another, and held in position by tenoned ends let into perpendicularly grooved posts set in the ground. Smaller temporary dwellings were at the same time built within this inclosure. Eight families besides Mr. Walker's

FOUR LARGEST ELMS TRANSPLANTED BY REV. T. WALKER, MAY 2ND 1704

RESIDENCE OF JOSEPH B. WALKER.

CONCORD, N. H.

The panel-work of the numerous partitions, doors and window-shutters of the interior was all made by hand, and represented the faithful labor of many men for many days. The door fastenings and hinges were all imported from the fatherland, where the dutiful colonists of George II. were expected to procure them. If strength were the only standard of excellence required, these were surely first-class.

Stone quarrying was little understood in the Merrimack Valley a century and a half ago, and the stones of the walls of this house of the first minister were the products of the upper sheets of the Rattlestone quarries. They bear no marks of drill. The stones used for sills, as used, were thinner than the stones of the same period, and thicker on one edge were assigned to this garrison, viz.: that of Captain John Chandler, of Abraham Bradley, of Samuel Bradley, of John Webster, of Nathaniel Rolfe, of Joseph Putney, of Isaac Walker, Jr., and of Obadiah Foster. These occupied it more or less of the time until the close of the second French War. When, in 1782, the Legislature met in Concord for the first time and held its sessions in the hall over the store belonging to Judge Walker, which was near by, the President of the State, with his Council, occupied the north parlor of this house, while the south parlor served as a general committee room, and the room above it as the office of the Treasurer of State.

Many prominent persons have, from time to time, enjoyed the hospitalities of this old mansion. In early days General John Stark and Major Robert Rogers were frequent visitors to its inmates. So was Benjamin Thompson, afterwards known as Count Rumford, who married Rev. Mr. Walker's oldest daughter, Sarah; as was also, at a later date, Professor S. B. F. Morse, of electric telegraph fame, who married his great-granddaughter, Lucretia Pickering Morse. Passing clergymen and men in official life often stopped there; while to the humblest of its neighbors' occupants, its doors were always open and a welcome awaited their approach.

This plain house, now rendered venerable by past and passing years, which presents a type of many of the better class of dwellings of the middle colonial period, was occupied by the Rev. Mr. Walker until his death, in 1782,—a period of forty-eight years. It was the home of his son, Judge Timothy Walker, during most of his life, and of his widow, who survived him until 1828. During the next twenty years its tenants were parties not of the Walker family, but since 1849 it has been in the occupancy of Joseph B. Walker, a great-grandson of its builder, and its present proprietor. For reasons obvious to the reader further mention is forborne of the condition of its interior, of its library, paintings and various historic memorials. The round flat-stone, about eight feet in diameter, just seen within the yard, is the old "horse-block" of the First Congregational Society, which was used by the early fathers and mothers of Concord in alighting from and mounting their horses at the meeting-house, when the roads of the township were indifferent and carriages were rarely used. Tradition says that it was procured from subscriptions made by the good women of the parish of a pound of butter each. It was presented to its present owner by the society.

The elms in front of the house were transplanted from the intervals by Rev. Mr. Walker, May 2, 1764, as appears by his diary of that year. The largest represented in the cut herewith appended, measures sixteen feet and eight inches in circumference at three feet from the ground. It was sixteen feet in 1856, and has increased eight inches during this intervening period of twenty-nine years. It is still in good health, although, during the period just named, the circumference of its top, unlike that of its trunk, has somewhat diminished.

It is an interesting fact that the life of a single, unpretending, wooden dwelling should span so important a part of our colonial and all of our Revolutionary and modern history.

Odd-Fellowship—Grand Lodge I. O. O. F.—The following is a list of Grand Masters of the Grand Lodge of Odd-Fellows:

- David Philbrick, 1 Granite Lodge, No. 1, Nashua, session of 1811-45.
Samuel H. Parker, 1 Weecham 4, No. 3, Dover, session of 1845-46.
Nathaniel B. Baker, White Mountain, No. 5, Concord, session of 1846-47.

- George W. Towle, Pleasant 1, No. 1, Portsmouth, session of 1847-51.
John C. Lyford, McLehans, No. 13, Manchester, session of 1850-51.
Timothy G. Senter, 1 Piscataqua, No. 6, Portsmouth, session of 1850-51.
John T. Stevens, 1 Watata, No. 14, New Ipswich, session of 1850-51.
John Peabody, 1 Monanduck, No. 11, Mason village, session of 1850-51.
Stephen Brown, 1 White Mountain, No. 6, Concord, session of 1851-52.
Hon. Charles A. Tuffs, Weecham 1, No. 3, Dover, session of 1851-52.
George Canning Williams, 1 Coes, No. 14, Lancaster, session of 1851-52.
Moses M. Burdick, Merrimack, No. 28, Franklin, session of 1852-53.
Joseph Kelder, Hillsborough, No. 2, Manchester, session of 1853-57.
William B. Tapley, Weecham 1, No. 3, Dover, session of 1857-58.
Stelman S. Davis, Granite, No. 1, Nashua, session of 1858-59.
Joseph B. Smart, White Mountain, No. 5, Concord, session of 1859-60.
George W. Woods, Merrimack, No. 13, Manchester, session of 1860-61.
Edwin C. Stone, Merrimack, No. 28, Franklin, session of 1861-62.
Benjamin M. Parker, 2 Piscataqua, No. 6, Portsmouth, session of 1862-63.
William P. Buell, 1 Granite, No. 1, Nashua, session of 1863-64.
John S. McFarland, White Mountain, No. 5, Concord, session of 1864-65.
Ira Dow, Madalinia, No. 18, Rochester, session of 1865-66.
John L. Spring, Custer Morant, No. 12, Milford, session of 1866-67.
Tide Osgood, 1 White Mountain, No. 5, Concord, session of 1871-68.
Charles H. Brown, McLehans, No. 13, Manchester, session of 1868-70.
Joseph H. Gardner, New Hampshire, No. 17, Portsmouth, session of 1869-70.
Orlando P. Smart, Granite, No. 1, Nashua, session of 1870-71.
Amos Jones, 1 Mascoma, No. 20, Lebanon, session of 1871-72.
Thomas L. Tibbatts, 3 Weecham 1, No. 3, Dover, session of 1872-73.
Marvin T. Tuttingham, Beaver Brook, No. 30, Keene, session of 1873-74.
Samuel J. Osgood, 1 Winnipisogee, No. 7, Laconia, session of 1874-75.
Hon. George A. Cummings, White Mountain, No. 5, Concord, session of 1875-76.
Alonzo F. Craig, 1 Piscataqua, No. 6, Portsmouth, session of 1876-77.
Henry A. Farrington, Wildley, No. 45, Manchester, session of 1877-78.
Rev. Luther F. McKinney, Fraternity, No. 59, South Newmarket, session of 1878-79.
John B. Albin, Crescent, No. 60, Henniker, session of 1879-80.
George A. Robie, Friendship, No. 19, Hooksett, session of 1880-81.
Frank A. Rawson, Sugar River, No. 55, Newport, session of 1881-82.
James W. Odlin, Sagamore, No. 9, Exeter, session of 1882-84.
Hon. Horace A. Brown, Rumford, No. 16, Concord, session of 1883-84.
Rev. Lewis Malvern, Winnipisogee, No. 7, Laconia, session of 1884-85.

The following is a list of Grand Secretaries of Grand Lodge of Odd-Fellows:

- George H. H. Sibley, White Mountain Lodge, No. 5, Concord, session of 1843-53.
Joseph B. Smart, White Mountain, No. 5, Concord, session of 1854-56.
Mitchell Gilmore, White Mountain, No. 5, Concord, session of 1857-64.
Joel Taylor, 1 Hillsborough, No. 2, Manchester, session of 1864-77.
Joseph Kelder, Hillsborough, No. 2, Manchester, session of 1878-85.

Penacook Encampment, No. 3, was instituted November 26, 1844.

White Mountain Lodge, No. 5, was instituted February 7, 1844.

Tahanto Encampment, No. 18.

Contoocook Lodge, No. 26, was instituted in 1846.
Rumford Lodge, No. 46, was instituted December 23, 1867.

Merrimack County Odd-Fellows' Relief Association.

U. O. of P. F.—John Carver Colony, No. 10, was organized February, 1880.

Knights of Pythias.—Concord Lodge, No. 8, was instituted November 18, 1870.

Endowment Rank, Section No. 11.

Ancient Order of Hibernians.—Concord Lodge.
A. O. of U. W.—Equity Lodge.

¹ Deceased.

² Deceased.

³ Not in the order.

Knights of Honor. Granite Lodge, No. 225, K. of H., was organized March 23, 1876.

Kearsage Lodge, No. 276, was organized May, 1875.

Grand Army of the Republic. E. E. Sturtevant Post, No. 2.

William I. Brown Post, No. 31, Penacook, was organized May, 1875.

Davis Post, No. 44, West Concord, was organized July 29, 1879.

Temperance. Women's Christian Temperance Union.

State Capitol Lodge, I. O. G. T., No. 42.

West Concord Temperance Reform Club.

Crystal Fountain Division, N. D. S. of T.

Merrimack Division, No. 24, S. of T., was organized April 22, 1872.

Penacook Division, No. 58, S. of T., was organized September 8, 1878.

Concord Commandery, No. 84, F. O. G. C., was instituted November 14, 1879.

Dustin Island Lodge, I. O. G. T.

Penacook Lake Lodge, No. 19, I. O. G. T.

St. John's Catholic Total Abstinence Society.

Other Societies.—Centre District Medical Society.

Concord Female Charitable Society was established in 1812, and is the oldest benevolent association in Concord. The officers are elected for three years, with a board of twelve directors, four of which go out each year.

Eastman Association.

Concord Female Benevolent Association was organized in 1835.

Concord Y. M. C. Association.

Fisherville Library Association was organized in August, 1865.

Penacook Y. M. C. Association was organized in 1875.

Northern Mutual Relief Association was incorporated in November, 1863.

The Rolfe and Rumford Asylum was founded in 1852 by the Countess of Rumford, and was opened for the reception of inmates January, 1880. It is situated on Hall Street, near Water. This asylum is for destitute native female children of Concord. Joseph B. Walker, president; S. S. Kimball, treasurer; Enoch Gerrish, secretary; Francis A. Fisk, Joseph B. Walker, Jesse P. Bancroft, Enoch Gerrish, Samuel S. Kimball, trustees.

New Hampshire Dental Society was organized in 1876.

New Hampshire Pharmaceutical Association.

Provident Mutual Relief Association was incorporated in July, 1878.

New Hampshire Homoeopathic Medical Society.

New Hampshire Medical Society.

Orphans Home is situated on Dunbarton road, near M. 31.

New Hampshire Centennial Home for the Aged was organized in 1876.

New Hampshire Home Missionary Society was instituted in 1801 and incorporated in 1807.

Women's Auxiliary Society.

New Hampshire Branch Concord Auxiliary of Women's Baptist Missions.

Ministers' and Widows' Charitable Fund of New Hampshire was organized in 1813.

St. Patrick's Benevolent Society was incorporated June, 1873.

French Canadian Society.

CHAPTER VI.

CONCORD.—(Continued).

CIVIL HISTORY.

The First Town-House—City Hall—Jail—Plantation, Parish and Town Clerks from 1732 to 1885—Representatives from 1775 to 1885—Incorporation of the City—First Charter Election—Officers Chosen—Organization of City Government—Mayors, Aldermen and Members of Common Council from 1854 to 1885.

Civil History, Etc.—The old town-house and court-house was built in 1792 and enlarged in 1823. A county building of brick was erected in 1844. These were occupied until the erection of the present city hall, in 1854 and 1855, for the joint use of the city and county. The north wing is used for the county and the south wing for the city. It is a large and commodious brick structure, located on the north side of Main Street.

The present jail was erected in 1852 at a cost of about eleven thousand dollars. It is located near the junction of Pleasant and Washington Streets. Prior to this time the county used the Hopkinton jail, which, previous to the organization of Merrimack County, had been the county prison of Hillsborough County.

The following is a list of plantation, parish and town clerks from 1732 to 1885:

Bent, Rolfe, 1732 to 1747, and in 1766, '67 and '68.
Ezra Carter, 1747-48.
Timothy Walker, Jr., 1769, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77.
John Kimball, 1778 to 1786.
Caleb Chase, 1787 to 1795.
John Ollin, 1796 to 1819.
Francis N. Fisk, 1819 to 1829.
John West, 1829 to 1833.
Samuel Coffin, 1833 to 1836.
Jonathan E. Lang, 1836-37.
Robert E. Pecker, 1838-39.
Joseph Carter, 1840, '41, '42.
John P. Johnson, 1843, '44, '45, '46, '50, '52, '53.
Geo. H. H. Sibley, 1848-49.
Wm. D. Robinson, 1854.

The following is a list of Representatives from 1775 to 1885:

Timothy Walker, 1775, '76, '78, '81, '82, '83, '84.
Colonel Thos. Stuckney, 1777-79.

¹About this time the rights and privileges guaranteed by the District Act ceased, and Rumford, already involved in controversy with the proprietors of Bow, was destitute of government. There is a chasm in the records till 1765. Endors.

- Peter Green, 1785, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90.
 John Bradley, 1787, '90, '92, '96, 1802.
 Robert Ambrose, 1789.
 Wm Dumont, 1791-94.
 Daniel Livermore, 1794-95.
 Wm. A. Kent, 1797, 1801, '03, '04, '05.
 Jacob Abbot, 1798, '99, 1800.
 Samuel Green, 1800, '07, '08.
 Steven Ambrose, 1809, '10, '11, '12, '13.
 Thomas W. Thompson, 1813-14.
 1815.—Richard Ayer and George Hough.
 1816.—George Hough and John Ollin.
 1817.—John Ollin and William A. Kent.
 1818.—T. W. Thompson and William A. Kent.
 1819.—Abiel Walker and Nathan Ballard, Jr.
 1820.—Stephen Ambrose and Nathaniel Abbot.
 1821.—Stephen Ambrose and Nathaniel Abbot.
 1822.—No choice.
 1823.—Stephen Ambrose and Samuel Fletcher.
 1824.—Samuel Fletcher and Richard I. Bradley.
 1825.—Richard Bradley and Francis N. Fisk.
 1826.—Francis N. Fisk and Isaac Hill.
 1827.—Jere-miah Pecker, Nathan Ballard, Jr., and George Kent.
 1828.—Jacob B. Moore, Richard Bradley, and Samuel Herbert.
 1829.—Richard Bradley, Samuel Herbert, and Robert Ambrose.
 1830.—Robert Ambrose, Richard Bartlett and Theodore French.
 1831.—Richard Bartlett, Theodore French and David George.
 1832.—David George, William Kent and Samuel A. Kimball.
 1833.—Abel Baker, Isaac Emery and Charles H. Peaslee.
 1834.—Charles H. Peaslee, Jeremiah Pecker and Joseph P. Strukey.
 1835.—Charles H. Peaslee, Jeremiah Pecker and Isaac Emery.
 1836.—Charles H. Peaslee, Ezra Carter, William Dow and Ebenezer Eastman.
 1837.—Ezra Carter, Ebenezer Eastman, William Dow and Luther Roly.
 1838.—Joseph Law, George Kent, Cyrus Robinson and Abiel Rolfe.
 1839.—Abiel Rolfe, Cyrus Robinson, William Kent and Ira Perley.
 1840.—Moses Shute, Abel C. Carter and Jacob Holt.
 1841.—Joseph Robinson, Moses Shute, Abel C. Carter and Jacob Holt.
 1842.—No choice.
 1843.—No choice.
 1844.—No choice.
 1845.—Jacob Carter, Nathaniel Rolfe, Jeremiah S. Noyes, Asa Fowler and William Page.
 1846.—Jacob Carter and Laban Page.
 1847.—Edmund Worth, Laban Page, Asa Fowler, Cyrus Robinson, Joel C. Danforth and Simson Abbot.
 1848.—Simson Abbot, Edmund Worth, Joel C. Danforth, Asa Fowler, Cyrus Robinson and Chase Hill.
 1849.—Luther Roly, Perley Cheaves, Cyrus Hill, Charles H. Norton and William Page.
 1850.—Perley Cheaves, Cyrus Hill, Charles H. Norton, John L. T. Lant, George F. Sanborn, Nathaniel B. Baker and Ebenezer Symmes.
 1851.—Nathaniel B. Baker.
 1852.—Nathaniel White, Shadrach Sewey, Benjamin F. Gale, Nathan Chandler, Joseph Eastman and Caleb Parker.
 1853.—Jeremiah S. Noyes, John H. George, John Sawyer, William H. Page, James Frye, James Moore, Henry P. Rolfe and Benjamin F. Dow.
 1854.—Jeremiah S. Durgin, James Frye, Joseph Eastman, Shadrach Sewey, Charles Smart, Robert N. Corning, David M. Dearborn, Caleb Parker, George Clough, Jeremiah S. Noyes.
 1855.—Jeremiah S. Durgin, George G. Virgin, George W. Brown, Edward H. Rollins, William Ballard, Robert N. Corning, Lucius B. Merrill, George Clough, Peter Sanborn, James M. Otis.
 1856.—Abiel Rolfe, Abraham Bean, George W. Brown, Edward H. Rollins, William Ballard, Lucius B. Merrill, Henry A. Bellows, Peter Sanborn, Joseph L. Jackson, James M. Otis.
 1857.—Abiel Rolfe, Abraham Bean, Moses Humphrey, Edward H. Rollins, Charles Smart, Henry A. Bellows, James Sedgeley, Joseph L. Jackson, Napoleon B. Bryant, William G. Whitney.
 1858.—Albert H. Brown, Samuel B. Larkin, Moses Humphrey, Asa MacFarland, Reuben G. Wyman, James Sedgeley, John Kimball, Napoleon B. Bryant, George B. Wallace, William G. Whitney.
 1859.—Albert H. Brown, Samuel B. Larkin, Elbridge Dimond, Asa MacFarland, Reuben G. Wyman, John Kimball, Gilbert Bollock, Napoleon B. Bryant, George B. Wallace, Charles E. Thompson.
 1860.—David A. Brown, John L. Chandler, Henry C. Weston, John J. O'Brien, Charles H. Hebert, Henry S. Shattuck, Elias Hill, 1861, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, 1800.
 1861.—Lyman D. Stevens, Benjamin Green.
 1862.—John Whitaker, William Pecker, Ira Rowan, John A. West, 1863, William E. Foster, Elias Blake, William E. Chandler, Charles P. Sanborn, Henry T. Chickering, Benjamin Green.
 1863.—Samuel Merriam, William Pecker, Brian Carr, John A. Mugridge, William E. Foster, William E. Chandler, Henry P. Rolfe, Charles P. Sanborn, Henry T. Chickering, James Thompson.
 1864.—Samuel Merriam, Samuel Hutchins, Hiram Farrum, Isaac H. Well, Cyrus W. Page, William E. Chandler, Henry P. Rolfe, Stephen Webster, Charles W. Davis, James Thompson.
 1865.—John Rathbeller, Samuel Hutchins, Daniel Holden, Isaac H. Well, Cyrus W. Page, Henry C. Starbuck, Nathaniel G. Upham, Charles W. Davis, Lewis Downing, Daniel Knowlton.
 1866.—John Rathbeller, Sylvester Stevens, Daniel Holden, Joseph B. Walker, Ezra Ballard, Nathan S. Upham, David A. Wood, Lewis Downing, Lyman D. Stevens, Daniel Knowlton.
 1867.—John S. Brown, Sylvester Stevens, Stephen Carlton, Joseph B. Walker, Ezra Ballard, David A. Wadley, James F. Larkin, Lyman D. Stevens, George Hutchins, Robert Hall.
 1868.—John S. Brown, Charles Smith, Stephen Carlton, John A. West, Benjamin E. Bolger, James F. Larkin, Augustine C. Pierce, George Hutchins, Joseph W. Prescott, Robert Hall.
 1869.—William H. Allen, Charles Smith, Henry Farrum, John A. West, Benjamin E. Bolger, Augustine C. Pierce, Ephraim W. Woodward, Joseph W. Prescott, Calvin C. Webster, George F. Whittridge.
 1870.—William H. Allen, Harrison Bonn, Henry Farrum, Ira Perley, James S. Lumber, Samuel M. Griffin, Ephraim W. Woodward, George A. Cummings, Calvin C. Webster, Benjamin A. Kimball, George F. Whittridge.
 1871.—Robert B. Hoyt, Stephen Clark, Benjamin F. Holden, James S. Lumber, Samuel M. Griffin, Benjamin S. Warren, George A. Cummings, George A. Pillsbury, Asa Fowler, Samuel B. Page, Lyman T. Flint.
 1872.—Robert B. Hoyt, John A. Holmes, Albert Stevens, Benjamin F. Holden, Benjamin S. Warren, Jacob H. Gallinger, George W. Emerton, George A. Pillsbury, Parsons B. Cogswell, John H. Allen, Asa Fowler, George F. Todd, Charles P. Virgin, Lyman T. Flint.
 1873.—John A. Holmes, David A. Brown, Albert Stevens, Jacob H. Gallinger, George W. Emerton, Charles P. Blanchard, Parsons E. Cogswell, John H. Allen, George E. Jenks, George E. Todd, Charles P. Virgin, Henry C. Sturtevant, Daniel Wyman.
 1874.—Nathan Chandler, William H. Bell, Charles W. Blake, Augustine C. Carter, Charles P. Blanchard, Luther P. Durgin, Ebenezer S. Towle, George E. Jenks, Dutton Woods, Henry C. Sturtevant, Charles P. Moore, Samuel F. Merrill, Daniel Wyman, Daniel S. Webster.
 1875.—Nathan Chandler, David Putnam, Charles W. Blake, Daniel Holden, Luther P. Durgin, John Ballard, Honore A. Brown, Dutton Woods, Charles P. Sanborn, Moses Humphrey, Charles P. Moore, Samuel F. Merrill, John A. Mugridge, Daniel S. Webster, Benjamin F. Gale.
 1876.—David Putnam, William H. Bell, Cyrus B. Robinson, Abiel Holley, Honore A. Brown, John Ballard, Oliver Pillsbury, Charles P. Sanborn, Moses Humphrey, Stillman Humphrey, Moses W. DeKernan, Joseph C. A. Hill, John C. Kilburn, Benjamin F. Gale, John H. Lamprey.
 1877.—Rufus Cess, Timothy C. Rolfe, Cyrus B. Robinson, Wm. H. Holden, Oliver Pillsbury, George A. Young, William E. Stevens, Stillman Humphrey, Jonathan E. Sargent, Edward Dow, Moses W. DeKernan, Joseph C. A. Hill, John C. Kilburn, John H. Lamprey, Andrew S. Smith.
 1878.—Timothy C. Rolfe, William W. Allen, Henry F. Campbell, Wm. H. Holden, George A. Young, William E. Stevens, Jonathan E. Sargent, Edward Dow, Joseph Wentworth, Charles C. Lund, Jonathan L. Prekerian, Andrew S. Smith, Moses Critchett.
 1879-80.—William W. Allen, Henry F. Campbell, John Thornton, William D. Lord, Henry Robinson, Charles C. Danforth, Edgar H. Woodman, Charles C. Lund, George E. Lawrence, John B. Flanders.
 1881-82.—Nathaniel S. Gale, Rufus Virgin, Henry Robinson, Enoch Gerrish, Howard A. Dodge, William E. Chandler, Walter Harriman, Leland A. Smith, Jeremiah S. Abbot.
 1883-84.—John P. Locke, Moses H. Farrum, Frank E. Brown, Samuel C. Eastman, Charles H. Jones, Charles B. Corning, Wentworth G. Shaw, John H. Carr, George Cook, Ebenezer B. Hutchins, Jacob E. Hutchins.

1855.—James Tallant, Charles E. Rice, J. Davis, Kirtland Frank, S. Stearns, Charles T. Hunt, Jr., Lyman Jackson, Pres. H. F. Stevens, George C. Hall, Henry W. May, Robert A. Ray, Leonard H. Condit.

Concord was incorporated as a city July 6, 1849, but the charter was not adopted until March 19, 1853.

The first charter election was held March 26, 1853, with three candidates for mayor in the field. Richard Bradley, Asa Fowler and Joseph Low. The vote was as follows: Bradley, 644; Low, 749; Fowler, 126. Low not having a majority, a second election was held April 5th, when he was chosen by a majority of 192, his opponent being Mr. Bradley. The following officers were chosen at the March election:

1853.—Ward 1, John Batchelder; Ward 2, John L. Tallant; Ward 3, Joseph Eastman; Ward 4, Robert Davis; Ward 5, Edwin Hill; Ward 6, Matthew Harvey; Ward 7, Josiah Stevens.

1854.—Ward 1, Jeremiah S. Durgin, Eben F. Elliot; Ward 2, Samuel B. Larkin, Benjamin Sanborn; Ward 3, George W. Benson, Moses Humphrey; Ward 4, Ezra Carter, George Minot; Ward 5, William H. H. Bailey, Cyrus Barton; Ward 6, Ebenezer G. Moore, Thomas Kirby; Ward 7, Moses Shute, Giles W. Ordway.

1855.—Ward 1, Nathan Chandler, assessor, Jeremiah S. Durgin, moderator; Ward 2, William Parker, assessor, Timothy W. Emery, moderator; Ward 3, John Abbott, assessor, Daniel H. Eble, moderator; Ward 4, Jonathan E. Lang, assessor; John H. George, moderator; Ward 5, Nathan Call, assessor; John L. Hadley, moderator; Ward 6, William M. Carter, assessor, N. B. Baker, moderator; Ward 7, Jeremiah S. Hayes, assessor, Josiah Stevens, moderator.

1856.—Ward 1, James D. Page; Ward 2, John M. Dearborn; Ward 3, Ellbridge Dimond; Ward 4, J. B. Smart; Ward 5, Mitchell Gilmore; Ward 6, John F. Brown; Ward 7, James M. Oles.

1857.—Ward 1, Albert H. Brown, Samuel F. Brown, Rufus D. Scales; Ward 2, Hens D. Potter, Isaac Virgin, Zebulon Smith; Ward 3, Simon Abbott, Hiram Luntum, Jeremiah S. Abbott; Ward 4, Lyman W. Walker, Thos. A. Andrews, Jas. H. Biswell; Ward 5, Jonas Sargent, Eben Colby, Jr., George A. Pillsbury; Ward 6, James F. Litch, Joseph H. May, Caleb Parker; Ward 7, Atkinson Webster, Isaac Abbott, Jane Thompson.

1858.—Ward 1, Edmund Worth; Ward 2, Henry A. Kendall; Ward 3, Asa P. Tenney; Ward 4, Ebenezer South; Ward 5, Chas. P. Gove; Ward 6, Jas. W. Sargent; Ward 7, Josiah Stevens.

The city government was organized April 6, 1853. The oath of office was administered to the mayor by Hon. Josiah Minot. Cyrus Barton was chosen president of the Common Council and W. H. H. Bailey clerk pro tem. At an adjourned meeting, held April 9th, John F. Brown was elected city clerk, Wm. H. Bartlett, city solicitor, and Amos Hadley clerk of the Common Council.

The following is a list of mayors, aldermen and members of the Common Council, prepared expressly for this work by Deacon Daniel F. Secomb:

MAYORS.

- 1853.—Joseph Low, died August 28, 1859, aged sixty-nine years.
 1854.—Rufus Clement, died January 13, 1856, aged fifty years.
 1855.—John Abbott.
 1856.—Moses F. Willard, died May 29, 1881, aged seventy-seven years.
 1857.—Moses Humphrey.
 1858.—Benjamin F. Gale, died December 1879, aged sixty years.
 1859.—Moses Humphrey.
 1860.—John Abbott.
 1861.—Lyman D. Stevens.
 1862.—Amos Hadley, Jones.
 1863.—John F. Brown.
 1864.—John F. Brown.
 1865.—John F. Brown.
 1866.—John F. Brown.
 1867.—John F. Brown.
 1868.—John F. Brown.
 1869.—John F. Brown.
 1870.—John F. Brown.

ALDERMEN.

WARD 1.

- 1853.—John Batchelder, born September 2, 1799; died October 29, 1876, aged seventy-six years.
 1854.—Henry H. Amshen, died December 6, 1869, aged fifty-three years.
 1855.—Albert H. Brown.
 1856.—David A. Brown.
 1857.—Jacob B. Rand.
 1858.—Samuel Merriam.
 1859.—John A. Holmes.
 1860.—Jeremiah S. Durgin, died January, 1868, aged fifty-seven years.
 1861.—David Putnam, died 1879.
 1862.—William H. Bell.
 1863.—John Whitaker.
 1864.—John S. Brown.
 1865.—Charles H. Amshen.
 1866.—John Whitaker.
 1867.—John C. Emshen.
 1868.—Franklin A. Abbott.
 1869.—Nathaniel S. Gale (resigned) and John H. Bolle.
 1870.—John Carter.
 1871.—J. T. Marden.
 1872.—Henry F. Brown.

WARD 2.

- 1853.—John F. Tallant.
 1854.—Samuel Clifford, died February 6, 1879, aged eighty-six years.
 1855.—Ebenezer Eastman.
 1856.—Jacob A. Potter, died April 28, 1865, aged sixty-six years.
 1857.—Samuel Eastman.
 1858.—Thomas B. Potter, died March 2, 1873, aged seventy-seven years.

1859.—Timothy W. Emery, died May 29, 1875, aged sixty-one years.

- 1860.—John P. Locke.
 1861.—Thompson Tenney.
 1862.—Joseph T. Clough.
 1863.—George H. Curtis.
 1864.—John B. Curtis.
 1865.—John G. Tallant.
 1866.—John T. Tenney.
 1867.—Cyrus R. Robinson.
 1868.—Josiah S. Locke.
 1869.—Charles H. Clough.
 1870.—Charles H. Sanborn.

WARD 3.

- 1853.—Joseph Eastman.
 1854.—John Abbott (mayor, 1856).
 1855.—Moses Humphrey (mayor, 1861).
 1856.—Ellbridge Dimond.
 1857.—Ezra Rowell, died June 14, 1876, aged seventy-nine years.
 1858.—William D. Colby.
 1859.—Henry Martin.
 1860.—John V. Aldrich.
 1861.—George W. Flinders.
 1862.—William H. Brown.
 1863.—Alfred C. Abbott.
 1864.—Daniel Holden.
 1865.—Andrew J. Holmes.
 1866.—Jehud D. Knight.
 1867.—Benjamin T. Putney.
 1868.—Omar L. Shepard.
 1869.—Albert Salmons Jr.
 1870.—Charles Eastman.

WARD 4.

- 1853.—Robert Davis, died March 19, 1861, aged seventy-one years.
 1854.—Samuel O'Brien, died September 27, 1865, aged seventy-nine years.
 1855.—William Prescott, died October 18, 1875, aged eighty-six years.
 1856.—Moses T. Willard (mayor, 1859).
 1857.—Shadrach Seavey, died January 31, 1883, aged seventy-two years.
 1858.—Ezra Ballard, died May 7, 1872, aged sixty-nine years.
 1859.—Joshua B. Merrill.
 1860.—Charles H. Herbert.
 1861.—Horace A. Brown (mayor, 1878).
 1862.—Luther P. Durgin.
 1863.—Joseph B. Walker.

- 1871.—Abner C. Holt.
- 1876.—Samuel W. Shattuck.
- 1878.—Samuel M. Griffin.
- 1880.—Emory N. Shepard.
- 1882.—Oliver Pillsbury and John C. Thorn.
- 1881.—Richard M. Ordway and Frank L. Sander.

WARD 5.

- 1850.—Eldon Hill.
- 1854.—True Osgood, born January 21, 1814; died February 21, 1884, aged seventy years.
- 1855.—John Brown, died March 4, 1863, aged sixty-two years.
- 1857.—Ezra Blake.
- 1859.—Robert N. Caring, died June 13, 1866, aged forty-seven years.
- 1860.—Bradbury Gill, died December 13, 1884, aged seventy-five years.
- 1861.—Wentworth G. Shaw.
- 1863.—Nicholas Quimby, died August 11, 1873, aged seventy-seven years.
- 1865.—Curtis White.
- 1867.—Abraham G. Jones (mayor, 1870).
- 1869.—Daniel F. Secomb.
- 1871.—Stillman Humphrey.
- 1872.—George A. Pillsbury (mayor, 1876).
- 1873.—George A. Cummings (mayor, 1880).
- 1877.—Joseph A. Cochran.
- 1879.—William H. Buntin.
- 1880.—Edward Dow.
- 1882.—Henry A. Mann.
- 1884.—Albert B. Woodworth and Irving S. King.

WARD 6.

- 1853.—Matthew Harvey, died April 7, 1866, aged eighty-four years.
- 1854.—George B. Chandler, died at St. Josephs, Mich., October 28, 1878, aged seventy-five years.
- 1856.—William Kent.
- 1868.—Ebenzer G. Moore, died March 2, 1879, aged seventy-three years.
- 1859.—Caleb Parker, died January 18, 1874, aged sixty-three years.
- 1861.—Benjamin F. Gale (mayor, 1863).
- 1863.—Abraham J. Prescott.
- 1865.—Edward P. Prescott.
- 1867.—Henry T. Chickering.
- 1870.—John D. Teal.
- 1871.—Emoch L. Childs.
- 1873.—Albe J. Hall.
- 1874.—James L. Mason.
- 1876.—Byron G. Morrill.
- 1878.—Henry W. Clapp.
- 1880.—John T. Batchelder.
- 1882.—Joseph H. Lane and Gardner B. Emmons.
- 1884.—Leland A. Smith.

WARD 7.

- 1851.—Josiah Stevens, died April 17, 1869, aged seventy-four years.
- 1854.—Moses Shute, died March 13, 1858, aged sixty-eight years.
- 1855.—Samuel Pease.
- 1857.—George F. Whittridge.
- 1859.—Joseph Hazleton, died December 31, 1880, aged eighty-one years.
- 1861.—Josiah Cooper.
- 1863.—William Walker, died November 22, 1882, aged seventy-two years.
- 1865.—Daniel S. Webster.
- 1867.—Isaac Clement, died May 30, 1875, aged seventy-one years.
- 1869.—Nathan W. Dove, died August 8, 1871, aged fifty-four years.
- 1871.—Andrew S. Smith.
- 1873.—Jacob E. Hutchins.
- 1875.—Isaac N. Abbott.
- 1877.—Henry Churchhill, born in Brookfield, N. H., June 26, 1811, died March 18, 1885.
- 1879.—Charles E. Thompson.
- 1880.—John H. Lamprey.
- 1884.—Daniel B. Smith.

CITY CLERKS.

- 1853.—John F. Brown, died July 26, 1878, aged sixty-three years.
- 1864.—David Watson, died March 25, 1867, aged seventy-eight years.
- 1862.—William A. Hodgdon.
- 1865.—Charles F. Stewart, died October 14, 1869, aged sixty-four years.
- 1870.—Joseph A. Cochran.

COMMON COUNCILMEN.

WARD 1.

- 1843.—Jeremiah S. Durign (alderman 1867) and Ebenezer F. Farnum.
- 1844.—Rufus D. Seales and Nathaniel C. Elliott.
- 1855.—Robert B. Hunt and Jacob B. Rand, 1856 (alderman 1860).
- 1857.—Timothy C. Rolfe (died November 7, 1884, aged eighty-one years) and Jeremiah F. Runnels, 1858 (died October 9, 1868, aged sixty-nine years).
- 1859.—Andrew P. Bennett and Cyrus W. Leland.
- 1861.—Alfred A. Eastman (died September 3, 1861, aged twenty-eight years) and Hiram Simpson (resigned) and Nathaniel Rolfe.
- 1862.—George P. Moserrie.
- 1863.—Harvey Chase.
- 1864.—Amos Hot (died February 3, 1876, aged seventy-six years) and Hazen Knowlton.
- 1866.—Edward Runnels and Hezekiah S. Durign (alderman 1867).
- 1867.—Hiram F. Simpson (died September 5, 1867, fifty-four years) and John Whittaker (alderman 1871).
- 1868.—William A. Bell (alderman 1869) and Cyrus Runnels.
- 1866.—Cyrus A. Fowler.
- 1870.—Job S. Davis.
- 1871.—Franklin A. Abbott (alderman 1878) and Daniel G. Himes.
- 1872.—John C. Lanehan (alderman 1877).
- 1874.—Rufus Cass.
- 1875.—Andrew P. Bennett.
- 1876.—Frederick G. Chandler.
- 1877.—Edward Runnels.
- 1878.—John Carter.
- 1879.—Jerome S. Runnels.
- 1880.—Henry Rolfe and Sherwin P. Colby.
- 1882.—John W. Powell.
- 1884.—David F. Dudley.

WARD 2.

- 1854.—Samuel B. Larkin (died August 8, 1863, aged sixty-five years) and Heman Simbarn.
- 1856.—Charles Sanborn and Ephraim S. Colby.
- 1856.—James Locke and William Pecker.
- 1858.—Timothy W. Emery (alderman 1864) and Isaac Virgin.
- 1860.—Zebulon Smith and William Abbott.
- 1862.—Sylvester Stevens and John B. Curtis (alderman 1874).
- 1864.—Rufus Virgin and John P. Locke (alderman 1866).
- 1866.—Thompson Tenney (alderman 1868) and David A. Merrill.
- 1868.—Joseph T. Clough (alderman 1870) and Jonathan P. Leavitt.
- 1870.—Daniel Sanborn and Josiah S. Locke (alderman 1880).
- 1872.—William A. Bean and Solomon Sanders.
- 1874.—John G. Tallant (alderman 1876).
- 1874.—Zebina C. Perkins.
- 1875.—Elbridge Emery.
- 1876.—John T. Tenney (alderman 1878).
- 1877.—John T. Batchelder.
- 1878.—John E. Frye.
- 1879.—John B. Sanborn.
- 1880.—Charles H. Simbarn and John N. Hill.
- 1882.—Ezra C. Virgin.
- 1884.—Samuel L. French.

WARD 3.

- 1853.—George W. Brown and Moses Humphrey (alderman 1856).
- 1855.—Moses M. Davis and Hiram Farnum.
- 1857.—Benjamin F. Holden (died November 29, 1871, aged sixty-eight years) and Henry Farnum.
- 1859.—Stephen Carleton and William D. Colby (alderman 1864).
- 1861.—Moses H. Farnum and Henry Martin (alderman 1864).
- 1862.—George W. Flanders (alderman 1867) and John V. Aldrich (alderman 1865).
- 1865.—Henry Farnum.
- 1866.—Harrison Partridge.
- 1867.—Jacob N. Flanders.
- 1869.—John Thornton.
- 1870.—Benjamin Farnum and Robert K. Abbott.
- 1870.—Charles H. Farnum.
- 1871.—Franklin J. Emerson and Jehud H. Knight (alderman 1877).
- 1872.—Charles H. Farnum and Daniel C. Tenney.
- 1875.—Andrew S. Farnum.
- 1874.—Lyman Sawyer.
- 1877.—Charles H. Merrill.

- 1870 — Thomas H. Linn, addleman 1865.
 1877 — Stephen W. Linn, died June 1, 1878, aged sixty years.
 1880 — Abner Robinson, died January 1, 1881, aged sixty years.
 1881 — Lewis Linn, died November 1, 1881, aged sixty years.
 1882 — Jeremiah Robinson.
 1888 — Nathan B. Hill, died.

WARD 4.

- 1844 — Thomas C. Smith, died May 1, 1845, aged sixty years.
 1846 — Thomas P. Smith, died April 13, 1847, aged sixty years.
 1848 — Rufus May.
 1850 — Richard B. Burt, died February 1, 1851, aged sixty-one years.
 1851 — George W. Fay.
 1858 — Ebenezer Burt, died May 20, 1859, aged sixty-one years.
 1859 — Ebenezer Pillsbury.
 1859 — Ezra Bell, died February 1, 1860.
 1861 — Moses A. Beecham.
 1862 — George N. C. Allen, died August 1, 1863, aged sixty-four years.
 1863 — George A. Hall, died July 29, 1864, aged sixty-one years.
 1864 — John A. West, died February 1, 1865.
 1865 — George W. Fay, died.
 1867 — Daniel Farnum.
 1868 — John H. Hill, died August 1, 1869, aged fifty-eight years.
 1869 — Arthur P. Burdick, died August 1, 1870.
 1870 — John C. Hill, died August 1, 1871, aged Charles P. Blanchard, born March 1, 1812, died April 1, 1872, aged sixty-three years.

- 1871 — Daniel F. Howland, died and George H. Carleton.
 1872 — Richard M. Ordway.
 1873 — Charles W. Mead, died.
 1874 — George H. Hill.
 1875 — John C. Hill, died 1877, aged sixty-five.
 1877 — Francis N. Shepard, died February 1, 1878.
 1878 — Nathaniel H. Shattuck.
 1879 — Frank J. Smith, 1880.
 1880 — Oliver A. Pitman.
 1882 — James F. Roney, Edward A. Moulton and Harrison A. Roby.
 1884 — William H. Renny and James K. Kennedy.

WARD 5.

- 1872 — William H. H. Bailey, died at Janssville, Wis., March 18, 1872, aged fifty-five years, and Cyrus Barton, 1843, died at London, February 17, 1855, aged fifty-eight years.

- 1844 — Silas G. Sylvester, died at Vineland, N. J., July 19, 1883, aged seventy-one years, and Peter Dudley, died August 13, 1871, aged sixty-eight years.

- 1850 — James Seligby and John Kimball, 1857 (mayor 1872).
 1857 — Nathaniel B. Walker.
 1858 — Bradbury Gull, addleman 1849.
 1859 — Wentworth G. Shaw, 1860 addleman 1841.
 1860 — William H. Buntin, 1861 addleman 1879.
 1861 — Nicholas Gumbly, addleman 1863.
 1862 — Abraham G. Jones, 1863, mayor 1870.
 1863 — Charles T. Lane.
 1864 — Curtis White, addleman 1860.
 1865 — Natham J. F. Meade and Emory T. Stannels.
 1867 — Philip Flanders, 1869, and Daniel E. S. Emmons, addleman 1869.
 1869 — Stillman Humphreys, 1870, addleman 1871.
 1870 — James H. Chase, 1871.
 1871 — John C. Dantforth, 1872, died September 17, 1882, aged seventy-three years.
 1872 — Cyrus G. Coning.
 1873 — Joseph A. Cochran, addleman 1877.
 1874 — Moses B. Cuthbert.
 1875 — George A. Foster.
 1876 — George J. Funderhill.
 1877 — A. B. Smith.
 1878 — Henry A. Mann, addleman 1882.
 1879 — Frank J. Rathholder.
 1880 — Thomas Ring and Benjamin F. Caldwell.
 1882 — Lewis S. Abbott.
 1883 — Lewis S. Abbott and Warren H. Conring.

WARD 6.

- 1843 — Thomas S. Mead, died March 18, 1848, and Thomas Bailey, died March 11, 1849, died November 1, 1859, aged fifty-five years.

- 1850 — Nathan Fair, died May 16, 1869, aged eighty years, and Isaac Widdell, died June 1, 1870, aged sixty-three years.

- 1850 — William Hart.
 1851 — Stephen Webster.
 1858 — Thomas H. Newhall, died January 23, 1869, aged fifty-two years.

- 1859 — Benjamin Hill.
 1859 — Abraham G. Jones, mayor 1870.
 1861 — John D. Ford, 1862, addleman 1870, and Lorenzo K. Padesk.
 1863 — Charles P. Vinton and Thomas W. Stewart.
 1865 — Henry T. Chickerling, 1866, addleman 1867, and Edward Dowd, addleman 1880.
 1867 — Lewis L. Mower, 1868, and Nathan H. Haskell.
 1869 — Charles H. Abbott.
 1870 — Prescott F. Stevens.
 1871 — Joshua T. Keedall.
 1872 — John E. T. Brown and Moses B. Smith, 1871.
 1873 — Alonzo Downing, died July 3, 1877, aged fifty-four years.
 1875 — Calvin Webster.
 1876 — Lewis B. Hill.
 1877 — Timothy Gully, died December 19, 1880, aged sixty-four years.
 1878 — Joseph C. A. Hill.
 1879 — Joseph H. Lane and George H. Emory, 1882.
 1882 — Henry S. Fairbanks, Leonard W. Bean, Hiram C. Marsh and Frank J. Rathholder.

WARD 7.

- 1851 — Moses Shute, addleman 1854, and Gals W. Ordway, died March 26, 1874, aged sixty-one years.

- 1854 — Joseph S. Lund, died December 27, 1882, aged eighty-two years, and Isaac Abbott.

- 1856 — James Thompson and Charles A. Reed.
 1857 — Josiah Cooper and Isaac Clement, addleman 1867.
 1859 — John B. Flanders and Moses B. Abbott.
 1860 — Jehoshiah C. Abbott.

- 1861 — Sarah Robinson, died January 25, 1875, aged seventy-seven years.

- 1862 — Charles W. Hazeltine.

- 1863 — James Weeks.

- 1864 — Isaac N. Abbott, 1865, addleman 1875.

- 1865 — Jonathan Weeks.

- 1866 — William S. Cutler, 1867, died August 1, 1875, aged sixty-one years.

- 1867 — Nathan W. Gove, addleman 1869.

- 1868 — Benjamin A. Hall, died November 21, 1883, aged sixty-four years.

- 1869 — Andrew S. Smith, addleman 1871.

- 1870 — Jacob E. Hutebins.

- 1871 — George W. Chesley.

- 1872 — James B. Fellows.

- 1873 — John Hazeltine.

- 1874 — James Thompson.

- 1875 — William Stevenson.

- 1876 — Henry Churchill, 1876, addleman 1877.

- 1877 — E. A. F. Hammond and James W. Lane.

- 1878 — Charles H. Padesk and Jeremiah S. Abbott.

- 1880 — Henry F. Evans (resigned) and Daniel B. Smith.

- 1881 — George H. Mills.

CLERKS OF COMMON COUNCIL.

- 1843 — Amos Hadley.

- 1869 — Lewis L. Mower.

The present city government is organized as follows:

- Mayor* — Edgar H. Woodman.
Addleman — Ward 1, John E. Marden; Ward 2, Charles H. Clough; Ward 3, Albert Saltmarsh; Ward 4, Emory M. Shepard, Oliver Pillsbury and John C. Thorne; Ward 5, Edward Dow and Henry A. Mann; Ward 6, John T. Rathholder, Joseph H. Lane and Gardner B. Emmons; Ward 7, John H. Lamprey.

- City Clerk* — Joseph A. Cochran.

Common Council — President, George H. Emery; Ward 1, John W. Powell; Ward 2, Eales P. Vigin; Ward 3, Jeremiah Quinn; Ward 4, James F. Roney, Edward A. Moulton and Harrison A. Roby; Ward 5, Irvan S. Ring and Frederick S. Abbott; Ward 6, George H. Emory, Horace S. Fairbanks and Leonard W. Bean; Ward 7, Daniel B. Smith, Clerk of Common Council, Lewis L. Mower.

City Treasurer.—William F. Thayer.
City Messenger.—Richard P. Sanborn.
Collector of Taxes.—Thomas M. Loring.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Board of Education.—Union School District.—John W. Thayer, term expires March, 1885; Parsons B. Cogswell, term expires March, 1885; Henry J. Crippen, term expires March, 1885; Al B. Thompson, term expires March, 1886; William M. Chase, term expires March, 1886; George W. Crockett, term expires March, 1886; Joseph C. Hill, term expires March, 1887; Daniel B. Donovan, term expires March, 1887; Charles R. Corning, term expires March, 1887.

Superintendent of Schools.—Warren Clark.

Supervising School Committees.—West Concord, District No. 1.—Ella R. Holden, term expires March, 1885; Frederick A. Eastman, term expires March, 1886; George R. Parmenter, term expires March, 1887.

East Concord, District No. 12.—George H. Curtis, term expires March, 1885; Elbridge Emery, term expires March, 1886.

Penasook, District No. 20.—William W. Allen, term expires March, 1885; Alfred E. Emery, term expires March, 1886; Edmund H. Brown, term expires March, 1887.

Other Districts.—William W. Flint, Charles B. Stead, Abial Rolfe; George H. Curtis.

Trustee Officers.—John Condo II, James E. Rand, Charles H. Jones.

PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Trustees.—Ward 1, Abial Rolfe; Ward 2, Joseph T. Cough; Ward 3, Paul R. Holden; Ward 4, William L. Foster; Ward 5, Henry W. Stearns; Ward 6, James S. Norris; Ward 7, Rev. Thomas G. Valpey; and William W. Flint.

Librarian.—Daniel F. Second.

ASSESSORS.

Ward 1, Abial Rolfe; Ward 2, John G. Tallant; Ward 3, Harrison Partridge; Ward 4, Gilbert H. Seavey; Ward 5, Curtis White; Ward 6, George S. Bennett; Ward 7, Jonathan B. Weeks. Chairman, Gilbert H. Seavey; Clerk, Abial Rolfe.

CITY WATER-WORKS.

Water Commissioners.—Edgar H. Woodman, mayor, ex-officio; Samuel S. Kimball, term expires March 31, 1885; Luther P. Durzin, term expires March 31, 1885; John Kimball, term expires March 31, 1886; William M. Chase, term expires March 31, 1886; James L. Mason, term expires March 31, 1887; Joseph H. Abbott, term expires March 31, 1887. President, John Kimball; Clerk, William M. Chase.

Superintendent of Water-Works.—V. Charles Hastings.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Chief Engineer.—John M. Hill.

Assistant Engineers.—For Penasook.—Daniel B. Newhall, Joseph S. Merrill, Frank Tucker. For Penasook, William H. Allen. For East Concord.—John E. Frye. For West Concord.—Harrison Partridge.

Steward Central Fire Station.—Eben F. Richardson.

Assistant Steward Central Fire Station.—George L. Cogswell.

Superintendent of Fire Alarm.—Eben F. Richardson.

POLICE DEPARTMENT.

Police Justice.—Sylvester Dana.

Special Police Justice.—Benjamin E. Redger.

City Spector.—Robert A. Bay.

Clerk of Police Court.—Rufus P. Stannels.

City Marshal.—John Connell.

Assistant City Marshal.—George W. Corey.

STREET DEPARTMENT.

Commissioner of Highways.—Edgar H. Woodman.

Superintendent of Streets.—James H. Rowell.

OVERSEERS OF THE POOR.

For Ward 1, J. Edwin Marden, Penasook. For Ward 2, Charles H. Cough, East Concord. For Ward 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, Joseph A. Condran.

City Physician.—Dr. George Cook.

Assistant City Physician.—Dr. Alfred E. Emery.

Health Officers.—John Connell, George Cook, Alfred E. Emery.

WARD OFFICERS.

Moderators.—Ward 1, James H. French; Ward 2, John B. Corning; Ward 3, George R. Parmenter; Ward 4, Benjamin E. Redger; Ward 5, Charles B. Stead; Ward 6, George L. Cogswell.

Sergeant.

Scout.—Ward 1, William H. Jones.

Ward 2, Fred F. Potter; Ward 3, J. H. Jones; Ward 4, George E. Kelley; Ward 5, Nathan J. Burt; Ward 6, William W. Wagon; Ward 7, George H. Corning; Ward 8, James S. Norris.

Ward 9, George L. Theobald; George L. Rolfe; Ward 10, J. H. Jones; Ward 11, Alfred Clark; Ward 12, H. Crockett.

Ward Clerks.—Ward 1, Frederick M. May; Ward 2, Alfred Clark; Ward 3, Fred A. Eastman; Ward 4, Charles A. Jones; Ward 5, William Ing; Ward 6, H. Ward; Ward 7, George L. Rolfe.

STATISTICAL.

Population of the city, census 1880, 11,181.
 Valuation of the city, 1880, $1,877,574.
 Tax assessed for the year, 1880, $149,285.
 Ratable valuation, 1880, $1,728,289.
 Higher than in any of the other five cities of the State.
 Higher than in any of the other five cities of the State.
 Higher than in any of the other five cities of the State.

VALUATION OF REAL ESTATE IN CONCORD.

The amount of the real estate tax assessed for the year 1880, tabulated in the following table:

Year.	No. of Polls.	Valuation.	Tax.
1860	1,777	$1,277,152	$175,750
1861	1,957	1,441,155	192,339
1862	2,159	1,628,155	211,000
1863	2,334	1,777,296	232,652
1864	2,437	1,824,800	240,157
1865	2,489	1,839,992	242,729
1866	2,572	1,874,682	246,167
1867	2,822	1,999,774	263,174
1868	3,129	2,281,155	298,871
1869	3,215	2,394,155	313,700
1870	3,337	2,731,928	356,100
1871	3,478	2,891,934	379,170
1872	3,577	3,070,034	401,127
1873	3,614	3,312,650	432,114
1874	3,754	3,696,266	481,000
1875	3,911	4,206,195	552,188
1876	4,011	4,322,425	568,720
1877	4,095	4,401,117	577,027
1878	4,809	5,241,185	692,810
1879	5,026	6,021,185	799,100
1880	5,752	7,121,378	949,112
1881	5,975	8,029,294	1,062,000

Year.	Polls.	Valuation.	Tax.
1882	6,492	8,811,772	$1,175,710
Ward 1	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 2	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 3	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 4	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 5	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 6	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 7	219	143,100	18,119
Non-resident	—	—	—

Year.	Polls.	Valuation.	Tax.
1883	7,011	9,811,151	$1,275,320
Ward 1	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 2	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 3	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 4	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 5	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 6	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 7	219	143,100	18,119
Non-resident	—	—	—

Year.	Polls.	Valuation.	Tax.
1884	7,531	10,677,574	$1,382,290
Ward 1	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 2	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 3	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 4	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 5	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 6	219	143,100	18,119
Ward 7	219	143,100	18,119
Non-resident	—	—	—

1 Resigned.

2 Elected to the vacant seat.

HISTORY OF MERRIMACK COUNTY, NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Year	Rate	Amount	Amount
April 1, 1841	1000	52
April 1, 1842	1000	52
April 1, 1843	1000	52
April 1, 1844	1000	52
April 1, 1845	1000	52
April 1, 1846	1000	52
April 1, 1847	1000	52
April 1, 1848	1000	52
April 1, 1849	1000	52
April 1, 1850	1000	52
April 1, 1851	1000	52
April 1, 1852	1000	52
April 1, 1853	1000	52
April 1, 1854	1000	52
April 1, 1855	1000	52
April 1, 1856	1000	52
April 1, 1857	1000	52
April 1, 1858	1000	52
April 1, 1859	1000	52
April 1, 1860	1000	52
April 1, 1861	1000	52
April 1, 1862	1000	52
April 1, 1863	1000	52
April 1, 1864	1000	52
April 1, 1865	1000	52
April 1, 1866	1000	52
April 1, 1867	1000	52
April 1, 1868	1000	52
April 1, 1869	1000	52
April 1, 1870	1000	52
April 1, 1871	1000	52
April 1, 1872	1000	52
April 1, 1873	1000	52
April 1, 1874	1000	52
April 1, 1875	1000	52
April 1, 1876	1000	52
April 1, 1877	1000	52
April 1, 1878	1000	52
April 1, 1879	1000	52
April 1, 1880	1000	52
April 1, 1881	1000	52
April 1, 1882	1000	52
April 1, 1883	1000	52
April 1, 1884	1000	52
April 1, 1885	1000	52
April 1, 1886	1000	52
April 1, 1887	1000	52
April 1, 1888	1000	52
April 1, 1889	1000	52
April 1, 1890	1000	52
April 1, 1891	1000	52
April 1, 1892	1000	52
April 1, 1893	1000	52
April 1, 1894	1000	52
April 1, 1895	1000	52
April 1, 1896	1000	52
April 1, 1897	1000	52
April 1, 1898	1000	52
April 1, 1899	1000	52
April 1, 1900	1000	52

Year	Rate	Amount
1841-1844	1000	208
1845-1848	1000	208
1849-1852	1000	208
1853-1856	1000	208
1857-1860	1000	208
1861-1864	1000	208
1865-1868	1000	208
1869-1872	1000	208
1873-1876	1000	208
1877-1880	1000	208
1881-1884	1000	208
1885-1888	1000	208
1889-1892	1000	208
1893-1896	1000	208
1897-1900	1000	208

Year	Rate	Amount
1841-1844	1000	208
1845-1848	1000	208
1849-1852	1000	208
1853-1856	1000	208
1857-1860	1000	208
1861-1864	1000	208
1865-1868	1000	208
1869-1872	1000	208
1873-1876	1000	208
1877-1880	1000	208
1881-1884	1000	208
1885-1888	1000	208
1889-1892	1000	208
1893-1896	1000	208
1897-1900	1000	208

Year	Rate	Amount
1841-1844	1000	208
1845-1848	1000	208
1849-1852	1000	208
1853-1856	1000	208
1857-1860	1000	208
1861-1864	1000	208
1865-1868	1000	208
1869-1872	1000	208
1873-1876	1000	208
1877-1880	1000	208
1881-1884	1000	208
1885-1888	1000	208
1889-1892	1000	208
1893-1896	1000	208
1897-1900	1000	208

Year	Rate	Amount
1841-1844	1000	208
1845-1848	1000	208
1849-1852	1000	208
1853-1856	1000	208
1857-1860	1000	208
1861-1864	1000	208
1865-1868	1000	208
1869-1872	1000	208
1873-1876	1000	208
1877-1880	1000	208
1881-1884	1000	208
1885-1888	1000	208
1889-1892	1000	208
1893-1896	1000	208
1897-1900	1000	208

Year	Rate	Amount
April 1, 1841	1000	52
April 1, 1842	1000	52
April 1, 1843	1000	52
April 1, 1844	1000	52
April 1, 1845	1000	52
April 1, 1846	1000	52
April 1, 1847	1000	52
April 1, 1848	1000	52
April 1, 1849	1000	52
April 1, 1850	1000	52
April 1, 1851	1000	52
April 1, 1852	1000	52
April 1, 1853	1000	52
April 1, 1854	1000	52
April 1, 1855	1000	52
April 1, 1856	1000	52
April 1, 1857	1000	52
April 1, 1858	1000	52
April 1, 1859	1000	52
April 1, 1860	1000	52
April 1, 1861	1000	52
April 1, 1862	1000	52
April 1, 1863	1000	52
April 1, 1864	1000	52
April 1, 1865	1000	52
April 1, 1866	1000	52
April 1, 1867	1000	52
April 1, 1868	1000	52
April 1, 1869	1000	52
April 1, 1870	1000	52
April 1, 1871	1000	52
April 1, 1872	1000	52
April 1, 1873	1000	52
April 1, 1874	1000	52
April 1, 1875	1000	52
April 1, 1876	1000	52
April 1, 1877	1000	52
April 1, 1878	1000	52
April 1, 1879	1000	52
April 1, 1880	1000	52
April 1, 1881	1000	52
April 1, 1882	1000	52
April 1, 1883	1000	52
April 1, 1884	1000	52
April 1, 1885	1000	52
April 1, 1886	1000	52
April 1, 1887	1000	52
April 1, 1888	1000	52
April 1, 1889	1000	52
April 1, 1890	1000	52
April 1, 1891	1000	52
April 1, 1892	1000	52
April 1, 1893	1000	52
April 1, 1894	1000	52
April 1, 1895	1000	52
April 1, 1896	1000	52
April 1, 1897	1000	52
April 1, 1898	1000	52
April 1, 1899	1000	52
April 1, 1900	1000	52

Item	Amount
Principal	$200,000
Interest	150,000
Amortization	20,000
Reserve	15,000
Total	$485,000

Item	Amount
Debits	$432,000.00
Credits	$432,000.00
Balance	$53,000.00

CHAPTER VII.

CONCORD—(Continued).

MILITARY HISTORY.

The Heroes of Four Wars—The French and Indian War—List of Soldiers—War of the Revolution—The Association Test—The Arrest of Peter Green—Concord Men at Cambridge—At Bennington—List of Soldiers—Bonuses Paid—War of 1812—Soldiers' Names—War of the Rebellion—Concord a Recruiting Station and Military Rendezvous—First Company Raised—Captain E. E. Sturdevant—List of Soldiers.

The French and Indian Wars.—In the struggle known as the French and Indian Wars this town contributed its full share of men and money. The following is a list of those who entered the service:

John Chandler, Joseph Eastman, captains; Nathaniel Abbot, lieutenant; David Capps, Moses Eastman, sergeants; Nathaniel Morse, clerk; David Evans, corporal; Oboliah Maxfield, Phineas Virgin, Moses Eastman, Edward Abbot, Jacob Potter, David Kimball, John Hoyt, Jonathan Fitch, Thomas Merrill, Nathaniel Bix, Jonathan Chase, Ebenezer Capps, Asa Kimball, Ebenezer Virgin, Ebenezer Simonds, James Farnum, Judah Trimble, Isaac Walker, John Webster, Reuben Simonds, Joseph Eastman, Joshua Abbot (son of Lieutenant Nathaniel Abbot), John Shute, Daniel Abbot, Benjamin Hamford, Amos Eastman, Nathaniel Eastman, Benjamin Bradley, Stephen Hoyt, David Evans, Nelson Eastman and Philip Kimball, sentinels.

War of the Revolution.—The record of Concord during the War of the Revolution is one in which her citizens may justly feel a patriotic pride. The news of the battle of Lexington had scarcely reached the town before Captain Abiel Chandler had raised a company of thirty-six men and marched to Cambridge. There were three companies from this town in the battle of Bunker Hill. These were commanded by Captains Gordon Hutchins, Joshua Abbot and Aaron Kinsman.

At the meeting in March, 1776, Philip Eastman, Colonel Thomas Stickney, Timothy Walker, Jr., Joseph Hall, Jr., and Richard Harbut were chosen a committee of safety for the parish of Concord for the year 1776."

The following citizens of Concord signed the "Association Test":

"We, the subscribers, do hereby solemnly engage and promise, that we will, to the utmost of our power, at the issue of our lives and fortunes, with arms, oppose the hostile proceedings of the British fleets and armies against the United American Colonies.

Reuben Kimball, John Kimball, Thomas Stickney, Peter Green, Tim Walker, jr., Benjamin Emery, John Bradley, Nathan Chandler, Aaron Stevens, James Walker, Robert Davis, Benj. Hamford, Daniel Gale, David Hall, Simon Dunforth, Nathaniel Abbot, Nathaniel Rolfe, Stephen Greenleaf, Samuel Thompson, John Gage, Moses Eastman, jr., Jacob Carter, John Fowle, Levi Ross (his X mark), Jeremiah Bradley, Peter Green, jr., Amos Abbot, Timothy Bradley, Ephraim Farnum, Cornelius Johnson, Philip Eastman, Daniel Abbot, Richard Flanders, Joseph Farnum, Richard Haseltine, Joseph Hall, jr., Benjamin Fitch, Reuben Abbot, Lot Colby, Jonathan Eastman, Daniel Chase, David George, John Stevens, John Virgin, Phineas Stevens, Jabez Abbot, Benjamin Abbot, Ebenezer Hall, Henry Martin, Timothy Simonds, William Fitch, Reuben Abbot, jr., Samuel Butters, Tim. Walker (his X mark), Henry Beck, Benjamin Rolfe, Oliver Hoyt, Theodore Farnum, Ebenezer Farnum, Ephraim Farnum, John Stevens (his X mark), Moses Eastman, Chandler Lovejoy, Samuel Kinkson, Caleb Boswell, Richard Eastman, Solomon Gage, Ezekiel Diamond, jr., Amos Abbot, jr., William Coffin, Joseph Abbot, Jonathan Merrill, James Mitchell, Ezra Carter, Asa Kimball, Jonathan Emerson, Timothy Bradley, jr., Joseph Eastman, Phineas Virgin, William Carrier, Ebenezer Simond, Dan Stickney, Josiah Farnum, jr., Elisha Moody, Benjamin Eastman, Jacob Green, Benjamin Farnum, Ebenezer Virgin, Ephraim Potter, Edward Abbot, Jonathan Stickney, Eph'm Farnum, jr., William Virgin, Obadiah Hall, George Abbot, Josiah Farnum, Joseph Farnum, Stephen Kimball, Daniel Hall, Abner Flanders, Nathan Abbot, Jesse Abbot, Isaac Abbot, Ephraim Abbot, Stephen Abbot, George Abbot, jr., Stephen Farnum, Daniel Farnum, Daniel Chandler, Philip Varigain, Daniel Carter, Joseph Clough, Richard Herbert, Gordon Hutchins, James Haseltine, William Haseltine, Simon Trumble, John Chase, John Shute, Jacob Shute, Joseph Hall, John Trumble (his X mark), Joseph Colby, Ephraim Fisk, Nathaniel Green, Thomas Wilson, Isaac Walker, Ezra Bolger, Richard Flanders, Timothy Farnham, Ezekiel Diamond, Joseph Haseltine, Phineas Kimball, Robert Ambros, Benjamin Sweet, Abiel Blanchard, Benjamin Elliot, James Stevens, Joseph Eastman, jr., Richard Potter, Timothy Simonds, Philip Kimball, Timothy Kimball, John Farnum, Ezekiel Carter, Richard Hool, Henry Lovejoy, Lemuel Tucker, Jacob Goodwin, George Graham, Jeremiah Wheeler, Zephaniah Pett-y, Zebulah Farnum, Samuel Goodwin, Abner Farnum, Thomas Eaton, — 156"

Not a single name was returned as "disaffected;" still, as will appear from the proceedings next year, some were "suspected," and, whether justly or not, were severely dealt with on that account.

Many of the soldiers in service at Bunker Hill enlisted for eight months, and marched this year to join the Continental army in New York. Captain Joshua Abbot and Captain Benjamin Emery had command of companies. Captain Gordon Hutchins was promoted to lieutenant-colonel in Colonel Nahun Baldwin's regiment. On their march to New York many of his soldiers were taken sick, and no medicines being provided in the public stores, Colonel Hutchins purchased a quantity for the use of his soldiers at his own expense, being moved, as he said afterward, in a petition to the General Assembly for remuneration, with "pity and humanity towards the unhappy sufferers, and also actuated from zeal for the public service."

March 4, 1777, Messrs. John Kimball, Thomas Stickney, Reuben Kimball, Benjamin Emery and Richard Harbot were appointed a "Committee of Safety." Colonel Gordon Hutchins was chosen representative, and a vote was passed "to reconsider the former vote of the parish, passed March 7, 1776, for leasing the eighty-acre lot belonging to the school, right to Oliver Hoyt for nine hundred years, he paying the parish six dollars annually;" and it was voted, "that instead of said Hoyt paying six dollars annually, the selectmen are directed to receive of him one hundred dollars, in full consideration for said lot;" and "that the selectmen be directed to lay out the one hundred dollars which they shall receive of Oliver Hoyt for the eighty-acre lot for a town stock of ammunition."

About this time certain prominent individuals were suspected of disaffection to the American cause, notwithstanding they had signed the "Association Test." Hence the following votes were passed March 4th:

"Voted, That this Parish will break off all dealings with Peter Green, Esq., Mr. John Stevens, Mr. Nathaniel Green and Dr. Philip Caragan, until they give satisfaction to the Parish for their past conduct; and that they be advertised in the Public Prints as Enemies to the United States of America, unless said Persons give said satisfaction within thirty days from this date, and that the above Persons be dismissed by the Committee of Safety until they give satisfaction to the Public.

"Voted, That the Committee be directed to instruct Col. Gordon Hutchins to apply to the Courts of Judicature of this State to dismiss Peter Green, Esq., from all Business hereof and forever.

"Voted, That if any Persons have any Dealings with Peter Green, Esq., Mr. John Stevens, Mr. Nathaniel Green and Dr. Philip Caragan, let it be they give satisfaction to the Public; that they be looked upon as Enemies to the Country by this Parish.

"Voted, That the Committee of Safety be directed to instruct Col. Gordon Hutchins to apply to Capt. Parker, the Sheriff for the County of Rockingham, to dismiss Mr. Jacob Green from the office of Deputy Sheriff.

"A true copy —

Examined by TIMOTHY WALKER, Jr., 1777.

In accordance with the spirit of the above votes, some of the zealous liberty-men of the west part of the town meditated something a little more personal. About nine o'clock one morning Colonel Timothy Walker had just mounted his horse to ride away on business, when he observed a considerable number of West Parish men walking with quick steps by the meeting-house, towards Main Street; and behind them, at some distance, John Bradley, Esq., with a more deliberate step, and apparently in deep thought. Meeting at the corner, by Mr. Hamford's house, Colonel Walker said, "Good morning, Esq. Bradley; what's going on?" "I thought I would walk down and see," said Mr. Bradley. They followed on, and found the West Parish men at "Mother Osgood's" tavern, in high excitement, threatening to go at once and pull down Esq. Peter Green's house. On the arrival of Colonel Walker and Mr. Bradley, they entered into a discussion with the West Parish men on the merits of the case, and detained them from executing their purpose till near sun-down. Then, inviting them all into "Mother Osgood's" tavern, they called for bowls of punch, and treated the company liberally. All being by this time in a better mood, Colonel Walker made a brief speech, which he closed by saying, "Every man to his tent, O Israel!" and they quietly dispersed without tearing down Esp. Green's house!

However, soon after this, Peter Green, Esq., John Stevens and others were arrested, carried to Exeter and confined in jail. Liberty was granted them to take the oath of allegiance, as a condition of release, which all did except John Stevens. He swore he was as good a friend to his country as any who had caused his arrest, and he never would take the oath required. He was finally discharged from jail, by special order of the Legislature, in 1778. The town also voted, March 4, 1781, to "consider the vote formerly passed to break off all dealings with Mr. John Stevens, and that said vote be made null and void."

May 22d a committee was chosen to carry into execution an "act for regulating prices of sundry articles."

July 5th, Lieutenant-Colonel Gerrish, of Bosceawen, raised a company in Concord and adjacent towns for the relief of the garrison at Ticonderoga. News of the evacuation of the fort soon arrived, and the company was disbanded.

The year 1777 is memorable on account of the battle of Bennington, in which General John Stark, with his New Hampshire volunteers, defeated Colonel Baum, and thus ultimately led to the defeat and capture of General Burgoyne.

Belonging to Stark's brigade, at Bennington, were twenty-eight men from Concord. They did not, however, all arrive in season for the fight, which issued in so glorious a victory. Colonel Thomas Stickney, Lieutenant Richard Herbert, Jesse Abbot, John Abbot, Elias Abbot, Abner Flanders, Samuel Kinkison, John Peters and Timothy Johnson were in the battle. Col. Stickney particularly distinguished himself.

Colonel Gordon Hutchins, who raised a volunteer company of about thirty men in Concord, hastened as fast as possible towards Bennington, but did not arrive in time to share in the battle. The names of the volunteers in his company cannot be definitely ascertained.

Captain Joshua Abbot had command of a company in Colonel Gerrish's regiment, "which company marched from Concord and towns adjacent to reinforce the Northern Continental army at Saratoga, September, 1777."

On the 8th of September, this year, the selectmen, together with Lieutenant Joseph Hall, Timothy Walker, Jr., and Ezekiel Dimond, were appointed a committee "to settle with all persons who have done service in the army." It was voted, "that the expense of the Continental soldiers raised by the Parish of Concord shall be paid by the Parish," and that "the sum of four hundred and sixty pounds, lawful money, be raised upon the ratable polls and estate" of the parish, or that purpose.

Following is a list of Revolutionary soldiers

In Captain Joshua Abbot's company at Bunker Hill, 1775,

John Abbot, captain; Abiel Chandler, second lieutenant; Jeremiah Abbot, Samuel Davis, sergeants; Nathaniel C. Abbot, Stephen Abbot, Ruden Abbot, Amos Abbot, Jonathan Bradley, Ephraim Colby, Ezekiel Dimond, Moses Hall, Stephen Hall, William Mitchell, Richard Flood, William Straw, Peter Chandler.

In Captain Gordon Hutchins' company at Bunker Hill,

Gordon Hutchins, captain; Daniel Lavermore, ensign; Benjamin Abbot, sergeants; Simon Dantforth, William Walker, corporals; Robert Livingston, Isaac Johnson, Abraham Kimball, Thomas Chandler, Joseph Green, Peter Johnson, Samuel Straw, Levi Hutchins, fifer; Michael Flanders, drummer; Ezra Badger.

In Captain Aaron Kinsman's company at Bunker Hill,—

Aaron Kinsman, captain; Ebenezer Eastman, lieutenant; Samuel Thompson, corporal. NOTE.—Most of Captain Kinsman's company were from other towns.

Concord, February 26, 1776,—

"A return of those men who were in the Continental army last year, and have engaged to tarry the present year," etc. Signed by Timothy Walker, Jr., and Benjamin Emery, selectmen, viz.: Jeremiah Abbot, Nathaniel C. Abbot, John Kinkison, William Straw, Andrew Stone, William Walker, Nathaniel Eastman, Jr., Moses Hall.

In Captain Benjamin Sias' company (of London), 1776, of Colonel David Gilman's regiment, destined for New York, and mustered by Colonel Thomas Stickney, muster-master and paymaster of said company, were,— Philbrick Bradley, Peter Blanchard, Amos Abbot, Jr., Daniel Carter, Richard Flood and Stephen Sutton. The latter perhaps of Canterbury.

In the Continental service, under Captain Joshua Abbott, 1776,—

Abiel Chandler, lieutenant; Ephraim Colby, ensign; Timothy Hall, Jonathan Haseltine, Philip Page, Amos Barnes, Florence McCulley, Bernal Abbot, Stephen Hall, Peter Chandler, John Merrill, Seth Spring, John Blanchard, Benjamin Powell, Hezekiah Colby, William Walker, Phineas Stevens, Jonathan Johnson, Samuel Worthen, Moses Abbot, Moses Hall, Peter Carey, Jonathan Bradley, Ephraim Fisk.

In Captain Benjamin Emery's company (Colonel Nahum Baldwin's regiment, of which Gordon Hutchins was lieutenant-colonel), to reinforce the Continental army in New York, 1776,— Benjamin Emery, captain; Aaron Kinsman, ensign; Israel Glines, Ezra Badger, John Carter, Jonathan Currier, Simeon Colby, Ephraim Kinsman, William Stickney, Ezekiel Stickney, Jacob Carter, Solomon Gage, Benjamin Elliott, Bruce Walker.

The following men served in Colonel Timothy Bedel's regiment and Captain James Osgood's company, and were at Fort Cedars, Canada East, May 19, 1776, some of whom were taken prisoners, stripped of most of their clothing and all their equipments and utensils for the camp or field:

John Webster, lieutenant; Richard H. Osgood, Hubbard Carter, sergeants; Joshua Dantforth, corporal; Nathaniel C. Abbot, Nathaniel Walker, Joseph Lund, Joseph Giles, Ezra Abbot, Elias Abbot, Philip Abbot, Benjamin Fitch, Ezekiel Eastman, Nathan Kinsman, Benjamin Keimston, Daniel Chandler, Samuel Dantford, William Simonds.

In Captain Ebenezer Green's company,—

Israel Glines, Ebenezer Hall, Joseph Chandler.

Among those who were taken prisoners at Fort Cedars were Elias Abbot, Ezra Abbot, Philip Abbot and Benjamin Fifield.

In Captain Daniel Livermore's company, 1777, Third New Hampshire Regiment, who enlisted for three years, or during the war,—

Robert Livingston, sergeant; Amos Flood, corporal; Abner Hogg, Phineas Stevens, Daniel Chandler, Philip Rowell, Samuel Wrothien, Abiel Stevens, Solomon Fisk, Obadiah Kimball, Abner Farnum, Bernal Abbot, William Eastman, Jacob Eastman, John Straw, Ebenezer Farnum, Samuel Colby, who enlisted for one year.

In Lieutenant-Colonel Gerrish's regiment, raised in the town of Concord, and towns adjacent, which marched July 5, 1777, for the relief of the garrison at Ticonderoga, on the alarm, and marched seventy miles when the news of the evacuation of the fort arrived, were from Concord,— Richard Herbert, lieutenant; William Symonds, Timothy Bradley, John Chase, Richard Eastman, Simeon Dunforth, Isaac Abbott, Joseph Eastman, Daniel Farnum, Elias Abbot, John Peters, Nathaniel Eastman, Ebenezer Farnum, Ephraim Fisk, Jr., Abiel Hall, Isaac Chandler, Israel Glines, John Eastman, Phineas Stevens, Silson Eastman, Ezekiel Diamond, Benjamin Rolfe, Jacob Heath (?), Stephen Haines (?), John Cross (?), Peter Blanchard (?).

This company marched July 5th; were discharged the 12th.

In General Stark's brigade, at Bennington, Colonel Thomas Stickney, 1777,— Richard Herbert, lieutenant; Jesse Abbott, John Abbot, Timothy Johnson, Ephraim Abbot, Ezra Abbot, Stephen Abbot, Benjamin Ambrose, Philbrick Bradley (was wounded), Simeon Dunforth, Reuben Diamond, Benjamin Elliot, Theodore Farnum, Richard Flood, Elias Abbot, Abner Flanders, Samuel Kinsman, John Peters, Ephraim Fisk, Ephraim Fisk, Jr., David George, Solomon Gage, Israel Glines, Abiel Hall, Anthony Potter, Phineas Stevens, William Symonds, Simon Trumbull, Gilman West.

A return of the man's Names belonging to my Company, in Coll. Stickney's Regiment, which have Enlisted as Soldiers to serve three-months, agreeable to a Late Act of the General Court :

“Elias Abbot, Gilman West, Edward West, Ruben Blanchard, Ephraim Fisk, John Dow, Joseph Blanchard, Keyes Bradley, Josier Flanders, Ebenezer Gray, Benjamin Bradley, Elisha Virgin, William Eastman.

“ABNER KINSMAN, Capt.

Concord, July, 11, 1780.”

[Copied from the original.]

“CONCORD, July 17, 1781.

“We, the subscribers, do voluntarily Enlist ourselves as Soldiers in the service of New Hampshire for the Parish of Concord, for the term of three months after our arrival at the place of rendezvous, unless sooner discharged; and we promise obedience to our officers, and to be subject to the Rules of the Army during said term.

As Witness, our hand,—

“JEREMIAH VIRGIN.

“JEREMIAH CHANDLER.

“MOSES READ.

“PHINEAS AYER.

“JOSEPH BLANCHARD.

“DAVID EASTMAN.

“MILLEN KIMBALL.”

At Ticonderoga, 1777, Colonel Thomas Stickney's regiment, Captain Ebenezer Webster's company [Captain Webster was the father of Daniel Webster]:

Richard Herbert, lieutenant; William Symonds, Timothy Bradley, Simeon Dunforth, Isaac Abbott, Elias Abbot, John Abbot, Ezra Abbot, Phineas Stevens, Ezekiel Diamond, John Peters, Nathaniel Eastman, Ebenezer Farnum, Ephraim Fisk, Jr., Abiel Hall, Isaac Chandler, Israel Glines, John Eastman, Silson Eastman, Benjamin Rolfe.

In Captain Joshua Abbott's company of volunteers that marched to reinforce the northern army, October, 1777, were,— Reuben Kimball, lieutenant; James Mitchell, Major; John Peters, Captain; Amos Abbot, corporal; Jacob Carter, drummer; John Farnum, Amos Eastman, Silson Eastman, Jonathan Eastman, Ezekiel Diamond, Elisha Virgin, Joseph Eastman, Daniel Farnum, Chandler Lovell, Enos Coffin, James Johnson, Reuben Abbot, Larkin Stickney, Philip Abbot, Timothy Hall, John Peters, Michael Flanders, Isaac Diamond, John Straway, Benjamin Rolfe.

In Colonel Stickney's regiment, raised for the defense of Rhode Island, 1779,— Powder Eastman, Jacob Flanders, Josiah Flanders, Josiah Chandler.

New levies raised in 1780, and in service about six months,—

Joshua Graham, age seventeen; Thomas Carr, age twenty-three; Daniel Stickney, age eighteen; Aaron Eastman, age twenty; John Peters, age twenty-two; Jonas Wymen, age twenty; Benjamin Thompson, age eighteen; Jonathan Moulton, age —; Powder Eastman, age —.

In Captain Webster's company of Rangers, for the defense of the frontiers, 1782,— Abner Flanders, sergeant, engaged July 9th, dismissed November 10th; Henry Eastman, private, engaged July 9th, dismissed November 8th.

The following persons were also in the service :

David Davis, fifer; Moses Chase, Ebenezer Foss, Samuel Walker, Thomas Benja. Powell, Salem Colby (negro), Eliphalet Caswell, Nathan Sheaf, Thomas Childs, Jos. Hale, Ephraim Hoyt, Nathan Stevens, Timothy Abbot, Peter Blanchard, Jonathan Chase, Peter Mammal, Joshua Abbot (of Hooksett), Benjamin Chase, Enoch Rolger, Moses Reed.

BOUNTIES PAID TO SOLDIERS FROM CONCORD.

	Men	Amount.
Lexington, Capt. Abiel Chandler's company, 1775	36	522 3 6
Winnete and Wyanan's regiments, in 1776, 18	168	0 0
Continental, 1777	29	142 14 6
Stark's brigade, 1777	28	252 14 6
Rangers, Coos, 1782	2	34 14 6
Saratoga, 1777	27	243 14 6
New levies, 1780	9	269 10 0
Nichols' regiment, 1780	12	264 10 0
Frontiers, Coos, 1780	2	45 12 0
Boydell's regiment, 1781	7	73 10 0
New levies, 1781	1	82 10 0
Continental, 1781	6	191 18 0
Continental, 1782	6	296 11 2
		1224 1 9

Debted for depreciation :

Florence McConley, paid Jan. 6, 1778,

John Merrill, paid Dec. 7, 1778,

Both engaged in 1776

419 1 6

1225 0 4

The following are the names of soldiers from Concord who lost their lives :

- William Mitchell, killed at Bunker Hill, June 17, 1775.
- Lieutenant Abiel Chandler, died of small-pox at Crown Point, July 12, 1776.
- Peter Chandler, died June 25, 1776.
- Abiel Stevens, died of wounds, October 29, 1777.
- Phineas Stevens, died April 21, 1778.
- Obadiah Kimball, killed in battle, October 7, 1777.
- Solomon Fisk, died of yellow fever at Horseneck, August 19, 1778.
- Samuel Wrothien, died November 10, 1778.
- Timothy Hall, died of fever and dysentery.

A part only of the above were citizens. Others were "hired" for Concord.

Jeremiah Abbot was in the battle of Bunker Hill, a sergeant in the company of his brother Joshua, and lieutenant in the service at Ticonderoga and in the expedition against Canada. After the close of the war he married Elizabeth Stickney. She died September 19, 1836, aged eighty-four years. He moved to Conway, N. H., about 1787, and there endured many hardships and privations by frost and flood. He kept a house of entertainment, where the few travelers who visited that part of the country found a home. They were industrious and energetic, beloved and respected by all who knew them and kind and hospitable to all who had claims on their benevolence. They were early supporters of religious worship and order.

John, born June 23, 1756, died August 31, 1779. John Abbot was six feet seven inches without shoes, and said to be the stoutest young man ever raised in Concord though not quite so tall as Samuel Baker, uncle of the Governor, Nathaniel Baker. He received a ball at the battle of Bennington, on his breast-bone, which fell harmless at his feet. He died aged twenty-two, weighing two hundred and thirty pounds.

War of 1812.—In 1812 Concord was designated as a military rendezvous, and the number of soldiers here in 1812 and 1813 was about five hundred. At the town-meeting in 1813 a number of soldiers attempted to vote, contrary to the decision of Colonel William A. Kent, who was moderator. This procedure created some excitement at the time, and is thus referred to in the records:

"Resolved, That the conduct of one Mc Coy, a volunteer in the service of the United States, and not belonging to this town, in attempting, yesterday, in defiance of the moderator of the meeting, to vote for State and County officers, deserves severe censure; but his act of violating the moderator while in the exercise of his official duty, we consider an outrage of the most destructive character.

"Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting be given to William A. Kent, Esq., the moderator, for his temperate, resolute and judicious conduct upon that occasion.

The names of the soldiers who died of scarlet fever in this town in 1833, as recorded by the late John Farmer, Esq., were, —

Mary Beth Joshua Belknap, March 16th, Kendrick B. Broughton, March 17th, John C. Boyd, April 10, John Taggart, of Hillsborough, April 7th, Samuel Davis, Chester, Bradley M. Carr, Chester, April 20, Nathan Stearns, Goffstown, April 14th, John Abbott, Warner, Elias Davis, Bow, April 10th, one Jones, April 16th, Alexander Witherspoon, Beagwood, April 16th, Isaac Smith, Goshen, April 17th, William Carr, Wendell, April 18th, Ebenezer Woodbury, Dunbarton, Robert Crawford, Bridgewater, — — — April 19th, — — — Whitney, Henniker, David Parls, New Boston, David Hart, Goffstown.

Of soldiers belonging to Concord who marched to the northern frontiers, the following were in Captain Flanders' company, Forty-fifth Regiment, of which Marshall Baker, of Concord, was first lieutenant: Ebenezer Frye, James Emerson, John Cran, Daniel Arlin, Jonathan Fran, Jonathan B. Worth, Nathaniel Pecker, James Elliot, Samuel Emerson.

Those of the Forty-fifth Regiment were John Elliot, Jonathan Cran, John Pecker, John Virgin and James Dunlap.

James Elliot re-enlisted in the Fourth Regiment Asa Hardy served in both the Forty-fifth and Fourth Jonathan Elliot was on the peace establishment, and died at Rock Island, in the Mississippi River, Illinois. Timothy Abbot, of Andover, was a Concord recruit.

In 1814, August 29th, the selectmen were authorized "to hire all soldiers which may be called for in lieu of drafting." In March, 1815, they were directed to pay four dollars per month to each soldier detached for the defense of Portsmouth in the service of the United States. As Portsmouth, the only seaport in New Hampshire, was in peculiar danger from armed vessels of the enemy, public attention was particularly directed to that quarter.

Captain Peter Robertson's volunteer company of artillery, that was in service twenty days, from September 10th to 29th, marched from Concord on the Sabbath, passing the old North Church, over Federal bridge, thence on the turnpike to Portsmouth.

But the spirit of patriotism was not confined to the men who actually marched to the field of danger. Venerable, aged men, some of whom had served in the War of the Revolution who were exempted from active service, offered themselves for the defense of their country.

Some time in September, 1814, at the instance of John T. Gilman, the then Governor of New Hampshire, a public call was made for volunteers of that class of citizens who were by law exempt from military duty, in the ranks of the militia, to form themselves into companies for the purpose of home defense, in case of necessity from invasion. Some of the most respectable citizens of Concord immediately responded to the call, held a public meeting, and organized a company for that purpose, numbered the Sixth Company of volunteers. The officers chosen by the company were Stephen Ambrose, Esq., captain; Samuel Sparhawk, Esq., first lieutenant, then Secretary of State; Nathan Ballard, Esq., second lieutenant; Ezra Hutchins, ensign; Moses Long, first sergeant, orderly and clerk; G. W. Rogers, ex-captain, second sergeant; William Davis, West Parish, ex-captain, third sergeant; Samuel Runnels, fourth sergeant. Corporals not recollected. There were some over an hundred privates enrolled in the company, many of whom had held offices, both civil and military, as the secretary of the State and treasurer, seven justices of the peace, one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, one major and nineteen captains. Quite a majority of the company were made up of some of the most respectable citizens and yeomanry of the town, among whom were the elder Esquire Bradley, Esquire Charles Walker, William Stickney, inn-keeper, Captain Richard Ayer, Major Timothy Chandler, Captain Edmund Leavitt, Captain Charles Eastman, Captain Jacob Eastman, Jeremiah Pecker, Milten Kimball, Asa Kimball and Asa Graham.

The meeting preliminary to forming the above company was held September 10th, at Stickney's Hall—Colonel William A. Kent, chairman; Seth Tucker, clerk. A committee, consisting of Colonel William A. Kent, Stephen Ambrose, Jonathan Eastman, Isaac Dow and John George, reported the following preamble and resolution, which were adopted:

"Whereas, In defense of our altars and firesides, our property and our country, Americans can have but one opinion,—

"Resolved, That it is expedient to form a military association in the town of Concord, of such persons as are not enrolled in the militia, to be in readiness, at a moment's warning, to act under the direction of the Commander-in-Chief, for the defense of the State."

Captain Richard Ayer, Captain John Eastman, Hon. William A. Kent, Mr. Isaac Dow, Mr. Philbrick Bradley, Mr. Daniel Clark, Ballard Hazletine, Esq., Mr. John Garvin, Captain Samuel Runnels, Nathan Ballard, Jr., Timothy Carter, Esq., and Captain Pearl Kimball were appointed a committee to give information and form a plan, etc., for the association, which was duly organized.

This company of venerable men, fully armed and equipped, paraded in town October 1st, and marched through Main Street. "Their appearance was accompanied with the proud conviction that this nation can never be conquered when such defenders shoulder the musket."

A squad, or small company, of volunteers was also formed in East Concord, in consequence of a rumor that the British intended to destroy the United States seventy-four gun ship "Washington," then on the stocks at Kittery, Me. This company was also under drill by Dr. Moses Long, and consisted of about twenty men, of whom General Isaac Eastman, General Simeon Stevens and Colonel Robert Ambrose are recollected.

NAMES OF SOLDIERS.—In Captain Leonard's company of artillery, 1812, who served from August 17th to November 30th, were,— Keyes B. Powell, sergeant; Samuel Powell, corporal; Solomon Mann, Ebenezer Flanders, musicians; Jonathan Stevens, corporal; James Foster, Abel Bradley, Jonathan E. Elliott, Jonathan Elliott, Jr., Benjamin C. Waldron, Ebenezer Frye, Francis R. Powell.

In Captain William Marshall's company, 1814, who were stationed at Portsmouth, and served from August 6th to November 11th,— Nathan Carter, Freshrick Elliott, Ebenezer Flanders (sergeant), Jedediah Frye, Samuel Kimball, Josiah Robertson, Thomas B. Sargent, John Stevens, Benjamin C. Waldron, John Whitney, William Shute (lieutenant from July 30th to November 10th).

In Captain Nathaniel G. Bradley's company, 1814, who served from September 15th to November 12th,— Nathaniel G. Bradley, captain; Amos Abbott, Benjamin Bradley, Enosh E. Bradley, Hazen B. Elliott, Robert Haynes, Joseph Hutchinson, Elijah Munsey, Keyes B. Powell (sergeant), Leaman Reed, Willey Tasker.

In Captain Edward Fuller's company, 1814, who served from September 29th to November 18th,— Ephraim Abbott, John Blanchard, Joseph F. Dow, Bernard C. Elliott, Joseph Glines, William Hunt, Jr., Jeremiah S. Howe, Royal Knowles, Hazen Kimball, Reuben Kimball, Leonard Upham, Peter Powell, Isaac Runnels, Joseph Tasker, John Abbott, John Farrington.

In Captain Peter Robertson's company, artillery, volunteers, 1814, from September 10th to September 29th, or twenty days. This company marched from Concord on the Sabbath,— Peter Robertson, captain; Samuel Herbert, first lieutenant; Charles Eastman, second lieutenant; Walter E. Hill, Jacob Hosman, John Robertson, William Bell, sergeants; Jeremiah Birch, Nathaniel Parker, Jeremiah C. Elliot, William Moody, corporals; Jeremiah Glines, Samuel Hosmer, Harmon Eastman, musicians; Moses Burdett, Moses Eastman, Jonathan Elliot, Josiah Fernald, Cooper Frost, Thomas Greenleaf Samuel Blanchard, Jacob Carter, Moses Dickerman, John Gould, Josiah Knowles, Robert Rogers, John Stanton, John Wheeler, Charles Watt, Charles Whipple, Charles Herbert, privates.

War of the Rebellion.—Immediately upon President Lincoln's first call for troops, Moses Humphrey, at that time mayor of the city, after consultation with a number of citizens, suggested to Captain E. E. Sturdevant, a prominent police officer of the city, that he recruit a company for the service. His response was, "I am ready," and immediately commenced recruiting a company which was soon filled, and became Company A, of the First Regiment of three months' men. The second company was recruited by Captain Leonard Drown, of Fisherville, which was attached to the Second Regiment of three years' men.

During the war Concord was not only the headquarters of the volunteers from this State, but was also the general recruiting station. Here were encamped on the fair-grounds the First, Third, Fifth, Ninth, Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth and Sixteenth Regiments, besides cavalry and sharpshooters.

The following is a list of soldiers from this town, from August, 1862. There is no recorded list prior to that date:

Oliver B. Abbott, Seventh Regiment; mustered in August 21, 1862.
George W. Abbott, Seventh Regiment; mustered in August 26, 1862.
Michael Arnold, Seventh Regiment; mustered in September 15, 1862.
Charles E. Austin, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 25, 1862.
Alvah Atwood, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 25, 1862.
Levi C. Abbott, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 25, 1862.
James H. Anderson, Second Regiment; mustered in September 10, 1862.
John Adams, mustered in September 27, 1862.
Andrew Anderson, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 21, 1862.
John Ayman, mustered in September 28, 1862.
Imri Arlin, Third Regiment; mustered in January 19, 1864.
Warren S. Abbott, Third Regiment; mustered in March 27, 1864.
Daniel Anderson, Second Regiment; mustered in March 24, 1864.
Frank W. Alden, Second Regiment; mustered in 1864.
John Allard, Fourteenth Regiment; mustered in August 5, 1864.
William Anderson, United States Cavalry; mustered in August 12, 1864.
James Anderson, United States Navy; mustered in December 1, 1864.
Charles S. Abbott, mustered in February 4, 1865.
James Allison, Post Band; mustered in February 19, 1864.
James Anderson, Eighth Regiment; mustered in November 18, 1863.
Charles Anderson, Second Regiment; mustered in November 18, 1863.
Henry Anderson, Second Regiment; mustered in November 25, 1863.
Charles Adams, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in October 1, 1864.
Abel C. Abbott, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1864.
Albert Aspinwall, mustered in September 23, 1864.
Amos S. Abbott, Second Company Sharpshooters.
Joseph M. Abbott, Eighth Regiment.
Horace Ames, Fifth Regiment.

- Louis C. Ayer, Fourth Regiment, mustered in May 18, 1864.
 L. F. Babb, Ninth Regiment, mustered in August 16, 1862.
 Charles H. Black, Fourth Regiment, mustered in August 15, 1862.
 Thomas Babb, Fifth Regiment, mustered in August 18, 1862.
 Moses W. Blinn, Fourth Regiment, mustered in August 15, 1862.
 William H. Bartlett, Tenth Regiment, mustered in August 21, 1862.
 John Broadhead, Fourth Regiment, mustered in September 16, 1862.
 Charles Bradley, Tenth Regiment, mustered in September 16, 1862.
 S. W. Ball, Fifth, Ninth Regiment, mustered in September 20, 1862.
 Alan B. Bartlett, Sixth Regiment, mustered in September 23, 1862.
 Joseph Bartlett, Sixth Regiment, mustered in September 23, 1862.
 George Barnes, Thirtieth Regiment, mustered in September 23, 1862.
 George F. Batters, Thirtieth Regiment, mustered in September 23, 1862.
 Albert A. Baker, Fourteenth Regiment, mustered in September 29, 1862.
 William H. Baker, Fourteenth Regiment, mustered in September 29, 1862.
 George W. Brown, Fifteenth Regiment, mustered in October 20, 1862.
 Joseph B. Bancher, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in October 25, 1862.
 Samuel N. Brown, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in October 25, 1862.
 John B. Barnes, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in October 25, 1862.
 Richard D. Rowell, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in November 1, 1862.
 George Brown, mustered in September 10, 1861.
 John Bisset, mustered in September 10, 1861.
 Henry Burnham, mustered in September 18, 1861.
 John Bennis, mustered in September 20, 1861.
 James Butler, mustered in October 4, 1861.
 Thomas Bush, mustered in October 6, 1861.
 George W. Boyden, Ninth Regiment, mustered in October 26, 1861.
 John Broadhead, Jr., Tenth Regiment, mustered in April 5, 1861.
 Thomas P. Bean, mustered in July 15, 1861.
 John Brasson, Heavy Artillery, mustered in August 17, 1861.
 George J. Barnes, United States Secret Service, mustered in December 23, 1861.
 John F. Burke, Seventh Regiment, mustered in April 5, 1861.
 Thomas B. of James B. Bays, Sixth Regiment, mustered in June 10, 1861.
 John J. Burke, Seventh Regiment, mustered in June 29, 1861.
 Walter Barry, mustered in August 12, 1861.
 James Barnes, Ninth Regiment, mustered in August 18, 1861.
 James Bell, Fifth Regiment, mustered in September 1, 1861.
 Robert A. Brown, Seventh Regiment, mustered in September, 1861.
 Orland C. Bryant, Eleventh Regiment Heavy Artillery, mustered in August 11, 1861.
 Francis Barnes, United States Navy, mustered in September 19, 1861.
 George F. Hatchelder, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in December 3, 1861.
 William Barnes, mustered in December 3, 1861.
 George Brown, mustered in December 13, 1861.
 Samuel C. Buro, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in January 15, 1863.
 Edwin C. Brooks, United States Navy, mustered in February 1, 1863.
 Henry Boyde, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in February 11, 1863.
 Stephen C. Barney, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in February 9, 1863.
 Leander C. Barnes, Ninth Regiment.
 Thomas A. Buckley, Eighth Regiment, mustered in November 12, 1863.
 John Butler, Second Regiment, mustered in November 18, 1863.
 Joseph Birkhead, Second Regiment, mustered in November 20, 1863.
 William Barnnett, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in November 21, 1863.
 Thomas Baker, Third Regiment, mustered in November 21, 1863.
 John Brown, Second Regiment, mustered in November 23, 1863.
 John H. Brown, Second Regiment, mustered in November 23, 1863.
 John Brown (Orland), Second Regiment, mustered in November 23, 1863.
 Thomas Burke, Second Regiment, mustered in November 24, 1863.
 James Boyden, or Byhen, Eighth Regiment, mustered in November 24, 1863.
 William Bays, Second Regiment, mustered in November 25, 1863.
 Thomas B. Boyden, Ninth Regiment, mustered in August 5, 1864.
 George B. Boyden, Cavalry, mustered in August 5, 1864.
 John B. Boyden, Cavalry, mustered in August 5, 1864.
 John B. Boyden, Cavalry, mustered in August 9, 1864.
 John B. Boyden, Cavalry, mustered in August 9, 1864.
 Libridge Burr, Volunteer Reserve Corps, mustered in August 18, 1864.
 Lemuel D. Burnell, Fifth Cavalry Corps, mustered in September 5, 1864.
 Henry J. Blackett, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 7, 1864.
 Samuel N. Brown, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in September 17, 1864.
 Nathaniel E. Baker, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in September 15, 1864.
 William Benson, Second Regiment, mustered in September, 1864.
 Samuel H. Ballou, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 7, 1864.
 James C. Brown, Veteran Reserve Corps, mustered in September 6, 1864.
 Thomas Bailey, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 27, 1864.
 Enosh W. Bradley, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 27, 1864.
 George A. Brown, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 27, 1864.
 William Burr, or Burke, Eighth Regiment, mustered in October 12, 1864.
 George W. Balfelder, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in September 28, 1864.
 John W. Ratenan, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in September 28, 1864.
 Frank Balse, United States Navy, mustered in September 3, 1864.
 Joseph Y. Bradbury, United States Navy, mustered in August 16, 1864.
 George W. Bean, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 7, 1864.
 George F. Butters, mustered in September 5, 1864.
 Sidney T. Babes, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 10, 1864.
 Charles J. Ben, mustered in September 7, 1864.
 John B. Blake, Heavy Artillery, mustered in October 17, 1864.
 John N. Bolwell, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 7, 1864.
 Leonard W. Bean, First United States Cavalry, mustered in August 16, 1864.
 Darius K. Bean, Veteran Reserve Corps, mustered in August 29, 1864.
 Samuel F. Brown, First Band, mustered in April 6, 1863.
 John Birkhead, First Cavalry, mustered in February 15, 1864.
 Freeman D. Balfelder, Tenth Army Corps Brigade Band, mustered in February 10, 1863.
 James Bush, mustered in October 5, 1863.
 John Bismack, mustered in November 21, 1863.
 D. Arthur Brown, First Band.
 John Byrne.
 Jacob H. Cook, Fifth Regiment, mustered in August 15, 1862.
 Nathan P. Converse, Second Regiment, mustered in August 12, 1862.
 Benjamin Cook, Fifth Regiment, mustered in August 6, 1862.
 Charles Carter, Fifth Regiment, mustered in August 18, 1862.
 Hamilton Carpenter, Ninth Regiment, mustered in August 19, 1862.
 Richard Cullen, mustered in August 21, 1862.
 Lorenzo F. Comer, Seventh Regiment, mustered in August 21, 1862.
 Charles H. Currier, Third Regiment, mustered in August 21, 1862.
 Hiram P. Caldwell, mustered in August 21, 1862.
 William W. Crabbert, Eleventh Regiment, mustered in August 21, 1862.
 Samuel H. Chase, mustered in September 6, 1862.
 Thomas C. Cross, mustered in September 6, 1862.
 Jeremiah Callahan, Tenth Regiment, mustered in September 16, 1862.
 John Callahan, Tenth Regiment, mustered in September 16, 1862.
 Horace D. Carter, Thirtieth Regiment, mustered in September 23, 1862.
 Gibson Cassavant, Thirtieth Regiment, mustered in September 23, 1862.
 Watson M. Carter, Thirtieth Regiment, mustered in September 23, 1862.
 Michael Cassavant, Thirtieth Regiment, mustered in September 23, 1862.
 Michael Callahan, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in September 23, 1862.
 John O. Corner, mustered in October 11, 1862.
 George W. Crummett, mustered in October 25, 1862.
 Joel A. Custon, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in October 25, 1862.
 George H. Cushman, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in October 25, 1862.
 Frederick J. Carter, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in September 9, 1863.
 John Clark, mustered in September 16, 1863.
 Cornelius Cavanaugh, mustered in September 12, 1863.
 George Carkley, mustered in September 14, 1863.
 Edward Connolly, mustered in September 19, 1863.
 Augustus J. Cate, mustered in September 19, 1863.
 Molyner Clede, mustered in September 29, 1863.
 Thomas Collins, mustered in September 28, 1863.
 Asa D. Cutting, Fifth Regiment, mustered in October 17, 1863.

- William Chalhahan, Seventh Regiment; mustered in October 15, 1863.
 James N. or H. Carter, Cavalry; mustered in December 15, 1863.
 David Cross, Fourth Regiment; mustered in April 4, 1864.
 Edward W. Cudley, Third Regiment; mustered in March 31, 1864.
 James M. Chase, Third Regiment; mustered in April 1, 1864.
 John T. Carter, Second Regiment; mustered in March 30, 1864.
 John F. Carter, Seventh Regiment; mustered in March 14, 1864.
 Hiram J. Carter, Heavy Artillery; mustered in July 18, 1863.
 Orrin T. Carter, Heavy Artillery; mustered in July 18, 1864.
 George H. Cashion, Heavy Artillery; mustered in August 18, 1863.
 James Chandler, Seventh Regiment; mustered in February 28, 1864.
 Charles C. Chesley, Sixth Regiment; mustered in December 19, 1863.
 John P. Coffin, Heavy Artillery; mustered in October 26, 1863.
 Lucius H. Chandler, Seventh Regiment; mustered in February 25, 1864.
 John Campbell, Ninth Regiment; mustered in June 21, 1864.
 Charles Clark, Cavalry; mustered in June 2, 1864.
 Ezra Cross, First Cavalry; mustered in June 27, 1864.
 Charles H. Clary, Eighth Regiment; mustered in January 4, 1864.
 Horace Clark, Eighth Regiment; mustered in January 4, 1864.
 Albert P. Colley, mustered in July 1, 1864.
 James Colfer, Seventh Regiment; mustered in September 24, 1864.
 James Cole, Third Regiment; mustered in December 15, 1864.
 Frank A. Carter, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in December 17, 1864.
 Henry Cague, Third Regiment; mustered in December 16, 1864.
 Thomas Campbell, mustered in January, 1865.
 John Clifford, mustered in January 30, 1865.
 Edward J. Clark, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in February 8, 1865.
 Willis E. Cressey, First Cavalry; mustered in March 29, 1865.
 Charles Carter, Second Regiment; mustered in November 19, 1863.
 Harry Clark, Second Regiment; mustered in November 17, 1863.
 Timothy Crowley, Second Regiment; mustered in November 16, 1863.
 David F. Cable, Seventh Regiment; mustered in November 12, 1863.
 Joseph Chinneston, Second Regiment; mustered in November 12, 1863.
 Joseph Cochran, Eighth Regiment; mustered in November 12, 1863.
 Joseph Curran, mustered in November 12, 1863.
 Thomas Campbell, Second Regiment; mustered in November 18, 1863.
 William Cohen, Second Regiment; mustered in November 24, 1863.
 William Clark, First Cavalry; mustered in November 24, 1863.
 John Connor, Second Regiment; mustered in November 25, 1863.
 Charles Conkling, Second Regiment; mustered in November 25, 1863.
 Edward Clark, Second Regiment; mustered in November 25, 1864.
 George Campbell, Second Regiment; mustered in November 25, 1863.
 John P. Cummings, Fifth Regiment; mustered in January 1, 1864.
 Dennis Curran, Eighth Regiment; mustered in November 12, 1863.
 James M. Cross, Veteran Reserve Corps; mustered in August 9, 1864.
 Mark Chase, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1864.
 Jackson Crosby, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1864.
 Walter Crockett, United States Navy; mustered in August 19, 1864.
 Daniel Cutting, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1864.
 John Curran, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in October 3, 1864.
 James A. Giles, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in October 1, 1864.
 Andrew J. Chaffey, Eighth Regiment; mustered in October 1, 1864.
 William H. Collins, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 27, 1864.
 George E. Crummett, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 24, 1864.
 John H. Clark, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in October 11, 1864.
 William Campbell, Heavy Artillery; mustered in October 15, 1864.
 Michael Callahan, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in September 30, 1864.
 John B. Caswell, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1864.
 George H. Chesley, United States Navy; mustered in August 30, 1864.
 H. R. Clough, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1864.
 William J. Cheney, United States Navy; mustered in August 3, 1864.
 Cyrus C. Curran, Second Brigade, Tenth Army Corps.
 James Canby, Sixth Regiment; mustered in May 31, 1864.
 Albert P. Davis, Ninth Regiment; mustered in August 19, 1862.
 William E. Dow, Seventh Regiment; mustered in August 21, 1862.
 Albert H. Davis, Ninth Regiment; mustered in August 22, 1862.
 Charles A. Drew, Tenth Regiment; mustered in September 16, 1862.
 Daniel Driscoll, Tenth Regiment; mustered in September 16, 1862.
 Cornelius Driscoll, Tenth Regiment; mustered in September 16, 1862.
 William S. Davis, Thirtieth Regiment; mustered in September 23, 1862.
 Nathan M. Dow, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 24, 1862.
 Nathaniel W. Davis, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 24, 1862.
 Gilman H. Dimond, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 25, 1862.
 James Durgin, mustered in September 8, 1863.
 John F. Delany, mustered in September 10, 1863.
 Lewis Dow, mustered in September 21, 1863.
 Henry Dale, mustered in September 25, 1863.
 James Dillon, mustered in September 26, 1863.
 John Davis, mustered in October 5, 1863.
 Calvin S. Davis, Seventh Regiment; mustered in October 31, 1864.
 James H. Dwinnels, mustered in October 15, 1864.
 Asa N. Dimick, Third Regiment; mustered in April 4, 1864.
 Daniel Davis, Fourth Regiment; mustered in March 25, 1864.
 George W. Dow, Heavy Artillery; mustered in June 8, 1863.
 William A. Dow, Heavy Artillery; mustered in July 11, 1863.
 George W. Dow, Heavy Artillery; mustered in July 18, 1863.
 Charles Dubois, Eleventh Regiment; mustered in July 23, 1864.
 Samuel Dunn, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 16, 1864.
 Rodney Dodge, Ninth Regiment; mustered in August 27, 1864.
 Robert S. Davis, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 8, 1864.
 Simon L. Dorr, Veteran Reserve Corps; mustered in November 18, 1864.
 Freeman F. Day, Second Regiment; mustered in November 13, 1863.
 Frank Davis, mustered in January 2, 1864.
 George S. Davis, mustered in January 29, 1865.
 Arch. Douglas, mustered in February 3, 1865.
 James L. Downing, First Cavalry; mustered in March 20, 1865.
 Lewis W. Dorr, mustered in April 4, 1865.
 Charles A. Douglas, First Cavalry; mustered in February 20, 1865.
 Benjamin P. Davis, mustered in March 16, 1865.
 Samuel Davis, Second Regiment; mustered in November 20, 1863.
 Anthony Dundon, Second Regiment; mustered in November 20, 1863.
 James Davis, Third Regiment; mustered in November 21, 1863.
 Adolphus Durand, Second Regiment; mustered in November 25, 1863.
 James M. Daniels, Seventh Regiment; mustered in October 15, 1863.
 William Drossell, mustered in August 16, 1864.
 Paul W. Durgin, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1864.
 J. Scott Durgin, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in September 17, 1864.
 Gilman H. Dimon, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1864.
 David P. Dunbar, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1864.
 Paine Durkee, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 28, 1864.
 Henry H. De Wolf, Heavy Artillery; mustered in October 17, 1864.
 James S. Davis, Heavy Artillery; mustered in October 17, 1864.
 Timothy Davis, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in September 30, 1864.
 Edwin F. Dexter, Eighth Regiment; mustered in September 26, 1864.
 Frank P. Drew, Heavy Artillery; mustered in August 27, 1864.
 Thomas Darnly, Cavalry; mustered in August 11, 1864.
 Cortez De Irish, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 30, 1864.
 Nelson G. Eastman, Fifth Cavalry; mustered in August 12, 1862.
 Edward J. Emerson, Ninth Regiment; mustered in August 19, 1862.
 Ira C. Evans, Twelfth Regiment; mustered in September 5, 1862.
 Alfred Elliott, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 25, 1862.
 Hall F. Elliott, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 30, 1862.
 John H. Elliott, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 30, 1862.
 Asa Emory, mustered in October 30, 1862.
 James C. Elliott, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in November 3, 1862.
 Lewis B. Elliott, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in November 5, 1862.
 Charles Eile, mustered in September 21, 1863.
 Remon J. Eastman, Fifth Regiment; mustered in October 12, 1863.
 James W. Edwards, mustered in October 8, 1863.
 P. Chandler Eastman, Second Regiment; mustered in March 29, 1864.
 Aaron G. Estabrook, First Cavalry; mustered in August 17, 1864.
 Robert L. Elin, Sixth Regiment; mustered in November 30, 1864.
 Edson A. Eastman, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in January, 1865.
 Asa Emory, United States Navy; mustered in February 9, 1865.
 John Edwards, Second Regiment; mustered in November 20, 1863.
 John Eipper, Eleventh Regiment; mustered in November 20, 1863.
 John Egin, Second Regiment; mustered in November 23, 1863.
 John Ericson, Second Regiment; mustered in November 24, 1863.
 Charles Edwards, Second Regiment; mustered in November 25, 1863.
 Randall Eastman, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in October 20, 1864.
 Israel L. Emerson, United States Navy; mustered in August 19, 1864.
 Curtis W. Etkins, United States Navy; mustered in August 30, 1864.
 Oren A. Edgerly.
 William H. Eaton, First Cavalry; mustered in March 18, 1864.
 Asa Folsom, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 12, 1864.
 Freeman Ferron, Seventh Regiment; mustered in August 21, 1862.
 John A. or Joseph Flanders, Seventh Regiment; mustered in September 15, 1862.
 Robert K. Flanders, Thirteenth Regiment; mustered in September 23, 1862.
 Rufous K. Flanders, Fifteenth Regiment; mustered in October 13, 1862.
 Andrew S. Farrum, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 25, 1862.

- Joseph French, mustered in September 18, 1862.
- Henry or Thomas Flynn, Eighth Regiment, mustered in October 11, 1862.
- Mark Floyd, Heavy Artillery; mustered in August 2, 1862.
- James S. French, Seventh Regiment, mustered in April 29, 1861.
- James Frase, mustered in May 23, 1861.
- John C. French, Eighth Regiment, mustered in January 1, 1861.
- John Ferguson, Eighth Regiment, mustered in January 1, 1861.
- Patrick Fitzgerald, Fifth Regiment, mustered in August 22, 1861.
- John Ferris, United States Navy, mustered in November 15, 1861.
- John Foster, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in December 15, 1861.
- Owen Fugan, Heavy Artillery, mustered in February 18, 1862.
- Henry A. Flint, Cavalry, mustered in February 4, 1861.
- Thomas Flinn, mustered in November 12, 1861.
- Garrat Fluitt, Third Regiment, mustered in November 29, 1861.
- William Fox, Second Regiment, mustered in November 25, 1861.
- Amos Fuller, Second Regiment, mustered in November 25, 1861.
- Richard E. Foster, mustered in August 2, 1861.
- John S. Farnum, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 6, 1861.
- A. C. Fernald, United States Navy, mustered in August 14, 1861.
- W. H. French, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 7, 1861.
- Cyrus F. Fletcher, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 7, 1861.
- Henry H. Farnum, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 7, 1861.
- Hiram B. Frost, Seventh Regiment, mustered in October 1, 1861.
- Sidney A. Foster, Heavy Artillery, mustered in October 18, 1861.
- Patrick French, Eighth Regiment, mustered in October 1, 1861.
- James E. Ford, Heavy Artillery, mustered in October 18, 1861.
- Charles W. Fifield, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in September 23, 1861.
- Elwin R. Farley, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in September 29, 1861.
- Charles C. Fernald, mustered in September 15, 1861.
- J. L. French, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 7, 1861.
- Edward W. Forrest, Second Regiment, mustered in February 19, 1861.
- Elwin C. Gilmore, Fifth Regiment, mustered in August 9, 1862.
- George Gordon, Ninth Regiment, mustered in August 18, 1862.
- Andrew Goodwin, Seventh Regiment, mustered in August 21, 1862.
- Elwin Green, Ninth Regiment, mustered in August 21, 1862.
- Michael Gannon, Tenth Regiment, mustered in September 16, 1862.
- James Gallagher, Thirteenth Regiment, mustered in September 23, 1862.
- Charles E. Glover, Thirteenth Regiment, mustered in September 23, 1862.
- Augustus L. Gale, Fourteenth Regiment, mustered in September 29, 1862.
- John S. Griffin, Fifteenth Regiment, mustered in September 22, 1862.
- Edward Gerald, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in November 3, 1862.
- William Gilson, mustered in September 16, 1861.
- William H. Gray, mustered in September 23, 1861.
- Luke Garvey, Fifth Regiment, September 26, 1861.
- Edward Gates, mustered in October 9, 1862.
- William G. Gove, Eighth Regiment, mustered in November 10, 1861.
- Frank E. Getald, Third Regiment, mustered in April 4, 1861.
- Charles H. Gove, Third Regiment, mustered in March 28, 1861.
- Charles Goodwin, Seventh Regiment, mustered in March 29, 1861.
- Edward Green, First Artillery Corps, mustered in February 7, 1861.
- Charles H. Gray, United States Navy, mustered in October 8, 1861.
- Joseph A. Graves, mustered in October 8, 1861.
- Nathan M. Gove, Post Band, mustered in February 16, 1861, re-enlisted in Eighteenth Regiment.
- Freeman R. Garbner, First Cavalry, mustered in February 28, 1861.
- Frank I. Greeley, First Cavalry, mustered in March 28, 1861.
- William Griffin, Second Regiment, mustered in November 17, 1861.
- Charles Gitt-hell, Eighth Regiment, mustered in November 15, 1861.
- George C. Granger, Eighth Regiment, mustered in November 11, 1861.
- Henry Gallagher, Second Regiment, mustered in November 23, 1861.
- William Gray, mustered in November 23, 1861.
- William George, Second Regiment, mustered in November 23, 1861.
- George Guild, Eighth Regiment, mustered in August 9, 1861.
- Richard K. Galley, United States Navy, mustered in August 19, 1861.
- Albert G. Gove, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 27, 1861.
- Edward H. Gove, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in September 29, 1861.
- Charles G. Gove, mustered in October 17, 1861.
- David G. Gove, Heavy Artillery, mustered in October 17, 1861.
- Nathan A. Gove, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in September 21, 1861.
- John Hays, Second Regiment, mustered in August 12, 1862.
- Charles H. Hays, Second Regiment, mustered in August 12, 1862.
- George H. Hill, Second Regiment, mustered in August 12, 1862.
- Francis S. Hays, Second Regiment, mustered in August 12, 1862.
- Rufus B. Has-ten, Ninth Regiment, mustered in August 18, 1862.
- Moses C. Heath, Fifth Regiment, mustered in August 18, 1862.
- Donald B. Hill, Ninth Regiment, mustered in August 19, 1862.
- Francis Hall, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in August 19, 1862.
- Frank Haysell, Tenth Regiment, mustered in September 4, 1862.
- Frank E. Haines, Eleventh Regiment, mustered in September 16, 1862.
- Byron C. Hill, Twelfth Regiment, mustered in September 11, 1862.
- Thomas F. Heath, Seventh Regiment, mustered in September 15, 1862.
- James Haley, Tenth Regiment, mustered in September 16, 1862.
- Rufus R. Haselton, nine months, mustered in October 14, 1862.
- John H. Heath, Fifteenth Regiment, mustered in October 20, 1862.
- Frank P. Hall, Seventh Regiment, mustered in October 26, 1862; re-enlisted in Eighteenth Regiment.
- Charles J. Hall, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in October 26, 1862.
- Samuel E. Holden, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in October 26, 1862.
- James H. Hyde, mustered in September 24, 1861.
- Frank Howard, mustered in September 16, 1861.
- Alfred Hasbany, mustered in September 26, 1861.
- John Harrell, mustered in September 29, 1861.
- Charles Hall, mustered in October 8, 1861.
- Robert Hart, Third Regiment, mustered in October 11, 1861.
- William Hoy, Third Regiment, mustered in April 4, 1861.
- Geo. H. Hoy, Fourth Regiment, mustered in April 11, 1861.
- William L. Hook, Fifth Regiment, mustered in April 19, 1861.
- Peter Hinchey, Heavy Artillery, mustered in August 9, 1861.
- William H. Horner, mustered in June 11, 1861.
- Joseph Harris, Sixth Regiment, mustered in June 3, 1861.
- James Harland, Seventh Regiment, mustered in August 8, 1861.
- Austin W. Hadley, mustered in September 9, 1861.
- Charles F. Hestner, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 21, 1861.
- Henry L. Harris, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in September 24, 1861.
- Ralph Hayes, mustered in November 29, 1861.
- Carl Haselbyren, mustered in December 5, 1861.
- Peter Horre, mustered in December 5, 1861.
- Francis Hararity, Third Regiment, mustered in December 10, 1861.
- George Harvey, Third Regiment, mustered in December 17, 1861.
- David Harbrick, Heavy Artillery, mustered in December 23, 1861.
- James R. Happenney, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in December 28, 1861.
- Charles M. Hayden, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in January 26, 1861.
- Charles Hazen, Third Regiment, mustered in December 15, 1861.
- Frank S. Hunt, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in February 21, 1861.
- Jackson Hillon (or Hilton), Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in March 7, 1861.
- William Haines, mustered in April 1, 1861.
- Charles Hillier, Second Regiment, mustered in November 17, 1861.
- Henry Holt, Second Regiment, mustered in November 17, 1861.
- Peter Hoyt, Sixth Regiment, mustered in November 17, 1861.
- Samuel Home, Eighth Regiment, mustered in November 11, 1861.
- John Hendrick, Second Regiment, mustered in November 19, 1861.
- Amos Holt, Second Regiment, mustered in November 18, 1861.
- James Howes, Second Regiment, mustered in November 19, 1861.
- Charles Howard, Eighth Regiment, mustered in August 8, 1861.
- William Hale, First Regiment Cavalry, mustered in August 5, 1861.
- Charles Hanks, First Company Sharpshooters, mustered in August 19, 1861.
- Joseph E. Ham, Heavy Artillery, mustered in August 19, 1861.
- John D. Hancock, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 27, 1861.
- Nathan P. Hancock, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in October 22, 1861.
- Charles E. Hanson, Heavy Artillery, mustered in October 17, 1861.
- Frederick Hoffman, Post Band, mustered in September 26, 1861.
- Solon M. Howe, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 7, 1861.
- Edwin Hill, Heavy Artillery.
- John Howry, United States Navy, mustered in October 8, 1861.
- Joseph Hopkins, United States Navy, mustered in October 8, 1861.
- William Ireland, United States Navy, mustered in January 5, 1861.
- M. L. Ingalls, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 7, 1861.
- G. W. Ingalls, Post Band, mustered in February 10, 1861.
- Thomas James, Fifth Regiment, mustered in August 11, 1861.
- William Jordan, Ninth Regiment, mustered in August 21, 1862.
- Lewis Jackson, mustered in October 7, 1861.
- Thomas Jones, mustered in October 8, 1861.

- Samuel P. James, Seventh Regiment; mustered in May 3, 1861.
 Henry Jones, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 11, 1861.
 Abraham Jones, United States Cavalry; mustered in August 29, 1861.
 James Jones, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in January 6, 1865.
 Michael Judd, Second Regiment; mustered in November 17, 1861.
 Charles H. Johnson, Heavy Artillery; mustered in November 12, 1861.
 Henry Johnson, Eighth Regiment; mustered in November 11, 1861.
 Charles Johnson, Second Regiment; mustered in November 21, 1861.
 Benjamin Johnson, Seventh Regiment; mustered in August 8, 1861.
 Lawrence Jenery, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1861.
 Joseph Jamery, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1861.
 William E. Jameson, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in September 17, 1861.
 George L. Jennings, Heavy Artillery; mustered in October 17, 1861.
 James M. Jackson, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 27, 1861.
 Edward A. Johnson, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1861.
 James Johnson, Ninth Regiment; mustered in May 18, 1861.
 Caleb L. Johnson, First Cavalry; mustered in February 26, 1861.
 John A. Kendall, Second Regiment; mustered in August 12, 1861.
 Patrick Kelley, mustered in September 16, 1861.
 John Kelley, mustered in October 7, 1861.
 John Kelley, Seventh Regiment; mustered in October 29, 1861.
 Albert F. Kent, Fourth Regiment; mustered in April 11, 1861.
 James Kirby, Sixth Regiment; mustered in August 3, 1861.
 John Kisco, mustered in August 29, 1861.
 Nathaniel O. Kimball, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in February 18, 1865.
 Henry A. Klemier, Second Regiment; mustered in November 19, 1861.
 Martin Kelley, Eighth Regiment; mustered in August 5, 1861.
 Peter Kenny, mustered in August 19, 1861.
 Willis G. C. Kimball, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in October 1, 1861.
 John A. Kendall, United States Navy; mustered in August 31, 1861.
 William H. Kenny, United States Navy; mustered in August 30, 1861.
 Charles Kelley, United States Navy; mustered in ——— in 1861.
 Andrew G. Libbey, Thirteenth Regiment; mustered in July 29, 1861; re-enlisted in Fourth Regiment.
 Charles F. Libbey, Fourth Regiment; mustered in July 29, 1861.
 George A. Lear, Third Regiment; mustered in August 11, 1861.
 Gilman Leavitt, Ninth Regiment; mustered in August 19, 1861.
 Robert K. Longoe, Ninth Regiment; mustered in August 25, 1861.
 Maurice S. Lamprey, Tenth Regiment; mustered in September 4, 1861.
 Austin L. Lamprey, mustered in September 23, 1861.
 Charles Libbey, Thirtieth Regiment; mustered in September 23, 1861.
 John M. Lull, Thirtieth Regiment; mustered in September 23, 1861.
 Moses Lull, Thirtieth Regiment; mustered in September 23, 1861.
 John A. Lane, Thirtieth Regiment; mustered in September 23, 1861.
 John E. Lull, Thirtieth Regiment; mustered in September 23, 1861.
 Leander O. Lull, Thirtieth Regiment; mustered in September 23, 1861.
 William H. Libbey, Thirtieth Regiment; mustered in September 23, 1861.
 Charles W. Lang, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 21, 1861.
 Mat-laud C. Lamprey, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 25, 1861.
 Edward Lunsay, mustered in September 17, 1861.
 Ludwig Lucht, mustered in September 25, 1861.
 William D. Locke, mustered in September 19, 1861.
 E. A. Larkin, mustered in September 26, 1861.
 John Lewis, mustered in September 26, 1861.
 William Lotter, mustered in October 7, 1861.
 Walter E. Lougee, Second Regiment of Sharpshooters; mustered in April 15, 1861.
 John L. Lear, Heavy Artillery; mustered in April 22, 1861.
 George M. Leavitt, Heavy Artillery; mustered in October 15, 1861.
 Stephen Lamprey, Sixth Regiment; mustered in in 1861.
 John Lanchton, United States Navy; mustered in November 16, 1861.
 John Landress, mustered in November 18, 1861.
 Henry Leaman, or Leonard, Seventh Regiment; mustered in November 17, 1861.
 Charles Leroy, Seventh Regiment; mustered in November 19, 1861.
 Charles Louis, mustered in December 2, 1861.
 Clarence S. Lamprey, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in December 28, 1861.
 Jonathan D. Leavitt, mustered in January 23, 1865.
 Thomas M. Lear, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in March 9, 1865.
 Joseph W. Lowell, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in Feb. 11, 1865.
 John Lee, Second Regiment; mustered in November 17, 1861.
 Arnold Lehman, Eighth Regiment; mustered in November 11, 1861.
 Andro Longson, Eighth Regiment; mustered in November 11, 1861.
 John Lang, Second Regiment; mustered in November 19, 1861.
 Alfred Lee, Second Regiment; mustered in November 18, 1861.
 John Lynch, Second Regiment; mustered in November 21, 1861.
 William Laskey, Second Regiment; mustered in November 21, 1861.
 Joseph Leathers, mustered in November 11, 1861.
 Simon N. Lawson, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in October 12, 1861.
 John Lunsbey, mustered in October 19, 1861.
 Robert Lloyd, Heavy Artillery; mustered in October 17, 1861.
 Amos S. Locke, United States Navy; mustered in September 13, 1861.
 Jonathan C. Lane, Third; mustered in September 21, 1861.
 Beza H. Lincoln, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 8, 1861.
 E. S. Linslow, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1861.
 John Leary, Heavy Artillery.
 Andrew L. Lane, Second Brigade Band, Tenth Army Corps; mustered in February 10, 1865.
 Addison S. Martin, Second Regiment; mustered in August 11, 1861.
 Nathan Mansur, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 11, 1861.
 Charles T. Mueh, Second Regiment; mustered in August 12, 1861.
 Alfred L. Marden, Second Regiment; mustered in August 12, 1861.
 William E. Morse, Second Regiment; mustered in August 12, 1861.
 Daniel S. Martin, Second Regiment; mustered in August 12, 1861.
 Peter L. Morrison, Ninth Regiment; mustered in August 16, 1861.
 Charles A. Morrill, Seventh Regiment; mustered in August 21, 1861.
 Asa A. McKeasick, mustered in August 23, 1861.
 Charles Mahagan, Tenth Regiment; mustered in September 11, 1861.
 Michael Moran, Tenth Regiment; mustered in September 15, 1861.
 John Murphy, Tenth Regiment; mustered in September 15, 1861.
 Patrick McQuade, mustered in September 15, 1861.
 Henry W. McMichael, Thirtieth Regiment; mustered in September 23, 1861.
 William H. Moody, Fourteenth Regiment; mustered in February 25, 1862; re-enlisted Heavy Artillery, February 28, 1862.
 James O. Merrill, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in November 5, 1861.
 Patrick McCarty, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in November 5, 1861.
 John Mc Mann, mustered in September 12, 1861.
 Augustus Marx, mustered in September 19, 1861.
 John Main, mustered in September 22, 1861.
 John Mc Mahon, mustered in September 21, 1861.
 James McKeag, Fifth Regiment; mustered in September 7, 1861.
 James Moran, mustered in September 25, 1861.
 Isaac Marx, mustered in September 25, 1861.
 Isaac A. May, Fifth Regiment; mustered in September 12, 1861.
 John Murry, mustered in September 30, 1861.
 William Mc Donald, mustered in October 2, 1861.
 Charles C. P. Moody, mustered in September 25, 1861.
 John J. Morrill, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 17, 1861.
 Francis Martin, Eighth Regiment; mustered in November 19, 1861.
 John E. Mitchell, Eighth Regiment; mustered in November 19, 1861.
 George H. Mills, Third Regiment; mustered in April 4, 1861.
 George A. Mitchell, Heavy Artillery; mustered in May 4, 1861.
 George E. Moore, Sixth Regiment; mustered in May 23, 1861.
 John T. Mc Mahon, mustered in July 29, 1861.
 John McGuire, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 8, 1861.
 Daniel Mullan, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 14, 1861.
 John Murphy, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 29, 1861.
 Frank Moore, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 29, 1861.
 John Merrill, mustered in September 27, 1861.
 James Murray, United States Navy; mustered in November 17, 1861.
 Joseph Marsh, mustered in October 20, 1861.
 John Mc Donnell, Seventh Regiment; mustered in November 18, 1861.
 John Melville, Seventh Regiment; mustered in November 20, 1861.
 James McKeene, or McKeever, Twelfth Regiment; mustered in November 25, 1861.
 John Marston, mustered in December 5, 1861.
 Davd Martin, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in December 26, 1861.
 Thomas Martin, Eighth Regiment; mustered in December 31, 1861.
 William M. Ewan, Fourth Regiment; mustered in January 5, 1865.
 Thomas M. Alson, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in February 13, 1865.
 Thomas McGee, mustered in March 22, 1865.
 James McDonnell, Fourth Regiment; mustered in January 7, 1865.
 Ruel G. Morrill, United States Navy; mustered in February 9, 1865.
 William H. Moody, First Regiment Artillery; mustered in February 28, 1865.

- John May, Eighth Regiment, mustered in February 7, 1864.
 Samuel McArthur, Ninth Regiment, mustered in May 20, 1864.
 Joaquin Martin, United States Navy, mustered in October, 1864.
 Timothy G. Mason, Second Regiment, mustered in August 9, 1862, re-mustered in Eighteenth Regiment, February 24, 1865.
 David C. of E. Maunton, mustered in February 24, 1865.
 James O. Malley, Second Regiment, mustered in November 13, 1863.
 Owen, Jr., M. Donough, Second Regiment, mustered in November 17, 1863.
 Paul McNeil, Second Regiment, mustered in November 17, 1863.
 Niles Minot, mustered in November 17, 1863.
 Thomas Martin, Fourth Regiment, mustered in November 11, 1863.
 Amphibius McGuire, Eighth Regiment, mustered in November 11, 1863.
 Daniel B. McKinnon, Second Regiment, mustered in November 24, 1863.
 Mallett McGowan, mustered in November 19, 1863.
 John McLean, Eighth Regiment, mustered in November 21, 1863.
 Peter Mallon, Second Regiment, mustered in November 24, 1863.
 Abraham Myers, Second Regiment, mustered in November 21, 1863.
 William Marks, Second Regiment, mustered in November 24, 1864.
 Andrew P. Merrill, Eighth Regiment, mustered in November 25, 1863.
 George Marsh, in March, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 7, 1864.
 Charles H. Merrill, Cavalry, mustered in August 9, 1864.
 Guy, of George, M. Minto, United States Navy, mustered in October 28, 1864.
 John Marshall, mustered in August 10, 1864.
 Peter McGee, Eighth Regiment, mustered in August 16, 1864.
 Wilson E. Morton, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in September 24, 1864.
 John H. Murphy, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in September 29, 1864.
 William May, mustered in October 18, 1864.
 William C. Mahunan, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 29, 1864.
 J. P. Moore, mustered in September 14, 1864.
 Peter W. Myers, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in October 4, 1864.
 Henry C. Mose, mustered in October 4, 1864.
 James L. Mosier, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 27, 1864.
 Thomas Murphy, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 7, 1864.
 Joseph F. Merrill, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 7, 1864.
 Frank Mitchell, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 7, 1864.
 William D. Moore, mustered in August 29, 1864.
 John H. Nichols, Second Regiment, mustered in August 12, 1862.
 Henry E. Neely, Thirtieth Regiment, mustered in September 25, 1862.
 George Nease, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in October 25, 1862.
 Henry Norton, mustered in September 22, 1863.
 W. Henry Neal, Fourteenth Regiment, mustered in October 27, 1863.
 William K. Norton, Fourth Regiment, mustered in April 6, 1864.
 James Neill, Sixth Regiment, mustered in June 3, 1864.
 Daniel B. Newhall, Eighth Regiment, mustered in January 4, 1864.
 Daniel E. Nichols, Eighth Regiment, mustered in January 4, 1864.
 Thomas Nathans, Seventh Regiment, mustered in November 20, 1864.
 Lewis Nason, mustered in November 12, 1863.
 Andrew Neil, Eighth Regiment, mustered in November 11, 1864.
 William Nash, Third Regiment, mustered in November 29, 1863.
 Frank Norton, mustered in November 19, 1863.
 Charles Newman, Second Regiment, mustered in November 24, 1863.
 Charles Nash, Second Regiment, mustered in November 24, 1863.
 William H. Olin, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in October 25, 1862.
 Thomas O'Nalley, mustered in November 17, 1863.
 Patrick Owens, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in September 24, 1864.
 Myerton B. Osborne, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in October 5, 1864.
 Peter Olson, Ninth Regiment, mustered in July 11, 1864.
 James Price, Fifth Regiment, mustered in August 11, 1862.
 Simon Partridge, Second Regiment, mustered in August 12, 1862.
 James Prindlell, Ninth Regiment, mustered in August 16, 1862.
 Donald Pringlell, Seventh Regiment, mustered in August 21, 1862.
 Alfred D. Packer, Tenth Regiment, mustered in September 10, 1862.
 John C. Palmer, Thirtieth Regiment, mustered in September 25, 1862.
 Ronald Perkins, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in October 25, 1862.
 Oliver C. P. Peck, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in October 25, 1862.
 Sylvester H. Peck, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in October 25, 1862.
 Benjamin Peck, mustered in September 12, 1864.
 Benjamin C. Peck, mustered in September 11, 1864.
 John Peck, mustered in September 10, 1864.
 Eliza W. Peck, mustered in October 8, 1864.
 Charles B. Peck, Cavalry, mustered in April 11, 1864.
 Robert H. Peck, Sixth Regiment, mustered in December 19, 1864.
 William Phillips, Eleventh Regiment, mustered in July 19, 1864.
 John Prosser, Eighth Regiment, mustered in January 1, 1864.
 Joseph P. B. Pope, Sixth Regiment, mustered in 1864.
 Bonham P. Rye, Eleventh Regiment, mustered in July 23, 1864.
 Alfred W. Parker, United States Navy, mustered in August 31, 1864.
 George Price, Second Regiment, mustered in December 2, 1864.
 Charles F. Fry, United States Navy, mustered in October 1, 1864.
 Thomas F. Powers, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in January 6, 1865.
 Severo Polson, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in January 3, 1864.
 Charles Potter, mustered in February 7, 1865.
 Henry Pearson, Cavalry, mustered in February 25, 1865.
 George Perkins, Second Regiment, mustered in November 23, 1863.
 Joseph Pierce, Second Regiment, mustered in November 21, 1863.
 George Parker, Second Regiment, mustered in November 24, 1863.
 John Powell, Second Regiment, mustered in November 25, 1863.
 Leonard L. Perry, Veteran Reserve Corps, mustered in August 8, 1864.
 Walter Perry, mustered in August 11, 1864.
 James H. Parks, mustered in September 8, 1864.
 Utah K. Potter, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in September 26, 1864.
 Joseph Pilgson, mustered in August 19, 1864.
 Charles W. Piper, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in September 30, 1864.
 Charles Pace, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 22, 1864.
 Robert A. Packard, United States Navy, mustered in August 31, 1864.
 Charles H. Peiffer, Heavy Artillery, mustered in February 7, 1864.
 Felix Prohomer, Heavy Artillery, mustered in February 15, 1865.
 John Parker, Sixth Regiment, mustered in May 24, 1865.
 Walter Perley, Cavalry, mustered in March 1, 1865.
 Ransom S. Quimby, Tenth Regiment, mustered in September 1, 1862.
 Moses M. Quimby, Tenth Regiment, mustered in September 16, 1862.
 P. D. Quimby, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 7, 1864.
 Peter Quinn, Fifth Regiment, mustered in September 25, 1863.
 Hiram M. Quinn, Heavy Artillery, mustered in August 25, 1864.
 Jeremiah Quinn, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 5, 1864.
 Elisha L. Quimby, Veteran Reserve Corps, mustered in August 8, 1864.
 Parkhurst Quimby, Sixteenth Regiment, mustered in October 25, 1862.
 Horace Rolle, Ninth Regiment, mustered in August 16, 1862.
 Charles D. Rowell, Seventh Regiment, mustered in August 21, 1862.
 George A. Rumsey, Eleventh Regiment, mustered in August 21, 1862.
 Joseph Ray, mustered in September 19, 1863.
 James Reid, mustered in September 10, 1863.
 Thomas Rattry, Third Regiment, mustered in April, 1864.
 Charles E. Robinson, Fourth Regiment, mustered in April 2, 1864.
 Oscar F. Rankin, Cavalry, mustered in April 6, 1864.
 George H. Robinson, Eighth Regiment, mustered in January 4, 1864.
 Charles Rummels, Ninth Regiment, mustered in July 8, 1864.
 Charles A. Robbins, Eighth Regiment, mustered in January 4, 1864.
 John Ryne, Fifth Regiment, mustered in August 18, 1864.
 Henry M. Robinson, Veteran Reserve Corps, mustered in September 23, 1864.
 William Robinson, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in November 26, 1864.
 John Russell, Seventh Regiment, mustered in November 30, 1864.
 John F. Ranken, mustered in December 13, 1864.
 Joby S. (or M.) Reed, Third Regiment, mustered in December 13, 1864.
 Michael Riley, Heavy Artillery, mustered in December 22, 1864.
 Benjamin F. Roby, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in February 5, 1865.
 Alfred Rushlow, Heavy Artillery, mustered in February 23, 1865.
 Charles F. Roby, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in January 7, 1865.
 Joseph Rowell, Second Regiment, mustered in November 17, 1863.
 John Rowley, Eighth Regiment, mustered in November 22, 1863.
 Charles Robinson, Eighth Regiment, mustered in November 11, 1863.
 George Russell, mustered in November 29, 1863.
 John Ritter, mustered in November 21, 1863.
 George Ring, mustered in November 21, 1863.
 Thomas Riley, Second Regiment, mustered in November 21, 1863.
 Joseph F. Rowe, Seventh Regiment, mustered in November 24, 1863.
 Patrick Reese, Second Regiment, mustered in November 24, 1863.
 Jean Roberts, Second Regiment, mustered in November 24, 1863.
 Stephen L. Raymond, Cavalry, mustered in November 14, 1863.
 Richard W. Robinson, Second Regiment, mustered in November 18, 1864.
 James Riley, Eighth Regiment, mustered in August 6, 1864.
 James Ryan, Eighth Regiment, mustered in August 10, 1864.

- Thomas Ryan, Eighth Regiment; mustered in August 10, 1864.
- David B. Rowe, Veteran Reserve Corps; mustered in August 3, 1864.
- William H. Robinson, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in September 2, 1864.
- James Robinson, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in September 25, 1864.
- Curtis B. Robertson, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in October 1, 1864.
- Cornelius Bonker, Heavy Artillery; mustered in October 17, 1864.
- Eugene P. Roy, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1864.
- Frank G. Rowell, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1864.
- James Redington; mustered in October 8, 1864.
- John Rich, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 20, 1864.
- Henry Russell; mustered in November 20, 1863.
- Charles Sargent, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 2, 1862.
- Frank W. Smith, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 12, 1862.
- William Stevenson, Second Regiment; mustered in August 12, 1862.
- De Witt C. Saulton, Second Regiment; mustered in August 12, 1862.
- Carroll Saulton, Ninth Regiment; mustered in August 19, 1862.
- George P. Sylvester, Ninth Regiment; mustered in August 20, 1862.
- Edwin Sabinson, Thirteenth Regiment; mustered in September 25, 1862.
- Edward Shanks, Thirteenth Regiment; mustered in September 23, 1862.
- Frank Sargent, Thirteenth Regiment; mustered in September 23, 1862.
- Leroy Smith, Fourteenth Regiment; mustered in September 25, 1862.
- Charles T. Summers, Heavy Artillery; mustered in October 21, 1862.
- Albert H. Smart, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 25, 1862.
- George W. Shepard, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 25, 1862.
- Joseph J. Shadles, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 25, 1862.
- re-enlisted Heavy Artillery; September 5, 1864.
- David W. Sargent, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 25, 1862.
- Joseph E. Sargent, Fifteenth Regiment; mustered in October 27, 1862.
- David Stevens, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in November 4, 1862.
- Hiram Stevens, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in November 5, 1862.
- John Smith, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 9, 1863.
- Thomas Smith; mustered in September 9, 1863.
- Victor Stunan; mustered in September 10, 1863.
- John W. Smart; mustered in September 14, 1863.
- John Stevens; mustered in September 21, 1863.
- Peter Spellman; mustered in September 22, 1863.
- Charles Smith; mustered in September 25, 1863.
- Norton Stoddard; mustered in September 24, 1863.
- Peter Smith; mustered in September 29, 1863.
- James Swift; mustered in September 29, 1863.
- Charles Stevens, Seventh Regiment; mustered in September 26, 1863.
- Daniel J. Sanders, Fifth Regiment; mustered in October 2, 1863.
- John Snow; mustered in October 7, 1863.
- Thomas Smith; mustered in October 8, 1863.
- Andrew Saltmarsh, Fifth Regiment; mustered in September 30, 1863.
- Charles Smith; mustered in October 7, 1863.
- Abel H. Stone, Fifth Regiment; mustered in October 3, 1863.
- John W. Shepard, Cavalry; mustered in March 34, 1864.
- Matthew Storm, Third Regiment; mustered in April 4, 1864.
- John Scott, Heavy Artillery; mustered in July 2, 1864.
- Morris Sullivan, Heavy Artillery; mustered in October 17, 1864.
- Leonard Speed; mustered in December 25, 1863.
- William F. Speed; mustered in March 22, 1864.
- Charles Stevens, Seventh Regiment; mustered in February 28, 1864.
- John Shepard, Sixth Regiment; mustered in June 9, 1864.
- John H. Sexton, Eighth Regiment; mustered in January 4, 1864.
- Medad Strong, Fifth Regiment; mustered in 1864.
- Fredrick D. Sprague, Eleventh Regiment; mustered in July 27, 1864.
- Robert J. Smith, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 15, 1864.
- Edward P. Smith, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 8, 1864.
- Henry Swoot, United States Navy; mustered in September 19, 1864.
- James Smith, Seventh Regiment; mustered in December 2, 1864.
- John Shanks, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in December 3, 1864.
- Robert Stewart; mustered in December 9, 1864.
- Thomas Sullivan; mustered in December 13, 1864.
- Charles F. Sales, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in January 6, 1865.
- Joseph E. Sargent, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in January 7, 1865.
- William Smith, Third Regiment; mustered in February 3, 1865.
- George Thomas Smith; mustered in February 13, 1865.
- Ralph Sharpe, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in March 20, 1865.
- William Smith, Second Regiment; mustered in November 20, 1864.
- Prudent St. Pierre, Second Regiment; mustered in November 24, 1864.
- George W. Small, Second Regiment; mustered in November 21, 1864.
- William Sullivan; mustered in November 24, 1864.
- Joseph Simpson, Second Regiment; mustered in November 24, 1864.
- Charles Seymour, Second Regiment; mustered in November 21, 1863.
- James Sawyer, Eighth Regiment; mustered in November 2, 1863.
- Isaac Silver, Second Regiment; mustered in November 3, 1863.
- John Sands, Second Regiment; mustered in November 3, 1863.
- Victor Smith, Second Regiment; mustered in November 3, 1863.
- Samuel Stevens, Eighth Regiment; mustered in November 4, 1863.
- Edward Smith, Second Regiment; mustered in November 4, 1863.
- William Smith, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in November 4, 1863.
- Arthur Somerville, Cavalry; mustered in November 4, 1863.
- Thomas J. Smart, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in November 4, 1863.
- John Smith, Eighth Regiment; mustered in August 9, 1864.
- John Smith, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1864.
- Daniel E. Smith, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in September 9, 1864.
- Albert W. Smith, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in September 20, 1864.
- Benjamin Severance, Thirtieth Regiment; mustered in July 18, 1864.
- Leroy A. Sweet, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1864.
- Frank Stevens, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in September 17, 1864.
- James M. Shepard, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in September 27, 1864.
- Edward Sanders, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in September 27, 1864.
- James H. Stevens, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1864.
- Joseph T. Shadles; mustered in September 7, 1864.
- Charles T. Summers, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in September 10, 1864.
- J. Sulay Sargent, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1864.
- A. L. Sabinson, Heavy Artillery; mustered in September 7, 1864.
- Benjamin Severance, Veteran Reserve Corps.
- William Sabinson; mustered in September 10, 1864.
- George Stearns; mustered in October 8, 1864.
- Franklin L. Tandy, Fourth Regiment; mustered in August 12, 1862.
- Josiah Tandy, Fourth Regiment; mustered in August 13, 1862.
- Josiah Teel, Sixth Regiment; mustered in September 24, 1862.
- George W. Tucker, Fourteenth Regiment; mustered in September 24, 1862.
- George S. Tutts; mustered in September 14, 1863.
- Robert Trimble; mustered in September 22, 1863.
- Samuel Telo; mustered in October 10, 1863.
- John Thompson, Fourth Regiment; mustered in October 23, 1863.
- Erastus B. Tucker, Fourth Regiment; mustered in April 5, 1864.
- George Thomas, Fourteenth Regiment; mustered in July 26, 1864.
- John Town; mustered in September 27, 1864.
- Thomas Trainer, United States Navy; mustered in November 16, 1864.
- Henry Thomas, Seventh Regiment; mustered in November 25, 1864.
- William Talbot, Eighteenth Regiment; mustered in December 3, 1864.
- Thomas Taylor; mustered in December 15, 1864.
- William H. Thompson; mustered in December 27, 1864.
- Joseph Thompson, United States Cavalry; mustered in January 3, 1865.
- Elisha Thomas, Navy; mustered in November 14, 1863.
- Edward Traynor, Second Regiment; mustered in November 19, 1863.
- Edward Tobin, Second Regiment; mustered in November 17, 1863.
- Francis Turner, Second Regiment; mustered in November 17, 1863.
- James Tryon, Second Regiment; mustered in November 13, 1863.
- Joseph P. Thompson, United States Navy; mustered in August 19, 1864.
- Charles Thompson; mustered in October 19, 1864.
- Charles H. Tallant; mustered in September 2, 1864.
- William S. Thurston, Cavalry; mustered in December 24, 1864.
- William Tilton, Heavy Artillery; mustered in October 25, 1863.
- James Thomas, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 14, 1862.
- Charles W. Underhill, Sixth Regiment; mustered in August 16, 1862.
- William W. Virgin, Thirtieth Regiment; mustered in September 23, 1862.
- John S. Vogler, United States Navy; mustered in September 4, 1864.
- John White, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 8, 1862.
- William D. Wallace, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 31, 1862.
- William Woods, Fifth Regiment; mustered in August 12, 1862.
- William R. Walling, Seventh Regiment; mustered in August 21, 1862.
- George W. Wallen, Eleventh Regiment; mustered in August 21, 1862.
- James H. Walker; mustered in August 23, 1862.
- Harrison Welber, Eighth Regiment; mustered in September 5, 1862.
- George H. Weeks, Thirtieth Regiment; mustered in September 23, 1862.
- George A. Wilder, Thirtieth Regiment; mustered in September 23, 1862.
- William Williamson, Thirtieth Regiment; mustered in September 23, 1862.
- Charles W. Wilson, Sixteenth Regiment; mustered in October 25, 1862.

Corliss Wheeler, Fifth Regiment, mustered in October 1, 1861.
 Charles E. Williams, mustered in September 23, 1861.
 John B. White, mustered in September 10, 1861.
 Samuel Watson, mustered in October 7, 1861.
 George E. Watson, Third Regiment, mustered in February 11, 1861.
 Thomas C. Weeks, Fourth Regiment, mustered in May 10, 1861.
 Charles B. Wallace, Seventh Regiment, mustered in April 9, 1861.
 John Ward, Ninth Regiment, mustered in June 29, 1861.
 Thomas C. Waller, Sixth Regiment, mustered in June 1861.
 James White, Cavalry, mustered in October 9, 1861.
 George Winston, Tenth Regiment, mustered in August 18, 1861.
 Jeremiah Williams, mustered in September 18, 1861.
 Kenneth Wright, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 18, 1861.
 Henry A. Walsh, Cavalry, mustered in November 11, 1861.
 Alfred Wells, Seventh Regiment, mustered in November 25, 1861.
 James Wright, mustered in December 2, 1861.
 Robert Williams, Navy, mustered in December 6, 1861.
 Thomas Ward, mustered in December 9, 1861.
 William Wilson, Third Regiment, mustered in December 14, 1861.
 Edward Walker, Heavy Artillery, mustered in December 21, 1861.
 William G. Webb, Eighth Regiment, mustered in January 2, 1862.
 Frank Warren, Third Regiment, mustered in June 1861.
 Walter A. Webster, United States Navy, mustered in January 3, 1862.
 Henry Wilson, Fourth Regiment, mustered in January 5, 1862.
 John of Joseph Walsh, Tenth Regiment, mustered in February 3, 1862.
 Peter Woods, Eleventh Regiment, mustered in March 1, 1862.
 John Wilson, Fifth Regiment, mustered in February 7, 1862.
 William F. Wallace, Tenth Regiment, mustered in March, 1862.
 George A. Whittier, Tenth Regiment, mustered in September 10, 1862.
 Charles Wood, Second Regiment, mustered in November 13, 1861.
 Henry Williams, Eighth Regiment, mustered in November 14, 1861.
 William Witt, Second Regiment, mustered in November 29, 1861.
 James Williams, Second Regiment, mustered in November 25, 1861.
 William Westerman, Second Regiment, mustered in November 25, 1861.
 Charles H. Waymouth, mustered in November 14, 1861.
 George Willard, Second Regiment, mustered in November 17, 1861.
 Nelson Whitney, Fourth Regiment, mustered in November 13, 1861.
 George Walker, Eighth Regiment, mustered in November 12, 1861.
 Charles W. Woods, Second Regiment, mustered in August 9, 1861.
 John W. Wilson, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September, 1861.
 Charon F. Whittier, Eighteenth Regiment, mustered in October 1, 1861.
 William F. Winn, Heavy Artillery, mustered in October 17, 1861.
 Richard F. Welsh, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 21, 1861.
 George H. Wilkins, Heavy Artillery, mustered in September 7, 1861.
 Horace G. Wyman, United States Navy, mustered in August 21, 1861.
 Frederick J. Willoughby, Cavalry, mustered in October 6, 1861.
 Frank Walker, Fourth Regiment, mustered in January 2, 1862.
 Thomas Young, Seventh Regiment, mustered in November 24, 1861.
 Michael York, Second Regiment, mustered in November 17, 1861.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

NATHANIEL WHITE.

Nathaniel White, oldest child of Samuel and Sarah (Freeman) White, was born in Lancaster, February 7, 1811. His childhood was passed under a tender mother's care, and to her strict religious training was Nathaniel White indebted for his noble character, which led him untainted amid the temptations of youth, and unspotted through a long career of usefulness. At home were those principles of integrity, honesty, temperance, philanthropy and generosity inculcated which led to a long life rounded by Christian virtues, adorned by humanitarian graces and free from vices.

At the age of fourteen years he went into the employ of a merchant in Lunenburg, Vt., with whom he remained about one year, when he accepted employment with General John Wilson, of Lancaster, who was just entering upon his duties as landlord of the Columbian Hotel, in Concord. His parents the more readily consented to his taking this step on account of the many noble qualities of Mrs. Wilson. To her care he was entrusted by his solicitous mother. In the employ of General Wilson, Nathaniel White commenced life in Concord at the foot of the ladder. He arrived in Concord, August 25, 1826, with one shilling in his pocket. For five years, or until he came of age, he continued at the Columbian, rendering a strict account of his wages to his father, and saving the dimes and quarters which came as perquisites, until by his twenty-first birthday he had a fund of two hundred and fifty dollars.

This may be understood from the fact that he commenced life with certain virtues and with no vices. He was prudent, economical, temperate. He never used intoxicating drinks as a beverage, nor tobacco in any form; nor did he gamble or bet with dice or cards. Business success he preferred to pleasure, and to his work he carried enterprise, energy and will.

In 1832 he made his first business venture, negotiating the first and last business loan of his life, and purchased a part interest in the stage-route between Concord and Hanover, occupying the "box" himself for a few years. In one year he was free from debt. Soon after, he bought into the stage-route between Concord and Lowell. In 1838, in company with Captain William Walker, he initiated the express business, making three trips weekly to Boston, and personally attending to the delivery of packages, goods or money, and other business entrusted to him. He was ever punctual; he never forgot. In 1842, upon the opening of the Concord Railroad, he was one of the original partners of the express company which was then organized to deliver goods throughout New Hampshire and Canada. The company, under various names, has continued in successful operation to the present day, and to Nathaniel White's business capacity has it been greatly indebted for its remarkable financial success.

In 1846, Mr. White purchased his farm, and has cultivated it since that date. It lies in the southwestern section of the city, two miles from the State-House, and embraces over four hundred acres of land.

For his adopted home he ever felt and evinced a strong attachment, and to him Concord owes much of her material prosperity and outward adornment. Beautiful structures have been raised through his instrumentality, which render the capitol and the State-House park such attractive features of the city.

In 1852 he made his first step in political life, being chosen by the Whigs and Free-Soilers to represent

W. H. L. H. L.

Concord in the State Legislature. He was an Abolitionist from the start, a member of the Anti-Slavery Society from its inception. His hospitable home was the refuge of many a hunted slave, a veritable station on the Underground Railroad, where welcome, care, food and money were freely bestowed, and the refugees were sent on their way rejoicing. The attic of his house and the hay-mows in his stable were the havens of rest for the persecuted black men.

In all works of charity and philanthropy Mr. White was foremost or prominent. He was deeply interested in the establishment of the New Hampshire Asylum for the Insane and the State Reform School; in the Orphans' Home, at Franklin, which he liberally endowed; and the Home for the Aged, in Concord, which was his special care.

The Reform Club of Concord, though not an eleemosynary institution, received substantial benefits from his generosity, and to him, in a great measure, it owed its very existence, during the reaction which followed the first enthusiasm.

Besides his extensive interest in the express company, his farm—which is one of the most highly cultivated in the State—his charming summer retreat on the borders of Lake Sunapee and his real estate in Concord, he was interested in real estate in Chicago, in hotel property in the mountain districts, in railroad corporations, in banks, in manufacturing establishments and in shipping. He was a director in the Manchester and Lawrence, the Franconia and Profile House and the Mount Washington Railroads, and in the National State Capital Bank; a trustee of the Loan and Trust Savings-Bank of Concord; also of the Reform School, Home for the Aged and Orphans' Home, and of other private and public trusts.

In 1875, Nathaniel White was the candidate for Governor of the Prohibition party, and he had a vast number of friends in the Republican party, with which he was most closely identified, who wished to secure his nomination for the highest honor within the gift of a State by the Republican party. In 1876 he was sent as a delegate to the Cincinnati Convention, which nominated Mr. Hayes for President, and cast every ballot for the gentleman of his choice. During the summer of 1880 he was placed by his party at the head of the list of candidates for Presidential electors.

With all these honors thrust upon him, Nathaniel White was not a politician, although firm in his own political convictions. The office sought the man, not the man the office.

Nathaniel White was blessed in his marriage relations. His history is incomplete without a narration of the perfect union, complete confidence and mutual trust and assistance between him and his wife during a married life of nearly half a century. November 1, 1836, he was married, by Rev. Robert Bartlett, of Laconia, to Armenia S., daughter of John Aldrich, of Boscawen, who survives him. Mrs. Armenia S. White is of good old Quaker stock, descending in the sixth generation from Moses Aldrich, a Quaker preacher who emigrated to this country in the seventeenth century, and settled in Rhode Island; and on the maternal side, from Edward Doty, a Pilgrim who landed in the "Mayflower." She was born November 1, 1817, in Mendon, Mass., her parents removing from Rhode Island at the time of their marriage. In 1830 she went with her parents to Boscawen, where she lived until her marriage. Mrs. White has been her husband's companion and abettor in every good work.

Their children are John A. White; Armenia E., wife of Horatio Hobbs; Lizzie H., wife of C. H. Newhall, of Lynn; Nathaniel White, Jr.; Benjamin C. White, who survive. They lost two children—Annie Frances and Selton F.—and adopted one, Hattie S., wife of Dr. D. P. Dearborn, of Brattleborough, Vt.

In early life Mr. White joined the Independent Order of Odd-Fellows, but his interest was soon gone. For several years he continued his connection with the society by paying his dues, without actual attendance, until at last he dropped from their ranks. He belonged to no other secret society. Anti-slavery societies, temperance societies, charitable and benevolent societies, woman suffrage and equal rights societies, and the Universalist society,—in all of these both husband and wife were deeply and equally interested. Hand-in-hand they have been in every good work, save where the charities of one were unknown to the other. During the first four years of their married life, on account of Mr. White's occupation, they boarded; for eight years they lived on Warren Street; since 1848, until the death of Mr. White, in their residence on School Street. Here they have meted out generous and refined hospitality to the humble slave, the unfortunate and to the most illustrious guests who have honored Concord by their visits.

Nathaniel White died Saturday, October 2, 1880, having nearly completed the allotted span of three-score years and ten. He was stricken down suddenly, although, with his usual business foresight, he seems to have been prepared for the change. The family in their bereavement had the sympathy of the community and State. The sense of a great loss pervaded the city. The funeral was held in the church which owes so much to his fostering care, and was the occasion when a great multitude bore witness to the depth of their sorrow. His remains lie in the lot in Blossom Hill Cemetery which his filial love prepared as the resting-place for his parents.

What were the traits that so endeared Nathaniel White to all who knew him, or could appreciate him? He was thoroughly good; he had a great heart. Of active sympathies, of warm feelings, he was ever ready to listen to the call of suffering, and answer it. His heart and purse were always open for worthy objects. His assistance was freely given for the furtherance of good enterprises. He was an ardent and persevering worker for reform. He was a consistent temperance advocate. He was a modest man without, not fluent as a speaker, but listened to as an oracle. Deeds, not words, made up his life. He was blessed with good judgment and common sense. He was practical and successful. To him a man was a brother, a woman a sister. He loved his fellow-men.

Mr. White embodied and exemplified in his life these qualities of mind and heart which distinguish what we love to call our self-made men. He was essentially progressive, courageous and a moving force among his associates. Life was to him full of opportunities, which he had the nerve to seize and the capacity to improve; and then force of character, guided by high moral instinct and sterling honesty, made him a power in the business and social community, and won for him his high position. And it was no covetous hand that gathered up this harvest of wealth and influence and strength of resource. He gathered it and dispensed it with equal munificence. It went to help the poor, to encourage enterprise, to promote all good works and to make the community better and happier. He made his impress on the world about him, not by what he gained from it, but by what he gave it; and his works live after him, and speak continually of a life that was a rich blessing, and is still a treasure to the community to which it peculiarly belongs.

The Daily Monitor, under date of October 2, 1880, said,—

"In the faith of Nathaniel White this community sustains an irreplaceable loss. Large-hearted, humane, liberal and progressive, he gave every good work, local and general, his earnest, unstinted support. He could not be without Concord, he employed his wealth for the benefit of that city's prosperity. His public spirit stretched also to the State, and he was his most ardent enterprise for the development of its resources. Aligned man has gone to his reward, and it can be truly said that the light he left for the path he bore in it."

Mr. White's marital relations were of a most happy character, and Mr. H. P. Rolfe truly said,—

"In all his aspirations to make himself an honorable name, and to do good to his kindred, his friends, his country and his race, Mr. White was most fortunate and happy in that he had the cord's suggestion, the prompt encouragement, the ready co-operation and the ardent sympathy of her who, for nearly half a century, kept his home constantly blooming with the sweet-scented flowers of affection."

HON. ONSLOW STEARNS.

A large proportion of the men who have been elected to the chief magistracy of our State were, to a greater or less extent, engaged in political life during a considerable period of their existence. The men of essentially business tastes and occupation, who have been called to the gubernatorial chair, have been exceptions to the general rule. Nor is our State different from others in this regard. Everywhere, as a rule, the public offices which the people have at their disposal are conferred upon men who have devoted their time and attention to politics and partisan management. Among the more conspicuous exceptions to this rule in this State is the case of the late ex-Governor Stearns, who, although a man of decided political convictions, was, in no sense of the word, a politician, and was never in any degree concerned in party management. Mr. Stearns was a business man in the full sense of the term; and, thoroughly identified as he was with the railroad interest of the State from its inception till the day of his death, he was unquestionably, from first to last, the most conspicuous representative of that interest in New Hampshire.

Ouslow Stearns was born in Billerica, Mass., August 30, 1810. The farm upon which he was reared, and which still remains in the family, being now owned by an older brother, Franklin Stearns, was the property and homestead of his grandfather, Hon. Isaac Stearns, a prominent and influential citizen of Middlesex County, and a soldier in the old French War, who was, at one time, a member of the Executive Council of the State, and held other honorable and responsible offices. His father, John Stearns, who was also a farmer, and succeeded in possession of the homestead, was killed in the prime of life by a railroad accident at Woburn. William Stearns, a brother of John and uncle of Ouslow, was a soldier in the Revolution, and fought at the battle of Lexington. Ouslow Stearns remained at home, laboring upon the farm, and availing himself of such educational privileges as the public schools afforded, until seventeen years of age, when he went to Boston and engaged as a clerk in the house of Howe & Holbrook, afterward J. C. Howe & Co., where he remained about three years, and then left to join his brother, John O. Stearns, since famous as a railroad contractor and builder, who, then in Virginia, was engaged in the construction of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. Subsequently he became interested with his brother in contracts for the construction of various railroads in Pennsylvania, New York and New Jersey, upon which he was engaged until the summer of 1837, when he returned to Massachusetts and engaged in contracts upon the Charlestown Branch and Wilmington and Haverhill Railroads, now, respectively, portions of the Fitchburg and Boston and Maine roads. Soon after, he engaged in the work of completing the Nashua and Lowell Railroad, then in process of construction from Lowell to Nashua. This road was completed in the fall of 1838, when Mr. Stearns was made its superintendent, holding the position until July, 1846, when he resigned to become agent of the Northern Railroad Company of New Hampshire, for the purpose of constructing its road from Concord to White River Junction. His first efforts in the interest of this road were directed toward obtaining the necessary legislation for securing a right of way for the road over the land where it was to pass, the law of 1840 having rendered it impossible. This legislation was secured in 1844, by which the State was empowered to take the land of the owners, making them compensation for damages, and leasing the same to railroad corporations, they repaying to the State the amount paid for damages.

Amos A. Phelps

Under the personal supervision of Mr. Stearns, the road was located, and the work of construction vigorously carried forward and completed, the Bristol Branch included. After its completion he became manager of the road, which position he held till May, 1852, when he was chosen president of the Northern Railroad Company, continuing in that office until the time of his death. He was also general superintendent of the Vermont Central Railroad from 1852 till 1855, a director in the Ogdensburgh Railroad for some time, and for nearly twenty years, up to 1875, a director in the Nashua and Lowell Railroad corporation.

While president of the Northern Railroad Company, Mr. Stearns was also president of the Sullivan, the Contoocook Valley and the Concord and Claremont Railroad Companies, which were connected in interest with the Northern Railroad, and, under his direction, the Concord and Claremont Railroad was extended from Bradford to Claremont, being completed in 1872. The success of Mr. Stearns in the management of these various railroad enterprises caused his services to be sought by those interested in other railroads, and he was frequently solicited to take charge of railroad interests in Massachusetts and other States. These offers he uniformly declined till July, 1866, when he was induced to take the presidency of the Old Colony and Newport Railway Company, in Massachusetts, which position he held till November, 1877, when he resigned on account of failing health. During this time the Old Colony and Newport Railway Company and the Cape Cod Railroad Company were consolidated under the name of the Old Colony Railroad Company, and the South Shore and Duxbury and Cohasset Railroads, with others, were added to it. The Old Colony Steamboat Company was also formed, and purchased the boats of the Narragansett Steamship Company, thus forming, with the Old Colony Railroad, the present Fall River Line between Boston and New York. In 1874, Mr. Stearns was elected president of the Concord Railroad, and continued to manage the affairs of this corporation till his death.

The eleven years during which Mr. Stearns was president of the Old Colony Railroad were years of the most intense and constant labor on his part. For two years of the time he was Governor of New Hampshire. He was president of the Northern Railroad and the other roads connected with it during all that time; and for three years he was also president of the Concord Railroad and of the Old Colony Steamboat Company, besides being a director and interested in the management of various other corporations. Mr. Stearns gave an active, personal supervision to all the corporate interests under his charge, embracing not only their general relations with other corporations and interests, but extending to the most minute details of their management. He was never idle. No man was ever more painstaking and faithful in the discharge of his duties. His papers and figures were carried with him, and studied as he journeyed between his home in Concord and the railroad offices in Boston; and when in Boston his labors almost always extended far into the hours of night. He lived in labor, and thought no plan complete till, by execution, it had passed beyond his power to labor upon it. His knowledge of the practical management of railroads was complete and perfect to the smallest details; and this, together with his unwearied industry, sound business judgment and foresight and his knowledge and control of men, contributed to a success such as few railroad managers have attained. At his death he was the oldest railroad president in continuous service in New England, having been president of the Northern Railroad for twenty-seven years.

Although in no sense a politician, as has been stated, Mr. Stearns was a man of fixed political convictions, acting heartily with the Whig party from early life until the dissolution of the party, when he became a Republican. In 1862 he accepted the nomination of his party as candidate for State Senator in the Concord District, and was elected, serving upon the committees upon railroads, elections, and military affairs. He was re-elected the following year, and was chosen president of the Senate, faithfully and acceptably discharging the duties of his responsible position. In legislation, as in business life, he was eminently a practical man. During his term of legislative service the War of the Rebellion was in progress, and his efforts as a legislator, as well as a citizen, were freely and fully exerted in behalf of the Union cause. He was one of the prime movers in the formation of the New Hampshire Soldiers' Aid Society, an organization which contributed largely to the encouragement of enlistments and the assistance of the needy families of soldiers in the field.

In 1864, Mr. Stearns was a delegate-at-large from New Hampshire in the Republican National Convention, and was one of the vice-presidents of that body. Many prominent Republicans and personal friends had, for some time, urged his candidacy for the Republican nomination for Governor of the State, and in 1867 he received a large vote in the convention which nominated General Harriman for that office. Soon after the convention he was besought by a number of his friends and political associates, who were dissatisfied with the action of the convention, to allow the use of his name as an independent candidate, but declined to accede to their wishes.

In the Republican State Convention of 1867 no name but that of Mr. Stearns was presented for the gubernatorial nomination, which was conferred upon him by acclamation, a circumstance of rare occurrence in a case of a first nomination. He was elected by a decided majority, over General John Bedel, the Democratic candidate, and was renominated the following year. He sent a letter to the convention declining the renomination, on account of the state of his health and the pressure of business cares; but the convention refused to accept the declination, and a committee was appointed to wait upon him and urge its withdrawal, which was finally successful in its efforts. His re-election followed, and for another year he devoted no small share of his attention to the interests of the State, notwithstanding the varied demands of the extensive corporate interests under his management. To the financial affairs of the State his care was especially directed, and during his administration the State debt was reduced nearly one-third, while the State tax was also reduced in still greater proportion. He also took a lively interest in the management of the State Prison, and was instrumental in effecting great changes therein, securing more thorough discipline and putting the institution upon a paying basis, whereas it had long been run at a pecuniary loss to the State.

In the discharge of all his public duties Mr. Stearns always sought to treat the matter in hand in a thoroughly practical and business-like manner, exercising the same judgment and discrimination as in the management of his private and business affairs. Although firmly attached to his party, he was less a partisan in the exercise of his official functions than many of his predecessors had been, and was the first Republican Governor of New Hampshire to nominate a Democrat to a position upon the Supreme Bench, which he did in 1870, when Hon. Wm. S. Ladd, of Lancaster, was made an associate justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement of Judge Nesmith. This action, although denounced by many of his Republican friends, is now regarded by all as having been wise and judicious, inasmuch as the ultimate outcome has been a thoroughly non-partisan judiciary in our State and a universal desire and determination to maintain the same.

The cause of education found in Mr. Stearns a warm friend, and in the welfare of Dartmouth College, which institution, in 1857, conferred upon him the honorary degree of Master of Arts, he took special interest. His first public address after assuming the gubernatorial office was upon the occasion of the college centennial, wherein he took decided ground in favor of such liberal aid from the State as might be necessary to make the institution permanently effective for the public good.

In religious sympathies and convictions Mr. Stearns was a Unitarian, and was an active and influential member of the Unitarian Society of Concord during his long residence in the city, contributing liberally for the support of public worship, upon which he was a constant attendant, and for all its auxiliary purposes and objects. Thoroughly public-spirited, he never failed to give material support to all measures which seemed to him calculated to advance the interests of his adopted city, as well as the State at large, nor were his social duties in the least neglected, notwithstanding the pressing cares of public and business life.

The long and arduous labor of his life was not without its substantial reward, and he became the possessor of an ample fortune, enabling him to dispense a liberal hospitality. Among the many distinguished persons entertained in his elegant mansion were two incumbents of the chief magistracy of the United States, General Grant and Mr. Hayes, each of whom became his guest when visiting our State capital.

Mr. Stearns was united in marriage, June 26, 1845, with Miss Mary A. Holbrook, daughter of Hon. Adin Holbrook, of Lowell, Mass., and with her established a home in Concord the following year, in the location where he continued to reside, making numerous improvements from time to time throughout his life. Five children—a son and four daughters—are the fruit of this union. The son, Charles O. Stearns, is engaged in railroad business in Boston. The eldest daughter, Mary, is the wife of Brevet Brigadier General John R. Brooke, of the United States army; the second daughter, Margaret, is now Mrs. Ingalls, of North Adams, Mass.; the other daughters, Sarah and Grace, remain with their mother at the family residence in Concord, where the husband and father, after a brief illness of a few days, quietly departed this life, December 29, 1878.

LEWIS DOWNING.

Samuel, father of Lewis, was of English extraction, born in 1757, and moved to Lexington, Mass., in 1777. He married, first, Susanna, daughter of Benjamin and Sarah (Reed) Brown, of Lexington. The children of this marriage were Polly, born October 21, 1783; Oliver, born March 10, 1785; Samuel, born October 30, 1787; Susanna, born November 20, 1788; Sally, born November 23, 1790; Lewis, born June 23, 1792; William, born September 20, 1796. The latter was a soldier in the War of 1812, and was mortally wounded at the battle of Lundy's Lane, July 25, 1814.

Samuel married, second, Eunice Bridge, of Lexington, and the children from this union were Emily, born January 24, 1804; Charles, born July 9, 1802; George W., born February 22, 1804; Andrew J., born October 31, 1815, and Fanny, who died in infancy. Samuel was a carriage-maker by trade, and taught the same to his son Samuel, who, in turn, taught it to his brother Lewis, and the shop where they all worked still stands as then, in the town of Lexington and just below the celebrated "Manroe Tavern."

Henry [unclear]

In the year 1800 Samuel removed from Lexington, Mass., to Newburgh, N. Y., and thence to Montgomery, intending to continue his occupation as a carriage-maker at that place. Owing to the bad state of his health at Montgomery he returned to Newburgh, where he established, on the corner of Broad and Liberty Streets, about the commencement of the present century, a shop for the manufacture of wagons and carriages. While yet in the early stages of this undertaking failing health led him to engage in the more healthful business of market gardening and the cultivation of a nursery, which he planted on the property adjoining his shop. As early as 1810, he offered for sale, trees grafted or inoculated of apples, pears, peaches, apricots and cherries, and was the first to conduct the business with such success as to secure its continuance. He led an industrious and sober life, and died in Newburgh November 1, 1822. Of the children by his second marriage, Charles and Andrew J. were very celebrated for their knowledge of horticulture and landscape gardening, having published various works, among which are "Downing's Fruits and Fruit-Trees of America," "Downing's Country Houses," and also "Landscape Gardening."

Andrew J. Downing, as an architect, has no superior. His creations were always appropriate to, and compatible with, their surroundings. So much so, that one was often fain to wonder whether the scenery was made to fit the edifice, or the edifice to crown and ennoble the scenery. As a horticulturist, floriculturist and pomologist he had no equal; his knowledge in each of these departments was profound and exhaustive, and his taste both exquisite and unerring. As an author, he was prolific, genial and attractive; always at his ease, and always a perfect master of his subject and the English language. He was for many years editor of the Horticulturist, a monthly magazine of large circulation. It is very rarely that a man of such varied talents, each so perfect in its kind and all capable of combination to a certain and practicable end, appears in this world of ours. He laid out the grounds of the Smithsonian Institute, in Washington in 1851, and a monument was afterwards erected on them to his memory. He perished in the burning of the steamer "Henry Clay," on the Hudson River, July 28, 1852, while on his way to superintend the erection of some villas at Newport, R. I.

Charles Downing was always in complete sympathy with his gifted brother, Andrew J., and had many qualities in common with him. He devoted his life to his favorite pursuits of horticulture and pomology, and re-edited Andrew's Work on "Fruits and Fruit-Trees of America," adding much new matter, the results of his own observation and experiments, finally completing a work which is considered the highest authority on this subject both in England and America. He died at Newburgh, N. Y., January 17, 1885, at the age of eighty-two years. On the maternal side they are of the same lineage as the late President Garfield, the common ancestor being John Bridge, the Puritan, one of the earliest settlers of Cambridge, whose statue in bronze stands on Cambridge Common.

Lewis, the subject of this sketch, son of Samuel and Susanna (Brown) Downing, was born in Lexington, Mass., June 23, 1792; married Lucy Wheelock, only child of Jonathan and Lucy (Beaman) Wheelock, at Concord, Mass., May 25, 1815. Jonathan Wheelock was a soldier in the Revolution, doing service for his country, from Bunker Hill to Yorktown, especially sharing in the sufferings of the American army at Valley Forge. He was for many years a noted stage-driver between Boston and Concord, Mass., spending the last years of his life with his daughter, dying at her home, September 5, 1815, at the age of eighty-six years.

The children of Lewis and Lucy (Wheelock) Downing, all born in Concord, were, Lucy Maria, born September 19, 1818; Lewis Downing, Jr., born December 6, 1820; Alonzo, born December 28, 1822; Mary Ann, born January 25, 1826; Emily and Ellen, born July 28, 1828. Lewis moved from Lexington, Mass., to Concord, N. H., in May, 1813, and commenced the carriage business, first at the north end of Main Street, but in 1816 purchased the "Duncan Estate," at the south end, and moved his shops there, where they remain at the present time. For the first few years he only made the "Concord Wagon," with some freight-wagons, used at that time for freighting goods from Boston to towns in New Hampshire and Vermont, and the two-wheel chaise, used extensively then instead of the four-wheel buggy, as at the present time. The first wagon made was in November, 1813, and the first chaise he made was sold to the Rev. Dr. Bouton, and was used by him a great many years. In the year 1826, Mr. Downing, foreseeing that there must eventually be a great demand for stage-coaches, concluded to commence the manufacture of them, and with that in view, he went to Salem, Mass. and arranged with J. Stephens Abbot to come to Concord and build three coach-bodies. Mr. Abbot was then at work for Mr. Frothingham, a celebrated coach-maker in Salem, but left and arrived in Concord on Christmas eve, and made the first coach-bodies ever built in New Hampshire during the spring of 1827. The first coach was completed, and went out of the shop in July, 1827, and was sold to John Shepherd. From that time on, the demand for coaches increased, and before the advent of the railroads they could be found in all parts of the world.

In 1828, Mr. Downing took Mr. Abbot in with him as a partner, and the firm-name was Downing & Abbot until September, 1847, when it was dissolved, and Mr. Downing and his two sons built new shops on Main Street, opposite the Phenix Hotel, continuing business under the name of L. Downing & Sons, while Mr. Abbot and his son Edward A. carried on the same at the old shops. January 1, 1865, Mr. Downing, Sr., retired from the business, and a new firm was formed under the name of Abbot, Downing & Co., consisting of J. Stephens, Edward A. and Joseph H. Abbot, Lewis Downing, Jr., and Alonzo Downing, and the works at the south end greatly enlarged for the purpose. January 1, 1873, they purchased the works of Harvey, Morgan & Co., and reorganized under the general laws of New Hampshire as the Abbot-Downing Company, and so continue at the present time, with a capital of four hundred thousand dollars, a force of two hundred and seventy-five men, their shops occupying about six acres of ground and their carriages sent in all directions. In this connection it may not be improper to say that it is a very remarkable circumstance, probably without a parallel, that from the time Samuel Downing commenced learning his trade, in 1772, until the present time, 1885, it will be one hundred and thirteen consecutive years of service in the same business by the father, son and grandson, and a total of one hundred and forty four years' active service by the same persons, viz.: Samuel Downing from 1772 until 1810, thirty-eight years; Lewis Downing from 1807 until 1865, fifty-eight years; and Lewis Downing, Jr., from 1837 until 1885, forty-eight years. The latter is still in active business and president of the Abbot-Downing Company. The original shops, established by Lewis Downing seventy-two years ago, occupy the same ground they have occupied the past sixty-nine years. Mr. Downing visited California twice in connection with his business, and was well-known on the Pacific coast, where he had a large market for his carriages, so celebrated the world over. He earned and maintained a high reputation for skill, sagacity and integrity, probably doing as much as any other man for the prosperity and growth of Concord. The Concord Daily Monitor, in an interesting sketch of his career, January, 1865, says: "Mr. Downing, Sr., retires from business, after active participation in it for nearly fifty-eight years, and we think we express the general sentiment of the community when we say that during that time, his integrity having never been questioned, he is entitled to be called Concord's best benefactor."

Mr. Downing, though not an active politician, was a thorough going Republican, and represented Ward 6 in the State Legislature in 1865-66. He not only sought to build up a business for his own advantage, but he was keenly alive to whatever affected the public welfare. So far as his influence could avail anything, he endeavored to have the business affairs of the community and State conducted on principles of strict justice to all concerned. Positive and self-reliant in his own convictions, he opposed, with blunt sincerity, whatever seemed to him ill-considered and unamiable. No one had a more thoughtful concern for whatever tended to strengthen public character and elevate public life, and his personal integrity in business gave character to the whole community and made the city of Concord famous. His coaches being known the world over, are regarded as fair representatives of the average moral worth of her citizens. In religion, so far as any creed is concerned, he was a strong Unitarian, being one of the founders of that society in the city of Concord, and in his will gives his entire estate, at the decease of his children, to that society, the income of which is to be expended by them annually for the spread of liberal Christianity, as represented in the writings of William Ellery Channing. After a long and severe illness he died, March 10, 1873, in the eighty-first year of his age. His life was faithful, just and true; his death peaceful, serene, full of faith and longings for the "beyond."

J. STEPHENS ABBOT.

In the beautiful town of Andover, Mass., situated on the bank of the Merrimack River, is the cemetery in which may be seen a cenotaph bearing the following inscription:

"GEORGE ABBOT,
born in England,
was one of the first settlers of Andover, A. D. 1633
where, in 1647, he married
HANNAH CHANDLER.
He died December, 1681, A. D. 96.
She died December 1711, A. D. 82.
Their descendants, in reverence for Their Moral Worth and Christian virtues, erected this monument
A. D. 1843."

Thus it appears that the ancestors of the subject of this sketch were of that sturdy and valiant race of pioneers who laid the foundation of this great Anglo-Saxon nation.

J. Stephens Abbot was born in Albany, Me., on the 22d of February, 1804. While yet an infant he was deprived of both his parents, and his uncle, General Abbot, took him to old Salem to his aunt, Mrs. Chase, by whom he was adopted, and for whom he always cherished the most affectionate regard.

At Salem he enjoyed such educational advantages as generally fell to the lot of boys destined to earn their own living in a new country at that early period of the present century. His school-days over, he was apprenticed to Frothingham & Loring, of Salem, who were then celebrated chaises-builders, and some years afterward he was induced by Mr. Lewis Downing, Sr., to accompany him to Concord, N. H., to aid in the introduction and manufacture of the now famous Concord stage-coach. It was here that he built the first coach-bodies which were ever constructed in the State of New Hampshire.

In 1828 he became associated with Mr. Downing as a partner in the firm of Downing & Abbot. Together they planted, with skillful hands, that tree which has taken such deep root in the soil that, to-day, hundreds of industrious families find sustenance and shelter under its vigorous branches.

Stephen Abbot

Many an old man in New England and the Canadas can well remember the first yellow, oval-shaped, Concord stage-coach which came rattling into his native village, creating more excitement than the train of railroad cars does now, rushing into the depot with its ponderous engine. A description of the running part of the Concord stage-coach would be superfluous, because the saying has become proverbial that "the Concord running parts do their own talking." The superiority in the running parts was a peculiarity in the Concord stage-coach that called for the exercise of the utmost intelligence, combined with no small degree of practical and scientific knowledge. The same admirable qualifications were displayed by Mr. Abbot in the construction of those old-fashioned omnibuses then in vogue.

For several years the business continued to enlarge and prosper, until, in 1847, Mr. Downing retired from the firm, leaving Mr. Abbot to carry on the business in his own name, and in 1852 he took his son, E. A., into partnership, under the firm-name of J. S. & E. A. Abbot, who brought out the justly-celebrated American ambulances, which rendered such priceless service in our Civil War and also in the conflict between France and Prussia. So greatly were they appreciated by the French nation that the provisional government decorated with the Cross of the Legion of Honor three enterprising Americans who introduced these humane accompaniments of war into France.

It is thus that at all times, especially when great emergencies arise, the genius of New England in the mechanic arts finds so vast a field of usefulness at home and abroad.

In 1865 the firm-name was changed to that of Abbot, Downing & Co., by the introduction of Lewis Downing, Jr., the son of Mr. Abbot's old partner. The new firm turned their attention to the manufacture of the celebrated Concord wagons, which manufacture soon became remarkably successful. There are very few on this continent who do not know what is meant by the expression "a Concord express-wagon." Besides the various specialties of their own invention here manufactured, they built for the New York Transfer Company fifty of Dodd's "Patent Crystals" for use in New York City.

The whole establishment is so admirably arranged that the extensive business at Concord contributes simultaneously to the prosperity of the firm and the general comfort and happiness of the employes and their families. Indeed, Mr. Abbot was remarkably successful, not only in commanding their respect, but in gaining their affectionate good-will. Possessing a fine figure, a noble presence and a countenance at once beautiful and beaming with goodness and benevolence, they regarded him as a friend a benefactor, rather than as an employer, in the ordinary acceptation of the word.

If proof of this were called for, we have it in the fact that no such thing as a strike was ever heard of in the factory at Concord, and whenever difficulties occurred among the workmen his word and look were sufficient to remove them, while his friendly counsel rarely, if ever, failed to effect the object for which it was given. He was, essentially, "a master workman," being thoroughly conversant with every branch of the manufacture and every detail of the business.

Often have the hands been astonished to note with what judgment and skill he could walk into the forest, and at a glance, as if imbued with intuitive perception, select and blaze the trees which were best adapted for his purpose.

In all the relations of life the deceased was confided in and beloved, while a word of praise from his lips exercised the same magic power in his home-circle as in the work-shop.

He attended the Episcopalian Church and adorned its doctrines in all things, and was more a Christian, and less a sectarian, than many who make a louder profession of religion. In politics he was "an Old-Line Whig," one of the Daniel Webster school. He enjoyed the intimate friendship of some of the best and foremost statesmen in his adopted State; was a warm, personal friend of the late ex-President Franklin Pierce, and a member of the old Salem Cadets, at whose reunion, in 1870, he was present contributing to the general enjoyment on that happy occasion. With the ample means at his disposal, he was never backward in promoting, as fitting occasion presented, the welfare of his relatives and friends. He had never known sickness until the illness overtook him which, in three short weeks, terminated his earthly career, March 16, 1871, in the sixty-eighth year of his useful and honorable life.

It is pleasing to know that he bore his sufferings with Christian patience and with manly fortitude.

When the spirit left its tenement of clay to return to the God who gave it, the clock had just struck the hour of six, and as the signal of work was sounded for others he received the summons to rest forever from his labors. But no sooner had the tidings of his departure reached the factory than the implements of labor fell from every hand, every arm was relaxed, every heart was saddened and every eye was dimmed, while the widowed wife and mother, with her sorrowing children, relatives and friends, felt that a cloud had overshadowed their happiness. The cloud, however, was not without its silver lining, for was there not something of the chastened "joy of grief" in the thought that the loss thus mourned by the living was the great and eternal gain of the dead? How truly doth the good Book say: "The memory of the just is blessed!"

December 15, 1829, Mr. Abbot married Grace, daughter of Sherburne and Margaret (Sargent)

Wiggin, who was born October 6, 1806, and still survives. Their family consisted of five children, viz.: Edward Augustus, Margaret Ann, Joseph Henry, Francis Lewis and Mary.

JOHN KIMBALL.¹

An honorable ancestry is a source of gratification, if not of merit, and from it noble traits of character are undoubtedly often inherited. It is therefore to be noted in considering biography.

1. Richard and Fusula Kimball, with seven children, came from Ipswich, England, April 19, 1634 (O. S.), and settled in Watertown, but in 1637 moved to Ipswich, Mass. He died June 22, 1675, having had eleven children. From this Puritan family have sprung most of the Kimballs of New England.

2. Their son, Richard, was born in England in 1623; settled in Wenham, Mass., as early as 1656; married Mary Gott, had eight children, and died May 26, 1676.

3. His son, Caleb, was born in Wenham April 9, 1665. He was of Exeter, N. H., having moved there from Wenham. He married Sarah — , had eight children, and died in Wenham January 29, 1731-32.

4. His son, John, was born in Wenham December 29, 1699; settled in Exeter, and married Abigail Lyford, February 14, 1722-23, who was the mother of six children, and died in Exeter February 12, 1737-38. He married Sarah Wilson, of Exeter, September 18, 1749, who had nine children.

5. His son by his first marriage, Joseph, was born in Exeter January 29, 1739-31. After an early marriage, the wife and two children of which died, he married Sarah Smith, who gave birth to nine children, and died March 1, 1808, and he died November 6, 1814. He had moved to Canterbury as early as 1788, and settled on a farm just north of the Shakers. He had the misfortune to lose his eyesight before he left Exeter; consequently he never looked on the town of Canterbury, where he resided twenty-six years, and six of his children were born after he became blind.

6. His son, John, was born in Exeter November 29, 1767; married Sarah, daughter of Benjamin Moulton, of Kensington, November 21, 1793; moved to Canterbury February 11, 1794, and settled on their homestead, north of Shaker village, where they resided nearly sixty years, having nine children, the wife dying April 30, 1853, and he February 26, 1861, at the age of ninety-three years, three months and six days. To farming he added the business of a wheelwright and manufacturer of agricultural implements, and occasionally that of a builder.

7. His son, Benjamin, was born in Canterbury December 27, 1794; married Ruth, daughter of David Ames, February 1, 1829. After continuing two years with his father on the farm, and two years on a farm in Northfield, he settled in Boscaawen in the spring of 1824, on the farm known as the Frost place, on High Street; but in November, 1830, having purchased of Hon. Jeremiah Mason, of Portsmouth, attorney for the United States Bank, its land and water-power at the south part of the town (now Penacook), he moved there, and resided in the house he had bought, situated next east of the hotel, where he died July 21, 1834. Although dying at the age of forty, he had become an active and influential business man. In 1831 he erected the dam across the Contoocook River, and the brick grist-mill standing near the stone factory. He also engaged in manufacturing lumber. He took an active part in all that was essential to the general and religious welfare of the town, and was elected to the Legislature in the March preceding his death.

Ruth Ames was the ninth of the ten children of David Ames and Phoebe, daughter of Thomas Hoyt, who died in 1777, in the War of the Revolution. David, born May 27, 1749, was one of four children of Samuel Ames, one of the first settlers of Canterbury, who was born February 13, 1723-24, and died January 16, 1803. Ruth Ames was born in Canterbury July 29, 1797, and died in Concord October 22, 1874. She was a fine type of the strong but liberal New England woman.

John Kimball, son of Benjamin Kimball and Ruth Ames, was born in Canterbury April 13, 1821. When he was thirteen years of age his father died, leaving, also, a daughter (Elizabeth) nine years old, and another son (Benjamin A.) less than a year old. The widowed mother had already buried two children in infancy, and six years later lost the daughter; but she lived forty years longer, and enjoyed the highest felicity of a mother, seeing her two stalwart sons grow prosperously to man's estate, achieving riches and honors, unblemished in life and character. The early home duties and experiences of the elder son naturally aroused in him tender devotion to a mother and brother so dependent upon him, animated him to earnest and persistent effort, developed in him strong self-reliance, and laid broad and deep the foundations of those qualities of heart and mind which now distinguish him.

He attended the town schools of Boscaawen, and during the year 1837 the Concord Academy. In 1838 he was apprenticed as a machinist to William Moody Kimball, his father's cousin, then engaged in constructing mills and machinery at Boscaawen, and in four years he mastered his trade. His first work after coming of age was, in 1842, to rebuild the grist-mills in the valley near the north end of Boscaawen Plain, which are still in use, and he worked at his trade in Suncook, Manchester, Lowell and Lawrence.

In 1848 he took charge of the new machine and car-shops of the Concord Railroad, then building at Concord, and in 1850 became master mechanic of that corporation, continuing in the position until 1858.

¹By William F. Chaffin.

John L. ...

Twenty years of unremitting work in mechanical construction had brought him to the summit of his vocation, possessing thorough, practical skill, having acquired an unusual share of common sense in human affairs, and with habits of industry, temperance and self-reliance, sure to give him a fair measure of success in any new calling which he might choose. Henceforth his life's work was to be in different fields. His neighbors and friends had discovered his integrity and capacity, and they commenced to utilize them in public employment.

In 1856, Mr. Kimball had been elected a member of the Common Council of the city of Concord, and re-elected in 1857, and chosen president of the Council. In 1858 he was elected to the State Legislature, was re-elected in 1859, and served as chairman of the committee on the State Prison. In 1859 he relinquished other employment to serve as city marshal of Concord and collector of taxes, from which office he was, in 1862, appointed by President Lincoln to the post of collector of internal revenue for the Second District of New Hampshire, consisting of the counties of Merrimack and Hillsborough, and served until he resigned, in 1869. His collections, which included the tax on manufactures from the mills of Manchester, were very heavy for a country district, and amounted in the seven years to nearly seven millions of dollars. No revenue district in the country established a better reputation. His methods of collection, while thorough, were quiet, and gave no offense, and his administration was in all respects faultless. In the office of the commissioner of internal revenue, at Washington, his record has always been referred to as one of the very highest.

In 1870, Mr. Kimball was elected treasurer of the Merrimack County Savings-Bank, then first organized. He has held the office ever since, and now conducts its business, for which he has been largely responsible, the bank being a profitable and successful institution.

Mr. Kimball was elected mayor of the city of Concord in 1872, and re-elected in 1873, 1874 and 1875. The duties of this honorable, responsible, but perplexing office he discharged with zeal and firmness, and to the satisfaction of the citizens. It fell to his lot to construct an unusual number of public works, which will long endure to testify to his capacity and fidelity. A freshet having carried away or rendered impassable five of the seven wooden bridges spanning the Merrimack and Contoocook Rivers, the work of rebuilding devolved on him as the superintendent of roads and bridges. The new structures are of the most substantial character,—two, the Federal Bridge and that at Penacook, being of iron, of modern design. The central fire station, built by him, is also an edifice attractive as well as commodious and convenient. Complaints of the cost of Mr. Kimball's constructions as mayor have long since ceased, in view of the universally admitted integrity of all expenditures upon them, and their solidity and permanency, as well as of the credit which they have brought to our beautiful city. During his administration the Long Pond water-works were constructed, bringing to the centre of Concord a copious supply of the purest water, at a cost of four hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, economically and skillfully expended. He became ex-officio one of the water commissioners, and in 1878 president of the board, in which position he has ever since been kept. Blossom Hill Cemetery was doubled in size, the streets of the city were improved in accordance with modern requirements, the system of sewerage was enlarged, new and attractive school-houses were constructed, and, without any discredit to other mayors, it may be claimed that it happened to him to render more important and lasting service than any other official from the adoption of the city charter, in 1853, to the present time. For his success he must have been largely indebted to the skill acquired during his long and laborious experience in the practical business of his youth and early manhood.

In 1877, unexpectedly, and without solicitation or suggestion from any one, Governor Benjamin F. Prescott and his Council appointed Mr. Kimball as chairman of the board of commissioners to build the new State Prison at Concord, with Messrs. Albert M. Shaw and Alpha J. Pillsbury as his associates. In 1880 the edifice was completed within the limits of the moderate appropriation of two hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars, a model in its design and construction, remarkable for the honesty and cheapness which had characterized the establishment of a penitentiary superior, all things considered, to any prison of other States. No more than just praise was uttered concerning the chairman of the commission, on the ceremony at the opening of the prison, by the speaker of the occasion, one of Concord's most devoted and public-spirited sons, Colonel John H. George, who said,— "It is a matter of further and warm congratulation that its erection has been intrusted to a competent commission, that good judgment and intelligent investigation have characterized the plan; that no corrupt jobbery has polluted its construction, and that for every dollar expended a fair and honest result has been obtained. And in this connection it is but just to say that the fitness and labors of the chairman of the board, especially should receive public recognition. To the successful performance of the duties of his office he brought unusual mechanical skill, and large experience in the construction of public works."

Repeated nominations and elections of any citizen by his friends and neighbors to local offices, not in any way improperly procured, but conferred solely from popular esteem and desire, must be taken to indicate ability and true excellence. Mr. Kimball not only held the elective offices already mentioned, but was, by the most intelligent local constituency in the State, that of Ward 5, Concord, for eleven successive years, from 1861, elected moderator of their meetings, and was elected a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1876, in which he was chair-

1859, of the Concord Free Academy. He was, in November, 1870, elected State Senator by the large constituency comprising within the principal wards in Concord, and, at the meeting of the Legislature, in June, 1871, was, by general consent of his party associates, selected for president of the Senate, in rank the second officer in the State. The duties of this high position he performed creditably, with courtesy and dignity, and to the satisfaction of his fellow-members, as indicated by their unanimous election and their speeches of approval of the 18th of August, which were accompanied by an appropriate testimonial of their goodwill.

Additional trusts reposed in him have been the presidency of the Concord Gas-Light Company; his appointment, by Mr. Chief Justice Doe, as one of the trustees of the Manchester and Keene Railroad; the treasurerships of the New Hampshire Bible Society and the Orphans' Home; the settlement and management of many estates of persons deceased, and of beneficiaries of all kinds, the amounts now in his care reaching several hundred thousand dollars. The trusted citizen, banker and friend, to whom is so freely committed the property of widows and orphans, can possess no higher evidence of integrity and worth.

In person, Mr. Kimball is tall, erect and of commanding presence, well preserved at the age of sixty-four, in perfect health, and with good prospects for longevity. His modes of life are regular, and he is a total abstainer, through conviction and habit. While firm and decided in his views, he is genial and courteous in personal intercourse. His mind has been well cultivated. He is a careful reader, with an inclination for genealogical and historical research, and he writes and speaks with precision and effect. He is faithful in every relation of life, public and domestic, and is valued and beloved by his neighbors and friends.

In 1843 he joined the Congregational Church in Bosworth, has continued his connection with that denomination and is now a member of the South Congregational Church in Concord. He is free from bigotry, pretense and intolerance, is a just and good man, serving his God faithfully according to the light he possesses, performing his every duty and bearing his every burden without complaint.

In politics, Mr. Kimball has had no violent changes to make. Acquiring Whig principles from his father and grandfather, the latter being a great admirer of Governor John Taylor Gilman, he became a Republican in 1856, and has always been an active, trusted and honored member of his party, serving since 1863, twenty years, as treasurer of the Republican State Committee.

May 27, 1846, at the age of twenty-five, Mr. Kimball married Maria H. Phillips, of Rupert, Vt. Their only child, Clara Maria, born March 29, 1848, married, June 14, 1873, Mr. Augustine R. Ayers, a successful merchant in Concord. Six children—Ruth Annes, John Kimball, Helen McGregor, Joseph Sherman, Josiah Phillips and Augustine Haines—have been born to them. All are now living except Joseph Sherman and Josiah Phillips.

Mr. Kimball has lived during an eventful period in the history of his country and the world, and has seen wonderful changes in human affairs. Commencing life during the first quarter of the century, he has already almost reached the middle of the last quarter and may hope to survive to its end. He began in the poor and primitive days of the republic; he now sees it abounding in wealth and the means of luxurious living. Marvelous progress has been made under his eyes in all forms of human knowledge and in all departments of human endeavor. When, in 1834, he and his widowed mother took counsel together how to meet the necessities of life for themselves and the dependent sister and brother, they saw no telegraphs, railroads, steamships nor power printing-presses. Before that mother died, in 1874, these four wonderful inventions alone had revolutionized all civilized life. Progress in humanity has been no less striking. As late, even, as 1852 the public conscience was proved to be dead concerning American chattel slavery, which was a most foul stain on the nation's honor, whose extinction almost no man dared predict or hope for; but another decade saw slavery annihilated, and freedom universal in America. Fortunately, Mr. Kimball has had nothing to unlearn or retract of opinions on slavery. He has witnessed and participated in the whole anti-slavery struggle, and now, in the fulness of his manhood, rejoices that he can enjoy the worldly prosperity with which he has been blessed, as the citizen of a nation exalted by righteousness and sustained and guided by the highest national honor.

BENJAMIN A. KIMBALL.

The subject of this sketch received his preparatory education at the High School in Concord, and subsequently at a school in Derry under the special instructions of Prof. Hildreth (who at that time was regarded as one of the ablest teachers in the State). He entered the Chandler Scientific Department of Dartmouth College at the opening of that department of the college, in 1851, to fit himself for his chosen profession of mechanical engineer. He acquitted himself with credit in all the branches prescribed in the course of study, and was especially excellent in mathematics and draughting. His class was small, but it was composed of men who entered college with the purpose of making the most of themselves, and they worked with a will. He graduated with honor, July 27, 1854, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science.

An incident, known to but few now living, occurred at the time of his graduation which revealed the spirit and purpose of his class.

Chas. A. Pillsbury

Considering the smallness of the number that was to graduate, the trustees thought the department could not well afford to have a steel plate engraved for the diploma at that time. From this decision the class appealed through its principal instructor,—then, as always, a firm friend of the department,—John S. Woodman, to the board of visitors, John A. Dixwell and Francis B. Hayes. The visitors saw at once that the class, having completed the prescribed course, could demand all they claimed, and that to withhold it might injure the department, and they said to Prof. Woodman: "This department shall not be behind other departments of the college in honoring its graduates."

The diplomas were consequently ordered and executed with a pen on parchment by N. D. Gould, of Harvard College, and were fine specimens of artistic penmanship and faithful testimonials of the justice then secured and since maintained for the Chandler Department by the board of visitors.

August 1, 1854, Mr. Kimball entered the employ of the Concord Railroad as draughtsman and machinist, and was promoted, April 1, 1856, to be foreman of the locomotive department. January 1, 1858, he succeeded his brother as master-mechanic at the age of twenty-six years. A suggestion was made to the directors as to the propriety of appointing him, on account of his age and limited practical experience, to an office involving responsibilities so important, but from their knowledge of him in his previous employment by the company they did not hesitate to make it, and by his untiring energy and application he soon proved his fitness for the position and continued successfully to occupy it until April 1, 1865, when he resigned. At this time he became a member of the firm of Ford & Kimball, manufacturers of car-wheels, etc., which business is still successfully carried on by them. In 1870 he was elected a member of the House of Representatives from Ward 6, Concord, but declined a re-election in 1871.

He was a member of a special committee appointed by the City Council of Concord, in 1871, to procure plans and specifications for an aqueduct to bring a supply of water from Long Pond, and, in January following, was appointed a member of the Board of Water Commissioners to construct the works substantially upon the plan and under the ordinance submitted by said committee. He continued an active member of the board for six years and was its president for three years. In 1876 he was elected a member of the Constitutional Convention to revise the Constitution of the State, and proved an efficient and valuable member of that assembly.

He has been connected with the banking interests of the city for many years. He was trustee and president of the Concord Savings-Bank until compelled to resign by ill health, and is a trustee of the Merrimack County Savings-Bank at this time. He has been a director in the Mechanics' National Bank from its organization, and is now its president. January 11, 1879, he was elected to fill the vacancy in the board of directors of the Concord Railroad caused by the death of Hon. Onslow Stearns, and has since been closely connected with its system of roads. In November, 1884, he was chosen counselor for the Second District and accepted the office June 1, 1885.

This is the brief, but honorable record of one whose life has been devoted to industries and enterprises which are the source of general prosperity. He has not coveted official stations, but, quietly mastering the principles and details of his business, has advanced by the force of personal merit to stations of large public responsibility, and has always proved equal to the demands which have been made upon him. His mind naturally and easily grasps the reasons of things, and hence he is thoroughly practical in his work and affairs. He is a good example of that honorable and valuable class of our citizens whose natural abilities, cultivated and improved by study and practical experience, make them successful in business for themselves and influential and useful members of society in the communities in which they live.

In an age distinguished for mechanical skill and the application of force to the development of material resources, men of the quality of Mr. Kimball are indispensable and appreciated. Metaphysicians and theorists are relegated to seclusion, and practical thinkers and doers are advanced to leadership. The right of the subject of this sketch to a foremost place in this class has been clearly recognized and his place assigned at the front in the line of social progress. The people have learned that he is not one "To eizen fortune,

And be honorable without the stamp of merit."

HON. GEORGE A. PILSBURY.¹

The prosperity of the great West, a subject almost too vast for comprehension, certainly too extensive to be treated of in these pages, is one in which all sections of the country must, necessarily, be deeply concerned. Particularly is the proposition true as regards New England, for there are binding ties of relationship and identities of interest that render separation or indifference upon the part of the latter impossible. New England has claimed, justly, it is conceded, to have contributed very largely in men and money to build up the West to its present flourishing condition, but certainly no State has done more, proportionately, towards accomplishing this, and than New Hampshire. National or sectional prosperity is as much due to the energy and enterprise of men as to capital, and to-day, there is not a State in the wide West that does not show the fruits of the pluck and per-everance of New Hampshire men. A glorious inheritance was the energy, industry and self-reliance which seem to have been transmitted from the settlers of the Granite State to their descendants; for it is to these traits of character that the State owes the credit reflected upon her by the success of her sons. Well may the State regard with pride the roll of names that have achieved distinction abroad, for it is as bright as a constellation, and, as a New Hampshire statesman and scholar recently said, "as long as the milky way." Not alone in literature, the professions and politics, but in industrial pursuits, and, in fact, all the walks in life, have they become distinguished. Hardly a village in the commonwealth but boasts of some representative abroad who has won honor and distinction. High in the list of honored names, in this and other States, is that of Pillsbury, and in the subjoined it is attempted to sketch, briefly, the life of a member of this family, who recently left New Hampshire to make his home in Minnesota. Brief and unsatisfactory, in point of detail, as it is rendered by limited space, the writer feels assured that the facts will be read with interest by the many friends of the gentleman mentioned.

¹By Allan H. Robinson.

The branch of the family to which this sketch directly relates has been traced back to William Pillsbury (sometimes spelled Pillsberry and Pillsborough), who was born in the county of Essex, in England, in 1615. He came to Dorchester, in the colony of Massachusetts Bay, in 1649, where he married Dorothy Crosby. In 1651 he settled on a farm in Newbury, Mass. (now a part of Newburyport). The same property has remained in possession of the Pillsbury family from 1651 to the present time. In England the coat-of-arms of the Pillsbury family is described in heraldic terms thus: "Per fesse sable and azure on an eagle displayed argent; three griffins' heads erased of the second." Crest, an esquire's helmet; motto: "Labar Omnia Vincit." William Pillsbury died at Newbury, June 19, 1686, leaving ten children,—seven sons and three daughters. Moses Pillsbury, second son of William and Dorothy (Crosby) Pillsbury, was born in Dorchester, Mass., and in 1668 married Mrs. Susanna Whipple, of Newbury. To them was born six children. Caleb, second son of Moses and Susanna, was born in Newbury in 1681, and married Sarah (Morse), in 1703. Caleb, son of Caleb and Sarah (Morse) Pillsbury, was born in Newbury, January 26, 1717; he married Sarah Kimball, of Amesbury, Mass., July, 1742; to them were born seven children. Caleb Pillsbury, Jr., was, for several years, and at the time of his death, a member of the Massachusetts General Court. Micajah, fourth son of Caleb, Jr., and Sarah Kimball, was born in Amesbury, Mass., May 22, 1761, and in 1781 married Sarah Sargent, of Amesbury. Sarah Sargent was born in 1763. To them were born eight children,—four sons and four daughters. Micajah Pillsbury and family moved from Amesbury, Mass., to Sutton, N. H., in February, 1795, where he remained until his death, in 1802, occupying various offices of town trust. His wife survived him several years. Stephen, the oldest son, was a Baptist clergyman; the other brothers, including John, the father of the subject of this sketch, were all magistrates of the town of Sutton, N. H.

John Pillsbury, who died in Sutton in 1856, aged sixty-seven years, was a prominent man in that town, having held the office of representative and selectman, and filled other positions, always acceptably. He held a captain's commission in the militia, and was known as Captain Pillsbury. On the 2d of April, 1811, he married Susan, youngest daughter of Benjamin Wadleigh, of Sutton, who settled in that town in 1771. She was born March 23, 1793, and died in 1877, at the age of eighty-four years. She was a descendant of Captain Thomas Wadleigh, of Exeter, a son of Robert Wadleigh, of the same place, who was a member of the Provincial Legislature of Massachusetts.

The maternal grandmother of the Pillsburys was a daughter of Ebenezer Kezar, whose father hid the girl he afterwards married under a pile of boards at the time of Mrs. Duston's capture in Haverhill, Mass., in 1697. Ebenezer Kezar, the great-grandfather, lived in Rowley, Mass., in 1752, where he was a blacksmith, shoemaker, tavern-keeper, wig-maker and dealer in earthenware and other merchandise. The old wig-box and implements, which have been in disuse for more than a century, are now in the town. Ebenezer is said to have been a relative of "Cobler Keyser," referred to in one of Whittier's poems as possessing the "magic stone." He was of German origin, probably. In Harriman's "History of Warner," Mr. Kezar is spoken of as being moderator of a meeting held in that town, in 1778, for the choice of representatives from the classed towns of Fishersfield, Ferrystown, New Britain and Warner. He called the first meeting of Sutton, after its incorporation, in 1784, and presided over it. He went to Sutton in 1772, and worked as blacksmith, shoemaker, farmer and trapper. The first bridge in Sutton of which there is any record was built by him. His descendants, who are numerous there and elsewhere, own most of the pond in the town mentioned, which bears his name, and nearly a thousand acres of land in its vicinity, extending to and embracing the upper falls and mills above Mill village.

Both John and Sarah Pillsbury were professors of religion, and lived exemplary lives. They had four sons and one daughter,—viz.: Simon Wadleigh Pillsbury, born at Sutton, June 22, 1812; George Alfred, born at Sutton, August 29, 1816; Dolly W., born at Sutton, September 6, 1818; John Sargent, born at Sutton, July 29, 1827; Benjamin Franklin, born at Sutton, March 29, 1831.

All the brothers had a good common-school education. Simon W., the oldest, was a remarkable young man, both physically and mentally. He was a superior scholar, being considered one of the best mathematicians in the State at the time of his death, which occurred in January, 1836, and which was superinduced by close application to study. When attacked by the sickness that caused his death, he was prepared to enter college two years in advance. He gave the first public lecture on temperance in an old school-house in Sutton, it being considered, fifty years ago, sacrilegious to use the meeting-house for such a purpose. His success was most marked, for nearly every sober man was ready to sign the pledge.

At the age of sixteen, John Sargent Pillsbury went to Warner as a clerk for his brother, George Alfred, who was then engaged in business in that place. He remained there till about the year 1848, when he entered into a business partnership with Hon. Walter Harriman in the same town. He was subsequently in trade at East Andover and Concord. In the year 1854 he visited the West, spending nearly a year in Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota. He finally established his home at the Falls of St. Anthony, and at once went into the hardware trade, and by his energy and honorable dealing he succeeded in building up the largest hardware trade in the State. He took an active interest in the prosperity of the then Territory of Minnesota and the city of his adoption. From 1863 to 1875 he served as Senator from his district, notwithstanding the fact that the politics of a majority of the district did not accord with his. In 1875 he was elected Governor of the State, was re-elected in 1877 and again in 1879.

The elections in Minnesota occur biennially, and this is the only instance in which a person has been elected to the office of Governor for a third term.

Dolly W. Pillsbury married Enoch P. Cummings, and their son, Charles P. Cummings, was recently sergeant-at-arms of the New Hampshire House of Representatives.

Benjamin F. Pillsbury remained in his native town till 1878, when he removed to Granite Falls, Minn., where he is conducting an extensive business in building and dealing in real estate and lumber.

During his residence in Sutton he filled many offices of trust and responsibility. He was selectman and town treasurer quite frequently, and in 1877-78 he was a Representative to the General Court. He has always been an active business man, and is a highly-respected citizen in his adopted home.

The subject of this sketch, George Alfred Pillsbury, a son of John and Susan (Wadleigh) Pillsbury, was born in Sutton, Merrimack County, N. H., on the 29th of August, 1816. He received a thorough common-school education in his native town, and being of an active temperament, manifested a desire to enter business at an early age. Accordingly, at the age of eighteen years, he went to Boston and obtained employment as a clerk with Job Davis, who was doing business at that time as a grocer and fruit-dealer under the Boylston Market. He remained in Boston but little more than a year, when he returned to Sutton, and engaged in the manufacture of stoves and sheet-ironware in company with his cousin, John C. Pillsbury. He continued there for a few years, doing an extensive business.

On the 1st of February, 1840, Mr. Pillsbury went to Warner as a clerk in the store of John H. Pearson, in which capacity he served till July of the same year, when he purchased the business; and from that time, through nearly eight years, he was actively engaged, either on his own account or in partnership with others. His partners during this time were Henry Woodman and H. D. Robertson.

In the spring of 1848 he went into a wholesale dry-goods house in Boston, and in 1849, having leased the store of Ira Harvey, in Warner, and bought his stock of goods, he returned to that town and engaged in business, where he remained till the spring of 1851, when he sold back his interest to Mr. Harvey, and went out of mercantile business entirely.

In 1844 he was appointed postmaster at Warner, and held the office till 1849, there being at that time but one office in the town. In 1847 he served the town as selectman, in 1849 as selectman and town treasurer, and in the years 1850 and 1851 he was elected Representative to the General Court.

During the session of 1851 Merrimack County decided to build a new jail at Concord, the old one at Hopkinton having become dilapidated and unfit for use. The convention appointed Mr. Pillsbury chairman of a committee with full authority to purchase lands, perfect plans and erect the building. The site selected by the committee was that occupied by the jail in present use. This lot contained ten acres. The general superintendence is given to Mr. Pillsbury by the other members of the committee, and he devoted his whole time to the work, which was not completed till the spring of 1852. At the time of its erection it was considered one of the best buildings of its kind in the State, and the thoroughness of its construction is shown by the fact that now, after twenty-eight years of service, it will compare very favorably with other like institutions.

In November, 1851, Mr. Pillsbury received from the Concord Railroad corporation an appointment as purchasing agent for the road, and entered upon the duties of the position in December of the same year, having, meantime, moved his family to Concord. He occupied this position continuously until July, 1875, a period of nearly twenty-four years. During his administration of the office, which was always most satisfactory, his purchases amounted to more than three millions of dollars, and he settled more cases of claims against the road for personal injury, resulting from accident and fire, than all other officers combined. In all his long term of office his relations with the officers of the road were of the most agreeable character; no fault was ever found or complaint made of his transactions by the management.

During a residence of nearly twenty-seven years in Concord Mr. Pillsbury was called upon to fill many important positions of honor and trust, and he did much toward building up and beautifying the city. He was one of the committee appointed by Union School District to build the High School building and several other school buildings that now stand monuments of credit to the enterprise of our people. He was interested in the erection of several of the handsome business blocks upon Main Street, and several fine residences in the city were built by him.

In 1864, Mr. Pillsbury, with others, organized and put into operation the First National Bank of Concord. He was elected a member of the first board of directors, and in 1866 became its president, and continued in that office until his departure from the State. He was also instrumental, more than any other person, in securing the charter and getting into operation the National Savings-Bank, in 1867. He was the first president of this institution and held the position till 1874, when he resigned. During his connection with the First National Bank that institution became, in proportion to its capital stock, the strongest of any bank in the State, and its standing is equally good to-day. Up to December, 1873, when the treasurer was discovered to be a defaulter to a large amount, the National Savings-Bank was one of the most prosperous institutions of its kind in the State; but the defalcation, coupled with a general crash in business, necessitated its closing up. During the first year of its existence it received on deposit nearly seven hundred thousand dollars, and at the time of the defalcation of its treasurer it had nearly one million six hundred thousand dollars on deposit; its total deposits during the first five years of its existence, up to the time mentioned, amounted to more than three millions of dollars. The bank eventually paid a large percentage of its indebtedness.

While a resident of Concord, Mr. Pillsbury was identified with most of the benevolent and charitable institutions of the day, and he was always ready to assist, by his advice and contributions, all organizations that had for their object the relief of the unfortunate and suffering. He was ever a liberal supporter of all moral and religious enterprises.

To his generosity is the city of Concord indebted for the fine bell which hangs in the tower of the Board of Trade building, and for this donation he was the recipient of a vote of thanks from the City Council.

The large, handsome organ in the First Baptist Church was a gift from Mr. Pillsbury and his son, Charles A., both gentlemen being at the time members of that church.

He was actively engaged in instituting the Centennial Home for the Aged, in Concord, made large contributions to aid in putting it into operation and was a member of the board of its trustees. He also contributed largely to the Orphans' Home, in Franklin, and was one of its trustees from the time of its establishment till he left the State. Mr. Pillsbury was, for several years, a member of the City Council of Concord; was elected mayor in 1876, and re-elected the following year. During the years 1871-72 he represented Ward Five in the Legislature, and in the latter year was made chairman of the special committee on the apportionment of public taxes.

In 1876 the Concord City Council appointed him chairman of a committee of three, to appraise all of the real estate in the city for the purposes of taxation, and in the discharge of the duties thus devolving upon him he personally visited every residence within the limits of the city. The position is a very responsible one, requiring the exercise of sound judgment and great patience, and the report of the committee gave very general satisfaction.

In the spring of 1878 he determined to leave Concord and take up his residence in Minneapolis, Minn., where, with his two sons and brother, he was extensively engaged in the manufacture of flour. Probably no person ever left the city who received so many expressions of regret as Mr. Pillsbury. Complimentary resolutions were unanimously passed by both branches of the city government and by the First National Bank, the latter testifying strongly to his integrity, honesty and superior business qualities. Resolutions passed by the First Baptist Church and Society were ordered to be entered upon the records of each organization. The Webster Club, composed of fifty prominent business men of Concord, passed a series of resolutions regretting his departure from the State. A similar testimonial was also presented to Mr. Pillsbury, which was subscribed to by more than three hundred of the leading professional and business men of the city, among whom were all the ex-mayors then living, all the clergymen, all the members of both branches of the city government, all of the bank presidents and officers, twenty-six lawyers, twenty physicians and nearly all the business men in the city. On the eve of their departure Mr. and Mrs. Pillsbury were presented with an elegant bronze statuette of Mozart. Such tributes, however worthily bestowed, could but afford great gratification to the recipient, showing as they did the great esteem in which he was held by his fellow-citizens.

Mr. Pillsbury is now very pleasantly located in the beautiful city of Minneapolis, having built one of the most elegant residences in the city, and during the short time that he has been there he has frequently been called upon to fill places of honor and trust.

Mr. Pillsbury is a member of the firm of Charles A. Pillsbury & Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., the largest flour manufacturing firm in the world. This firm have in operation three mills, with a capacity of nine thousand barrels of flour per day. One of these mills has a daily capacity of six thousand barrels, and manufactures more flour each day than any other two mills on the globe. The three mills grind each day forty-four thousand bushels of wheat, which is equal to the production of about three thousand acres of land. The annual consumption of these mills is eleven million bushels of wheat, which is equal to the production of one million acres of land. It requires about two hundred cars each day to take wheat into, and flour and offal out of these mills. The firm has a world-wide reputation as honorable and fair-dealing men, and their brands of flour are well known in all the markets of the world.

E. D. Nutt

The following extract, taken from the January, 1885, number of The Northwest, a popular monthly magazine published at St. Paul, Minn., will perhaps best show the estimation in which the subject of this article and the Pillsbury family are held in Minneapolis and in the State of Minnesota:

"THE MAYOR OF THE CITY.—More than a year ago, the writer said in the columns of The Northwest, that if any man in Minneapolis was asked to whom the city chiefly owed its prosperity, there would be no hesitation in his answer—the Pillsburys! Since then the people of Minneapolis have had no cause to change their opinions, while last spring they gave a somewhat emphatic utterance to them by electing one of the members of this remarkable family—the Hon. George Alfred Pillsbury—to the mayoralty of the city by an overwhelming vote. A liking for hard work and a belief in its virtues seem to have been early rooted in the Pillsbury family, for, in England, more than two centuries and a half ago, they bore for their motto the words 'Labor Omnia Vincit.' But in all the generations of Pillsburys since then who have lived and worked from English Essex to Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Minnesota, it may be doubted whether any one of them has better deserved to bear the motto than the present mayor of Minneapolis. It was Lord Brougham who was advised by a friend to 'confine himself, if possible, to the work of five ordinary men;' but his tail-loring lordship himself might have been envious of the amount of downright hard work which Mr. Pillsbury has got through in his life. Setting his early life aside for the present, the mayor has only been in Minneapolis six years as yet. During that time he has been president of the Minneapolis Board of Trade, of the City Council, of the Homeopathic Hospital and the Minneapolis Free Dispensary; and is still president of the Chamber of Commerce, of the Pillsbury & Hulbert Elevator Company, of the Board of Water-Works, of the St. Paul and Minneapolis Baptist Union and the Minnesota Baptist State Convention; vice-president of the Minnesota Loan and Trust Company; member of the Board of Park Commissioners; director of the Northwestern National Bank, the Manufacturers' National Bank, the Minneapolis Elevator Company and a trustee of institutions innumerable. All this besides mayor of the city! 'Here's a small trifle of work! Eleven trusteeships and nine presidencies is a simple coming-in for one man.' And in spite of the diversity of his duties, there has not been one post among all those which he has filled wherein he has failed to win the heartiest respect and approbation of all who have been brought into connection with him. The more difficult kinds of work he has to do, the more he appears to be able to give his undivided attention to each one.

"Mr. Pillsbury has shown a capacity, almost a genius, for hard and honest work almost incomprehensible to most men. This alone would compel the respect of his fellow-citizens; but by his generosity, his warm-heartedness and unobtrusive charity, he has also won their affection. No stranger can read his public record without admiring the man who could live such a life; but it is a stronger tribute to his character that no acquaintance can see the details of his private life without his admiration growing to something warmer. Mr. Pillsbury is yet only sixty-eight years of age, and it is safe to predict that Minneapolis will yet be grateful to him for much good work done for her and many benefits received at his hands."

Mr. Pillsbury married Margaret S. Carleton, May 9, 1841. To them were born three children,—Charles

A., born October 3, 1842; Mary Adda, born April 25, 1848; Frederick C., born August 27, 1852. Mary Adda died May 11, 1849.

Both sons are now associated with him in business, and are excellent business men. Charles, the elder son, graduated at Dartmouth College in the class of 1863, and has been a member of the Minnesota State Senate.

George A. Pillsbury is a gentleman of great personal magnetism, genial and affable in manner and possessed of entertaining and attractive conversational powers. Warm-hearted and generous, he was ever ready to respond to calls of distress, not only with good counsel, but with more substantial aids, as many an unpublished charity in Concord will attest. All who approached him were sure of a kindly greeting, and any petition for favors received a patient consideration and a courteous reply. With the young he was very companionable, and with his conservative and liberal views of life, he was able to impart much valuable advice and information. His mind was well disciplined and evenly balanced, and his habits very systematic. He was possessed of sound, practical judgment and great executive ability. Quick to grasp a point he seldom erred in action, and by a faculty of reading character, he seemed always ready to meet any emergency that might arise. In early life he received a thorough business training, and in his dealings with men he was straightforward and liberal. In his enterprises he looked beyond the present, and results seldom disappointed him. In public life his administration of affairs was most satisfactory and able, and won for him the esteem of all with whom he came in contact.

ELIPHALET SIMES NUTTER.

Eliphalet Simes Nutter was born in Barnstead, N. H., November 26, 1819, being the second son of Eliphalet and Lovey (Locke) Nutter. His grandfather, John Nutter, settled in Barnstead in 1767, and served in the Revolution as major of Colonel George Reid's regiment. Major John Nutter's son Eliphalet—father of the subject of this sketch—was a farmer, living in the southeast part of the town, and owning a large amount of real estate. Like his father, he was an influential citizen, prominent in town affairs, and held various offices conferred by the confidence of his townsmen. He was, in his time, the principal trial justice at Barnstead, and, with clear head, pious heart and upright intention, adjusted the controversies of his neighborhood. In 1807 he married Lovey, daughter of James Locke, one of the first settlers of Barnstead. The worthy pair left, at decease, a large family.

Their son, Eliphalet S., spent his boyhood on his father's farm, where he was trained to those habits of industry and thrift which were to characterize so eminently his maturer years. He enjoyed the advantages of the common school, and improved them so well that he became an efficient and acceptable teacher.

He inherited military tastes, and, at the age of eighteen in the year 1837, he received from Governor Isaac Hill his commission as lieutenant of a company, under the militia system of the period, and, in 1839, from Governor John Page, that of captain.

In 1844, he commenced that active business career, in which he still continues, by opening a country store at Barnstead Parade, where he carried on a prosperous trade for eleven years. During eight of these years he was postmaster. In 1855 he moved to Concord, which has ever since been his place of residence. In course of the time since his removal to the capital of the State he has been five years in business in New York City; has owned, for seven years, a leading grocery-store in Lawrence, Mass.; has been engaged five years in the drug-business in Concord, and also has had a store in Boston. He was formerly president of the New Hampshire Central Railroad. He is now (1885) engaged in several important business enterprises: being one of the directors of the Franconia Iron Company, with capital stock of $200,000; a large owner in the Atlantic and Pacific Railway Tunnel Company, Denver, Colorado, capital stock, $7,000,000; president of the New Hampshire Democratic Press Company, capital stock, $25,000; president of The National Railway and Street-Rolling-Stock Company, capital stock, $500,000.

Thrill has not failed to follow wisdom, energy and perseverance in the prosecution of his varied business ventures. He now enjoys the fruitful accumulations of well-directed industry in a home blessed with the presence of a worthy wife, to whom, as Sylvia M. Blanchard, of Lowell, he was united in marriage in 1845. Years ago their happy home was darkened by a great sorrow, when their only child, a lovely daughter, Ada, was, at the age of seventeen, snatched away by death.

Mr. Nutter has found opportunity, amid other engrossing cares, to manifest public spirit in devoting time and effort to assisting in the commemoration of events pertaining both to the history of the State in general and to that of his beloved native town in particular. His patriotism begins where it should—at home. To the erection of the monument in memory of Hannah Duston and her heroic deed of rescue from cruel captivity, on the little island at the mouth of the Contoocook, his generous and untiring exertions were a prominent and essential contribution. Upon his call was held the meeting of the sons and daughters of Barnstead living in Concord which resulted in the reunion held at Phoenix Hotel, February 28, 1878, at which he presided. That reunion paved the way for the Barnstead Reunion, held August 30, 1882, to which he generously contributed, and the published proceedings of which are a valuable contribution to the history of the State.

In the foregoing statements are summarized the leading events, doings and characteristics of a busy and useful life: a life whose fruitage of success is the honorable reward of sagacious, earnest, persevering activity.

CALVIN HOWE.

Calvin Howe was born in Enfield, N. H., March 20, 1806. His boyhood was passed in his native town, from whence, early in life, he went to Kingston, as clerk in a store. He quickly developed a taste for mercantile pursuits, and from this time until his death was identified with the mercantile interests of the community wherein he resided. From Kingston he went to North Barnstead, in the store of Samuel Webster, and later went into trade on his own account at Lower Gilmanton, where he remained several years. He was also agent of the Gilmanton Mills, in what is now Belmont. He removed to Concord in 1855.

Upon his removal to this city he entered the employ of Ward & Humphrey, as book-keeper, which position he occupied until 1862. In that year he engaged in the flour and grain business as a member of the firm of John V. Barron, Dodge & Co., and later of Howe, Moseley & Co., and of John H. Barron, Moseley & Co., retiring from business in July, 1881, with a handsome competency, acquired through long years of faithful devotion to business and upright dealing. He was an excellent financier and business man, of sound judgment, prudent, cautious and reliable, and his advice was much sought after by his fellow-citizens.

Mr. Howe was identified with the banking interests of the city for a long series of years. He was a director in the old Union Bank, also in the National State Capital Bank, and was vice-president of the Loan and Trust Savings-Bank, being one of the finance committee. Although a life-long Democrat, Mr. Howe never sought political honors; he was pre-eminently a domestic man, enjoying home and friends. He was a member of the South Congregational Church, and was one of its most active and generous supporters. July 26, 1836, he united in marriage with Miss Eliza H. Judkins, of Gilmanton, and their family consisted of one son. Mrs. Howe died while they were living in Gilmanton, and the son after Mr. Howe removed to this city. May 29, 1850, he married Mrs. Clara N. Evans, daughter of William Fisk, of Concord, who survives him.

Mr. Howe was an earnest supporter of the movement which resulted in the founding of the Home for the Aged, and was one of the first, if not the first, to offer substantial aid for its establishment. He gave five hundred dollars towards the purchase of the house, and by will bequeathed an additional sum of five hundred dollars to its permanent fund. He was a trustee of the Home from its inception to the day of his death. Quiet and unostentatious in the bestowal of his charities, and an upright business man. Calvin Howe died as he had lived, a consistent Christian and one of Concord's most honored and esteemed citizens. He died August 13, 1882.

William H. Howe

Elijah H. Wright

ELIJAH KNIGHT.

The subject of this sketch—a son of Benjamin and Lucy (Baker) Knight—was born in Hancock, Hillsborough County, N. H., March 13, 1813. (See town history of Hancock.)

His father was a farmer, and Elijah worked at home until eighteen years of age, where the incidents of his boyhood were such as were common to the sons of farmers of that time,—assisting in the farm-work in summer and attending the district school in winter. His educational advantages, in addition to the district school, were one term in the academy at Stoddard and one in Hancock. At the close of his school-life, being of a mechanical turn of mind, he spent two winters at the trade of clock-making, returning in the summer to assist in farm-work. He then taught school two winters,—one in Alstead, N. H., the other in Hancock, his native town, his object mainly being to improve his own mind. Attaining his majority, he went as a journeyman clock-maker to Goffstown, Nashua, Charlestown and Boston, Mass., in each of which places he worked at his trade for some time, during which he became efficient as a clock-maker and also learned to repair watches. In July, 1837, having, by prudence and economy, saved some money, he was prepared to realize, in a small way, the hopes of earlier years, by going into business on his own account as a jeweler, at Amoskeag, a small village on the opposite side of the river to the present site of the city of Manchester. In 1839 he moved across the river to Manchester, at a time when there were only three buildings on Elm Street. Here he remained two years, doing a successful business, and in the fall of 1841, having a touch of the "Western fever," he sold out and took a trip West, but, liking the East better, soon returned to his native State and settled in New Market, went into business, where he remained twelve years, the only jeweler there, and did a prosperous business. He has always continued in this business, has worked diligently and faithfully at it, and, being a good workman, has earned a good living. August 28, 1842, Mr. Knight married Mary Jane, daughter of James and Jerusha (Palmer) Griffin, of Manchester, N. H. From this union there were two children. Mr. Knight was commissioned, by Governor Martin, a justice of the peace, and also was solicited to act as trial justice, but declined to act in the petty disputes between his townsmen. He was recommissioned and held the office for ten or more years. He had the honor of being chosen a member of the convention which assembled in Concord, December, 1850, to revise the constitution of the State. He also held a commission of major in the New Hampshire State militia. The life of Mr. Knight, while in New Market, was a diligent and peaceful one, and he enjoyed the confidence and respect of the community. Of robust and rugged constitution and of temperate habits, Mr. Knight has always had good health, and is particularly blessed with a happy disposition. Desiring to be nearer the old friends and acquaintances of himself and wife, he sold out his business in New Market in 1854 and moved to Concord, N. H., where he purchased a business which he has carried on successfully for thirty-one years in one location, and thoroughly enjoyed life while amassing a very comfortable property and maintaining a happy home. Mr. Knight has always been just, open and frank in his dealings with all, maintaining an untarnished reputation. He has always been a staunch Democrat, and has ever taken an active interest in political affairs, always anxious that right principles should triumph. He has been the candidate of his party for various offices since coming to Concord; but the party being in the minority he was never elected. He has been a close observer of men and events, both in public and private life, keeping well informed of current events. He has formed his own opinions and is always ready to maintain them by argument. He was brought up under the teachings of the Presbyterian faith and has always attended worship with that church. In 1841 he became a member of the fraternity of Odd-Fellows, and was prominent in the order, holding all the various offices in the subordinate lodge and encampment. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity, having taken the degrees to that of Royal Arch Mason. He is a good citizen, social and genial, possessing sound qualities of mind and heart, and is truly one of nature's noblemen, and this modest sketch pays but a faint tribute to the real worth of the man as a kind neighbor, a valued citizen of sound judgment, having the best interests of the community at heart and blessed with an extended circle of appreciative friends.

DANIEL HOLDEN.¹

Daniel Holden, the subject of this brief sketch, was the son of Asa and Nancy (Wyman) Holden, and was born in Billerica, Mass., April 20, 1809. Being one of a family of nine children, he went away from home at the tender age of nine, as was the custom in those days, to work for Dr. Sylvanus Plympton, of Woburn, Mass. Up to that time he had been to the district school regularly for several years, but, after leaving home, was only allowed to attend during the winter terms, until he was thirteen, which finished the meagre education then furnished to boys who had to earn their own living. Harsh treatment and scanty fare were the fate of such youth, and there was no exception in this case; indeed, so utterly did the boy despise the position which he held in the venerable doctor's family, that, when thirteen years old, he ran away to his home, and no amount of persuasion could induce him to return and finish out the period which had been agreed upon for him to stay. After this he was employed for several years by various farmers in his native place. Having a great desire to own a farm, he came to the conclusion that the easiest manner in which to obtain the money necessary therefor would be by working in a mill; so, with the intention of returning to agricultural pursuits very speedily, he again left his home, being at this time twenty years old, and began work in the flannel mill of H. G. Howe, in Belvidere, Tewksbury (now a part of Lowell, Mass.), May 19, 1829.

¹ Written by a friend.

He engaged to serve as watchman for one year, at eight dollars per month and board, but, proving very faithful at his task, his pay was increased to twelve dollars per month for the last half of the year, without any solicitation on his part.

He soon became familiar with the various phases of the woollen business, and three years after coming to Belvidere, he engaged to run the mill by contract. In 1837, having been in Belvidere eight years, he was employed by the Chelmsford Company as superintendent of their mill in Dracont, which place is also a part of Lowell at the present time.

The young man had apparently forgotten his old-time ardor for agriculture, as he remained in Dracont until January 1, 1847, where he conducted a very successful business for nearly ten years. Severing his connection with the Chelmsford Company at this time, he removed to West Concord, N. H., and began the manufacture of woollen goods, in company with an older brother, Benjamin F. Holden, which partnership continued twenty-seven years, until the death of the latter, November 29, 1874. A joint-stock company or corporation was then formed under the name of Concord Manufacturing Company, of which Daniel Holden was elected treasurer and general agent, which position he holds at the present date (1885).

In the autumn of 1853, Mr. Holden was induced to take the superintendence of the Saxonville Mills, in Frammingham, Mass., where he remained as agent for three years, returning in the autumn of 1856 to Concord, his interest there and business connections with his brother having remained the same during his absence. In the early years of their business they manufactured all grades of blankets in addition to various styles of flannels. For a number of years they also did quite a business in wool hosiery; but, for the past twenty years, the production of the mills has been confined almost exclusively to a variety of all wool flannels.

Mr. Holden has never had any political aspirations whatever, but has faithfully executed every duty which has devolved upon him. He has served in most of the minor ward offices, and represented Ward Three in the Board of Aldermen of Concord in 1874, and in the Legislature in 1865, 1866 and 1875.

Mr. Holden has been twice married,—in 1834, to Miss Sarah Haynes, who died in 1843, leaving four children; in 1841, to Roxanna Haynes, who has had seven children, making in all a family of eleven children, ten of whom grew to manhood and womanhood. The two wives were sisters, and daughters of Reuben Haynes, a successful farmer of Sudbury, Mass.

Mr. Holden has seven children now living,—two daughters and five sons. Four of the latter are engaged in the same business as their father,—one in Gaysville, Vt., another in Lowell, Mass., and the two youngest in West Concord.

Although Mr. Holden's educational advantages were very limited in his youth, yet an exceeding desire for knowledge has made him a great reader and has rendered him familiar with almost every subject of interest at the present time. His business has required so much energy and application that, until these later years, he has taken very little time for rest or travel.

His life has been useful and honorable and full of activity, and if we have seemed to lack in speaking words in his praise, it is not because he deserves them less than others, but dislikes them more.

WILLIAM ABBOTT.

William Abbott was born in Andover, Mass., September 7, 1801. He was named for his father, the late William Abbott, who removed from Andover, when his son William was nine years of age, to Concord, N. H., having purchased the farm of Joseph Carter at the old iron-works, in the southwest part of the town. On this farm William, Sr., who died in 1856, spent his days as an honest and thrifty tiller of the soil, and here William lived till he arrived at about the age of twenty-one. No pleasanter spot than this can be found in all the region, and it was here that the poet, Nathaniel H. Carter, son of Joseph Carter, spent his youthful days, and here, it is understood, he was born in 1787. Through this farm runs the Turkey River, and the lines of our poet, written on one of his pilgrimages to his old home, have cast about the place a peculiar charm,—

"Had I had again my native stream,
Some of my boyhood's earliest dream;
With solitary step one more
I trod thy wild and sylvan shore

"What art no lofty classic name
Gave to thy peaceful waters fame,
Still on thy rural haunts impart
A solace to this saddened heart."

William Abbott, Sr., married Rebecca Bailey in 1801, who died in 1863. Besides William they had four children,—Isaac, born in 1803, died 1859; Rebecca, born in 1806, died 1873; Moses B., born in 1815, died 1876; and Phebe E., wife of the late Joseph S. Lund, who was born in 1817, died 1875.

Samuel Hadden

William Abbott

William Abbott, the subject of this sketch, at the age of twenty-one, was employed by the Londonderry Turnpike Company in the construction of a turnpike, for a period of six months, when he went to Billerica, Mass., and learned the carriage manufacturing business. He remained there engaged in this business for three years. He then returned to Concord, and shortly thereafter purchased a farm of the late Albert Ordway, married Desdemonia Fisk Watkins, of Warner, N. H., and settled down in life. As an extensive and industrious farmer Mr. Abbott "kept the even tenor of his way" till within a few years, when, feeling compelled by reason of failing health to retire from active pursuits, he purchased a pleasant home on South Street, in the city proper, where he now resides.

Mr. Abbott has ever been known as a most worthy citizen, as one whose course in life has been that of an honest and upright man. He has been noted for his generosity, and has often contributed to many a worthy cause. He gave quite a large sum to the North Church in Concord for the purpose of building a chapel, which has been completed, and bears the name of "The Abbott Memorial Chapel."

A great deer-chase occurred in Mr. Abbott's early days, when he was about fifteen years old, which has often been related and should be mentioned here. A deer appeared within the limits of the town, and a large party of young men was immediately in hot pursuit. The deer was tracked to what is now known as "Horse Hill Bridge," and from there into the great "swamp woods," as that region through which now runs the Bog road was then called. Mr. Abbott, catching a glimpse of the deer through the tangled bushes, blazed away with his flint-lock, and the deer fell dead. It was dragged home, dressed and three quarters were divided among the crowd and cooked at the farm of Moses Carter. The other quarter was exchanged for West India rum. At this feast people gathered from far and near, and at the Carter homestead there were heard the "sounds of revelry by night."

Mr. Abbott's first wife died in 1867, and he has since been twice married. His second wife was Mrs. Betsy Jones Davis, of Warner, N. H., who died in 1876, and his present wife was Mrs. Vesta Morrison Dolby, of Pembroke, N. H., widow of the late Albert T. Dolby.

Mr. Abbott has no children, and with his death this branch of the Abbott family will become extinct.

GEORGE A. CUMMINGS.¹

Much has been said and written of the success of men who were born in affluence, who, by their careful management and good judgment, have retained the fortunes left them by their kindred. Such men are entitled to much praise; but if they should receive the approval of their fellow-men, how much more should those who started life with nothing for a capital but a brave heart, an honest purpose and a strong determination to overcome all obstacles in their pathway to success in life! The subject of this sketch is among the latter class.

George A. Cummings is the fourth son of Alvah and Polly (Grout) Cummings, born in Acworth, N. H., June 13, 1833. His grandfather, Rev. David Cummings, a descendant from Scotch ancestry, was born in Swanzy, N. H., February 29, 1775; moved to Acworth in 1814; was a Baptist preacher, well versed in Scriptural knowledge, and an earnest advocate of his chosen calling. His maternal grandfather, Colonel Ebenezer Grout, was born in Watertown, Mass., and moved to Acworth in 1782. The family were noted for their military fame. He was colonel of his regiment in the State militia, his brother William was an officer in the War of the Revolution, and his son Benjamin was an officer in the War of 1812. Colonel Grout also held many offices of trust and responsibility in his town, having been elected several times to the Legislature. He was one of the pioneer settlers of Acworth, making his way through the wilderness by the aid of marked trees.

He was a man of great ability and much respected by his fellow-townsmen, and they named that part of the town where he settled "Grout Hill." Alvah Cummings, father of the subject of this sketch, was born in Sullivan, N. H., January 22, 1799. He moved with his father to Acworth in 1814, where, in 1825, he married Polly Grout, daughter of Colonel Ebenezer Grout, and settled in that part of Acworth called Grout Hill, and engaged in farming, and they lived together thirty-six years. His wife died in 1866, having reared a family of eight children, five boys and three girls,—Dr. A. R. Cummings, Claremont; Dr. E. G. Cummings, Concord; Oscar Cummings (deceased); George A.; Mrs. Mary J. Young, Concord; Mrs. Sally Ann Young, Acworth; Mrs. Laura Smith, Acworth; and Milton D. Cummings, Concord, each of whom have been successful in life and blessed with comfortable homes.

Alvah Cummings was a man of strong and vigorous constitution, and, with his prudent and faithful wife, succeeded in securing and maintaining a comfortable home for themselves and their large family, and he continued to manage his entire farming business until about two years ago, being now eighty-seven years old, hale and hearty.

George A. Cummings' youth was spent at the old homestead, and the active duties of farm-life did much to strengthen and mature him for the struggles of future years. He remained at home until twenty years of age, enjoying the advantages of the district school, and subsequently attended the academy at

¹ By Charles E. Cummings.

South Acworth. While at home he received from his faithful mother early instructions in Christianity, and he is largely indebted to her careful training for thus early forming a Christian character. His father, by precept and example, impressed upon his mind the importance of a life of industry and integrity.

In 1853, at the age of twenty, he left his native town and went to Franklin, N. H., where he and his brother Oscar formed the co-partnership of O. & G. A. Cummings, marble dealers. Then it was that the struggle of life began; having no capital, and his brother but little, it was with great effort that they established themselves in business, being strangers in the place. But by perseverance and strict application to their duties, they succeeded in gradually building up a large business, which exceeded their expectations, and it became necessary to establish a branch at Lebanon, and after conducting the business in these sections of the State and a part of Vermont for several years, it was thought best to establish a central business at Concord, which was done in March, 1861, and they took up their residence there. This was about two weeks prior to the opening of the Civil War, and the financial crisis which came, placing the business of the country in a very trying and critical condition, did not seriously affect them, and they were successful in carrying their business through. In November, 1861, his brother Oscar died. He being a man of sterling business qualifications, his death was a great loss to the business interests of the firm, thus leaving George to assume the responsibilities and conduct the business of the firm. This he succeeded in doing, and the business increased so that in 1868 he took his brother Milton as partner, and the firm was established as Cummings Brothers, and continues the same at the present time. During this period the firm have conducted a large and flourishing business throughout Central New Hampshire and Eastern Vermont, and in this time having opened another branch in Pittsfield.

In 1876 he and his brother, Dr. E. G. Cummings, purchased the Williams estate, on the corner of Main and Freight Streets, and erected a fine brick block, the two lower stories of which, being fitted for the marble and granite business, and being very large and convenient, are the best arranged and furnished memorial marble-works in the State. In 1885 they erected on the adjoining lot one of the finest business blocks in Concord. Cummings Brothers' monumental business has increased and extended throughout New Hampshire and to many towns in the adjoining States. The subject of this sketch has been in the marble business for over thirty-two years, and is one of the oldest in it, there being no firm in existence to-day that was doing business when he began.

Mr. Cummings is a Baptist and a liberal supporter of his church, but he is very charitable to those of other denominations; is a firm believer that a correct life is what makes the Christian more than a belief in any particular creed. He became a member of White Mountain Lodge, I. O. O. F., March 2, 1866; was elected Noble Grand of his lodge in 1870; is a member of Pennacook Encampment, and served as Chief Patriarch. He is a member of the Grand Lodge of New Hampshire, and served as G. W. and D. G. M., and was elected Grand Master in 1875-76, and representative to the Sovereign Grand Lodge in 1877 and '78. During his term as Grand Master he visited every lodge in the State, and the order was very prosperous under his administration. He took a great interest in the work and did as much to extend the order as any member in the State. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity. In 1870 he was elected to the Legislature from Ward 5, Concord, and re-elected in 1871. Serving upon important committees and taking an active part in the debates in the House, he proved himself an able legislator. He served two years as alderman, and in November, 1880, he was elected mayor of Concord by a very large majority, receiving many votes from his political opponents; his term expired Jan., 1882. His administration was an honest and successful one.

Mr. Cummings has been chosen to many places of honor, trust and responsibility, being a trustee of Merrimack County Savings-Bank, a trustee of the Orphans' Home, at Franklin, vice-president of the Odd-Fellows' Home and director of the Concord Horse Railroad. In 1881 the citizens of Concord formed a stock company for the purpose of erecting a building and establishing a shoe manufactory here, and elected Mr. Cummings one of the directors and subsequently he was elected president of the corporation. The building erected is the best in the State, and much credit is due Mr. Cummings for his untiring efforts in making this new industry a success, for it was largely through his efforts that the enterprise was accomplished. In 1854 he married Mary Lizzie, daughter of the late Frederick P. Smith, then of the firm of Smith & Johnson, dry-goods dealers, of Manchester, N. H. Mr. Smith had four sons, each of whom served in the War of the Rebellion, two of whom gave their lives to save their country. Mrs. Cummings is a superior woman, possessing energy and ability, and by her economy and good judgment has performed well her part in assisting her husband in his life-work. Two children have been born to them, a son and daughter. Frank G., the eldest, is a partner in the firm of C. H. Weeks & Co., marble and granite dealers, Haverhill, Mass.,—a young man of integrity and rare business ability, having inherited a share of his father's good judgment and business qualifications. Ida E., who died in 1876, at the age of nineteen years, attended the High School at Concord, and entered the Female Academy at Bradford, Mass., in 1871, and would have graduated in about a year, had her health permitted. She was a young lady of culture and refinement, and of great promise, much beloved, not only by her own family, but by all who knew her, and her early death was mourned by a large circle of friends.

Wm. C. Brown

Joseph Huntworth

George A. Cummings is a self-made man. He began life with nothing and gradually worked his way to a position of respect and influence, and he is trusted and honored by his fellow-citizens. He is a man of noble qualities of mind and heart; no worthy person soliciting aid was ever refused assistance. He is ever encouraging and helping others in the struggle of life. Given to hospitality, guests are always welcome. Now in the prime of manhood, it is hoped that his life may be spared for other fields of usefulness and honor that he may yet be called to fill.

JOSEPH WENTWORTH.

Joseph Wentworth was born in Sandwich, Carroll County, N. H., January 30, 1818, taking his first lesson in life among the hardy sons of that mountainous region. He was educated at the academy at New Hampton in 1835, at Hopkinton in 1836 and South Berwick in 1837. He was a successful merchant thirty years in his native town, not only conducting a general country store, but dealing largely in cattle and horses. He was town clerk, selectman and representative to the State Legislature in 1844-45. He was also a delegate from Sandwich, in 1850, to the convention called to revise the constitution of the State, and from Concord to the Constitutional Convention in 1876. He was aid to Governor John Page, with the rank of colonel, and quartermaster several years in the New Hampshire Horse Guards. Mr. Wentworth was register of deeds for Carroll County two years, high sheriff of same county five years, and was for fifteen years postmaster. He was also for many years president and chief owner of the Carroll County National Bank. In 1870 he gave the old homestead to his son, Paul, and removed to Concord, N. H., where he was elected, two years, assessor of taxes, from Ward 6, and also representative to the State Legislature in 1878. He married, May 7, 1845, Sarah Payson Jones, of Brookline, Mass. They had born, in Sandwich, six children,—two sons and four daughters,—all of whom survive. The two sons, Paul and Moses, entered Harvard College the same day; graduated the same day, in 1868, just one hundred years after the graduation of their great-grandfather from the same college, and from their high rank in their class both were assigned a part on graduation day, the records of the college showing no other such case of two brothers. The daughters are Sarah C., Lydia C., Susan J. and Dolly F. Mr. Wentworth's parents, Paul and Lydia C. Wentworth, were both descendants of Ezekiel, son of Elder William Wentworth. His maternal grandfather, Colonel Amos Cogswell, served through the entire War of the Revolution. His paternal great-grandfather, Judge John Wentworth, presided at the Revolutionary Convention in New Hampshire. His grandfather, John Wentworth, Jr., was a member of the Continental Congress.

ENOCH GERRISH.

The name of Gerrish has been prominently identified with Merrimack County, and particularly with the town of Boseawen. Captain Stephen Gerrish was one of the original proprietors of Boseawen and one of the leading spirits in the new settlement. His eldest son, Colonel Henry Gerrish, was a distinguished citizen and held many positions of trust and responsibility. He was chosen the first grand juror to His Majesty's Superior Court, 1773; delegate to the convention for the choice of members to the First Continental Congress in 1774; the same in 1775; represented the town of Boseawen and Salisbury in the General Court in 1779, and Boseawen in 1790.

He was captain in the militia at the breaking out of the Revolution, and marched with the Minute-Men to Medford upon the receipt of the news of the battle of Lexington. He was lieutenant-colonel of Stickney's regiment at the time of the Bennington campaign, but, having been detailed to other duty, was not in the battle. He was present at the surrender of Burgoyne, being on the left flank of Burgoyne at Battenkill, where he acted as clerk at the sale of some of the plunder taken from the British. The mess-book used on that occasion is still in existence. He often acted as the town's agent during the Revolution, performing the duties assigned him with the same care and energy that characterized the management of his private affairs.

Major Enoch Gerrish, third son of Captain Stephen, was born in Boseawen, June 23, 1759. When eighteen years of age he built his log cabin on the east side of the road now called High Street, where he cleared five acres of land, being part of the homestead where he and his posterity have since resided. He had a love for military parade, as his title indicates. During his life he was chosen to fill the offices of moderator, selectman and representative to the General Court nine years. A man strictly religious, he joined Dr. Wood's church in 1781, and was elected deacon in 1783, an office which he held until his death, May 1, 1821.

His son, Isaac Gerrish, father of Colonel Enoch, was born in Boseawen, November 27, 1782. He was an honored citizen and a leading member of the church in that town.

Colonel Enoch Gerrish, the subject of this sketch, only son of Isaac and Caroline (Lawrence) Gerrish, was born at the old homestead, on High Street, July 28, 1822. He obtained his education at the academies in Boseawen, Franklin and Meriden. On the death of his father he inherited a large portion of his estate, and with it, at the age of twenty, came the care and management of an extensive farm. An addition of more than one hundred acres made it one of the largest in Merrimack County. For twenty years he devoted his time to the cultivation and improvement of his soil, successfully developing its resources by raising live-stock, hay and wool, when its heavy growth of wood and timber attracted the attention of the lumber manufacturer, to whom it was sold in 1865.

Possessing a love for military parade and drill, he was promoted from the lowest rank to that of colonel of the Twenty-first Regiment New Hampshire Militia.

He was often elected to fill the various offices in town, the duties of which were well performed. A friend to the church where his ancestors worshiped, and to religious institutions generally, he manifested an interest in all measures that contributed to their usefulness.

He moved to Concord after the sale of his farm, where his sound judgment, particularly in matters of finance, was duly appreciated, as is shown by his appointment as one of the trustees of the New Hampshire Savings-Bank, in Concord, and of the Rolfe and Rumford Asylum.

He also represented Ward Four, of Concord in the Legislature of 1881-82. He married Miranda O., daughter of Joseph S. and Harriet N. Lawrence, May 23, 1854.

Their children are Frank Lawrence, born May 12, 1855; Lizzie Miranda, born June 14, 1860.

CHARLES H. AMSDEN.

Isaac Amsden, the first of the Amsden name recorded in this country, appears in Cambridge, Mass., where he was married, June 8, 1654, to Frances Periman. He is supposed to have come from England. He died in Cambridge April 7, 1659, leaving two children.

Isaac (2), their son, was born at Cambridge in 1655; married Jane Rutter, May 17, 1677. He died May 3, 1727. She died November 22, 1739, leaving six children.

John (3), third son of Isaac (2), born at Marlborough, Mass., December 28, 1683, died at Southborough, Mass., November 12, 1761. He married Hannah, daughter of Isaac and Frances (Woods) Howe, of Marlborough, Mass., who was born June 17, 1688, and had twelve children.

Jesse (4), son of John (3), was born at Southborough, Mass., May 31, 1729. He married Bettie Ball, of Southborough, November 19, 1748, and had twelve children.

Jonas (5), son of Jesse (4), born at Southborough, April 24, 1749, married Hannah Rice, August 9, 1779. He died at Mason, N. H., March 29, 1802. She died at Mason February 27, 1809. They had nine children.

Hubbard (6), son of Jonas (5), born 1790, died September 16, 1817. He married Annie Saunders, of Mason, N. H., March 8, 1814, had two children.

Henry Hubbard (7), son of Hubbard (6), born September 14, 1816, married Mary Muzzey, of New Ipswich, N. H., August 6, 1840. He died at Fisherville (now Penacook), N. H., December 6, 1869.

Children of Henry H. and Mary Amsden.—George Henry, born July 7, 1841, died January 16, 1872; Charles Hubbard, born May 29, 1846, died October 29, 1847; Charles Hubbard, born July 8, 1848; Edward, born December 19, 1853, died June 9, 1858.

Charles Hubbard (8), son of Henry (7), Hubbard (6), Jonas (5), Jesse (4), John (3), Isaac (2), Isaac (1) and Mary (Muzzey) Amsden, the subject of this sketch, was born in Gosswen, N. H., July 8, 1848.

In early life he attended the public schools, and in August, 1863, went to New Ipswich, N. H., where he attended the Appleton Academy, remaining there until the spring of 1865.

On returning home he entered the employ of Caldwell & Amsden, furniture manufacturers, and continued with them until December, 1868, when the firm of H. H. Amsden & Sons succeeded to Caldwell & Amsden, the same being composed of Henry H. and his two sons,—George H. and Charles H.,—and Charles H. Allen, of Boston.

December 6, 1869, the senior member of the firm died, and the remaining partners continued the business until the death of George H., which occurred January 16, 1872. After that the two remaining partners conducted the business until January 1, 1880, when Charles H. bought the interest of Mr. Allen, and since that time has conducted the same alone under the same firm-name. Mr. Amsden is also associated with John Whitaker, Esq., in the lumber business, they having one of the best mills in the southern part of the State, the product of which is used by Mr. Amsden in the manufacture of furniture.

Being of the opinion that New Hampshire is a good State for manufacturing, it has been his policy to encourage and aid it all he could, and to this end has engaged with associates in other branches of business, being at the present time the president of the Concord Axle Company, also a director in the Consoocook Manufacturing and Mechanic Company, of Penacook, the B. W. Hoyt Company, of Epping, N. H., and the Mechanics' National Bank, of Concord, N. H., and also State director of the Portland and Ogdensburg Railroad. Nothing of a public nature but that has his encouragement and assistance so far as possible, and he is a liberal contributor to benevolent objects. In religious views he is a Baptist, having become a member of that church and society at an early age, and is to-day one of the most liberal supporters of the church with which he is connected.

October 29, 1870, he married Helen A., daughter of David A. and Martha A. (Daggett) Brown, of Penacook. Of this union there were born to them, July 15, 1872, a son, Henry Hubbard, who is now living; also, January 31, 1878, a daughter, Mary Arlette, who died October 29, 1883.

Eschschesch

Charles N. Amsden

A. Bear

Being of a retiring disposition, and having his time so much taken up by business cares, he has never sought public honors to any great extent. He represented his ward in the Board of Aldermen of the city of Concord in the year 1871, and was unanimously returned in 1875; was also a member of the State Senate in 1883.

Mr. Amsden is now in the prime of life, and owing to force of circumstances, his business career has already been more extended than the average of men at his age. Filling various positions of trust and responsibility with commendable acceptability, it has been his peculiar aim to merit and receive the esteem and confidence of his associates and constituents.

ABRAHAM BEAN.

Abraham Bean was born March 14, 1789, in London, N. H. His father, John, was a farmer in Gilmanston, who, shortly before the birth of the subject of this sketch, moved to London, and there continued as a farmer. Abraham had very limited opportunities for obtaining an education, as his father lived two miles from the school, and his attendance being only during the winter terms; he often had to break his own path through the deep snows for the entire distance. He was a hardy boy and grew rapidly, so that at twelve years of age we find him leaving his home and engaging with Esquire Jonathan Eastman, of Concord (then a small farming town), as a farm hand. Here he remained for several years and became known as a trusty and competent workman, and commanded the highest wages paid at the time.

December 17, 1810, he married Sally, daughter of Ezekiel and Mary A. (Sanborn) Clough, of London. From this union there were two children,—Mary Ann, born July 16, 1812 (who married Herman Sanborn, of Boscawen, and had four children), and Sarah Jane, born October 12, 1818, who married John L. Tallant, of Canterbury, January 21, 1835; they had thirteen children, seven of whom are now living.

Mr. Bean, early in life, became interested in civil affairs, and was called to positions of trust and honor by the citizens of the town. He was for over twenty years the collector of taxes for Concord. He represented the town of Concord in the General Court two years. He also held the positions of deputy sheriff and constable for over twenty years, and became greatly interested in the growth and prosperity of Concord. In these various positions Mr. Bean showed himself to be a man of good sense, was energetic and full of enterprise, and in the collection of the revenues of the young city was peculiarly successful. In politics Mr. Bean was a Democrat, and acted with that party with but one exception during his life, the exception being his favoring the election of his friend, John Quincy Adams.

Mr. Bean was a member of the Congregational Church at East Concord, and it was largely through his influence that the first church there was built. He was one of the original grantees of a charter for the State Capital Bank, and one of its board of directors for many years. He was an earnest advocate of the temperance cause, a man of great decision of character, and a valued citizen who was ever ready to lend a helping hand in any good cause. He led an active life, and died April 7, 1861, beloved and respected.

HON. JACOB H. GALLINGER.¹

Dickens remarks, in one of his novels, that it is not likely to be forgotten that Alexander wept because there were no more worlds to conquer, "the circumstance having been somewhat frequently mentioned." For the same reason, there is little danger that the reading public will forget that "New Hampshire is a good State to emigrate from." Let us for once amend this tiresome and unpatriotic old proverb, and rejoice that at least one highly successful man has found New Hampshire a good State to immigrate into. And may not the honors which the old State has bestowed upon the child of her adoption suggest, if not a rebuke, at least a wholesome lesson, to her own recreant sons who have wandered from her side?

Jacob H. Gallinger, the subject of this sketch, was born in Cornwall, province of Ontario, March 28, 1837. He was the son of a farmer and the fourth in a family of twelve children. His parents were of German descent and were possessed of but moderate means. Like so many others who have achieved high success in after-life, he was forced, at an early age, to rely upon his own resources. At the age of twelve he entered that incomparable political training-school, a newspaper-office, served an apprenticeship of four years and made himself master of the "art preservative." After working at his trade for one year, in Ogdensburgh, N. Y., he returned to Cornwall, and, for a year, edited and published the paper on which he had served his apprenticeship.

During this time he was under the charge of a private instructor, and endeavored, in such spare moments as a country editor may snatch from his numberless duties, to supply the deficiency caused by the unfortunate lack of educational advantages in his early boyhood.

In 1855 he began the study of medicine in Cincinnati, Ohio. During the vacations he eked out his scanty means by working in the office of the Cincinnati Gazette as reporter, proof-reader or compositor. He completed his medical course in May, 1858, graduating with the highest honors of his class. He practiced his profession in Cincinnati for one year, devoted the next year to study and travel, and then, in July, 1860, came to New Hampshire. A year later he associated himself in practice with Dr. W. B.

¹By Allen J. Backus.

Chamberlain, at Keene. About this time he joined the homoeopathic school of medicine, to which he has since adhered. In the spring of 1862 he removed to Concord, where he has since resided and where he has built up a large and lucrative practice. As a medical practitioner he stands in the front rank of his profession in this State. For seven years he was president of the New Hampshire Homoeopathic Medical Society, in 1868 he received an honorary degree from the New York Homoeopathic Medical College, and he has been elected an honorary member of several medical societies. He has also been a frequent and valued contributor to medical periodicals, and was surgeon-general of the State, with the rank of brigadier-general, on the staff of Governor Head, during the years 1879 and 1880.

But it is in political life that Dr. Gallinger is best and most widely known. To use a homely and hackneyed expression, he is a "born" politician. He possesses, in an unusual degree, the executive capacity, the quickness of perception, the promptness in action, the courage, the combativeness and the shrewd knowledge of human nature, which are the most important requisites to success in political life. Such a man having entered the field of active politics, it was inevitable that he should work his way to the front.

He has always been an active Republican, and has long ranked among the leaders of his party in this State. He was first elected to the House of Representatives in 1872, and served as chairman of the committee on insurance. He was re-elected the next year and was appointed to the chairmanship of the committee on banks, and also as chairman of an important special committee.

His service in the lower branch of the Legislature was characterized by industry, close attention to business and distinguished ability and readiness in debate.

In 1876 he was elected a member of the Constitutional Convention. This convention will always be historic by reason of the large number of able men that it contained and the important reforms that it inaugurated.

Dr. Gallinger took a prominent part in the debates, and was a valuable and influential member.

His plan for representation in the Legislature on the basis of population, although opposed by many of the older members of the convention, was adopted by a large majority. The very general satisfaction with which the system is regarded sufficiently attests the wisdom of its author.

In March, 1878, he was elected to the State Senate from the old Fourth District, and served as chairman of the committee on education. He was re-elected in the following November, and upon the convening of the Legislature, was chosen to the presidency of the Senate, an office whose duties his rare parliamentary ability enabled him to discharge to the entire satisfaction of the Senators, as was attested by the exceedingly complimentary resolutions unanimously passed at the close of the session, accompanied by a valuable testimonial.

Dr. Gallinger had long been an active and influential member of the Republican State Central Committee, and in September, 1882, he was made its chairman. The campaign which followed was one of exceeding bitterness and beset with exceptional difficulties. Republican disaffection was rife throughout the land. The tidal wave which, two years later, carried the Democratic party into power in the nation, had already set in. New York, Pennsylvania and even Massachusetts chose Democratic Governors, and a Democratic Congress was elected. In addition to these general discouragements, the Republicans of New Hampshire were called upon to face serious obstacles of their own, which are well known to all, and which, therefore, need not be discussed here. It is only just to say that, with a less adroit manager at the head of the Republican organization, the Republican victory which followed would have been impossible. Dr. Gallinger was re-elected to the chairmanship in 1884, and again demonstrated his especial fitness for the place.

In the Second District Convention, held at Concord, September 9, 1884, Dr. Gallinger was nominated for member of Congress, receiving on the first ballot one hundred and seventy-one out of a total of three hundred and twenty-nine votes. The nomination was subsequently made unanimous. His competitors were Hon. Daniel Barnard, of Franklin, and Hon. Levi W. Barton, of Newport—two of the ablest men in the State. He was elected in November following, running several hundred votes ahead of his ticket. He will take his seat at the opening of the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, in December next.

Dr. Gallinger has been prominent in politics otherwise than in an official capacity. He is one of the most popular and successful campaign orators in the State. As a speaker, he is rapid, direct and practical, has an excellent voice and always commands the close attention of his audience. He is also a facile and effective writer. He has frequently prepared the resolutions for State and District Conventions, and has written, to a considerable extent, for the daily press. He has also performed considerable literary labor of a general character. He has frequently lectured before lyceums and other literary societies, and Dartmouth College has conferred upon him the honorary degree of Master of Arts.

In August, 1860, he married Mary Anna Bailey, daughter of Major Isaac Bailey, of Salisbury, N. H. Of their six children, four are living,—Alice M., Kate C., William H. and Ralph E., aged respectively twenty-four, nineteen, sixteen and thirteen years. In religious faith he was reared an Episcopalian, but for many years has been identified with the Baptist denomination.

J. H. Gallinger

James S. Norris

Dr. Gallinger is slightly above the medium height, and is somewhat portly. He has always been strictly temperate in his habits, and the happy results of his abstemious life are apparent in his cheery and healthful countenance. He has a fine presence, a cordial, hearty manner, and a pleasing, winning address. His rare social qualities, abundant good-nature, keen sense of humor and excellent conversational powers make him a most agreeable companion, and few men in the State enjoy a higher degree of personal popularity. His many friends rejoice in his advancement and will watch his future with interest and sympathy.

In the prime of manhood, in the full tide of health and strength, about to abandon State affairs for the wider arena of national politics, a sketch of Dr. Gallinger's life, written at this date, is necessarily incomplete. The record of the most important and eventual part of his life-work must be left to the pen of some future biographer. If the achievement of the past may be taken as an index of the probabilities of the future, he has before him a career of eminence, honor and usefulness.

JAMES SHEPARD NORRIS.

Among the families whose names are prominent in the colonial history of New England, and who have shown energy, force of character, business acumen and persistent industry, which have impressed themselves on the present era by the perpetual labor of several generations, must be particularly mentioned the Norris family. The name appears frequently in the annals of Epping, N. H., showing them to have been active in the pioneer, colonial, Revolutionary, civil and religious history of that town.

In 1741, as signers to a petition to His Excellency, Benning Wentworth, His Majesty's Council, for incorporation into a separate parish, are found the names of James Norris, James Norris, Jr., and Samuel Norris. As members of a Committee of Safety are found the names of Joseph, John and Moses Norris.

The town of Epping was incorporated February 12, 1741, and the first town-meeting was convened at the farm-house of James Norris.

In the War of the Revolution James Norris was a soldier, and in 1775 was promoted to rank of captain.

In 1779, Josiah Norris was chairman of the committee to audit the accounts of the town, and to pay to the soldiers the sums raised as bounties.

In the list of representatives to the General Court, in the ecclesiastical history of the town and in the various records of public acts the name of this family frequently appears. These men were tillers of the soil, and became owners of large tracts of land, which have been handed down from father to son, each succeeding generation leaving thereon its impress of improvement and increased fertility. The life of a plain farmer, with no startling events or famous acts, is apt to be somewhat uninteresting, and yet these lives are the foundation and superstructure of society. The line of descent is from John (1), James (2), Thomas (3), James D. (4), to James Shepard (5).

Thomas (3) was born February 14, 1744, and died in 1810. His son, James D. (4), was born in Epping April 23, 1785, and married Mary Pike Norris, who was born in Epping July 2, 1785, and died October 6, 1828. The children of this union were Maria H., born June 16, 1809; James Shepard (5), born December 4, 1812; Mary E., born August 22, 1825.

James D. (4) succeeded to the farm of his father, Thomas (3), and became one of the successful farmers of the town, besides carrying on the lumber business and the manufacture of barrels and shoe-boxes. He was active in doing good, greatly interested in educational and religious matters, was a regular attendant on public worship and lived a useful and exemplary life. In his family relations he was tenderly affectionate, as a friend and citizen was trusted and true, and justly meriting the good opinion of all. He died at his residence in Epping, August 9, 1857, and was buried on the old homestead.

James Shepard (5), the subject of this sketch, passed his boyhood on the old homestead farm, where his lot was much like that of the farmer-boy of that time, assisting in farm-work in the summer and attending the common school in winter. His educational advantages were such as were afforded by the district school, supplemented by two terms of private instruction. At the age of twelve years young Norris had become useful in general farm-work, and as time progressed also went into the woods with his father for timber, which was converted into lumber at the saw-mill, owned partly by his father. Being active in business, he was soon entrusted with the responsibility of hauling and marketing lumber, which was transported by ox-teams to Newburyport, Mass., twenty-five miles distant. The teams were loaded and ready for the start at three o'clock in the afternoon, the journey being kept up through the silent hours of the night and the journey's end reached about sunrise the following morning. The lumber was marketed during that day and the return journey commenced after the load was sold out, and ordinarily the arrival home would be in the afternoon of the third day. Such was the routine during the lumber season. In addition to these duties, he took charge of the manufacture of lumber at the saw-mill, and, during the absence of his father, was intrusted with all the responsibilities incident to this varied business.

About the year 1838, Mr. Norris commenced the manufacture of shoes in Epping, which he continued until 1847, when, by reason of the business, which was too confining, his health failed. He came to Concord and entered the employment of Ebenezer Symmes, as salesman in the bread, cracker, pastry and confectionery business, at a salary of twenty dollars per month. This outdoor occupation was beneficial to his health, and in a short space of time, having become thoroughly familiar with the selling department of this business, and more or less conversant with the general business, he, in 1850, purchased the business of Mr. Symmes and carried it on so successfully that in the course of a few years it became necessary to put up additional buildings, which were, when completed, supplied with modern improvements for the economical transaction of the business on a large scale.

In 1859, Mr. Norris suffered the loss of his buildings by a disastrous conflagration. Transferring the larger part of his business to an unoccupied bakery at Warner, N. H., he at once, with characteristic energy, set about rebuilding, and in the brief space of six months completed the work, and relinquishing the Warner bakery, opened anew in Concord.

In May, 1864, Mr. Norris took into partnership Mr. George W. Crockett, of Sanbornton, N. H., and continued under the firm name of J. S. Norris & Co. until 1875, when Mr. Crockett retired, disposing of his interest to Mr. Norris, who, the same year, transferred it to his son, James C. Norris, and they continued under the firm of J. S. Norris & Son for three years. Having thus been actively and continuously engaged in this business for thirty-one years, the unremitting cares of which had undermined his health and made rest and quiet imperative, Mr. Norris sold his interest in the business to Mr. Crockett, his former partner, and retired, and the firm since that date (1878) has been Norris & Crockett.

Mr. Norris, during his successful business career, has acquired valuable real estate in Concord, and is now passing the evening of life surrounded by comforts and conveniences that are the legitimate fruits of his careful and prudent business habits. Mr. Norris has never been active in politics nor a seeker after place or position, but since his first vote has acted with the Democratic party. In religion he is a Baptist, a member of the First Baptist Church of Concord, and for many years one of its deacons. In the improvement of this church building he made a very liberal gift, and also contributed to the churches in Epping and Suncook.

Mr. Norris is a valued member of the I. O. O. F. and is also a Free-Mason, being a member of Blazing Star Lodge, of Concord.

A man so successful in the management of his own affairs would naturally be sought for counsel in the financial affairs of his community, and we find him acting as a director in the State Capital Bank, to which position he was elected February 10, 1863. He was also elected director of the National State Capital Bank January 2, 1865, which position he has held continuously to the present time. He is a trustee and vice-president of the Loan and Trust Savings-Bank, of Concord, and one of its investment committee, and a trustee of the Centennial Home for the Aged, the existence of which institution is largely due to his exertions. He has done much for the improvement of Concord, and has been ready to assist in every good work, and has ever been a true friend to the poor. He has been interested in education and liberal in support of schools.

Such a life, unostentatious though it be, has a value not to be easily measured, and the world is much better for such living.

In November, 1840, Mr. Norris married, first, Caroline M., daughter of Dr. Timothy and Sarah Hillard, of Northwood, N. H., who died June 27, 1847, aged thirty-one years, leaving a daughter, Ellen G., born May 1, 1844, who married George W. Crockett.

September 24, 1850, Mr. Norris married, second, Mary E., daughter of Wesley and Harriet Palmer, of Concord. She was born January 23, 1829. From this union there was born James C. (6), April 3, 1854, who has succeeded to the business of his father and is now at the head of the firm, and stands as one of the flourishing and intelligent young business men of Concord.

July 5, 1876, James C. (6) married Minnie Parker, daughter of Augustus and Mary Jane Wiggin, of Concord. She was born May 13, 1856. From this union there have been Mabel Parker, born February 9, 1877; Orra, born November 24, 1878; Ethel, born February 13, 1881; and James Shepard (7), born November 20, 1884.

Of the first wife of Mr. Norris (5) it may fittingly be said that she was a help-meet, frugal and industrious, and with untiring devotion and Christian love aiding to the utmost in establishing a home in its truest sense. She was devoted to her husband, her child and her Saviour.

It was at the time when Mr. Norris (5) started out for himself in the wider field at Concord that he married Mary E. Palmer, and of her it may be said that, while attending to the manifold duties of the household, she has aided and encouraged her husband in his struggle from poverty to affluence, and now shares with him the confidence and love of a large circle of friends. She is a tender, loving wife, a true Christian mother and a member of the First Baptist Church of Concord.

GRANVILLE P. CONN.

Granville P. Conn, A.M., M.D., Concord, was born in Hillsborough, Hillsborough County, January 25, 1832, and was the youngest of eight children of William and Sarah (Priest) Conn. The paternal ancestry was of Scotch-Irish origin, while on the maternal side it was of English descent. His father being a farmer, he resided at home until sixteen, attending the common schools and in doing farm-work. After this a few months at Francestown and Pembroke Academies was followed with two years at

Granville P. Cowen

Captain Alden Partridge's Military Institution, at Norwich, Vt., with an occasional term of teaching common and select schools in New Hampshire and Vermont. At this time, and until 1852, he devoted his attention principally to fitting for the profession of civil engineering, which myopia and general ill health compelled him to relinquish.

From this time until 1856 he read medicine in the office of Dr. H. B. Brown, of Hartford, Vt., and teaching mathematics several months during this period at the academy in that village. After attending two courses of medical lectures at Woodstock, Vt., and a third course at Dartmouth Medical College, he received the degree of M.D. from the latter institution in the class of 1856, with the late Professor A. B. Crosby, of Hanover.

In 1880 Norwich University conferred the honorary degree of A.M.

In 1856 he located at East Randolph, Vt., and remained there until 1861, when he sold out and removed to Richmond, Chittenden County, Vt.

He was commissioned assistant surgeon of the Twelfth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, August 19, 1862, and was ordered to rendezvous at Brattleborough at once, and, in connection with the late Surgeon Phelps, of Windsor, Vt., instituted a United States hospital of one thousand beds. A month later his regiment came into the field, and with it he served in Virginia during its nine months' service, first in the Twenty-second Army Corps and afterwards with the Second Vermont Brigade, was transferred to the First Army Corps and was mustered out of the service with the regiment at Brattleborough, Vt., July 14, 1863.

In the fall of 1863 he came to Concord, locating in Ward 4, on North Main Street, where he has remained ever since. For several years he was a partner of Dr. Charles P. Gage, of Concord, and a member of the local Board of Health. Afterwards, for five years, he was city physician. Very soon after commencing the practice of medicine he became firmly convinced that a great many deaths occurred from preventable causes, due in many instances to ignorance of the laws of health, and that physicians were often disappointed in obtaining satisfactory results, by reason of inefficient nursing and lack of attention to the hygiene of the sick-room. Believing the State owed to the people a care of their health, as well as of their morals, he commenced, in 1866, to agitate the question of cleaning up the city, and there being an epidemic of cholera in Europe at the time, he brought the matter to the attention of the city officials, who passed an ordinance, drafted by him, that secured a house-to-house inspection, the first in the State. This was made under his direction, and a full record of the sanitary condition of every building in the compact part of each ward in the city was made early in the season, which resulted in a general cleaning of courts, alleys, streets and yards. The city at once took an advanced position in sanitation, which it has always maintained, for with the introduction of a water supply in 1873 came the necessity for a system of sewers, that was promptly met by the city borrowing a large sum of money to practically complete the system in 1876.

While city physician, circumstances occurred to show that more care should be exercised in the burial of the dead, and, in company with the city solicitor, he advocated that a burial permit be required from the city registrar before a body could be lawfully interred.

The City Council passed an ordinance to that effect, and since then substantially the same ordinance has become the law of the State, and New Hampshire undoubtedly secures quite as accurate registration of deaths as any State in the Union. His intimate connection with the hygiene of the city of Concord rendered him more and more convinced that the State should have and maintain an effective supervision over the lives and the health of its citizens, and that a State Board of Health was fully as necessary an adjunct of the executive department of New Hampshire as a bank, railroad, insurance or fish commission; for, while it is acknowledged by all that the material interest of the State should be fostered and pushed forward to compete with the industries of other municipalities, yet, unless the causes of sickness are reduced to the minimum, but little progress will be made; therefore the watchful care of a health department becomes a necessity in order to render good health possible to the greatest number, whose energy, vitality and working capacity become the capital stock of the State, whose par value and dividends can only be attained by having a sound mind in a vigorous and sound body. For many years he labored, with others, to secure for the people of New Hampshire a State Board of Health, and to this end he read papers on sanitation before the medical profession, as well as contributed articles to the newspapers on the necessity of hygienic reform; for it was evident to his mind that the State must be progressive in matters pertaining to the health of her citizens, else it would be impossible to retain her prestige among other commonwealths, and in 1881 he had the great pleasure of having the Legislature pass an act giving his native State a Board of Health.

The bill establishing the board was drafted by him, and is in many respects a model for any State of the population and diversified interests that characterize New Hampshire, while the few years the board has been in existence proves that the whole subject was thoroughly and carefully considered before being presented to the Legislature; for, while there is but the slightest appearance of arbitrary power, which is so distasteful to a free and enlightened people, yet, with the statute law then existing in the State and the enactment of the bill establishing a Board of Health, it is doubtful if there is another State in the Union whose health department creates less friction in its practical work than it does in New Hampshire. This is largely accomplished by taking it entirely out of the domain of politics, and in making the secretary a permanent officer so long as his efficiency continues.

He was at once appointed a member of the board for four years, and upon its organization was elected its president, which office he now holds.

Although in active practice of his profession, he has, by his industrious and systematic habits, done considerable work for the board, contributing articles upon ventilation and other subjects intimately connected with hygiene, and he has represented the board several times in conferences with sanitary authorities and public health meetings.

At this time it may be considered an endorsement of his work on the board, that he has received a re-appointment for four years.

While a resident of Vermont he became an active member of its State Medical Society, and a few years since he was elected an honorary member of the same association. He became a member of the New Hampshire Medical Society in 1864, and in 1869 was elected its secretary, which office he has, by the unanimous vote of the association, held ever since, except in the years 1880-81, when he was vice-president and president of this venerable society, which was organized in 1791.

It is well known that in voluntary associations of this kind very much of their prosperity and efficiency depend upon the executive ability and energy of its secretary, and it is a matter of satisfaction to all who know him that since he became its secretary the New Hampshire Medical Society has increased in the number of its active members from sixty to over two hundred and twenty-five, with an annual average attendance of one hundred and twenty-five in place of less than fifty in 1865. He is a member of the Centre District and an honorary member of the Stratford District Medical Society, as well as a member of the American Public Health and the American Medical Associations. He is also a member of the various Masonic associations in Concord, and of Post E. E. Sturtevant, G. A. R., of New Hampshire.

In 1877, and again in 1879, he was elected by the people on the Board of Railroad Commissioners for New Hampshire, this being the only time he has taken any active part in politics.

While railroad commissioner he made two reports to the Legislature, in which he strongly advocated reforms in the commission and in the manner of the roads making returns, that have since been adopted. His early education as a civil engineer has always made the construction and management of railways a matter of interest to him, and he has always believed that the progressive spirit of our country will yet advance American railways until they will become an important element of our world of business-prosperity. In this connection it may be mentioned that, believing that the prosperity of the State and its railroads depends very much upon its being a summer resort for the whole country, who come here for the purpose of health and recreation, he has instituted a system of railway sanitation and inspections that the management of the roads nobly second, and which, by the watchful care of the State Board of Health over the railway stations, cars and hotels, will increase the confidence of the traveling public in assuring them that it is the desire of the people of New Hampshire to keep the hills and valleys of the Granite State free from the contaminating influences of waste and effete matter, in order that the summer visitor may return to his home with firm health and renewed vitality in return for the pecuniary consideration of a few days or weeks in the State.

In 1858, while a resident of Vermont, he married Miss Helen M. Sprague, of East Randolph, in that State, and has two children.

GEORGE W. ELA.

George W. Ela, a native of Portsmouth, N. H., born January 18, 1807, was the third son of Joseph and Sarah (Emerson) Ela, and the sixth of a family of nine children. The first sixteen years of his life were spent at his paternal home, occupied, when not attending the town schools, on his father's farm and in the tannery which his father carried on as a regular occupation. This period of his life was without noticeable incident, if we except what he insists was the foundation-stone of his future,—when, in his fifteenth year (1822), he was taken from school, and, by an arrangement of his father with other land-owners in Grafton County, was sent to Lisbon, with his surveying instruments, to confirm or correct the lines of the original survey, involving titles to lands in that town, and, to some extent, the boundaries of the adjacent towns of Littleton and Lyman. The object was accomplished after much labor, and in that season a plan made and returned to the proprietors, much to their satisfaction; and their entire approbation and their flattering praise of his perseverance and success gave him confidence in his own powers and secured theirs in his executive ability, which never abated while they lived.

In that year, by an arrangement with Bill & Moore, publishers of the New Hampshire Patriot, at Concord,—the famed Republican organ of that day, afterward more famous as the organ of the Jackson portion of that party,—Ela was to enter their office as an apprentice in the printing trade. The latter part of that year the copartnership of Bill & Moore was dissolved, Isaac Hill retaining the Patriot and Jacob B. Moore establishing a new printing-office—subsequently establishing the New Hampshire Journal, as the organ of the Adams wing of the Republican party of that day. In January, 1823, Mr. Ela entered the office of Jacob B. Moore as an apprentice and continued there during his minority, excepting a few months of the last of his term, when, by an arrangement of all parties interested, he went to Dover, N. H. He then started the Dover Enquirer, which the supporters of Mr. Adams in the national political contest, then beginning to be interesting, had determined to establish in that locality. After a few months Mr. Ela became, by degrees, the proprietor, publisher, printer and editor, continuing in that relation—the latter part of the time in connection with the late lamented George Wadleigh—for a period of about three years. Many of the present generation of politicians will remember the influence which that paper exerted in political circles in the State, which was well maintained by Mr. Wadleigh, who succeeded Mr. Ela and continued in its management for a long series of years. Mr. Ela then returned to Concord for the purpose of consolidating the Statesman and Concord Register and the New Hampshire Journal, as a political measure, and, in the year 1831, commenced the publication of the Statesman in connection with the late Asa McFarland, who retired after about two years. Mr. Ela continued the paper, as sole proprietor, for several years, and subsequently in connection with the late Hon. Jacob H. Ela, who had, in the mean time, served an apprenticeship in the Statesman office, which was commenced and continued while he remained a member of Mr. Ela's family. Thus Mr. Ela was brought into the forties,—after unremitting labors of more than twenty years in the printing-office, with all the duties and customs connected with the public press and political parties—before the days of the last two generations.

G. W. Allen

He commenced with these duties when the printers' devil was expected to know everything, do everything, know everybody and be everywhere—to be stoker, messenger, newsboy and, perhaps, caterer to his master's table. It was a substantial relief to advance a peg to the position of compositor or pressman or any other labor in the office, when, too, the last called for the most muscular and expert workmen, for at that time a power press was not known in New England, the work being all done on that wonderful screw arrangement, the invention of Adam Ramage. Even the ink-spreading process was accomplished with balls, the composition roller, which subsequently took their place, being then unknown. The Wells press—the lever—was invented a short time previous, about 1820. Few of the craft of the present day have any definite idea of the mode of printing of that time. In this connection Mr. Ela mentions the fact that all the paper then used was made in that primitive mode of dipping from the vat on a hand-screen, sheet by sheet, the pulp of which they were formed, and that the revolutions which have succeeded from time to time in that line are as wonderful as the many other advances in art and science and mechanical inventions.

Mr. Ela, while serving an apprenticeship, was connected with many of the Whig—Free and public—papers of the State, and more especially with the Concord Mercury. Mr. Jacob B. Moore, with whom he served his apprenticeship, was a publisher and bookseller, and the editor of the New Hampshire Journal, and, a few months after the formation of the county of Merrimack (1823), was appointed register of deeds, and continued in that office, by subsequent elections, several years. Mr. Ela much of the time was acting as clerk in the book store and in the registry, often, in the absence of the principal, in the entire charge of the whole concern. Business, custom and convenience made the place a resort of the active men visiting the capital of the State and the shire of the county. While yet in his minority he was frequently employed as reporter of the proceedings of the Legislature, which position he afterward continued for a period of some fifteen years. These employments, incident to his early situations and continued while proprietor and editor of the Enquirer and Statesman, gave him an extensive acquaintance, most of whom, in the early part of his life, were fully twenty years his seniors—notably so with the politicians. He was a Whig in politics, as may reasonably be inferred from his positions,—active, energetic and influential,—acting in responsible positions often, at times as chairman of the State Central Committee. He was prominent in the campaign which seated General Harrison in the Presidential chair, as also in that which so nearly elected Henry Clay. Mr. Ela's position brought him in contact with many public men of fifty years ago of national fame as well as of local distinction,—with some in a formal way and as a matter of ceremony, but with many in a more sociable and intimate relation. He relates many interesting and valuable reminiscences which an attentive observation has secured and an active mind treasured, and this characteristic has brought him to be regarded as an authority in matters of history in his time. He was present in the procession of school-boys in Portsmouth when James Monroe, then President of the United States, visited that ancient town, and he has known every President from that time down to Garfield. A winter in Washington, forty-five years since, secured him the acquaintance of most of the prominent men there at that time. With the press and its managers he had a more intimate acquaintance, which extends back to when Boston was a town of some thirty thousand inhabitants, more or less, with its Board of Selectmen, holding its town-meetings and transacting its town business in Faneuil Hall, electing its fifty or sixty representatives to the General Court; when it had not a single daily, and Nathan Hale, of the Alewife, Benjamin Russell, of the Centinel, and Joseph T. Buckingham, of the Courier, were the guides of public opinion and maintained the dignity of the commonwealth. The New York celebrities were Nathaniel H. Custer, of the Stabour; Mordecai M. Noah, of the New York Times; William L. Stone, of the Commercial Advertiser; and, subsequently, James Gordon Bennett, of the Herald; James Watson Webb, of the Courier; Horace Greeley, of the Tribune; James Brooks, of the ———, with all of whom he was more or less intimately acquainted.

Mr. Ela, finding his health falling, in 1841, on the advice of his physician, abandoned his connection with the press. Since then he has spent much of his time on his farm at Allenstown, an acquisition which he made a few years previous, and has devoted much attention to agricultural pursuits. And now, as the traveler passes along the highway over his extensive domain, covered with a growth of pine timber, the equal of which is rarely to be found in this State at least, he may often see the tall, straight form of the proprietor, clothed in rustic garb, alone or with workmen, — or with company, as it may happen, — attending to the interests connected therewith; sometimes in the corn-field, then examining the herd, perchance among the hay-makers, or directing and participating in whatever may be on hand at the moment; showing the evidence of age, yet with an alacrity perplexing to the stranger when told that the object of his observation is so closely approaching the age of eighty years, having endured forty years of active life since condemned as an invalid without hope of recovery. He is ever active, rising with the dawn, attending to whatever duties are in hand, whether it leads him to the stock-yard or the office-table. He is not confined to his farm in his labors; he has other interests, somewhat extensive, and other labors call him on frequent journeys, although it is apparent that his activity and his power of endurance have, in some degree, abated.

Mr. Ela married Mary Adelaide Lane, of Sutton, by whom he had three children, — two sons and a daughter. The latter died in infancy. Major Robert L. Ela served in the War of the Rebellion, in the Sixth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers. He was severely wounded in the second battle of Bull Run and again in the crater at Petersburg, into which he led his regiment, commanding. He recovered to some extent and served throughout the war, and now resides in California.

Captain Richard Ela also served his country in the War of the Rebellion, and was killed at Drury's Bluff, on the James, below Richmond, while leading a charge on the enemy's works.

CAPTAIN RICHARD ELA.

The most costly sacrifice New Hampshire made for the preservation of the Union was that of her young men. From her cities and towns, colleges and schools the young, strong and brave, to fill and refill our contingents, and they fell by hundreds. Captain Richard Ela was one of these. He was twenty-one years of age when he entered the army, and he was killed in battle three months before his term of service would have expired. Brief as was his life, the story of it is worthy to be told, for it was well lived. He possessed an even temperament and a disposition cheerful almost to gaiety. To his passing friends he may have seemed to take life carelessly; but beneath the jovial surface was a grave and earnest element which governed his character, and when the time which tried men's souls came, it was shown that he was controlled by an abiding purpose to accept the work that fell to him, and do it well.

Richard was the second son of George W. and Adelaide Lane Ela, and was born at Concord February 12, 1849. His mother died when he was three years old, and his childhood was spent partly with his father and partly with his grandfather, Dr. Robert Lane, of Sutton. After the public schools, the most of his school-life was spent at the academy at Franklin, although he attended, for shorter periods, the academies at Pembroke, New London and Meriden, and graduated from the latter in the summer of 1868. He determined to begin at once the study of his profession, and accordingly entered the law-office of George & Foster, at Concord, with whom he completed his professional studies; also attending lectures at the Harvard Law School.

He was physically strong, vigorous and active, and naturally an adept in athletic sports. He had a special liking for military exercise.

When the war cloud broke, and the call to arms was sounded, it was impossible that he should prove indifferent. Patriotism and military ardor alike urged an immediate response, and, August 22, 1861, he was mustered into the service as first lieutenant of Company E, Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers.

About this time he was admitted as a member of the Merrimack County bar. He entered the service with enthusiasm; but events proved that he was also, moved by a profound faith in the righteousness of his cause, and a steadfast purpose to do his every duty. His introduction to real soldiering was as officer of the guard while the regiment was on the way from Concord to Camp Sherman, Long Island, N. Y. While at this camp he was appointed judge advocate of the regiment.

The Third was with General Sherman at Hilton Head, and was among the first to land.

Lieutenant Ela was in command of two companies; was detached and ordered on an expedition to the plantation of General Graham, the rebel commander, for the purpose of securing the person of that officer and the papers at headquarters.

The general was not to be found. In other respects the expedition was successful.

For many months the regiment remained at Hilton Head. Sickness visited them, and this, with some being detailed for duty elsewhere, so reduced the number of officers that for six months, with few exceptions, he was the only officer with his company. The monotony was at length broken by an expedition towards Savannah. It amounted to but little, however, save to plant the first Union flag on Georgia soil.

Richard G. ...

R. S. Allen

Soon after, in an expedition to the mainland, Lieutenant Ela was ordered to cut off and capture the enemy's pickets at a certain station, which was accomplished. The next day the regiment moved further inland, and his company, deployed as skirmishers going up and rear-guard in returning, had some sharp skirmishing with the enemy. "This," he says, "was the first time we had heard the whistle of rebel bullets."

During April, 1862, the regiment was doing guard duty on Edisto Island, and on the 15th of the month Lieutenant Ela was promoted to a captaincy and assigned to Company G. Three months later he was given command of his former company (E). The following June he participated in the battle of Secessionville, and being knocked down by a passing shell was reported killed, but he was soon able to contradict the report.

About the 1st of July the regiment returned to Hilton Head, and he was assigned to the command of the forces on Pinckney Island.

In September he returned to Hilton Head. Sickness prevailed to such a degree that for a time but one captain, besides himself, was on duty. His health suffered severely, and in November he was given leave of absence for twenty days, the most of which he spent in Florida.

In March, 1863, he was assigned to duty as second in command of provost guard at Hilton Head, where he continued until April, when he returned to his regiment.

He was with the first expedition against Charleston, and participated in the fighting on Morris Island in July. When the siege of Fort Wagner was begun Captain Ela was detailed to organize and command a battalion of sharpshooters. He was stationed at the front and held the post of danger throughout the siege, doing effective and important work towards the capture of the fort.

In March, 1864, the regiment returned to Hilton Head to be reorganized as mounted infantry. It was then sent to Florida and there dismounted, and sent to Virginia to join in the operations against Richmond. The forces were gathering for the last great struggle with the Rebellion. Captain Ela felt that serious work was ahead. His last letter to his father was dated at Gloucester Point, Va., April 30, 1864, and says: "We are crowded down to the lightest possible marching order. You need not expect to hear from me again until I find an opportunity to write from Richmond."

Thirteen days later he fell in the charge which captured the first of the outer defenses of Richmond. In the desperate charge at Drury's Bluff he led his men to within twenty paces of the enemy's breast-works and died.

The adjutant-general's report says, "The fighting lasted but twenty minutes; but in those twenty minutes more than two hundred of New Hampshire's bravest and best fell dead or wounded. Among the foremost fell the gallant Captain Richard Ela, while in advance of his men, leading them in the charge. He was shot through the brain, and expired almost instantly." His body was buried on the field of battle, where it lies awaiting the last reveille.

Captain Ela was a brave and faithful soldier. He had few opportunities to distinguish himself in battle; but in a less conspicuous way his merit was even greater. Although just across the line from boyhood and fresh from student-life, he performed the work of one or more other officers besides his own during almost the whole of his time of service. From the time of entering active service the complement of officers was never full; he was always on duty, and work of absent ones therefore fell upon him. Much of the time, also, he was detailed for special work in addition to his regular duties. Officers and men alike bore testimony to his ability, his faithfulness and kindly thoughtfulness of others. He bore the hardships and disappointments of his lot without complaint, and seemed only anxious to do his work well.

With the exception of leave of absence at one time of twenty days, he was never away from his post, and though sometimes suffering from ill health, he was never marked off duty. At the end of two years and a half of service he was the only one of the original officers who had not been home.

When on the march to the fatal battle-field a comrade found him—usually so cheerful—now sober and thoughtful. In response to a question, he replied that he had a presentiment of death. They were going into a fierce battle, and he felt that he should be numbered with the slain. The comrade urged him not to go into battle if such were his feelings. He replied, "If it comes to that, I never shrank from duty, and though I know this to be my last battle, my duty to my country shall be well done."

That was the key-note of his character. Had he lived, it would have made him a useful and honored citizen; dying, it made him a hero.

DR. ROBERT LANE ELA.

Dr. Robert Lane Ela, the eldest son of George W. and Adelaide L. Ela, was born at Concord, N. H., April 17, 1838. When he was five years old his mother died. His childhood was spent in part with his grandfather, Dr. Robert Lane, at Sutton, and in part with his father at Concord. He was educated at New London, Pembroke and Meriden Academies. On completing his studies at these schools, he was employed on his father's farm at Allenstown, and subsequently moved to Stoneham, Mass., where he engaged in the manufacture of boots and shoes, which he continued until the spring of 1861.

When the War of the Rebellion broke out he responded to the President's call for volunteers, and, returning to Concord, recruited a company for the Sixth New Hampshire Regiment. He was commissioned a captain, and, joining the regiment at Keene, was mustered into the United States service November 30, 1861. He went with his regiment to Washington, D. C., where they remained in camp a few weeks, and early in January, 1862, they joined Burnside's expedition to Hatteras, Roanoke Island and Newbern, N. C. In July they were transferred by water to General Pope's command in Virginia. They participated in the battle of Cedar Mountain and the second battle of Bull Run, August 29, 1862, where Captain Ela was severely wounded in the right arm. He went home on a furlough, and remained until he had partly recovered the use of his arm, rejoining his regiment in March, 1863, while it was on the way to Kentucky. He was with the regiment through the Kentucky campaign, and went with it to Vicksburg, where he was present during the siege and at the surrender of that stronghold, and also in the operations against Jackson, which resulted in the capture of that place. The regiment then returned to Kentucky and was stationed at Frankfort, where Captain Ela acted as provost-marshal. On the reorganization of the army under General Grant, in 1864, he went with his regiment to Virginia, and participated in the Wilderness battles of May 5th and 6th; the battles of Spottsylvania, May 12th and 18th; North Anna River, May 29th; Cold Harbor, June 3d and 4th; then moving across the James River to the front of Petersburg, and engaging in the battles of June 17th and 18th, and being under fire every day until the explosion of the mine, July 30th. Captain Ela was in command of the regiment at this time, and, the Sixth New Hampshire being one of those selected to charge the enemy after the blowing up of the mine, he led it into the crater, and in the fight which followed was wounded by the explosion of a spherical case shot in front of him. Both legs were partially paralyzed, causing injuries from which he has never fully recovered. He was afterwards detailed for duty as acting adjutant quartermaster, at Camp Gilmore, Concord, N. H. He returned to his regiment and was promoted to the rank of major before the close of the war. He was mustered out of the service with his regiment July 17, 1865.

Major Ela was popular with the men under his command, for he was thoughtful of their comfort and watchful of their interests. He was intimate with but few of his brother officers, but with those he was especially friendly and always ready to give them a cordial greeting. As an officer, he was prompt and faithful in the discharge of duty and performed well his part in the War for the Union.

After his return from the army he studied medicine and surgery with Dr. Crosby, of Concord, and at the Dartmouth Medical School and Bellevue Hospital, New York, taking degrees from both schools. For the past ten years he has resided in California.

HISTORY OF ALLENSTOWN.

CHAPTER I.

Geographical—Original Grant—Named in Honor of Gen. Samuel Allen—Incorporation of Town—Copy of Charter—First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—First Settlements—Names of Pioneers—Indian Depredations—Capture of Robert Buntin and Others—Documentary History—First Justice of the Peace—Roman Catholic Church.

THE town of Allenstown lies in the southeastern part of the county, and is bounded as follows:

On the North by Epsom; East by Rockingham County; South by Hooksett and West by Pembroke.

This town was originally granted, May 11, 1722, to the children of Governor Samuel Allen and to their heirs. It was described as follows: "A tract of land four miles square, adjoining to Chester side line, and Nottingham head line." A portion of this tract was incorporated with Pembroke in November, 1759. It was named Allenstown in honor of Governor Allen. In June, 1815, a tract of land lying east of the Merrimack River, which had previously belonged to Bow, was annexed.

Although this town was early granted, it was not incorporated as a town until July 2, 1831. The following is the act of incorporation:

"STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE:

"In the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-one.

"An act to incorporate a town by the name of Allenstown.

"Section 1.—Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives, in general court convened, that all that tract of land situated in the county of Merrimack, in said State, that is now known by the name of Allenstown, be and the same hereby is incorporated into a town by the name of Allenstown, with all the powers, privileges, incident to other towns in this State.

"Provided, however, that no person whomsoever, that would not have gained a settlement in said Allenstown by the laws of this State, if said Allenstown had been incorporated into a town on the first Wednesday in June one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, shall gain a settlement in said Allenstown in virtue of this act, any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

"Section 2.—And be it further enacted, that Ichabod Clark, James C. Emery, James Piper and Mark Tilton, or any three of them, are hereby authorized to call the first meeting of the legal voters of said Allenstown by posters of notification in two of the most publick places in said Allenstown, expressing the time, place and purpose of said meeting, fifteen days previous to the day of meeting, which meeting shall be holden on the last Monday of November next.

"Section 3.—And be it further enacted that the officers that were chosen at the last annual meeting of the legal voters of said Allenstown shall continue in office during the term for which they were chosen.

"FRANKLIN PIERCE,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

"SAMUEL CARTLAND,

President of the Senate.

"Approved July 2, 1831.

"SAMUEL DUNSMORE, Governor."

At this time Ralph Metcalf was Secretary of State, and A. O. Evans town clerk of Allenstown.

The first town-meeting under this act was held February 2, 1822, and Charles Bodwell was chosen moderator. The first meeting for the election of town officers, under this act, was held March 13, 1832. Daniel Batchelder was elected representative, Andrew O. Evans town clerk and John Perkins, A. O. Evans and John Tennant selectmen.

Among the first settlers of the town were John Wolcott, Andrew Smith, Daniel Evans and Robert Buntin.

Mr. Buntin and a son ten years of age and one James Carr, while at work on the west bank of the Merrimack, were attacked by Indians, who killed Carr and captured Buntin and his son and marched them as prisoners to Canada. Here they were sold to a Frenchman residing in Montreal. After a captivity of eleven months they escaped and returned to their home. The son was Andrew Buntin, who served in the Revolutionary War until his death, which occurred at White Plains October 28, 1776.

Documentary History.—

Certificate of Three Soldiers liable to have their Tax abated.

"Allentown.

"This is to certify that george wins John Jockins and Jeans megoy [McCoy] was in the Continente serves agreed to the vote of this province past in the year 1775 should be taken of John heyes By us

"that the pole tax is "BENJ MATTHES 0 4 0 6 p^r head Select men to the state

"13-6 Sworn to June 12, 1777, before
"W^m PARKER Jus. Peace.

"JOSEPH DENNET Constable for 1776."

Return of Number of Rateable Polls, 1783.

"In obedience to the Order of the Hon^{ble} General Court we the subscribers Select Men of Allentown have made the Following to be the Exact Number of Rateable polls from Twenty one years old & upwards in the bounds of said Allentown viz. thirty Polls

"GEORGE EVANS } Select
"SAMUEL WEBSTER } men

"Allentown

December 9th A. D. 1783.

"To the Hon^{ble} the General Court of the State of New Hampshire at Concord."

The above was sworn to before Samuel Daniell, of Pembroke, justice of the peace.

Petition for Abatement of Tax.

"State of New } To the Hon^{ble} the Senate and House
Hampshire } of Representatives in General
Court Convened the 14th day of June A. D. 1786.

"The Petition of the Selectmen of Allentown in the County of Rockingham.

"Humbly Sheweth That said Allentown in the year 1781 was called upon by the authority of said State to raise one man to serve in the Continental Army three years or during the war between Great Britain and the United States of America at which time it was supposed by s^d Town that there was then serving in the Army aforesaid a Man for said Town, which if it had been true would have prevented said Demand, but on trial before the Committee of safety it was determined against them, by means whereof s^d Town lost a large sum of money which was paid him for engaging as aforesaid. Your Petitioners afterwards hired one Samuel Kennistown and went with him to the Muster Master, who informed them that a few days before he was ordered not to Muster any more—since which an Extent hath been issued against the Select Men of said Town by the Treasurer for Seventy two pounds twelve shillings, and is in an others hands to execute—As the said Town has ever procured their quota of Men during the late War, tho' but an handful compared with the greatest part of the Towns in the State, and were unfortunately deprived of a Man they supposed that they had a right to, and who they paid for his Service, beg this Hon^{ble} Court would take their case under their Consideration and relinquish the whole or part of said sum.

"And your Petitioners as in duty bound shall ever pray.

"GEORGE EVINS } one, and in behalf of the other Selectmen of said Town"

In answer to the foregoing petition, the Legislature abated forty-two pounds.

Petition for Justice of the Peace.

"State of New Hamp^t } To his Excellency John Rockingham ss } Sullivan Esq and the honourable Privy Council for said State.—Humbly shews that the Inhabitants of Allentown in said State —That your Petitioners tho' small in Numbers Consider themselves Entitled To Common Privileges with other Towns in general in said state, that Ever since the settlement of said Town, the Inhabitants thereof have been destitute of a Civile Magistrate To Transact the Necessary business of said Town, and have ever been Obliged annuall To apply at least six miles and some times more Distance from said Town To a magistrate To qualify Town officers, and frequently upon other business which Proves very inconvenient, and as they humbly Conceive that there is a Person who is a Reputable free holder in said Town, well qualified To sustain such a Commission and the most likley To give general satisfaction as a magistrate, therefore humbly Pray that Capt.
George Evins may be appointed a Justice of the Peace in and for the County aforesaid, and your Petitioners as bound &c.

"Allentown Nov. 1787.

"Robert Buntun, Samel Kinstone, Clement McCoy, Daniel Daves, Ede Hall Bergin, Samuel (his X mark) fisk, Josiah Allen, Jacob Gay, John Trefethen, Moses Leavett, farik Luces, Samuel webster Junr., Philip Sargent, Zablon Davis, Josiah Johnson, Riley Smith, Roger Dugan, Leonard Harrington, Ichabod Clark, James kinniston, John Tomson, Jerimiah Jonson, John Hayes, Nathaniel Smith, Garshom Dugan, Ichabod Clark, Charles Bamford, Samuel Rowe, Hall Bergin, Samuel kinneson, Samuel york, John Jouson, John Robinson."

This petition was not granted.

Petition for Authority to Tax Land for Repairing Highways, &c.

"State of } To the Hon^{ble} General Assembly for New Hamp^t } said State convened at Exeter January 7th 1789.

"Humbly Shew the Inhabitants of Allentown in said State—That from the first settlement of said Town, the Inhabitants thereof (who are very few in number, not exceeding forty rateable polls) have been at the sole expense of maintaining all public roads in the same—that from the roughness of the land, the many streams running through said Town, and the small number of Inhabitants, they find it exceedingly burdensome to keep the roads and bridges (some of which are long and very often carried away by freshets) in barely passable repair—that unless said Inhabitants can have some assistance from the Non-resident Proprietors or owners of lands in said Town, (who are by far the greatest part of the property,) they cannot possibly keep said roads & bridges in proper repair. they therefore pray your Honours to take this their petition under your wise consideration, and alleviate their distress by granting them liberty to assess one penny per acre on all the lands in said Allenstown improved and unimproved for the term of three years, for the purpose of repairing and making passable and convenient the roads and bridges in said town, and as bound &c.

"JOHN LEONARD	Select Men for and
"JOSIAH ALLEN	in behalf of the
"NATHANIEL SMITH	Inhabitants of Allenstown."

The foregoing petition was before the Legislature January 7th, and a hearing ordered for their next session. June 18, 1789, an act passed granting the request.

First Justice of the Peace.

"To His Excellency the President of the State of New Hampshire and the Honorable Privy Council Convened at Exeter May 1790.

"The petition of the Inhabitants of the Town of Allenstown in said State Humbly Shews—

"That your petitioners are desirous that a Justice of the peace may be appointed in said Allenstown (as they never have as yet had the privilege of having one in said Town) and they beg leave to recommend to your Excellency & Honors Capt. George Evans as the most suitable person in said Town for that office and we pray that your Excellency & Honors would take the matter under your wise Consideration & appoint him ye^e said Evans a Justice of the peace in and for the County of Rockingham. And your petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray.

"Allenstown 5th Feby. 1790.

"Ede Hall Bergin, Josiah Morse, John Clark, John Woodward, John Bergin, John Leonard Juner, Nathaniel Smith, John Johnson, Benjamin Mathies, Zebulon Daves, Joshua Cates, Samuel Kinneson Sr, Ichabod Clark Jr, Walter Bergin, Hall Bergin, Amos Carlton, Capt. Staren Sargent, John Leonard, John Hayes, John Hartford, federch Luics [?], James Hartford, Samuel york, Daniel Daves Jr, Ichabod Clark Sr, Joseph Y. Bergin, Robert Buntan, Philip Sargent, Theod Shackford, Josiah Allen, Samuel webster, Samel fisk, Samuel gooken, Nathaniel Smith, Charles Bamford, Samuel Kinneson Jr."

This petition was granted, and Evans became Allenstown's first magistrate.

Captain George Evans was a prominent citizen of the town and held various offices. He was born May 31, 1755, and died November 23, 1801. His wife, Louisa Williams, was born October 17, 1757. They had fourteen children, viz.: John, Daniel, Andrew O., Nancy, Eleanor, Betsey, George, Alfred, Samuel W., Robert, Azenath, Sophia, Alfred and Lucy P.

Captain Robert Buntin was also a prominent citizen. He was born December 1, 1767, and his wife (Betsey Hutchinson) was born January 20, 1770. Their first child, Mehitable, was born June 15, 1791, at "six o'clock in the forenoon."

The following petition relative to building bridges over Suncook River was presented in 1798:

"To the Hon^{ble} the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court convened at Hopkinton, on the first Wednesday in June, A.D. 1798.

"Humbly Shews The Inhabitants of Allenstown in the County of Rockingham that in the year 1759 a Township was incorporated in said County by the name of Pembroke bounded westerly by Merrimac & Soweook Rivers, Northerly upon Chichester & Epsom, & Easterly & Southerly by Suncook River: that when said Pembroke was incorporated, about one mile was taken off from the Westerly part of Allenstown & included in Pembroke: That the Inhabitants of Pembroke have unreasonably refused and still neglect and refuse to build or keep in Repair any part of the Bridges over Suncook River under pretence of their not being liable by Law to build said bridges nor any part of the same, said Town being bounded by Suncook River in the act of Incorporation; by reason whereof your petitioners are in danger of being Compelled to build & keep in Repair all the Bridges across said Suncook River, a burthen which your petitioners in their present situation are wholly unable to bear on account of the fewness of their Number & the great expence of maintaining & keeping in repair the other Roads & Bridges through their town—that the public have a long time suffered much inconvenience and Danger for want of good Bridges over Suncook River, and that said Bridges are now in a Ruinous Condition, the lives of passengers being daily endangered in passing the same: Your petitioners further shew that if that part of Pembroke which was taken off from Allenstown with the Inhabitants was to be Re-annexed to said Allenstown it would not be more than their Just proportion of the Highway tax of said Town to Build and keep in Repair the Bridges over Suncook River;

Wherefore your Petitioners Humbly pray that that part of Allenstown with the Inhabitants thereof, which is included within Pembroke, by said Act of Incorporation, may be Disannexed from Pembroke, and Joined again to that Tract of land known and called by the Name of Allenstown, That they may Thereby be Enabled to build and keep in repair the Roads and Bridges aforesaid,—or that such other relief in the premises may be afforded to your petitioners as your Honors shall think just and Proper, And they as in Duty bound will ever pray “Allenstown June 6th 1798.

“Israel Marden, John Leonard, Samuel Webster, Samuel Fisk, Philip Sargent, John Johnson, Robert Buntin, John Leonard, Jr., Moses Leavitt, Theod. Shackford, Jr., Simon Johnson, David Webster, George Evens, John Hayes, Theod. Shackford, John Fisk, James Buntin, John Hartford, James Clark, Daniel Kinnison, Nathaniel Smith, John Cate, Samuel Davis, Nathaniel Smith, Junr., Hall Burgin, Samuel Wells, Jur.”

The result of this petition was an act extending the easterly and southerly line of the town of Pembroke to the easterly and southerly bank of Suncook River. This act was approved December 24, 1798.

The “New Hampshire Gazetteer,” published by Farmer & Morse, in 1823, says: “There is no settled minister in Allenstown; their meeting-house is open to all religious sects, and they occasionally have preaching. Population, 433.”

Roman Catholic Church.—There is but one church in Allenstown, the Catholic Church in the village of Suncook. The church building is a large and elegant edifice, beautifully located, and was erected at a cost of about forty thousand dollars. The church is under the care of Father J. H. C. Davignon, who is energetic in all efforts to advance the welfare of his people. He is a popular pastor, and his influence is widely felt.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

MAJOR STEELING SARGENT.

Major Sterling Sargent was born in Allenstown March 20, 1794. He was the son of Philip and Sally Peirce Sargent. He early manifested a great interest in music, and became quite proficient as a drummer. When only sixteen years of age he was stationed, with others, at Fort Constitution, in the War of 1812, and commissioned drum-major. He always resided in the town of his birth, and for many years was chosen to represent the same in General Court, and to fill various other offices in the interests of his fellow-citizens. He was born on and inherited the farm now owned by the China Manufacturing Company. He made the brick and built the house in which Colonel D. L. Jewell, the agent, now resides.

He subsequently sold this place to the Pembroke Mills Company, and, moving a short distance to land he owned, there he built a new house and fitted up a home, in which he lived and died.

Mr. Sargent was always a decided Democrat, and was intensely loyal to the government. He lived to see the triumph of the Federal army over the Rebellion, and died in the hope of peace and abounding prosperity to every section of our fair country. He was for many years an honored member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, contributing freely for the building of the late chapel in Suncook village, for the purchase of the organ, and for the support of the various institutions of religion. His democracy and piety were always well illustrated in his liberality and justice. Being for many years an esteemed member of the Masonic fraternity, he met all men “on the level, and parted with them on the square.” He was married, in 1815, to Sally Gault, of Hooksett. She proved to be a woman of uncommon domestic ability, and every way well qualified to preside over a family and a home. She died May 10, 1863. He died June 4, 1868. They lived together nearly fifty years. There were born to them eleven children,—seven sons and four daughters. Three sons died in infancy, and two became young men and then deceased. Six children are now living,—two sons and four daughters. Philip Sargent, the eldest son, resides in the finest brick mansion in the town, which he has erected close by the place where he was born.

Warren Sargent inherits, and now occupies, the old homestead, which is regarded as one of the best farms and pleasantest situations in Allenstown.

These brothers are known as the firm of P. & W. Sargent, brick-makers, Suncook, N. H.

Sallie S., the eldest daughter, first married George Hirsch, who soon after died, and she married Rev. H. H. Hartwell, a Methodist minister and member of the New Hampshire Conference, and now owns and dwells in a fine “cottage home,” near the place of her birth.

Elsie K. is the esteemed wife of Henry W. Forbush, Esq., a merchant in Philadelphia.

Mary H. is the honored wife of W. F. Head, Esq., of Hooksett, a brother and a life-long partner in business, and now occupying the splendid residence of the late ex-Governor Natt. Head.

Abbie H. is the true and faithful companion of Natt. B. Emery, one of the long-known firm of Emery Brothers, and has a palatial residence in Suncook village.

These six children all revere the memory of their departed parents, and in talent and character are living to honor the family name.

REV. HENRY H. HARTWELL.

Rev. Henry H. Hartwell was born in Hillsborough, N. H., October 18, 1819. He was the eldest son of William and Betsy Wilkins Hartwell. They had nine sons and two daughters. Of these, six died in infancy, while five lived to reach manhood.

The family was poor, and at times destitute. When

Sterling Sargent

H. H. Westwell

he was about eight years old, young Henry was sent to Vermont to live with a friend (in order to lighten the burden of family expenses), where he remained for more than four years without seeing his mother, to whom he was greatly attached. He then returned to his native town, and found employment in different places, working during the summer and attending school in the winter-time.

When fourteen years of age he commenced to learn the carpenter's trade, working, as before, in the busy season, and attending school or teaching in the fall and winter. At the age of eighteen he made a profession of religion and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Immediately becoming very active in all the social meetings and interests of the church, he was greatly impressed that it was his duty to take upon himself the work and office of the Christian ministry. He found two barriers in the way: the opposition of his father and friends, and his deep consciousness of unfitness for such an important work. Still, he kept steadily on in the discharge of what he felt to be his duty, and in the improvement of every opportunity, until in the spring of 1840, his zeal having daily increased and his father being less opposed to it, he gave up all, and, leaving home and friends, started on horseback, with saddle-bags, to carry the glad tidings to lost men.

He joined the New Hampshire Conference in 1841, and for thirty-five years performed effective work in the ministry. His educational advantages were limited, but he was a ready extempore speaker, very original, always selecting some object in nature or some fact in history with which his hearers were familiar, that he might more clearly illustrate and forcibly apply the truth he sought to inculcate. He was full of what is called "mother wit," and has ever been regarded as a good student of human nature. He inherited a peculiar eccentricity, which added not a little to his popularity as a preacher. During his active ministry he filled many of the best positions in the Conference, and was always happy in his charge and his work. Under his ministry thousands have been converted and added to the Church of Christ.

Physically he was perfect, and the early muscular training he received was of much benefit at times during his ministry. He was assailed, when in his prime, by three men who had taken offense at something he had said in a temperance-meeting, and with much profanity they informed him of their intention to thrash him. He replied solemnly, "Boys, I don't want my ministerial coat soiled; allow me to take it off and I am ready." When his coat dropped from his hand, the better of the three went to the ground also, and the second was treated in a like manner. Mr. Hartwell then said to the third, "David, if I strike you, you will never rise without help!" And David gave him his hand, and the two together got the others up, washed off the blood and assisted them to their homes. This experience was to the three, in after-years a source of merriment when they met together.

When Mr. Hartwell was pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Nashua, in 1858, one night, in the midst of a powerful revival, some one made a disturbance in the back part of the congregation. He called upon an officer to still or remove the offender. The officer went to the man while Mr. Hartwell delayed reading the hymn. At length he came back to the pulpit without his man. Mr. Hartwell then said, "The officer informs me that this is a desperate fellow; that he has a revolver and swears he won't go out. Now let all be perfectly quiet," and, turning his hymn-book upon the Bible, he walked decidedly up the aisle and said, "Jack Burns, will you go with me quietly out of this house?" The reply was, "Yes, Henry, I will; but there ain't another man in this crowd that can take me out!" He led him out and down into the street, and returning to the pulpit, said, "Now let us worship God."

More than thirty years ago Mr. Hartwell was journeying from New Market to Concord in a sleigh with his wife and little daughter. In the town of Northwood he saw three young men from the leading families in Concord coming driving at a break-neck speed, and their sleigh lapped his about three inches. The driver said, "What now? my horse won't back." Mr. Hartwell said, "My horse will back if I want him to." After a moment one of them said, "What are you going to do?" Mr. Hartwell replied, "I will show you if you like to see," and, stepping out into the snow, he took hold of their sleigh and tipped it, with the men, into the ditch and then drove on. These are only a few of the many reminiscences of his life. He was never a bigot, but was an outspoken, old-fashioned Methodist minister.

He spoke of heaven and hell and called things by their proper names. He was of a very positive nature, making many warm friends and some bitter enemies. He cast his first vote in 1840 with the then despised Anti-Slavery party. His father wept and said to him, "I should rather have buried you than have you vote the nigger ticket!" But he replied, in his own peculiar style, "Old man, you have always told us boys never to be anything because your father was, but investigate and then act as you conscientiously believe to be right. That I have done." And his father never said anything more to him on that subject. Mr. Hartwell always seemed sanguine in the belief that he should live to see the doing away of American slavery, as the sum of all its villainies. After the abolishing of slavery he drifted into the Republican ranks, and for many years has been an earnest worker on that line. He has always been a most decided temperance advocate; and been associated with nearly all the temperance organizations for the last fifty years, believing that all of them have done good. But his great stress has been on prohibition. He has always believed, preached, prayed and voted with the hope, and only hope, of the full and final suppression by law of this great curse. On account of his outspoken opposition to this traffic he has suffered in person, reputation and property. He has been greatly slandered, waylaid, horse-sharred, wagon and harness mutilated and an attempt has been to burn his house by night. But for his faithful dog, he and his family might have gone through the flames of his own dwelling to the rest promised to the people of God. For a few years past he has been so wounded with the duplicity of professed temperance men, and so disgusted with some of his brethren in the ministry who have preached temperance and voted for rum, that he has not taken as prominent a part in public demonstrations as formerly.

A now prominent man has said: "To be duly appreciated he must be thoroughly known. I have known Mr. Hartwell for fifty years intimately, and I would trust him with uncounted thousands of dollars."

He was married, in May, 1842, to Flora Ann Sweatt, of Webster, N. H., who proved every way worthy of his hand and heart. They toiled together for sixteen years, and she died November, 1858, leaving three sons and one daughter. The sons are all living. The daughter was Mrs. Charles T. Daniels, of Lawrence, Mass., who, with her only son, nineteen years of age, was lost on the ill-fated steamer "City of Columbus," off Gay Head, January 18, 1884.

In April, 1861, he married Mrs. Sally Hirsch, a widow, and the eldest daughter of Major Sterling Sargent, of Allenstown. They have one daughter, Mrs. Park Mitchel, now of Manchester. He has been for more than a quarter of a century a member of the Masonic fraternity and of the I. O. O. Fellows, having regularly passed the chairs and been Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of the State in both of these orders.

In 1868 he became a citizen of Allenstown, where he now resides. Although he has never acted or voted with the predominant party, he has been kept in office most of the time, showing the respect for and confidence reposed in him by his fellow-townsmen. He is now a man of sixty-six years, hale and hearty, and weighs two hundred pounds.

HISTORY OF BOSCAWEN.¹

CHAPTER I.

Geographical—The Original Grant—Contoosook—Incorporation of Town—First Proprietors' Meeting—Survey of the Plantation—First Settlers—First Birth—The Pioneer Mill—The First Fort—Indian Troubles—First Town-Meeting—The Pioneer School—First Justice of the Peace—Population in 1767—The First Physician—Whipping-Post

THE town of Boscawen is located near the centre of the county, and is bounded as follows:

North by Salisbury; East by Northfield and Canterbury; South by Concord and West by Webster.

The original grant of this town was made to John Coffin and eighty others, by the government of Massachusetts Bay, June 6, 1733. It was named Contoosook, and bore that name until it was incorporated as a town, April 22, 1760, for a term of two years, by the government of New Hampshire, and given its present name in honor of Admiral Edward Boscawen, of the British navy. This charter was continued for an indefinite term, by the same authority, October 7, 1763. The first proprietors' meeting was held in Newbury, Mass., in 1733, and thirty-three of the proprietors commenced settlements in the town the following spring.

Mr. Richard Hazen, an experienced surveyor, who had been employed by the proprietors of Penacook to survey that plantation, was engaged to make the first survey of Contoosook. The original plot, as laid by him, is on file in the archives of the Secretary of State, Boston.

During the year 1734 thirty-three settlers came to Contoosook, to begin, as it were, life anew in the wilderness. Rev. Mr. Price has handed down the names of twenty-seven only; but from a deposition made by Moses Burbank in 1792 the number is stated as being thirty-three, as follows: David Barker, Sinkler Bean, John Bowen, Josiah Bishop, Andrew Bohannon, Moses Burbank, Philip Call, Thomas Cook, John Corser, William Dagodon, William Danforth, Nathaniel Danforth, Joseph Eastman, Edward Emery, Edward Fitzgerald, Jacob Flanders, Richard Flood, John Fowler, Stephen Gerrish, Ambrose

Gould, Richard Jackman, George Jackman, Joel Manuel, Nathaniel Meloon, William Peters, Nathaniel Riv, Daniel Rolfe.

It is not probable that many of the settlers' families came in the spring, but most, if not all, were there before the close of the year.

November 8, 1734, a meeting of the proprietors was held at the house of Archelaus Adams, in Newbury. It was voted that a saw-mill should be built at the charge of the proprietors, and Daniel Hale, Joseph Gerrish and Thomas Thoria were chosen a committee to attend to the matter. The same committee was empowered to rectify any mistake made in the laying out of lots, and John Brown, the surveyor, was engaged to go to Contoosook to show the proprietors the location of the lots.

Five of the proprietors—Joseph Lund, John Coffin, Thomas Thoria, Benjamin Lunt, Benjamin Coker, and Edward Emery—entered their dissent in regard to the power of the committee.

December 18th another meeting was held. It was voted that the intervale should be fenced by the 15th of May of the following year, at the expense of the owners of the lots, and any proprietor neglecting to build his proportion should make satisfaction. It was also voted that Joseph Tappan should obtain a grind-stone for the common use of the proprietors.

At this meeting further action was taken towards building a saw-mill.

"It was put to vote by the moderator where [whether] they should be a grant of [land] made to those men hereafter named, of the little stream [Mill brook] at Contoosook near the upper end of the lot of town, and fifty acres of land laid square adjoining to the mill for containing thereof on both sides of the stream and also one whole tract throughout the town or plantation on condition they build a saw-mill there by the first of September next ensuing the date hereof, and a good grist mill so soon as there is settled twenty families on the said plantation in case there is water enough to accommodate both mills and the mills be built, and in the length of time by clearing the land or any other way it shall be judged that there is not water to answer the end for said mill or mills, or that the men are obliged to raise the dam a high to save water to saw or grind so as to be judged lawful then the proprietors shall pay the men that built the mill or mills for them the price of what they shall then be accounted worth, or else procure for the men that built the mill or mills the stream commonly called or known by the name of [Mill brook] Contoosook & the privileges thereof as was reserved as by record may appear: they taking the land as it was reserved by each of the said bills for convenience of the mills for part of their rights."—It is so the Records.

¹ The following history is condensed from Charles Carleton Coffin's History of Boscawen and Webster, an excellent work of six hundred and sixty-six pages, published in 1878.

The above, evidently, was not drawn by the clear-headed clerk, Joseph Coffin.

The year opened auspiciously to the settlers, for, on January 7th a daughter was born to Nathaniel Danforth, the first birth in the plantation. The infant was named Abigail, grew to maidenhood and married Thomas Foss, whose name frequently appears in the records of the town.

From action taken in regard to the discharge of the bond given by the fifteen who obligated themselves to build the saw-mill, the evidence is conclusive that the mill had been erected.

"That the lands of the men, which have built the saw-mill be allowed a tax on the lands for building said mill according to vote of the town."

It was the pioneer mill of this section of the Merrimack Valley. The saw-mills of that period were such as any carpenter might construct. This mill had no "nigger" wheel to move the "carriage" back after the saw had passed through the log; that labor was done by a man treading upon the cogs of the "rat-het-wheel,"—labor exceedingly fatiguing. For many years it was the only saw-mill in the town, and several of the houses now standing on King Street are covered with boards which were sawn in this first mill.

The First Fort.—It was voted that a fort should be erected at the expense of the proprietors, the inclosure to be one hundred feet square, built of hewn logs, seven feet high and eight inches thick when hewn, to be built three feet above the logs with such stuff as shall be agreed upon by the committee."

From this record it may be inferred that there was an upper work,—a chevaux-de-frise of pointed, projecting timbers, designed to prevent the enemy from climbing over the wooden walls, which undoubtedly were loop-holed for the use of musketry.

It was voted to locate the fortification on the "school lot." The probabilities are that it was erected a few feet south of that lot, near the spot upon which the first framed house was subsequently erected by Rev. Robie Morrill.

It being found that the inclosure was not large enough to accommodate the entire community, another fortification was erected during the winter. No record has been preserved in regard to the dimensions of this garrison, but it probably was somewhat smaller, and designed as a retreat for the settlers on Queen Street in case of sudden surprise.

Through the years of trouble with the Indians these garrisons served to protect the resolute men who, during the most exciting times, when other frontier settlements were abandoned, never thought of yielding the ground to the foe.

The first attack of the Indians upon Contoocook was made about 1744, though the exact date is unknown. Josiah Bishop, who was at work in his field at the lower end of King Street, was surprised by a party of Indians. They took him into the woods, probably up the rocky hill west of the lower end of King Street. He made an outcry, and quite likely preferred death to captivity. As was subsequently learned from the Indians, he resisted bravely, and they dispatched him with their tomahawks. The capture naturally threw the settlement into commotion; but the citizens having located their homes, determined to defend them. The summer was one of great anxiety. The families took refuge in the garrisons, while sentinels were ever on the watch while the citizens were at work.

The chief item of interest in the call for the annual meeting of the proprietors in 1752 was the erection of a second fort. The meeting was held May 20th, and the following vote was passed:

"Voted to raise 4200 dollars to be laid out in building a garrison or fort A to be built forthwith and to be set on Samuel Gerrish's lot which was originally laid out unto Richard Greenough, said fort to be one hundred A feet to C Square or otherwise as the committee shall Judge, allowing said building to cover the land."

This second fort was erected on the hill. Messrs. Stephen Gerrish, Jacob Flanders and Richard Jackman were placed in charge of the work. It is probable that this fortification stood on the site of the smaller fort, erected during the previous troubles.

We have not been able (says Mr. Coffin) to ascertain what citizens of Contoocook enlisted in the war against the French and Indians. It is not likely that their names would be found on the proprietors' records. It is known that Philip Flanders was killed at Crown Point. He was a ranger in Major Rogers' company. He was the son of Jacob Flanders, one of the first settlers, and lived at the south end of Water Street. He was brother of Deacon Jesse Flanders, who was in one or more of the campaigns against the French and Indians.

Andrew Bohanon, one of the first settlers of Contoocook, also served in one or more campaigns. He was brother-in-law of Philip and Jesse Flanders, having married their sister, Tabitha.

The First Town Meeting.—The first town-meeting was called by the proprietors' clerk, Joseph Coffin.

"This may inform the Free-holders & other inhabitants of the plantation, formerly called Contoocook, is now by his excellency Benning Wentworth, Esq., Governor, &c., In & over His Majesty's Province of New Hampshire made and Incorporated and Invested with Town privileges and the nonness thereof as by His Excellency's People called Rosawcon, the said Freeholders and Inhabitants are hereby notified to meet at the Meeting-House in said Town on the third Wednesday In June at Sun of the clock, before noon, to choose a town clerk, assessors and all other Town officers for the year ensuing as the Law Directs. By order of His Excellency

"April 30, 1759."

"JOSEPH COFFIN."

June 18th, at the meeting thus called, Joseph Coffin was chosen moderator, George Jackman, Jr., town clerk; John Webster, Ensign John Fowler and Captain Joseph Eastman, selectmen and assessors; Benjamin Eastman, constable; Andrew Bohanon, surveyor of highways; and Deacon George Jackman and Moses Burbank, fence-viewers.

It was voted that the selectmen furnish a town pound.

The First School.—At the first annual meeting after the organization of the town an appropriation of thirty pounds was made for a school, to be kept two months. The teacher employed was Mr. Varney, who had preached for a short time after the death of Rev. Mr. Stevens. He was the first teacher employed in the town. If a school was taught prior to this date, it was a private affair. Probably none was taught, and the instruction received by the children was given by their parents. The hardships had been too great, and the country too much disturbed by the frequent Indian alarms and the marchings to and from Ticonderoga and Crown Point, to admit of any organized effort in educational matters. It is gratifying to know that almost the first appropriation of the town was for public instruction. It was a significant indication of its future prosperity.

The first action in law, in which the town was a party, occurred in 1765. At the regular town-meeting, which was held on this day, besides choosing officers, a committee was appointed—George Jackman, Jr., and Thomas Carter—"to answer to the action commenced by Major Samuel Gerrish against said proprietors, also for any other suits that may be brought." What the question in dispute may have been does not appear.

In Rev. Mr. Price's history it is stated that George Jackman, Jr., was appointed justice of the peace in 1760, by His Majesty's authority, George II. We have not been able to verify the statement. George III. was now on the throne, and from the petition given below, it would seem that George Jackman received his appointment under George III., in 1766:

"To His Excellency, Benjamin Wentworth, &c.

"Whereas the Town of Boscawen, in said Province, has, ever since its first settlement, been destitute of a commissioned Justice of the Peace, such an office being often needed (more especially since our late valuable Incorporation by your excellency), we the subscribers and Inhabitants of said town pray your excellency to commissionate Mr. George Jackman, junior, of said Town, to be Justice of the Peace, he having deserved well for several years last past in the acceptable discharge of public Trust to him committed, and your petitioners will ever pray for the granting of their prayer

"Boscawen, January 29, 1766.

•• Ezra Carter	Thomas Corser
John Fowler	Eph ^o Woodbury
Thomas Carter	Jesse Flanders
John Webster	Stephen Call
John Flanders	Moses Foster, petitioners,
William Emery	tho' not an Inhabitant
John Corser	of Boscawen.

ITEMS FROM THE SELECTMEN'S ACCOUNT—1766.

	l	s	d
" Paid to the selectmen for perambulating the line between Boscawen and Alabony [Warren]	0	4	0
paid Nathan Corser for wolf's head	0	4	0
Paid Capt Eastman for entertainment for the council at Mr Morrill's Dismission	1	4	0
Paid Mr. Thomas Foss the Sum of Seven shilling for his Salary toward laying out highways & perambulating between Boscawen & Hopkinton	0	7	0
Paid Mr. William Jerome for preaching two Days	2	8	0 paid Capt. Fowler to expense of town in the house Mr. Fowler	1	0	0 at another time paid him for two bowls of punch	1	0	0

at another bowl of punch for the Justice	0	4	0 paid Capt. Fowler for entertaining Rev. Mr. Ware after preaching	1	0	0
ing	1	0	0
paid him for keeping Mr. Morrill's horse some time	1	0	0 also paid Capt. Fowler for entertaining Sam of the Committee	0	0	0 that was chosen to appoint a place for a meeting house	0	0	0
Remaining on his Book not settled Savill person's Rates, who call themselves churchmen, the whole of the money being	0	0	0

ITEM FROM CONSTABLE THOMAS CARTER'S ACCOUNT

•• Credit to warning-mess Dandord walk out of Town A return	4	0	0
and ye warrant	7	9	0

Population in 1767.—A census of the province was taken during the year,—the first, so far as is known. The population of Boscawen is thus given:

Unmarried men between sixteen and sixty	17
Married men	45
Boys under sixteen	77
Men sixty and above	8
Females unmarried	25
Females married	52
Widows	5
Male slaves	9
Female slaves	9
Total	250

Other towns in the vicinity—population:

Concord	72
Salisbury	219
Cantonbury	91
Danbarton	271
New Boston	296
Hillsborough	94
Canaan	19
Plymouth	27
Newport	25
Haverhill	172

The First Physician.—During the year Dr. Daniel Peterson took up his residence in Boscawen—the first resident physician in the town. He built the house now standing—the first building north of the academy, on the Plain.

The growth of the State and the development of northern section indicated that sooner or later the capital would be moved from Exeter to some more central locality. The matter was strongly agitated during the year 1802-3. Pembroke, Concord, Boscawen, and quite likely other towns, took measures toward securing it. The citizens of Boscawen took hold of the subject zealously, as the following document shows:

"We, the subscribers, promise to pay the sums set against our names for the purpose of erecting a house for the Legislature of New Hampshire, to be placed on Boscawen plain, in the Center, as near as the ground will admit of, between Col. Joseph Gerrish and Mr. Samuel Pearson, by a committee that shall hereafter be appointed to complete the said house, provided the General Court of New Hampshire shall engage to hold their sessions in said Boscawen in seven or ten years, as witness our hand,

"December the 26th, 1803.

Joseph Gerrish	81	William Gill	40
Isaac Chandler	75	Benj. Hills	50
Caleb Patteney	390	Saml. Garven	50
Dennison Bowers	100	Joel French	50
Nathl. Green	100	Winthrop Carter	25
Nathan Carter	150	Humphry Webster	25
Samuels Peabody	100	Theo. Carter	50
Theo. Gilmore	40	George Perkins	10
Joseph H. Morrill	40	Charles Eastman	10
Jeremiah Morrill	20	Joseph Atkinson	15
John Gill	25	Enoch Danford	10
Jonas Hutchinson	75	Henry Gerrish	50
Simson Danforth	5	Silas Rolfe	10
Wm G. Emerson	10	Benj. Rolfe, Jr.	20
Enoch Gerrish, Jr.	10	Moses Manuel	5
Joshua Morse	10	Samuel Burbank	10
Joshua Carlton	10	Samuel East	4
Timothy Dix	50	Joseph Burbank	5
Saml. Peterson	5	John Flanders, Jr.	4
James East	10	David Burbank	2
John S. Aldott	20

*We, a part of the above subscribers, do hereby engage to pay the above sums annexed to our names in case the Genl Court should adjourn to this place for one session only.

Henry Gerrish	Benj. Rolfe, Jr.
Caleb Patteney	John Gill.
Joseph H. Morrill	Nathan Carter
Jeremiah Morrill	Joshua Carter
Benj. Hill

The public whipping-post stood near Gilmore's tavern. The only instance of a public whipping of an offender occurred in 1809.

CHAPTER 11.

BOSCAWEN —(Continued).

MILITARY HISTORY.

The Heroes of Four Wars—The French and Indian War—The War of the Revolution—War of 1812—War of the Rebellion

IN 1711, at the outbreak of the French War, Richard Flood served the provincial government in some capacity in the expedition to Canada. It is not known that he went as a soldier. The only record of his service is a notice of his petition for aid from the government, in the records of the provincial committee, for service rendered in the expedition to Canada.

The same year Philip Call served as a scout in Captain Jeremiah Clough's company, from January 21st to March 18th, receiving two pounds ten shillings. Captain Clough lived in Canterbury, and was a leading citizen of that town.

Captain John Clough commanded a company in Penacook at the same time, of which Nathaniel Rix was a soldier.

In 1716, Captain John Goffe, of Bedford, commanded a company of scouts, in which Joseph Eastman, Jr., Deacon Jesse Flanders, his brother, John Flanders, Jr., and William Corser served as privates thirty seven days, having been called out by the attacks of the Indians on Penacook and Contoocook, killing Thomas Cook and capturing Cesar, Rev. Mr. Stevens' negro.

Later in the season Captain Ladd arrived with a company, in which Philip Flanders, Joseph Eastman and Jacob Flanders enlisted. In this company was Robert Rogers, afterwards the celebrated ranger.

At the same time Philip Call was doing duty in Captain Clough's company, being out one hundred and fifty-four days, receiving £8 13s. 3d.

In 1747, Captain Clough, of Canterbury, was out from the 5th of January to the 12th of November. Philip Call and John Manuel served under him, receiving £16 10s. 10d., besides provisions and ammunition. Upon the return of this company, Captain Ebenezer Eastman, of Concord, began a winter campaign, being out with his company from November 14, 1747, to May 9, 1748. Rev. Phineas Stevens served as a private. In all probability he preached on Sunday to the soldiers in camp.

In 1748, Captain Goffe was scouting the frontier with a company in which William Corser served as a private. At the same time, Captain Moses Foster, of Suncook, was ranging the frontier with a company, of which Rev. Mr. Whittemore, minister of Pembroke, was lieutenant. Ezekiel Flanders, killed in 1756 at Newfound Lake, by the Indians, served in this company one month, from June 6th to July 7th.

Peace having been made between England and France, there was no further need of military service till 1754, when the Indians again began their depredations, killing William Stinson, and taking John Stark and Eastman prisoners on Baker's River, capturing the Meloon family of Salisbury, and killing Mrs. Philip Call and Timothy Cook, in Stevenstown.

Military service was no longer confined to the Merrimack Valley,—the theatre of war was transferred to the Upper Hudson and the lakes. Colonel Blanchard commanded a regiment, in which Benjamin Eastman, of Boscawen, enlisted under Captain John Goffe, serving from April 24th to October 23d.

One company was commanded by Captain Thomas Tash, of Durham, in which John Corser enlisted. Captain Joseph Eastman commanded another company, in which Winthrop Carter, Moses Manuel, Samuel Manuel, Joseph Eastman, Andrew Bohomon, William Jackson and John Fowler served.

Another regiment was commanded by Colonel Nathaniel Folsom. Upon the muster-roll is the name of Nathaniel Meloon, son of the first settler of that name in Contoocook.

In the Crown Point expedition John Fowler, Joel Manuel and Joseph Eastman served, under Captain John Goffe.

In 1758, Daniel Shepherd and Philip Flanders served in Captain Ladd's company, Colonel Hart's regiment, sent to Crown Point. Nathaniel Meloon served in Captain Todd's company.

In Rev. Mr. Price's history, it is stated that Philip Flanders was killed at Crown Point in 1756, which is manifestly an error, his name appearing on the muster-roll from April 24th to November 1, 1758, on which day he probably was killed.

There is no record to show the military organization in the town from the close of the French War, in 1760, to the beginning of the Revolution, in 1775. The law required all able-bodied men, between sixteen and sixty, to be enrolled in the train-bands. A town containing thirty-two men liable to do military duty could have a military organization of its own. There being more than that number of soldiers in the town, it had a "train-band."

War of the Revolution.—The news of the attack of the British at Lexington reached Boscawen on the 20th, and on the 21st sixteen men were on the march under Captain Henry Gerrish. They were,—

Henry Gerrish, captain; Silas Call, lieutenant; Winthrop Carter, sergeant; Samuel Fowler, Esq., Edmund Chadwick, John Flanders, John Stephens, Nathaniel Burbank, Samuel Jackman, David Flanders, Charles Greenfield, Peter Roswell Stevens, Israel Shepard, Isaac Davis, Edward Gerald, Nathaniel Atkinson.

We may think of them as assembling at Fowler's tavern, at the lower end of King Street, with their guns and powder-horns, and possibly, here and there, a citizen carried a knapsack. They fill their canteens with rum at Mr. Fowler's bar, and take a parting drink with their neighbors. We see them crossing "Town-house Brook," and hear the tramp of their marching as they pass over Contoocook bridge.

The news must have reached town on the morning of the 20th. Captain Peter Coffin saddled his horse and started for Exeter, where we find him on the 21st, in consultation with sixty-eight other delegates—"to consult what measures shall be thought most expedient to take in this alarming crisis."

At a meeting of the town the following votes were passed:

"Voted to buy one barrel of Gunpowder, one hundred weight of lead and one hundred flints.

"Voted that Capt. Stephen Gerrish buy the stores at as reasonable price as may be, for the use of the town.

"Voted to adhere strictly to the advice of the Continental Congress."

A committee was appointed "to see if the aforesaid laws of Congress be obeyed."

The Committee of Safety consisted of Benjamin Jackman, Joseph Atkinson, Ebenezer Hidden, John Elliot, Captain Henry Gerrish, Lieutenant Moses Call, George Jackman and Ensign Peter Kimball.

March 14th a committee was appointed to procure a preacher, and was instructed to apply to Mr. Levi Frisby.

Twenty-five pounds was voted for school purposes, and it was also voted to employ Mr. Morrill (Mr. Robie Morrill) as teacher.

Twenty pounds was voted for preaching.

THE ASSOCIATION TEST.—Every citizen of Boscawen, with one exception, signed what was known as the Association Test. From this document, we have the name of every male adult in town in the spring of 1776, not including those who were doing military service,—

"Joseph Hoyt, Moses Call, Moses Morse, Jesse Flanders, Moses Burbank, John Flanders, Daniel Noyes, Daniel Clark, Benj. Day, Nathan Corser, Joseph Atkinson, Enoch Morrill, Moses Burbank, Jr., Thomas Gardner, Samuel Atkinson, Jeremiah Hidden, Caleb Morrill, Daniel Peterson, Benjamin Conch, Jacob Flanders, John Knowlton, Ebenezer Henry Gerrish, Daniel Shepard, Isaac Pearson, Winthrop Carter, Samuel Davis, Benj. Robie, Ezekiel Flanders, John Elliot, Jr., Thomas Elliot, John Muzay, John Jackman, James Gates [Gould?], Ems. Flanders, Jolehah Danford, Jesse Flanders, Jr., William Danford, Jr., Samuel Corser, Stephen Gerrish, Samuel Burbank, Moses Jackman, Enoch Gerrish, John Morrill, Silas Call, Joseph Gerrish, Michl Sargent, Thomas Beld, Simeon Jackman, William Welch, Moses Call, David Burbank, Simeon Atkinson, Timothy Eastman, Joseph Pearson, Joseph Flanders, Friend Lattle, John Corser, Edmund Chadwick, Moses Morse, Jr., Moses Mammel, Samuel Jackman, Daniel Richards, David Corser, Asa Corser, John Corser, Edward Gates [Gould?], John Mammel, Bitfield Plummer, David Carter, Nathaniel Gooden, John Stevens, Samuel Ames, Thomas Corser, Jonathan Atkinson, Samuel Clifford, Peter Kimball, John Hale, Robert Elliot, James French, Saml. Danford, Benjamin Jackman, Joseph Muzay, Samuel Muzay, Isaac Noyes, Peter Roswell Stevens, William Danford, Nicholas Elliot, Captain Stephen Gerrish, Nathaniel Atkinson, Enoch Lattle, Nathan Davis, John Bean, John Fowler, John Heley, Peter Coffin, Oliver Fowler, John Bowley, John Bowley, Jr., John Corser, Jr., George Jackman, Samuel Agaton, John Crag, George Jackman, Jr., Cutting Noyes, John Elliot, Joseph Eastman,—total, one hundred and eight.

"To the honorable Council and House of Representatives for the Colony of New Hampshire, or Committee of Safety. This may certify that the within Declaration have been offered to the Inhabitants of Boscawen and unannouncedly signed, excepting one (viz. i. e. Aaron Flanders) Refused to sign the same.

"GEORGE JACKMAN,
"CUTTING NOYES,
"JOHN ELLIOT," } Subscribes.

"June 2, 1776."

It is probable that Mr. Flanders' refusal to sign was not from any hostility to the cause of liberty, nor from fear of consequences, but from his temperament as an individual. He was a person who found pleasure in being on the side opposite the majority, no matter what the question. It is not known that his fellow-citizens abated their confidence in his loyalty from his refusal to sign this declaration of independence.

March 29th the citizens deliberated on the state of the country, and passed the following patriotic votes:

"That Capt. Stephen Gerrish, Capt. Peter Kimball, Samuel Fowler Esq., Lieut. Benj. Jackman, Mr. John Flanders, & George Jackman Esq. be a committee to propose a plan and lay before the Town for procuring the men to go into the service of the United States of America agreeable to order of Cont."

"Voted, That the way for time past & for future be maintained by a tax on the Inhabitants in the same manner as the Law directs for Province Tax, allowing a man no more for four months' service on his credit in the Southern army than for three months in the Northern army and so in proportion."

"Voted, To give fifty dollars as a bounty or hire from this Town to each man who shall engage to go into the service of this Town for three years."

"Voted, That the selectmen provide the money to pay the men who shall enlist."

April 25th the citizens again assembled to take measures to push on the war,—

"Voted, To carry on the war by a tax in equal proportion, on the inhabitants according to interest in the same manner as for their town tax.

A committee was appointed, consisting of George

Jackman, Captain Peter Kimball, John Elliot, Lieutenant Enoch Gerrish, Mr. John Flanders, Samuel Muzzy, Captain Samuel Atkinson and Isaac Pearson, "to enquire into the state of service already done in the war, and make a just and equitable estimate of each Term that has been done and make report."

DIARY OF CAPT. HENRY GERRISH

"Friday 21 April, 1775

"Sailed for Cambridge with Lieut. Call, Sergeant Carter, Esq. Fowler, Edmund Chadwick, John Flanders, John Stevens, Nathaniel Burbank, Samuel Jackman, David Flanders, Charles Greenfield, Peter Rowell Stevens, Isaac Shepard, Isaac Davis, Edward Gerold, & arrived at Cambridge on Sunday A. M. I tarried till Tuesday, & then Esq. Fowler set out for home on Wednesday Lieut. Call, Winthrop Carter & Nathaniel Atkinson set out for home. Nathaniel Atkinson and probably other soldiers had joined the company between Friday and Wednesday. I therefore met our company on Wednesday morning William Forrest, Timothy Foss, Jeremiah Gibson, Aaron Sargeant, John Boon, John Kears, Abrahm Finch, Joseph Lovell, Moses Webb.

These last were probably citizens of Salisbury.

Some of the Bosceawen soldiers, in common with those of other towns, soon returned home, while others hastened to Cambridge to fill their places. Those from Bosceawen enlisted in Captain Joshua Abbott's company, Colonel Stark's regiment. Captain Abbott was a citizen of Concord, well-known to the Bosceawen men. He had served in the French War, and was a brave and gallant officer. Samuel Atkinson was elected lieutenant, and Samuel Corser and Nathan Davis corporals. They had all confidence in their colonel, John Stark, who had seen hard service in the last war against the French and Indians.

ROLL OF HONOR AT BUNKER HILL.—Those engaged in the battle of Bunker Hill from Bosceawen were, —

Capt. — Lieutenant Samuel Atkinson Lieutenant Moses Call, Corporal Samuel Corser, Corporal Nathan Davis

Private.—David Burbank, Nathaniel Burbank, Moses Burbank, Jr., Edw. Bowley, Edmund Chadwick, William Corser, Asa Corser, Isaac Davis, Joshua Danforth, John Elliot, John Flanders, David Flanders, Deacon Jesse Flanders

In Captain Aaron Kinsman's company, John Manned, who was killed; in Captain —'s company, Joseph Crouch, who was wounded on the retreat by a spent cannon-ball.

The following receipt is in possession of Luke Corser, Esq.:

"BOSCEAWEN, May 21 1775

"Received of David Corser of Bosceawen a gun marked on the Butch W. C. B. which Gun Charv. Received for the use of the soldiers Now in the County Service who went from Bosceawen under the command of Capt. Abbott in order to defend the Country against the Troops under General Gage Now at Boston. Received by me

"SAMUEL ATKINSON "

"W. C. B." undoubtedly means William Corser, Bosceawen. He was an uncle of David Corser, who gave him one hundred acres of land, on Pleasant Street, for the gun.

In September volunteers were called for to join Arnold's expedition to Quebec up the Kennebec River—an expedition attended by terrible hardships, resulting in failure, the capture of nearly all of Arnold's command and the death of General Montgomery.

Deacon Jesse Flanders, John Flanders, Jr., and Nicholas Davis enlisted in Captain Henry Dearborn's command, and were captured in the attack upon Quebec. They were kept in irons a short time, liberated on parole in August, 1776, and reached New York by sea September 25th.

In December, 1775, additional soldiers were called for, and Nicholas Elliot, Moses Burbank, Benjamin Webster and David Carter served during the winter in the siege of Boston.

During the year 1776 soldiers were called for for the defense of Ticonderoga from the threatened attack of Sir Guy Carleton, and twenty-three men enlisted,—

Lieutenant Enoch Gerrish, Thomas Carter, Daniel Carter, John Jackman, James Gerold (died), Joseph Pearson, John Muzzy, John Flanders, Ernest Little, Thomas Beadle, Joseph Atkinson, Nathaniel Atkinson, Joshua Danforth, Isaac Davis, Lieutenant Samuel Fowler, Deacon Joseph Hart, Colonel Henry Gerrish, Charles Greenfield, John Hale, Samuel Jackman, Phineas Stevens (died), Nathaniel Burbank, Joseph Crouch

Upon the evacuation of Long Island by General Washington the militia were called out in the eastern colonies. Bosceawen sent eight soldiers,—

Captain Peter Kimball, Lieutenant Benjamin Jackman, Ensign Samuel Ames, Butch Plummer, Moses Morrill, Daniel Richards, Samuel Jackman, Cutting Noyes

Bosceawen furnished three soldiers for the winter campaign on the Hudson.—Lieutenant Winthrop Carter, John Urau and Samuel Burbank.

Colonel Henry Gerrish was in the service of the State obtaining supplies.

"BOSCEAWEN, February 1, 1776

"Received of Henry Gerrish one Hundred & sixty-six Blankets, Fifty seven Knives & one Barrel of spirits which I promise to deliver Major Gages of Rumney for Old Israel Motey

"ESTHER BEAN

"Recd of Col. Henry Gerrish one Hundred and eighty one pounds fourteen shillings & 4 m (lawful money) to pay Thirty Three Men which I am ordered to raise out of my Regiment to reinforce the army at New York their advance pay and Billotting, which men are to serve till the first day of March next unless sooner discharged

"December 10th 1776.

"THOMAS STOKESBY "

At a town-meeting held the last Monday in May, 1777, voted "to raise sixty pounds to pay the four men hired by said town to serve in the Continental Army for the term of three years."

A committee was appointed "to join the military officers in making draughts of men as may be wanted from time to time for the Continental service."

"Resolved, That the selectmen raise a tax so large that there be sixty pounds left after the proportional part of those who have done service is abated "

The selectmen addressed a letter to the Committee of Safety,—

"BOSCEAWEN, May 17, 1777

"Gentlemen —

"In consequence of Express orders, the Town of Bosceawen is this Day assembled & called on by the Capt. of said town that each man be immediately a Quip according to Law and as there is found wanting a Number of Fire Arms Ammunition &c we have Employed Capt Samuel Atkinson and Mr. Joseph Gerrish to procure the same We Desire your favor if there be any guns in store to be purchased that you would give Capt Atkinson your advice & assistance & also a quantity of lead. Mr Atkinson will be able to inform you of the Number of arms & Quantity of Lead wanted to a Quip said Town & your Favor herein will Greatly oblige your Humble Servants,

GEORGE JACKMAN, } Selectmen
 COLLING, NOYES } 1

"To the Committee of Safety at Exeter."

Orders from Colonel Thomas Stickney, who lived in Concord, reached Captain Kimball July 1st, to be ready with his company to march at a minute's warning to oppose General Burgoyne, who was advancing from Canada to Lake Champlain. Captain Kimball's company marched July 4th.

CAPTAIN KIMBALL'S DIARY

- " July 1st, 1777, orders came from Col. Stickney to me, to muster and Equip one Quarter part of the Company to march at a minute's warning, and in consequence of the same, we met to get the men.
- " July 1, orders came to march 15 men immediately to be [Tronblet again]
- " Saturday we marched to perrytown [Sutton], and Lodged there.
- " Sunday 6, we marched to Unity and Lodged there—
- " Monday 7, we marched to No. 1, and Lodged there & draw'd 4 Day allowance
- " Tuesday 8, we marched to Cavendish and Lodged there.
- " Wednesday 9, we marched to No. 4 again
- " Thursday 10th, we marched to Unity and Lodged.
- " Friday 11, we marched home."

The men engaged in this service were,—

Colonel Henry Gerrish, Captain Peter Kimball, Captain Peter Coffin, Lieutenant Isaac Gerrish, Lieutenant Moses Call, Nathan Corser, Samuel Child, Deacon Jesse Flanders, Enos Flanders, Nathaniel Atkinson, Simon Atkinson, George Jackman, Jr., John Morrill, Deacon Isaac Pearson, Daniel Clark, Daniel Shepherd, John Mammel, Michael Sargent, James French, Benjamin Sweet, Moses Jackman.

Men were called for to go to Coos and six men sent as the town's quota,—

Captain Samuel Atkinson, Jeremiah Holden, Moses Morse, William Banforth, Jedidah Banforth, George Jackman

A full company consisted of sixty men. Captain Kimball marched from Boscawen with twenty-two, but four others joined him, making twenty-six from Boscawen. The Concord soldiers, under Lieutenant Richard Herbert, joined him on the march. The company was thus organized,—

Captain Peter Kimball, Boscawen, Lieutenant Richard Herbert, Concord; Ensign Andrew Pettengill, Salisbury; Sergeant Jesse Abbot and Sergeant Abner Flanders, Concord; Sergeant William Banforth and Sergeant Nathan Davis, Boscawen; Corporal Richard Flood, Concord; Corporal Richard Burbank, Boscawen; Corporal John Abbot, Corporal Theodore Farnum and Etes Elias Abbot, Concord; Drummer Asa Corser, Boscawen.

Private—Stephen Abbot, Ezra Abbot, Benjamin Ambrose, Jonathan Ambrose and Peter Blanchard, Concord; Wells Burbank and Thomas Beelle, Boscawen; Phillbrick Bradley, Concord; Jonathan Corser, David Corser, Daniel Carter, Nathan Carter and Abner Chase, Boscawen; Simon Banforth, Concord; Elkanah Banforth and Timothy Banforth, Boscawen; Rouben Diamond and Benjamin Elliot, Concord; James French and Jesse Flanders, Boscawen; Ephraim Fisk, Jr., Israel Gilmes, Solomon Gage and David George, Concord; Charles Greenfield and John Hutchins, Boscawen; Samuel Hickson and Abad Hall, Concord; Jedidah Holt, Timothy Jackman, William Jackman and John Jackman, Boscawen; Timothy Johnson, Concord; Benjamin Little, Friend Little, Samuel Morse and Isaac Pearson, Boscawen; John Peters, Anthony Porter, Phineas Stevens, William Symonds and Simon Trumbull, Concord; Daniel Crut, Boscawen; Gilman West, Concord,—fifty-seven

CONTINENTAL SOLDIERS.—Three regiments were raised by the State at the beginning of the war for the Continental service. The muster-rolls of Stark—the first—give the names of six citizens of Boscawen, with the date of enlistment and discharge,—

- " Batchelder, William, Enlisted 19 Jan. 1777, Dis 1 Jan. 1780
- " Bishop, Enos, Enlisted 1 Jan. 1777, dis'd 8 Aug. 1778. He was killed by the Indians 15 Aug. 1781, & taken to Canada.
- " Evans, Edward, Enlisted 1 Feb. 1777, Discharged 1 Dec. 1781
- " Flanders, Philip, Enlisted 1 Jan. 1777, Discharged 1 Jan. 1782
- " Halcomb, Matthew, enlisted 1 Jan. 1777, Disch'd 9 July, 1777
- " Stevens, Peter Roswell, enlisted 1 Jan. 1777, Discharged 1781"

These, with the exception of Halcomb, took part in the battle of Stillwater, September 19th, and of Saratoga, October 7th. In the first battle three New Hampshire regiments and Dearborn's battalion of two hundred and fifty New Hampshire troops were attached to Morgan's riflemen, and with them did all the fighting from one o'clock till nearly four in the afternoon, sustaining the brunt of the battle. The Sixty-second British Regiment of six hundred men was nearly annihilated by their withering fire.

The call for troops during the year was for the defense of Rhode Island. Below are the names of the soldiers who served in that campaign:

FROM THE SELECTIONS BOOKS

"The Men Hereafter Named have Received the SMALL SUMS set against each of these Names in consequence of their going to Rhode Island at the request of the Committee of Safety,—

Enoch Gerrish	10 0 0
Joseph Gerrish	10 0 0
Daniel Shepherd	10 0 0
Joseph Flanders	10 0 0
Moses Burbank	10 0 0
Thomas Gordon	10 0 0
Nathan Davis	10 0 0
John Flanders	10 0 0
Isaac Pearson	10 0 0
Wells Burbank	10 0 0
Humphrey Jackman	10 0 0
Samuel Morrill	10 0 0
Jedidah Holt	10 0 0
	420 0 0

"To the Treasurer of the State of New Hampshire
 Sir, please to allow Wmthrop Carter, & his wife for Boscawen, the above sum of one hundred & thirty pound out of the State Tax for Boscawen, assessed to order of the committee of safety.

GEORGE JACKMAN, } Selectmen
 COLLING, NOYES, } for Boscawen

Boscawen, Sept. 3, 1778

The war having been transferred to the Southern States, there was no further call for the militia. Several citizens enlisted in the Continental service, but their names are not known, except those serving in the First Regiment.

In 1798, in consequence of the interference of French war-ships with American merchantmen, serious trouble was apprehended between the United States and France; Congress established a provisional army of eighty thousand men, and appointed Washington lieutenant-general.

Nathaniel Green, Esq., was commissioned a captain, with Moses Sweet, of Concord, first lieutenant, and Israel W. Kelley, of Concord, second lieutenant. Eight citizens of Boscawen enlisted,—

Sergeant Joseph Flanders, Moses Jackman, Daniel Colby, Benjamin Fisk, Moses Cooper, Nathan Danforth, Bernard Young, Joshua Sawyer.

The company assembled at Concord, having their quarters for a few days at Osgood's tavern, and from thence marched to Oxford, Mass., the rendezvous for the New England troops. Negotiations were entered into and a war averted, and the soldiers discharged.

War of 1812. Colonel Timothy Dix commanded a United States regiment on the frontier, and died in the service.

Several British ships of war made their appearance on the coast, and it was supposed that Portsmouth would be attacked. The militia was called out to defend it. There were two drafts,—one for three and the second for two months.

Those serving under the first draft were,—

Fusion Richard Little, John Stone, Moses Call, Elsieh Barbank, Samuel Barbank, Moses Cross, Steple in Danforth, John Eastman, Jacob Flanders, Josiah Galt, Nicholas Goskin, Simon Jackman, Joseph Moses, Daniel Shepard,—forty-two.

Under the second draft for two months,—

Captain Silas Call (who died in service), Ebenezer Barbank, Jesse Sweet Benjamin Sey-Lane, Amos Bolt, William Hames, Gay C. Flanders, May Eastman, Samuel Watson, Ephraim Noyes, James Noyes, Theodor George, Ebenezer Mosby, Amos Sawyer, Samuel Jackman,—fifty-two.

Of those enlisting in the regular service, the names of a few only are known,—

Benjamin Jackman, Moses Jackman, Edmund Day, killed, Benjamin Fisk, died, — Fisk, died, Chellis Eastman, died, George Littlefield, died, Elphaleht Burpee, died.

Military Record, 1861-65.—The following is a list of the soldiers from Boscaawen who served in the War of the Rebellion:

Fisher Ames, enlisted in Company E, Seventh Regiment
 Henry H. Ayer, enlisted in Company B, Third Regiment.
 Daniel C. Abbot, enlisted in Company E, Seventh Regiment.
 Edmund W. Adkinson, enlisted in Company E, Sixteenth Regiment.
 James W. Bent, enlisted in Company F, Sharpshooters.
 William H. Branson, enlisted in Company H, Fourth Regiment.
 James T. Boynton, enlisted in the Sharpshooters.
 John H. Brown, enlisted in Company F, Ninth Regiment.
 Cyrus B. Bidwell, enlisted in Company E, Seventh Regiment.
 George F. Bidwell, enlisted in Company E, Seventh Regiment.
 Lieutenant Henry W. Baker, enlisted in Company E, Seventh Regiment.
 Lieutenant William W. Ballard, enlisted in Company B, Second Regiment.

Thomas Brauman, enlisted in the navy.
 Samuel Chandler, enlisted in Company E, Seventh Regiment.
 John Clancy, enlisted in Company E, Seventh Regiment.
 Patrick Clancy, enlisted in Company K, Ninth Regiment.
 Alonzo Chase, enlisted in Company I, Fourth Regiment.
 Edwin H. Chadwick, enlisted in the Sharpshooters.
 George Cothran, enlisted in Company E, Sixteenth Regiment.
 George Call, enlisted in Company H, Fourteenth Regiment.
 Hale Chadwick, enlisted in Company C, Seventeenth Regiment.
 Albert J. Crane, enlisted in Twenty-second Massachusetts Regiment.
 John F. Colby, enlisted in the cavalry.
 Nicholas Duff, enlisted in Company G, Second Regiment.
 Nathan C. Danforth, enlisted in Company A, Fifth Regiment.
 William Duckworth, enlisted in Company F, Seventh Regiment.
 Hiram H. Danforth, enlisted in the cavalry.
 Sylvanus E. Danforth, enlisted in Company A, Fifth Regiment.
 George Damon, enlisted in Company B, Second Regiment.
 George Day, enlisted in Second Heavy Artillery.
 Wilson Day, enlisted in Second Heavy Artillery.
 Isaac C. E. Day, enlisted in Company I, Seventh Regiment.
 Curtis Flanders, enlisted in Company I, Fourth Regiment.

David A. Flanders, enlisted in Company E, Tenth Regiment.
 Frederick H. Favor, enlisted in Third Regiment.
 Josiah H. Flanders, enlisted in the cavalry.
 David L. Flanders, enlisted in the navy.
 Hiram Gage, enlisted in Company B, Third Regiment.
 John Mayler, enlisted in Company C, Seventh Regiment.
 John Mitchell, enlisted in Third Regiment.
 John Muzzey, enlisted in Company E, Second Regiment.
 Charles Morse.
 Hiram J. Morrill, enlisted in the Heavy Artillery.
 Charles Moulton, enlisted in the navy.
 Daniel Morse, enlisted in the Sharpshooters.
 Herbert M. Evely, enlisted in Company H, Tenth Regiment.
 Benjamin Morrison, enlisted in the Sharpshooters.
 Alonzo Page, enlisted in Company B, Eleventh Regiment.
 Henry Pearson, enlisted in the Sharpshooters.
 William M. Pierce, enlisted in Company K, Ninth Regiment.
 William H. Perry, enlisted in Eighth Regiment.
 Decker Pitbard, enlisted in Company E, Seventh Regiment.
 John Paxon, enlisted in Company E, Seventh Regiment.
 John H. Pittenburgh, enlisted in the Heavy Artillery.
 Charles Riley, enlisted in Company A, Fifth Regiment.
 Liberty G. Raymond, enlisted in Company E, Seventh Regiment.
 Michael Reardon, enlisted in Company G, Fourth Regiment.
 Martin Reynolds, enlisted in the navy.
 Walter S. Raley, enlisted in Company E, Third Regiment.
 Jeremiah Sheehan, enlisted in Company C, Third Regiment.
 Charles P. Shepard, enlisted in the Sharpshooters.
 Peter K. Shepard, enlisted in Company E, Sixteenth Regiment.
 Horace Smart, enlisted in Company E, Sixteenth Regiment.
 Alexander S. Stevens, enlisted in Company E, Seventh Regiment.
 William H. Story, enlisted in Company E, Second Regiment.
 Joseph S. Swart, enlisted in Company E, Second Regiment.
 Calvin W. Simonds, enlisted in the Sharpshooters.
 Curtis Smith, enlisted in the Seventh Regiment.
 Joseph Simonds, enlisted in Company E, Seventh Regiment.
 William Sewell, enlisted in the navy.
 Franklin Spearman, enlisted in the navy.
 John Spellman, enlisted in the navy.
 Nathaniel Thurston, enlisted in the Sharpshooters.
 James S. Tyler, enlisted in the Sharpshooters.
 Barnard Thurston, enlisted in Company A, Fifth Regiment.
 Sumner P. Tewksbury, enlisted in Company K, Third Regiment.
 Samuel F. Tewksbury, enlisted in Company G, Eighth Regiment.
 John C. Thurston, enlisted in Company G, Eighth Regiment.
 John P. Thurston, enlisted in Company F, Fourth Regiment.
 Matthew Wooley, enlisted in Company E, Seventh Regiment.
 Samuel Wooley, enlisted in Company A, Fifth Regiment.
 Albert B. Woodward, enlisted in Company K, Fourth Regiment.
 Charles S. Whitney, enlisted in the navy.

Citizens liable to do military duty April 30, 1865	140
Total quota under all calls	71
Soldiers in service, volunteers and substitutes	85
Surplus	14

CHAPTER III.

BOSCAAWEN—(Continued).

Biographical—The Boscaawen Academy—Congregational Church—Population—Civil History.

Biographical.—CHARLES CARLETON COFFIN,¹—Among the emigrants from England to the western world in the great Puritan exodus was Joanna Thember Coffin, widow, and her son Tristram and her two daughters, Mary and Eunice. Their home was in Brixton, two miles from Plymouth, in Devonshire. Tristram was entering manhood's prime—thirty-three years of age. He had a family of five children. Quite likely the political troubles between the King and Parliament, the rising war-cloud, was the impelling motive that induced the family to leave country, home, friends and all dear old things, and become emigrants to the New World. Quite likely Tristram, when a youth, in 1629, may have seen the "Mayflower" spread her white sails to the breeze and fade away in the western horizon, for the departure of that company of pilgrims must have been the theme of conversation in and around Plymouth. Without doubt it set the young man to thinking of the unexplored continent beyond the stormy Atlantic. In 1632 his neighbors and friends began to leave, and in 1642 he, too, bade farewell to dear old England, to become a citizen of Massachusetts Bay.

He landed at Newbury, settled first in Salisbury and ferried people across the Merrimack between Salisbury and Newbury. His wife, Dionis, brewed beer for thirsty travelers. The sheriff had her up before the courts for charging more per mug than the price fixed by law, but she went seat free on proving that she put in an extra amount of malt. We may think of the grave and reverend justices ordering the beer into court and settling the question by personal examination of the foaming mugs,—smacking their lips satisfactorily, quite likely testing it a second time.

Tristram Coffin became a citizen of Newbury and built a house, which is still standing. In 1660 he removed with a portion of his family to Nantucket, dying there in 1681, leaving two sons, from whom have descended all the Coffins of the country—a numerous and widespread family.

One of Tristram's descendants, Peter, moved from Newbury to Boscawen, N. H., in 1766, building a large two-storied house. He became a prominent citizen of the town, a captain of the militia company, was quick and prompt in all his actions. The news of the affair at Lexington and Concord April 19, 1775, reached Boscawen on the afternoon of the next day. On the 21st, Peter Coffin was in Exeter answering the roll-call in the Provincial Assembly, to take measures for the public safety.

Charles Carleton Coffin, was born on the old homestead in Boscawen, July 26, 1823, the youngest of nine children, three of whom died in infancy.

The boyhood of the future journalist, correspondent and author was one of toil rather than recreation. The maxims of Benjamin Franklin in regard to idleness, thrift and prosperity were household words. Aside from the district school, he attended Boscawen Academy a few terms. The teaching could not be called first-class instruction. The instructors were students just out of college, who taught for the stipend received rather than with any high ideal of teaching as a profession. A term at Pembroke Academy in 1843 completed his acquisition of knowledge so far as obtained in the schools.

The future journalist was an omnivorous reader. Everything was fish that came to the drag-net of this New Hampshire boy—from "Sinbad" to "Milton's Paradise Lost," which was read before he was eleven years old.

The household to which he belonged had ever a goodly supply of weekly papers,—the New Hampshire Statesman, the Herald of Freedom, the New Hampshire Observer, all published at Concord.

Without doubt, the love for historical literature was quickened by the kind patronage of John Farmer, the genial historian, who was a visitor at the Boscawen farm-house, and who had delightful stories to tell of the exploits of Robert Rogers and John Stark during the French and Indian Wars.

In 1845, Mr. Coffin accepted a position in the engineering corps of the Northern Railroad, and was subsequently employed on the Concord and Portsmouth and Concord and Claremont Railroad.

In 1846 he was married to Sallie R. Farmer, of Boscawen. Not wishing to make civil engineering a profession for life, he purchased a farm in his native town; but health gave way and he was forced to seek other pursuits.

He early began to write articles for the Concord newspapers, and some of his fugitive political contributions were republished in Littell's Living Age.

Mr. Coffin's studies in engineering led him towards scientific culture. In 1849 he constructed the telegraph line between Harvard Observatory and Boston, by which uniform time was first given to the railroads leading from Boston. He had charge of the construction of the telegraphic fire alarm in Boston, under the direction of Professor Moses G. Farmer, his brother-in-law, and gave the first alarm ever given by that system April 29, 1852.

Mr. Coffin's tastes led him toward journalism. From 1850 to 1854 he was a constant contributor to the press, sending articles to the Transcript, the Boston Journal, Congregationalist and New York Tribune. He was also a contributor to the Student and School-mate, a small magazine then conducted by Mr. Adams (Oliver Optic).

It is impossible in this brief article to sketch in detail the career of Mr. Coffin from that time to the present. During the Rebellion he was the war correspondent of the Boston Journal, and in 1866 visited Europe as the correspondent of the same paper.

After spending a year and a half in Europe, Mr. Coffin visited Greece, Turkey, Syria, Palestine, Egypt, sailing thence down the Red Sea to Bombay; traveled across India to the valley of the Ganges, before the completion of the railroad, visiting Allahabad, Benares, Calcutta, sailing thence to Singapore, Hong Kong, Canton, Shanghai. Ascending the Yang-tse six hundred miles, to Wuchang, the Governor of the province invited him to a dinner. From Shanghai he sailed to Japan, experiencing a fearful typhoon upon the passage. Civil war in Japan prevented his traveling in that country, and he sailed for San Francisco, visiting points of interest in California, and in November made his way across the country seven hundred miles—riding five consecutive days and nights between the termini of the Central Pacific road, at Waldworth, and Salt Lake, arriving in Boston, January, 1869, after an absence of two and a half years. During that period the Boston Journal contained every week a letter from his pen.

In the lecture field, and for several years, he was one of the popular lecturers before lyceums. In 1869 he published "Our New Way Round the World," followed by the "Seat of Empire," "Caleb Crinkle" (a story), "Boys of '76," "Story of Liberty," "Old Times in the Colonies," "Building the Nation," "Life of Garfield," besides a history of his native town. His volumes have been received with marked favor. No less than fifty copies of the "Boys of '76" are in the Boston Public Library and all in constant use.

The degree of A.M. was conferred upon him by Dartmouth College in 1870. He is a resident of Boston and was a member of the Legislature in 1884.

HON. DANIEL WEBSTER, America's greatest statesman, prepared for college and began his public life in Boscawen. He was a citizen of the town for about three years, identified himself with its interests, voted at town-meeting, paid taxes, enrolled himself as a member of the religious society and took part in the district school meetings. It was ever a pleasure to him to return to the place, not alone to visit his brother Ezekiel, but to renew his acquaintance with the people.¹

GOVERNOR JOHN ADAMS DIX was born in Boscawen, N. H., on the 24th day of July, A.D. 1798. His father, Colonel Timothy Dix, Jr., was one of the most enterprising citizens of the town. His grandfather, Timothy Dix, was an upright and intelligent man, and was postmaster for many years. His great-grandfather, Jonathan Dix, died in the village at the age of ninety-four.

CAPTAIN PETER KIMBALL moved from Bradford, Mass., about 1765, and settled on Queen Street. He was a man of strong character. Rev. Mr. Price says of him: "Possessing great self-command, a sound judgment and unwavering integrity, he soon came into public notice, and was elected selectman in 1768, in which office he served nine years. In our Revolutionary struggle he manifested a truly patriotic spirit, readily accepted those appointments with others which involved the dearest interests of individuals and of the public. He contributed to the security of our independence, not merely by his assiduous services at home, but endured the privations of four campaigns in defense of his country. In one of them he volunteered as a private soldier; but in the other three he bore a captain's commission, and at Bennington received a wound at the head of his company,—a precious memento of that signal battle. Captain Kimball was a valuable citizen, a much-esteemed neighbor and consistent man."

The diary kept by Captain Kimball in the campaign of 1776 and at Bennington, is given in the body of this volume, in connection with the events of the Revolution, from which it will be seen that he was a prompt, efficient and brave soldier. He barely mentions that he was wounded in the battle of Bennington,—leaving it to others to speak of his bravery.

He moved from Queen to Water Street after the Revolution, and continued till his death, at the age of seventy-two, a useful and honored citizen. It may be said that Captain Peter Kimball and Colonel Henry Gerrish were leading spirits in the town during the Revolutionary period. Both were military officers; and the promptness with which they ordered out their commands, when called upon, attests their efficiency.

BENJAMIN THURSTON KIMBALL, the youngest son of Captain Peter Kimball, was born in Boscawen, May 4, 1784. He had no opportunity for education except the meagre instruction of the district school. He resided on the homestead where he was born, and built the house now occupied by Mr. Wade. He was an influential citizen, and a member of the Congregational Church and society. He was an early advocate of anti-slavery, and cast his influence and his vote in its behalf. He longed for the day when the slave would be a freeman,—a consummation he was not permitted to see. He died July 9, 1852. He was hospitable, kind to the poor and charitable to those who differed from him in opinion.

The Boscawen Academy was organized in 1827, went into operation in April, 1828, with Miss Sarah Crocker preceptress. Joseph Chadwick gave the land upon which the building was erected, conveying it to the following-named gentlemen: Rev. Samuel Wood, Rev. Ebenezer Price, John Greenough, Henry Gerrish, Isaac Gerrish, Thomas Coffin, Hezekiah Fellows, Simeon B. Little, John Farmer.

Academy building was erected in 1827. Rev. Dr. Wood, besides making a generous donation, gave the shingles covering it,—shaved by his own hands.

The bell was the gift of Daniel Webster. Ezekiel Webster gave liberally to aid in the construction of the building, which was erected by Captain William Abbot.

February 11, 1829, the trustees voted that the committee proffer an instructor one hundred and fifty dollars and the tuition of the male department.

January 19, 1829, the trustees voted unanimously, "that the thanks of the Board be presented to the Hon. Daniel Webster for his very generous donation of a suitable bell for our academy, and that the President communicate the same in the manner he shall deem the most respectful."

¹ For sketch of Ezekiel Webster, see chapter on Bench and Bar

The trustees, in 1836, voted to loan the building to Mr. Jonathan Tenney for a term of twenty years, the lessee having the right to make such alterations in the building as he might deem necessary. Extensive alterations were made, and the school became widely known as the Elmwood Institute. In 1868 the lease was canceled by mutual agreement.

In 1872, "Voted to sell the building and grounds for $2000, with the condition that the bell shall not be disposed of, but kept in the building as at present."

Congregational Church.—The Congregational Church in this town was organized October 8, 1740. One of the conditions of the grant to the proprietors of Contoocook was that one eighty-fourth part of the land should be set aside for a parsonage, and one additional eighty-fourth for the minister, and that a "learned and Orthodox minister" should be settled within the space of four years.

At their March meeting, 1737, the proprietors voted that Joseph Gerrish, Henry Rolfe and Joseph Stickney be a committee "to treat with some suitable man & a Christian learned to preach at Contoocook the coming summer, and in order to settle the aforesaid Gentleman, if he can be rationally agreed with, to serve us in the ministry." Two hundred pounds were raised for preaching, and the assessors were directed to make the town-house convenient for the use of the minister and people on the Sabbath.

The committee secured the services of Rev. Phineas Stevens, who remained pastor fifteen years, and had taken an active part in all of the affairs of the "Plantation."

The expenses at the ordination of Mr. Stevens were as follows:

"An Account of the Expenses for the Ordination of the Rev. Mr. Phineas Stevens at Contoocook Oct 29, 1740, For which Charge the Proprietors are indebted

	£	s.	d.
"To Mr. Edward Emery,
For five Bushels of Wheat at 12s per bushl	3	0	0
10 lbs. Pork at 18s	1	1	0
2 lbs Sugar	0	4	0
for Cranberries Cabbage & turnips	0	10	0
Eggs 1 st 6d Trouble of his house 30s	1	11	6
Charge he has been at 29 & Trouble 12s	1	18	0
For lugging up the Boat	1	0	0
	—	—	—
	£	7	6 ³

The query arises, How a boat could be used at an ordination? The answer is plain. There was no bridge across the Merrimack. The ministers from the lower towns would come by the road leading up the east side of the Merrimack: hence the need of a boat.

	£	s.	d.
"To Mr. George Jackson,
For Edward Fitzgerald's Service	1	6	0
for 2 women 2 days each	0	12	0
a Bushel of wheat 12s & a Bushel of Indian 6s	0	18	0
His Trouble 20s Cabbages & Turnips 5s	1	15	0
	—	—	—
	£	11	0

"To Joseph Gerrish Esq

"For 4 Barrels of Oiler 1 st 12 & 20 for his trouble	3	0	0
50 1/2 lbs of Beef at 40s	10	0	0
90 lbs of Pork at 12s	4	10	0
27 lbs Salt Pork 10s 6d & 20 lbs of Butter 2s	3	0	0
1 1/2 bushels of Wheat 18s Turnips At 7s	1	0	0
8 Turkeys at 5s each 9s per lb 12s	3	0	0
The Boat 2s	2	0	0
Carriage 10s His trouble	11	10	0
	£	11	7

"To Mr. John Coffin

"For 20 lbs of Butter 60s 1 bushel of Malt 10s	5	0	0
10 1/2 lbs Salt Pork 60s 30s & 26 lbs of cheese	1	8	11
at 28s 20s	1	8	11
8 Geese 5 1/2 at 8s 31s 10 & his trouble & charge 60s	4	11	4
	£	11	4

"To Mr. John Noyes Jun

"For 2 Cases of Knives 40s for 10 lbs Sugar 20s & one B pepper 9s	3	0	0
---	---	---	---

"To Mr. Daniel Coffin

"For 10 lbs of Raisins 35s 5 lbs Currants 15s 11 lbs of loaf sugar	1	15	0
30 lbs of Flower 10s Drinking glasses 8s	1	8	0
Biscuits 20s, Labor Mugs 12s Cutting Stones 12s	2	4	0
10 Gallons Rhum at 10s per Gal	8	10	0
	£	10	17

"To Mr. John Adams

"For 20 lbs Sugar 30s 8s Chocolate 15g 1b 21s 9d	2	18	5
Nutmegs 5s 6d. Allspice 4 Pipes 4 doz 8s	0	17	6
	£	15	11

"To Mr. John Roll Jun

"For one half barrel full bound & a gallon Cask	0	12	0
---	---	----	---

"To John Brown

"For Spices 9s Pipes & Tobacco £22 6d	1	1	6
For a 50 gallon cask & a Gall bottle	0	7	0
For his trouble & charge	3	0	0
	£	4	6

"To Mr. Eben's Choate

"For Wine	1	10	0
---------------------	---	----	---

"To Mr. Moses Gerrish

"For 5 lbs of Sugar	0	10	0
-------------------------------	---	----	---

"To Cutting List

"For four Gallons of Molasses	1	8	0
---	---	---	---

"To Richards & Tatroob

"For Carrying up their Families Each 20s	2	0	0
	£	0	0

"A true Account Errors Excepted Newbury Nov 26 1740

"John Brown"

He died January 19, 1755. The following is an inventory of his estate:

"We the Subscribers being appointed a Committee to appraise the Estate real & personal of the Revd Mr Phineas Stevens, late of the Place called Contoocook within his Majesty's Province of New Hampshire, Clerk Deceased, being first sworn to the faithful Discharge of the said Trust have taken the following inventory of the said Estate.

"Yes—

"of personal Estate—

"Imprints. To Books—	£	s.	d.
Mr Post's Synopsis Criticorum in five volumes in Folio	7	10	0
Other books the whole of them	1	5	0
Item, To a Swivel Gun	2	10	0
Item, To Beds, Bedding & Bedsteads	45	12	6
Item, To Pewter	12	10	0
Item, To two warming pans	3	2	6
Item, To two Looking Glasses	5	10	0
Item, To two Brass Kettles	4	0	0

Rev. Joseph A. Freeman installed June 30, 1875, dismissed July 3, 1877.

Rev. Frank Haley installed October 11, 1882, dismissed June 11, 1885.

The first meeting-house was built of logs, forty feet long and as wide as Rumford (Concord) meeting-house, only two feet higher. This was occupied until 1767, when it was therefore voted that a new meeting-house should be erected, and a committee was appointed to select a site.

It was voted that, pending the erection of the meeting-house, the meetings should be held half the time at the house of Jesse Flanders.

The committee appointed to select a site reported as follows:

"BOSCAWEN, Sep. 8, 1767."

"We do hereby deliver it as our honest and impartial judgment that it be erected on that sapling pine land about ten or twelve rods from the road towards Jesse Flanders, from that known above Ephraim Woodbury's, which was the last voted place, and that this meeting-house be placed for those only that live on the Easterly side of Battle street, so called, and that those who live on the Westerly side of said street be exempted from any cost in building said house.

"As witness our hands,

"EZEKIEL MORRILL,
"SINKLER BEAN, } CHM.
"ARCHELAIUS MOORE,

The site finally selected for the new meeting-house was near the northwest corner of the cemetery, west of Woodbury's Plain. It was "Voted To Raise two hundred & fifty pounds old tenor Toward Defraying the charges already arisen in building the meeting-house frame, to be paid in Labour at fifty Shillings a Day, and whoever Don't Labour when Notified, or pay Stuff fit for the use of the house, to pay money.

"Voted To begin & to go on with the finishing said meeting-house as far as the pew privileges will go, together with the money as above voted.

"George Jackman, Jun., Mr. Joseph Atkinson, Ems. Peter Kimball, Mr. Benjamin Eastman & Deacon Jesse Flanders were chosen and fully empowered as a committee to carry on the finishing said Meeting-house."

The old tenor currency had so far depreciated that fifty shillings was only equivalent to about forty-two cents lawful money, a shilling being less than one cent.

The committee appointed to appraise the pew privileges reported the appraisal and articles of sale as follows:

"1st The pews to be sold to the highest bidder.

"2^d—The money bid is to be understood, Hampshire's old tenor.

"3^d That no person bid less than 20 shillings a bid. [About sixteen cents.]

"4th That every purchaser shall pay one-fourth part thereof in money & the remainder in labor or lumber, as said committee & purchaser shall agree,—provided the same be at Cash price & when wanted for the use of said house.

"5th That Each pew be forfeited unless the purchaser pay the sum for which the same was bid off at in the following manner, viz.

"The money to be paid in three months from the time said pew was bid off and the other to be paid when called for by the committee for the use of said house.

"6. That every person shall forfeit his pew privilege except that the purchaser have the same well finished within twelve months from the time said p-w was bid off.

"7. That any purchaser shall pay down or give security for one-fourth part of the value of what said pew was bid off at—whic sum shall be forfeited unless the articles are fulfilled

"8. That any person who will pay Nails & Glass at the rate of 100 for one, vide a joiner acceptable to the committee when wanted, shall be held answer in lieu of money.

"I voted by the town, that since all pews be raised more than 100 shillings above the meeting-house, therefore that no body pew be raised more than six inches."

There is no writing that sets forth the dimensions of this first framed meeting-house. It was near square and had a gallery, which was not finished till several years later, even if it was ever wholly finished. There was a pile of boards in one corner of the gallery, behind which the boys used to secrete themselves, greatly to the annoyance of the tithing-man. The present town-house in Webster was modeled after this house. There was a porch at each end and a front-door. It was built after the prevailing style of the time,—a box-like edifice.

This meeting-house was subsequently burned, and the next house was erected on King Street.

Population.—The first census of the town was that of 1767,—285 inhabitants. In 1783, when the first census after the Revolution was taken, the number was 756. The first census of the general government was in 1790. The returns are as follows: 1767, 285; 1783, 756; 1790, 1108; 1800, 1411; 1810, 1829; 1820, 2116; 1830, 2093; 1840, 1965; 1850, 2063; 1860, 1458; 1870, 1637; 1880, 1380.

Civil History.—The men who have been selected to represent the town have been citizens of high character. Colonel Henry Gerrish, George Jackman, Captain Joseph Gerrish, Major Enoch Gerrish and Captain Benjamin Little were the representatives of the last century. These five men represented the town from 1760 to 1801.

During the first quarter of the present century such men as Timothy Dix, Caleb Knight, Ezekiel Webster, Joseph Little, Jeremiah Gerrish, Major Enoch Gerrish and Colonel Isaac Chandler acted as legislators. Their successors in the next quarter were such men as Hezekiah Fellows, Colonel John Farmer, Captain Joseph Ames, John Greenough, Moses Fellows, Thomas Coffin, William H. Gage, Benjamin Kimball, Nathan Plummer, Abraham Burbank, Richard Gage, Simeon B. Little, Joseph Morrill, Rev. Ebenezer Price, Elbridge F. Greenough, Abiel R. Chandler, Nathan Pearson, Jr., Thomas Gerrish, Luke Corser, Caleb Smith and Calvin Gage.

TOWN OFFICERS.

1760—Joseph Coffin, moderator; George Jackman, clerk; John Fowler, John Webster, Joseph Eastman, selectmen.

1761—John Webster, moderator; John Webster, Pius Bishop, George Jackman, selectmen.

1762—Joseph Eastman, moderator; George Jackman, John Flanders, Joseph Holt, selectmen.

1763—John Fowler, moderator; Joseph Holt, Ephraim Plummer, Thomas Foss, selectmen.

1764—John Fowler, moderator; George Jackman, Jesse Flanders, Oliver Fowler, selectmen.

1765—John Fowler, moderator; George Jackman, John Fowler, Jesse Flanders, selectmen.

¹ Town divided.

² From 1760 to 1790 he was re-elected.

1746. Joseph Farrington, moderator; Moses Burbank, Moses Call, Henry Gerrish, selectmen.
1747. Jesse Little, moderator; Henry Gerrish, George Jackman, Jesse Flanders, selectmen.
1748. John Fowler, moderator; Henry Gerrish, Peter Kimball, Oliver Fowler, selectmen.
1749. Moses Morse, moderator; Captain Henry Gerrish, Moses Morse, George Jackman, selectmen.
1750. Rev. R. H. Morrill, moderator; Moses Morse, Henry Gerrish, Peter Kimball, selectmen.
1751. Moses Morse, moderator; Winthrop Carter, Moses Call, Moses Morse, selectmen.
1752. Captain Henry Gerrish, moderator; George Jackman, Deacon Jesse Flanders, Samuel Muzzy, selectmen.
1753. Henry Gerrish, moderator; Ebenezer Hibben, Samuel Gerrish, George Jackman, selectmen.
1754. Peter Coffin, moderator; Samuel Muzzy, Peter Kimball, Jesse Flanders, selectmen; Henry Gerrish, delegate to State Convention.
1755. Stephen Webster, moderator; Moses Call, Enoch Gerrish, George Jackman, selectmen; Henry Gerrish, delegate to State Convention.
1756. Robt. Morrill, moderator; George Jackman, Cutting Noyes, John Eliot, selectmen.
1757. Henry Gerrish, moderator; George Jackman, John Eliot, Cutting Noyes, selectmen.
1758. Henry Gerrish, moderator; George Jackman, Lieutenant Enoch Gerrish, Cutting Noyes, selectmen; George Jackman, delegate.
1759. Henry Gerrish, moderator; George Jackman, Enoch Gerrish, Samuel Muzzy, selectmen; George Jackman, Henry Gerrish, delegates.
1760. Peter Kimball, moderator; George Jackman, Stephen Webster, Cutting Noyes, selectmen; Henry Gerrish, representative.
1761. Henry Gerrish, moderator; George Jackman, Cutting Noyes, Captain Peter Kimball, selectmen.
1762. Peter Coffin, moderator; George Jackman, Joseph Jackman, David Cosey, selectmen.
1763. Ebenezer Hibben, moderator; George Jackman, Isaac Pearson, David Cosey, selectmen.
1764. Peter Kimball, moderator; Enoch Gerrish, Peter Kimball, George Jackman, selectmen.
1765. Ebenezer Hibben, moderator; Lieutenant Enoch Gerrish, Benjamin Swoat, George Jackman, selectmen; George Jackman, representative.
1766. Samuel Fowler, moderator; George Jackman, Benjamin Swoat, Lieutenant Benjamin Jackman, selectmen; George Jackman, representative.
1767. Henry Gerrish, moderator; Joseph Gerrish, Peter Kimball, Benjamin Little, selectmen.
1768. Henry Gerrish, moderator; Joseph Gerrish, Cutting Noyes, Peter Kimball, selectmen; George Jackman, representative; Henry Gerrish, delegate to Convention.
1769. Peter Coffin, moderator; Joseph Gerrish, Peter Kimball, Benjamin Little, selectmen.
1770. Joseph Gerrish, moderator; Joseph Gerrish, Peter Kimball, Benjamin Little, selectmen; Henry Gerrish, representative.
1771. Enoch Gerrish, moderator; Joseph Gerrish, George Jackman, Samuel Ames, David Cosey, Nathaniel Green, selectmen; Henry Gerrish, representative; Nathaniel Green, delegate to revise State Constitution.
1772. Enoch Gerrish, moderator; Benjamin Little, Enoch Gerrish, Lieutenant John Chandler, selectmen; Enoch Gerrish, representative.
1773. Henry Gerrish, moderator; Joseph Gerrish, Benjamin Little, George Jackman, selectmen; Enoch Gerrish, representative.
1774. Henry Gerrish, moderator; Joseph Gerrish, Benjamin Little, George Jackman, selectmen; Enoch Gerrish, representative.
1775. Joseph Gerrish, moderator; Joseph Gerrish, Enoch Little, George Jackman, selectmen; Benjamin Little, representative.
1776. Thomas Thoria, moderator; Tristram Noyes, clerk; Winthrop Carter, Thomas Thoria, Enoch Little, selectmen; Benjamin Little, representative.
1777. Thomas Thoria, moderator; Tristram Noyes, clerk; Winthrop Carter, Thomas Thoria, Daniel Shepard, selectmen; Enoch Gerrish, representative.
1778. Enoch Gerrish, moderator; George Jackman, clerk; Enoch Gerrish, Timothy Dix, Jr., Joseph Little, selectmen; Enoch Gerrish, representative.
1779. Major Enoch Gerrish, moderator; George Jackman, clerk,

- Enoch Gerrish, Timothy Dix, Jr., Joseph Little, selectmen; Major Joseph Gerrish, representative.
1780. Thomas Thoria, moderator; Samuel Choate, clerk; Benjamin Jackman, Joseph Couch, Caleb Knight, selectmen; Enoch Gerrish, representative.
1781. Nathaniel Green, moderator; Samuel Choate, clerk; Benjamin Jackman, Joseph Couch, Caleb Knight, selectmen; Timothy Dix, Jr., representative.
1782. Nathaniel Green, moderator; Phineas Bailey, clerk; Joseph Couch, Nathaniel Green, Samuel Muzzy, selectmen; Timothy Dix, Jr., representative.
1783. Enoch Gerrish, moderator; Joseph Couch, clerk; Nathaniel Green, Nathan Davis, Benjamin Jackman, selectmen; Timothy Dix, Jr., representative.
1784. Nathaniel Green, moderator; Joseph Couch, clerk; Benjamin Jackman, Isaac Chandler, Joseph Little, selectmen; Timothy Dix, Jr., representative.
1785. Colonel Joseph Gerrish, moderator; Caleb Putney, clerk; Benjamin Jackman, Joseph Little, Major Isaac Chandler, selectmen; Caleb Knight, representative.
1786. Joseph Gerrish, moderator; Samuel Choate, clerk; Joseph Little, Daniel Pillsbury, Joseph H. Morrill, selectmen; Benjamin Little, representative.
1787. Joseph Gerrish, moderator; Joel French, clerk; Daniel Pillsbury, Joseph Little, Captain Samersby Pearson, selectmen; Benjamin Little, representative.
1788. Joseph Gerrish, moderator; Joel French, clerk; Captain Samersby Pearson, Ezekiel Morse, Stephen Gerrish, selectmen; Enoch Gerrish, representative.
1789. Joseph Gerrish, moderator; Joel French, clerk; Stephen Gerrish, Joseph H. Morrill, Phetiah Pearsley, selectmen; Enoch Gerrish, representative.
1790. Joseph Gerrish, moderator; Samuel W. Lang, clerk; Stephen Gerrish, Joseph Little, Thomas Coffin, selectmen; Ezekiel Webster, representative.
1791. Colonel Joseph Gerrish, moderator; Samuel W. Lang, clerk; Thomas Coffin, Benjamin Little, Joel French, selectmen; Ezekiel Webster, representative.
1792. Isaac Chandler, moderator; Samuel W. Lang, clerk; Nathan Chandler, Joseph Ames, Captain Moses Gerrish, selectmen; Ezekiel Webster, representative.
1793. Ezekiel Webster, moderator; Samuel W. Lang, clerk; Captain Moses Gerrish, Joseph Ames, Nathan Chandler, selectmen; Ezekiel Webster, representative.
1794. Ezekiel Webster, moderator; Samuel W. Lang, clerk; Captain Moses Gerrish, Joseph Ames, Isaac Gerrish, selectmen; Ezekiel Webster, representative.
1795. Ezekiel Webster, moderator; Samuel W. Lang, clerk; Isaac Gerrish, Jesse Little, Joseph H. Morrill, selectmen; Joseph Little, representative.
1796. Ezekiel Webster, moderator; Samuel W. Lang, clerk; Major Moses Gerrish, Daniel Pillsbury, Nathan Chandler, selectmen; Joseph Little, representative.
1797. Enoch Little, moderator; Hezekiah Fellows, clerk; Major Moses Gerrish, Daniel Pillsbury, Nehemiah Cogswell, selectmen; Jeremiah Gerrish, representative.
1798. Ezekiel Webster, moderator; Colonel Moses Gerrish, Nehemiah Cogswell, Saml B. Gerrish, selectmen; Jeremiah Gerrish, representative.
1799. Ezekiel Webster, moderator; Nehemiah Cogswell, Joseph Couch, Daniel Pillsbury, selectmen; Isaac Chandler, representative.
1800. Ezekiel Webster, moderator; Nehemiah Cogswell, Samuel Little, Isaac Gerrish, selectmen; Isaac Chandler, representative.
1801. Ezekiel Webster, moderator; Samuel Little, Moses Gerrish, Isaac Pearson, selectmen; Ezekiel Webster, representative.
1802. Ezekiel Webster, moderator; Samuel Little, Moses Gerrish, Isaac Pearson, selectmen; Ezekiel Webster, representative.
1803. Ezekiel Webster, moderator; Samuel Little, Moses Gerrish, Isaac Pearson, selectmen; Ezekiel Webster, representative.
1804. Ezekiel Webster, moderator; Colonel Moses Gerrish, John Farmer, Thomas Gerrish, selectmen; Ezekiel Webster, representative.
1805. Ezekiel Webster, moderator; John Farmer, Nehemiah Cogswell, Moses Fellows, selectmen; Ezekiel Webster, Hezekiah Fellows, representatives.
1806. Ezekiel Webster, moderator; John Farmer, Moses Fellows, William H. Gage, selectmen; Ezekiel Webster, Hezekiah Fellows, representatives.

¹From this date to 1854 he was re-elected.

1826.—Ezekiel Webster, moderator; Moses Fellows, William H. Gage, Joseph Couch, Jr., selectmen; Ezekiel Fellows, Joseph Ames, representatives.

1827.—John Farmer, moderator; Moses Fellows, William H. Gage, Joseph Couch, Jr., selectmen; Ezekiel Webster, John Farmer, representatives.

1828.—Ezekiel Webster, moderator; Moses Fellows, Remond Johnson, Simon B. Little, selectmen; Ezekiel Webster, John Farmer, representatives.

1829.—Ezekiel Webster, moderator; Moses Fellows, Simon B. Little, Thomas Gerrish, selectmen; John Farmer, John Greenough, representatives.

1830.—John Farmer, moderator; Moses Fellows, Simon B. Little, Thomas Gerrish, selectmen; John Greenough, Moses Fellows, representatives.

1831.—John Farmer, moderator; Moses Fellows, Simon B. Little, Thomas Gerrish, selectmen; Moses Fellows, Thomas Coffin, representatives.

1832.—John Farmer, moderator; Moses Fellows, William H. Gage, Wyatt Boyden, selectmen; Moses Fellows, representative.

1833.—John Farmer, moderator; Moses Fellows, William H. Gage, Wyatt Boyden, selectmen; William H. Gage, representative.

1834.—John Farmer, moderator; Wyatt Boyden, Abraham Burbank, Hale Atkinson, selectmen; John Farmer, Benjamin Kimball, representatives.

1835.—John Farmer, moderator; Abraham Burbank, Hale Atkinson, Moses Fellows, selectmen; John Farmer, Moses Fellows, representatives.

1836.—Moses Fellows, moderator; Simon Little, Moses Fellows, John C. Cogswell, selectmen; Nathan Plummer, William H. Gage, representatives.

1837.—Moses Fellows, moderator; Simon B. Little, Moses Fellows, John C. Cogswell, selectmen; Nathan Plummer, Abraham Burbank, representatives.

1838.—Moses Fellows, moderator; Simon B. Little, Jeremiah Noyes, William M. Kimball, selectmen; Abraham Burbank, Richard Gage, representatives.

1839.—Simon B. Little, moderator; William M. Kimball, Moses Fellows, Thomas Little, selectmen; Richard Gage, Simon B. Little, representatives.

1840.—Simon B. Little, moderator; Thomas Little, Wyatt Boyden, Abiel R. Chandler, selectmen; Simon B. Little, Joseph Morrill, representatives.

1841.—Simon B. Little, moderator; Wyatt Boyden, Abiel Chandler, Nathan Pearson, selectmen; Joseph Morrill, Rev. Ebenezer Price, representatives.

1842.—Simon B. Little, moderator; Abiel R. Chandler, Nathan Pearson, Wyatt Boyden, selectmen; Rev. Ebenezer Price, Ellerdge F. Greenough, representatives.

1843.—Simon B. Little, moderator; Benjamin F. Kimball, Thomas Elliot, William H. Gage, selectmen; Abiel R. Chandler, Nathan Pearson, Jr., representatives.

1844.—Simon B. Little, moderator; Caleb Smith, Samuel M. Durgin, Friend L. Burbank, selectmen; Nathan Pearson Jr., Abiel R. Chandler, representatives.

1845.—Moody A. Pillsbury, moderator; Caleb Smith, Thomas Elliot, Eliphalet Kilburn, selectmen; Thomas Gerrish, Luke Gosser, representatives.

1846.—Simon B. Little, moderator; Caleb Smith, Samuel M. Durgin, Friend L. Burbank, selectmen; Thomas Gerrish, Luke Gosser, representatives.

1847.—Simon B. Little, moderator; Hale Atkinson, Samuel M. Durgin, Calvin Gage, selectmen; Abraham Burbank, Caleb Smith, representatives.

1848.—Caleb Smith, moderator; Eliphalet Kilburn, Abiel R. Chandler, Friend L. Burbank, selectmen; Abraham Burbank, Caleb Smith, representatives.

1849.—Simon B. Little, moderator; Hale Atkinson, Abiel R. Chandler, Albert Danforth, selectmen; Calvin Gage, representative.

1850.—Simon B. Little, moderator; Hale Atkinson, Almer Sargent, Simon B. Little, selectmen; Calvin Gage, Paul Pearson, representatives.

1851.—Simon B. Little, moderator; Simon B. Little, Daniel S. Hale, David A. Gerrish, selectmen; Paul Pearson, Abiel Gerrish, representatives.

1852.—Simon B. Little, moderator; Simon B. Little, David A. Gerrish, Hale Atkinson, selectmen; Abiel Gerrish, Friend L. Burbank, representatives.

1853.—Simon B. Little, moderator; Simon B. Little, David A. Gerrish, Hale Atkinson, selectmen; Friend L. Burbank, John C. Cogswell, representatives.

1854.—Simon B. Little, moderator; Almer Sargent, Caleb Smith, Hale Atkinson, selectmen; John C. Gage, Enoch Little, representatives.

1855.—Simon B. Little, moderator; Franklin P. Atkinson, clerk; Francis S. French, Moses Whittem, Ira Swett, selectmen; Albert Kinneels, Almer B. Winn, representatives.

1856.—Simon B. Little, moderator; Franklin P. Atkinson, clerk; Francis S. French, Moses Whittem, Ira Swett, selectmen; Albert Kinneels, Almer B. Winn, representatives.

1857.—Enoch Gerrish, moderator; George W. Stevens, clerk; Almer Sargent, Hale Atkinson, Caleb Smith, selectmen; Francis S. French, William M. Swett, representatives.

1858.—Enoch Gerrish, moderator; David E. Burbank, clerk; Moses Whittem, Enoch Gerrish, David A. Gerrish, selectmen; Francis S. French, William M. Swett, representatives.

1859.—Enoch Gerrish, moderator; David L. Burbank, clerk; Enoch Gerrish, Moses Gill, Jeremiah S. Webber, selectmen; Moses Whittem, Thaddeus O. Wilson, representatives.

1860.—Enoch Gerrish, moderator; David E. Burbank, clerk; Enoch Gerrish, Jeremiah S. Webber, Almon Harris, selectmen; Moses Whittem, Thaddeus O. Wilson, representatives.

1861.—Isiah K. Gage, moderator; Isiah H. Arey, clerk; Almon Harris, Francis S. French, Hale Atkinson, selectmen; Luther Gage, representative.

1862.—Nathan B. Greene, moderator; Isiah H. Arey, clerk; Almon Harris, Francis S. French, Peter Coffin, selectmen; Luther Gage, representatives.

1863.—Jonathan Tenney, moderator; Isiah H. Arey, clerk; Nehemiah Butler, Peter Coffin, George Knowles, selectmen; Almon Harris, representative.

1864.—Franklin C. Morrill, moderator; Isiah H. Arey, clerk; Nehemiah Butler, George Knowles, Samuel Choate, selectmen; Almon Harris, representative.

1865.—Franklin C. Morrill, moderator; Calvin M. Chadwick, clerk; Nehemiah Butler, George Knowles, Samuel Choate, selectmen; David A. Gerrish, representative.

1866.—Franklin C. Morrill, moderator; Charles Smith, clerk; Enoch G. Wood, Healey Morse, James H. Gill, selectmen; David A. Gerrish, representative.

1867.—Isiah K. Gage, moderator; Charles Smith, clerk; Enoch G. Wood, Healey Morse, James H. Gill, selectmen; Franklin C. Morrill, representative.

1868.—Franklin C. Morrill, moderator; Charles E. Chadwick, clerk; Nehemiah Butler, Ezra S. Harris, Bradley Atkinson, selectmen; Franklin C. Morrill, representative.

1869.—Franklin C. Morrill, moderator; Charles E. Chadwick, clerk; Ezra S. Harris, Luther Gage, Bradley Atkinson, selectmen; Nehemiah Butler, representative.

1870.—Thaddeus O. Wilson, moderator; Charles E. Chadwick, clerk; Nehemiah Butler, Hamilton P. Gill, Joseph G. Eastman, selectmen; Nehemiah Butler, representative.

1871.—Thaddeus O. Wilson, moderator; John Seavey, clerk; Calvin Gage, John E. Rines, Enoch G. Wood, selectmen; Enoch G. Wood, representative.

1872.—David F. Kimball, moderator; Charles E. Chadwick, clerk; David F. Kimball, Marcus K. Howser, Samuel B. Chadwick, selectmen; Daniel Y. Beckford, representative.

1873.—David F. Kimball, moderator; Charles E. Chadwick, clerk; David F. Kimball, Marcus K. Howser, Samuel B. Chadwick, selectmen; Daniel Y. Beckford, representative.

1874.—David F. Kimball, moderator; Charles E. Chadwick, clerk; Nehemiah Butler, Marcus K. Howser, Samuel B. Chadwick, selectmen; Marcus K. Howser, representative.

1875.—David F. Kimball, moderator; Charles E. Chadwick, clerk; Nehemiah Butler, Joseph G. Eastman, Austin G. Kimball, selectmen; Marcus K. Howser, representative.

1876.—Calvin Gage, moderator; George A. Morse, clerk; John C. Gage, Enoch G. Wood, Caleb C. Hall, selectmen; Nathaniel S. Webster, representative.

1877.—Thaddeus O. Wilson, moderator; Charles E. Chadwick, clerk; John C. Gage, Caleb C. Hall, Luther Gage, selectmen; Nathaniel S. Webster, representative.

1878.—David F. Kimball, moderator; Charles E. Chadwick, clerk; Luther Gage, Charles W. Hardy, Marcus K. Howser, selectmen; Peter Coffin, representative.

1879.—John C. Pearson, moderator; Charles E. Chadwick, clerk; Luther Gage, Cha. E. Wells, Marcus K. Bowser, selectmen.

1880.—John C. Pearson, moderator; Charles E. Chadwick, clerk; John C. Pearson, Samuel B. Chadwick, Frank L. Gerrish, selectmen; Samuel Choate, representative.

1881.—John C. Pearson, moderator; Charles E. Chadwick, clerk; John C. Pearson, Samuel B. Chadwick, Frank L. Gerrish, selectmen.

1882.—John C. Pearson, moderator; Charles E. Chadwick, clerk; John C. Pearson, Frank L. Gerrish, William P. Abbott, selectmen; Charles J. Ellsworth, representative.

1883.—John C. Pearson, moderator; Charles E. Chadwick, clerk; John C. Pearson, Frank L. Gerrish, William P. Abbott, selectmen.

1884.—John C. Pearson, moderator; Charles E. Chadwick, clerk; William P. Abbott, Samuel B. Chadwick, selectmen; John G. Meier, representative.

1885.—John C. Pearson, moderator; Charles E. Chadwick, clerk; John C. Pearson, Samuel B. Chadwick, William P. Abbott, selectmen.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

EPHRAIM PLUMMER.

The ancestors of Ephraim Plummer came from England in 1663 and settled in Newbury, Mass. His grandfather, Bitfield Plummer, was one of the early settlers of Boscawen; married Priscilla Richardson, of Chester, N. H., October, 1769. He was a signer of the People's Declaration of Independence before that of the Continental Congress was issued, and upon the evacuation of Long Island by General

Washington responded to the call for additional troops and served for a time in the Continental army.

His son Ephraim was born 1771; married Rachel Choate Cogswell, May, 1792; lived on the homestead and died May, 1793, three months before the birth of his son Ephraim, the subject of the present sketch.

The mother of Ephraim was a native of Essex, Mass., relative of Rufus Choate,—a woman of rare qualities of character, of discriminating mind and marked executive ability. To the future of her only child she bent all her energies. With the heritage of toil, the son had the benefits of a better education than sometimes falls to the lot of boys in his condition. The years of his childhood were uneventful. So, too, the earlier years of manhood; only as the external influences and processes of thought, developed the man, of a logical turn of mind, a sincere respecter of law, loyal to his convictions, of undoubted integrity. He was a person of quick sensibilities, frank and hospitable. He gave with liberal hand for school and church. Unassuming, he never desired place, nor influence in public affairs.

His time was devoted to the cultivation of the farm.

He married Lucy Gerrish, of Boscawen, who was the efficient counterpart to whatever of success that came to him. His death occurred on the 20th of July, 1872.

Ephraim Hamner

HISTORY OF BRADFORD.

BY J. M. HAWKS, M.D.

CHAPTER I.

THE ideal chapter of a county history would be an epitome of an ideal history of a town. But as no such town history has yet been written, we must still look for the coming of the model.

As the art (which we may set down as one of the fine arts) of writing town histories improves, more attention will be given to personal records, and probably an entire new feature will be added, viz.: a description of every house and farm in the town, giving the particulars as to who first settled on a farm, who built a house and who have owned or occupied these since. The more interesting such histories are to the general reader the better, provided the great practical lessons of history are not lost sight of. One of these lessons is that the law of human progress has its conditions. According to the way we meet those conditions, we may as a community progress, stand still or slide back.

As a means of self-preservation, the future town must see that insanity, idiocy, crime and pauperism grow less and less from generation to generation.

The first step toward any reform is to feel the need of it and the assurance of its practicability, then the means will be discovered and adopted.

The work going to press a month earlier than the writer expected will account for the unfinished condition of some of the matter and the omission of much that was considered important.

The thanks of the writer are due and hereby tendered to Hon. M. W. Tappan, Wm. M. Carr, Hon. John W. Morse, Mrs. J. P. Marshall and many others for special assistance in procuring lists of business and professional men. The list of lawyers was handed in complete as printed, with the exception of the little word "Hon." which the compiler had modestly omitted from before his own name.

Unlike our neighbor Warner, we have no controversy as to how or for whom our town was named, but the old stereotyped sentence, "Bradford was first settled in 1771 by Deacon Wm. Presbury," is being called in question. Some of the descendants of Isaac Davis believe that he was living in this town as early as 1762. A little search of neighboring town records will readily settle the question. It is to be regretted that no more histories of homesteads and families can be furnished for this chapter.

Boundaries.—Bradford is bounded on the north by Newbury and Sutton, east by Warner, south by Henniker and Hillsborough and west by Washington. The north, south and west lines are straight. The town is longest east and west. If about one-fourth of the eastern portion were cut off, it would leave the remainder an exact square.

All these adjoining towns were settled before Bradford, and have contributed of their citizens from time to time toward building up our little commonwealth. This movement has not been one-sided, however. A sort of reciprocal movement has taken place, in which every town has exchanged its citizens with every other town in the neighborhood. But in the "long run," Bradford has come off second best in these exchanges, she having given more than she has received. When the towns along the Atlantic coast of New Hampshire and Massachusetts were a hundred years old most of the country a hundred miles in the interior was a dense forest. Men who were ambitious to acquire homes and farms of their own very naturally moved back from the old into the new towns. Those who had money bought lands on speculation; those who had none bought their lands on credit, and with their own hands carved their farms out of the primal woods. The same process has been going on ever since in the newer regions farther west and south.

Natural History—GEOLOGICAL FORMATION.—As New Hampshire is the "Granite State," so Bradford is a granite town. The backbone and ribs of all her hills are of the primitive rock, just as it crystallized and cooled when the world was being made. The soil of the hill-sides and the plains is composed of this same kind of rock, disintegrated by frosts and crushed and ground to powder by the slow-melting avalanches that traversed this part of the continent toward the close of the ice period. The progress of the ice-sheet is shown by striae, or scratches and furrows plowed across the smoothed face of ledges of rock in Bradford and the surrounding towns. One of these, mentioned in Hitchcock's "Geology of New Hampshire," is on a ledge near the Baptist Church in Bradford; others are mentioned in Heniker.

These ancient records on the pages of geology furnish a fine play-ground for the imagination. It is an accepted theory of scientific men that the northern part of the continent was once covered with ice thousands of feet thick; that it began to melt, and streams of water to flow from it on the south and southeast sides, and that a general movement of the sheet was in the direction of southeast. Thus, at the suggestion of science and by the aid of fancy, we can see the huge avalanches or mountains of ice melting and sending off large rivers that filled the valleys along which our brooks now so tamely flow. It was indeed a great "freshet" that piled up the Moody Gillingham farm and other similar places along the valley of Todd's Pond. And what a flood of water there was when the "Burying Hill" was washed into its present place and Bradford Plains! The same thing is true in relation to the moraines and sand heaps along the valley of Warner River.

When those sand-hills were formed on Cummings Pierce's land, at the north end and east side of Massascot Lake, and on Fred, Cheney's, on the west side, the waters of the innocent-looking Pond Brook were surging along with irresistible and terrible fury from the side of Cheney's Hill, clear across to the Goodwin Hill, and were fifty feet deep or more, all over the interval. Imagine, then, the mighty rush of waters along the swollen valleys of Warner River, the Contoocook and the Merrimack at the time that Concord claims and similar tracts of land were deposited along all the valleys of the New England rivers.

Our highest spring freshets, from long rains and sudden thaws of the snow, are but very feeble imitations and faint reminders of those early floods. Slight as they are, these modern spring freshets bring down every year small portions of the hills and mountains, making the water turbid or soily. It is estimated that this process, if continued, will bring all the elevations of land to a level of the sea in two hundred million years.

During the melting of the ice-sheet, and its movement across the country, fragments of rock that had been imbedded in the ice were carried many miles, acting as the upper mill-stone, while the lower one was composed of the solid ledges of the hills. In this mighty mill rocks were ground to sand, gravel, cobble-stones and smooth boulders. Every acre of our town went through this mill,—was, in fact, a part of the mill.

Whatever metals and gems of value may have drifted within our borders, they were buried so deep that they have not yet been discovered. Every acre of land in town bears testimony in some manner to the part it took, whether active or passive, in smoothing off the angular ledges of the hill-tops, and with these broken or crushed or ground to powder, filling up deep chasms and valleys, laying the foundations for fertile intervals and making sterile plains, and scattering boulders for the farmers to make their stone walls with.

VEGETABLE PRODUCTIONS.—These are about the same as prevail in this latitude across the State. Of the forest-trees, the evergreens are a marked feature; the white and pitch pines, the hemlock, the spruce, the cedar and the fir lend their aid in beautifying almost every landscape. The oaks are here in variety, the white and red principally. The maples, from the dwarf striped variety known as Moosewood to the large red and white varieties, which delight in a moist and generous soil, to the towering rock or sugar maple, that grows on nearly every kind of soil, and furnishes quite a large portion of the sugar and sirup used in town.

Of the ash, the brown grows in swamps, and is used for basket stuff and chair-bottoms; the white grows on dryer land and is used in carriage-making. The elm seems to be a half-domesticated tree, delighting in intervals and along the borders of streams; this, however, is a second growth. Beech selects the hill-sides. Of the birches, the gray prefers good land, but the white is contented almost anywhere. The bass-wood prefers a moist soil and is not very common.

Chestnut hardly grows wild in the town. Several farmers have planted them in their pastures, and a few small ones are growing along the roadside north of the Pond meeting-house, planted there by some thoughtful person. Of the sassafras, it has been said that a few bushes once grew on the south side of Guile's Hill. The black cherry can hardly endure the competition of tree-life in the forest here, but it grows well in old fields and pastures; but the small wild red cherry is thankful for a foothold anywhere, and is rather a nuisance everywhere. The sumach grows mostly about the ledges of the sides and tops of hills. The butternut, or oil-nut, so common and wild in Vermont, only grows under cultivation here. The tamarack, or larch, is confined to swamps.

The mountain ash is grown for ornament. The poplar is more common in second-growth forests, while its cousin, the Balm of Gilead, requires to be planted, and grows readily from cuttings, as does also the willow; the latter is a rapid grower. A tree at the roadside below Cummings Pierce's, at fifty years old, was four feet through. The locust is an imported tree.

The alders grow along the brooks, and furnish a great many temporary fish-poles. Of the bushes and shrubs, the button-ball likes to have its feet in the water; the high cranberry bush is not plenty—it grows about six feet high along the edges of brooks that run through meadows or swamps; blackberry, raspberry, red and black blueberry and huckleberry bushes are quite common. On rocky hill pastures the ground savin, or cedar, forms a low-spreading shrub; the young hemlock is confined to moist, shady woods

—it is a trailing shrub. Grape-vines are common. Of all our native trees cultivated for shade and ornament, perhaps the sugar maple is most preferred; the elm stands next in public estimation, while a few have spruce and larch. The one specimen of red oak in town, as an ornamental tree, at Sharron Jameson's, furnishes an example that should be followed. The old Lombardy poplar seems to be dying out of public favor, as well as dying as a family of trees. The most notable planted groves of evergreens are those of J. P. Marshall and Dr. Ames, both at the Corner. Mr. Marshall has a large number of imported trees.

Hon. M. W. Tappan has the finest grove and grounds in town, and probably the finest in the county. It is nature embellished with art.

At the saw-mills an observer would notice that there are but few large pine logs. The pine is mostly second growth; some spruce logs are there; but the most of them are hemlock, from which the bark has been peeled for the use of the tanneries. Now and then a farmer hauls in a rock maple to have some "drag-plank" sawed, or sled runners. Shingles are made from spruce, hemlock, red oak and pine.

At the wood-piles of the farmers one finds a variety, including every kind of tree named above,—the tops and limbs of logs that have been hauled to mill or got out for railroad ties; old trees that are ripe and beginning to decay; others that have blown down in the woods and old apple-trees from the orchards.

FRUIT-TREES AND SHRUBS.—Of these, the apple stands at the head. Of the varieties there are many. Those which take the lead are the Baldwin, russet, greening, blue pearmain, for winter; the Williams, the Porter and orange sweet, for fall. Crab apples are grown for ornament and use.

In riding through the town, the apple orchards all seem to be past the meridian of life, and no new ones coming on to take their places. It is to be hoped that this industry will not be allowed to die out.

Barberry.—This shrub, that grows wild all along the coast of New Hampshire and Massachusetts, only grows here under cultivation. Half a dozen families have it. It may be grown along the pasture wall, but is hardly worth a place in the garden.

Cherry.—The most common is the red; the fine varieties that grow fifty miles south do not flourish here.

Currant.—The red, black and white all thrive here. The skunk currant grows wild, and is so common as to suggest that this is a good latitude for this species of fruit-bearing shrubs. The red currant is found in almost every garden.

Gooseberry can be made to do well, but is not a general favorite here.

Peach is grown to a limited extent.

Plum does well.

Prunes do well in the garden of Mrs. G. Hart.

Pear does fairly well, several varieties.

Quince is occasionally grown.

FIELD CROPS.—The most common are barley, beans, corn, oats, peas, potatoes, rye and wheat. Pumpkins, squashes, turnips are also grown in the field. Small patches of tobacco are grown. Buck-wheat and India wheat seem to be rather neglected. Flax, which was commonly grown fifty years ago, is forgotten, and our young people would not recognize the plant any more than they would be able to use a "tow comb" or a "linen wheel."

GARDEN VEGETABLES.—Beans, a large variety; the beet, cabbage, carrot, cives (rather rare), cucumber, horse-radish, melon (both musk and water), mustard, onions, parsnip, radish, squash (every variety, winter and summer), tomato and turnip. "A mess of greens" may consist of any of the following vegetables, while young and tender: beets (the root and top), mustard, turnips from the garden, or the wild cowslips from the meadow or dandelions from the field.

SHRUBS AND PLANTS.—Many of our forests, roadsides, gardens and fields are

* Rank with what the dull, incursive weeds account, but which, on further acquaintance, prove to possess medical qualities of more or less value. Many of these plants have several English or common names; hence the only way to identify them with certainty is by their scientific names, which are here arranged in alphabetical order:—

Achillea millefolium, yarrow; acorus calamus, sweet flag; actea alba, white coltsfoot; A. rubra, red coltsfoot; abutilon patkum, maulden-hair brodia; agrimonia eupatori, agrimony; alnus rubra, tag alder; althea rosea, red hollyhock; amranthus hypochondriacus, prince's feather; ambrosia artemisiifolia, Roman wormwood; amnetica atropurpurea, ang-dia; anthem. cotula, mayweed; A. nobilis, low chamomile; apocynum androscefolium, bitter root; malva hispida, dwarf elder; A. indiculis, American sasaparilla; A. racemosa, spindlewood or Indian root; arbutus uva ursi, bear berry; aetium lappa, burdock; artemisia abrotanum, southernwood; A. absinthium, wormwood; A. vulgaris, mugwort; arum triphyllum, Indian turnip; asarium Canadense, Vermont snake-root; asclepias incarnata, white Indian hemp; A. syriaca, milk-weed; asparagus officinalis, asparagus; aster pinnatus, coach or frost-weed; baptisia tinctoria, wild indigo; berberis vulgaris, barberry; betula officinalis, wood betony; betula lenta, spice birch; chelonoides officinalis, marshgold; chelidonium scaberrimum, bitter sweet; chelidonium majus, gardencelandine; chelone glabra, kalanchoe; chrysoselinum, pig-weed; chrysanthella multiloba, prince's pine; chrysanthemum parthenium, fever-few; chlorium intybus, chicory; cinnaethum racemosum, black snake-root; cirsium acyrense, Canada thistle; clethra racosa, virgin's bower; cochlearia armoracia, horse-radish; composita aspidifolia, sweet fern; conium maculatum, poison hemlock; convallaria molliflora, Solomon seal; capitis trifolia, gold thread; corallorhiza odontoloba, crawley or tompney; cornus tomatia, green osier; C. sericea, red osier; cornus sativus, soft-orn; cyprinolobum pubescens, fishes' slipper; datura stramonium, apple-fern; damianus carota, wild carrot; delphinium stapidosagria, larkspur; Digitalis purpurea, foxglove; epineuron, trailing arbutus; E. virginicum, Maryland, fleabane; esepatorium perfoliatum, thorough-wort; E. purpuratum, queen of the meadow; fragaria vesca, strawberry; galium aparine, cleavers; gaultheria procumbens, checker-berry; geranium maculatum, cranesbill; gerum rivale, water avens; gnaphalium polycephalum, end-weed; G. uliginosum, mouse-ear; hamamo by Virginia, witch hazel; heleborus pulegioides, pennyroyal; hebanthus annuus, sunflower; H. tuberosus, artichoke; hepatica Americana, noble liverwort; hetacium venosum, hawk-weed; humulus lupulus, hops; hyssopus officinalis, hyssop; impatiens pallida, wild claudine; noble helonium, elecampane; iris versicolor, blue flag; kalmia latifolia, laurel-kill; laetia elongata, garden lettuce; L. sativa, wild lettuce; laurus cassia, sassafras (south side of Giles' Hill); leontodon taraxacum, dandelion; leonorius carolinus, mother-wort; leucanthemum vulgare, ox-eye daisy; ligustrum lucidum, privet; lobelia cardinalis, red cardinal flower; L. inflata, Indian tobacco; lycopodium Europaeum, bitter bugle; malva ro- tand-lin, the pill-box; maritimum vulgare, horse-hound, red-top; molles officinalis, lemon-balm; mellea papaveris, popper-mint; M. arvensis, sparrow-mint; Mithella cretica, squaw-root; mitorhiza paniculata, horse-mint, nyctagale, meadow-fennel; nepeta hirta, catnip; lupular ulmifera, cow-billy; nympha phoca-olabata, white-pond-lily; ononidion hibernis, scabish; onoclethe Virginiana, bee-hollup; osmondia regalis, black-burn-brake; oenothera longistylis, sweet-willow; oenothera acrocephala, sorrel; panax quinquefolium, ginseng; papaver somniferum, poppy; petroselinum sativum, parsley; phytolacca decumbens, zarzap; plantago major, plantain; polygala punctatum, smartweed; polygala vulgare, rock-polypod; polytrichum juniperum, hair-cap-moss; potentilla Canadensis, five-finger; primus verticillatus, black-elder; primus Virginiana, wild black-cherry; pulmonaria officinalis, maple-lung-wort; pyrola umbellata, poppissew; ranunculus acris, buttercup; rhus glabrum, smooth; rhus toxicodendron, poison-oak; rosa, rose; rubus strigosus, raspberry; R. toxicus, dew-berry; R. occidentalis, thimble-berry; rumex acetosa, sheep-sorrel; R. crispus, yellow dock; R. crispus, yellow dock; ruta graveolens, garden-rue; salix alba, white-willow; S. nigra, pussy-willow; salvia officinalis, sage; sambucus Canadensis, sweet-elder; saturnia borstenis, summer-savory; senecio-lana lateriflora, skull-cap; sempervivum tetra-rotum, horse-leek; sinapis, mustard; solidago, golden-rod; spiraea tomentosa, hardhack; symphytum officinale, comfrey; Tanacetum, tansy; thymus, thyme; trifolium, clover, red and white; trillium, bell-root; trussilago, coltsfoot; veratrum, Indian-poke; verbasicum, mullein.

Grasses.—Clover, herd-grass and red-top are most common on uplands, both for hay and for pasture. On the low grounds are fowl meadow, blue-joint and other varieties that are apparently native. An excellent custom of growing corn in drill for forage is very generally followed. Meadow hay is made up of a variety of wild grasses, brakes and polypods, with occasionally stray stalks from the cultivated fields. Every farmer has his little spot of switch-grass.

Weeds.—These are plants that have strayed away into fields and garden-beds, or road-sides, where they are troublesome or unsightly pests. The pests of old pastures are in part rather shubbs than weeds. These are sweet fern, hardhack, mullein and brakes. The pests of the fields are thistles, yellow dock, sorrel, white-weed and burdock. In the garden we find "pusly," (purslain), rag-weed or Roman worm-wood, all the upland grasses and pests of the fields. May-weed and plantain, catnip and mother-wort keep close to the house and barn. A new weed, the chicory, has within a few years become quite common about our houses and along the roads.

DOMESTIC ANIMALS.—None are natives. They are horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, dogs and cats. Of the varieties of fowl, every farmer keeps hens, probably one in fifty keeps turkeys, and one in two hundred keeps ducks and geese.

WILD ANIMALS.—The largest of these that lives here is the fox; then, as to size, come the raccoon, woodchuck, rabbit, the muskrat, skunk, gray squirrel, hedgehog, mink, red and striped squirrel and weasel. It is, perhaps, seventy-five years since wolves inhabited our woods and heavers the brooks, and, more than that, about a hundred since deer and bears felt at home in these forests. Tradition has it that a moose was slain in town.

BIRDS. Of the birds, the partridge is the great game-bird; the quail is sometimes, though more rarely found. The woodcock is common. Several varieties of the hawk and owl are native, also the kingbird, bluebird, blue-jay, marten, sparrow, lark, oriole, wren, pewee and robin, the most common of all. Ducks often stop overnight, and wild geese sometimes do on their journey south. The name "Loon Island," in Massacum Lake, is evidence that the great northern diver once frequented the waters of that lake. It is now occasionally seen there.

FISH are not numerous. The pickerel, perch, chub, horned pout, sucker, pond-shiner, flatside and speckled trout nearly make up the list. Eels are found with the pouts on muddy bottoms, trout in the mountain brooks and "falls" of the rivers. The black bass is a modern imported novelty that promises well.

REPTILES.—The green and striped snakes, the speckled or water-adder, and the water-newt, toads and frogs are most common. None are probably poisonous.

INSECTS.—The house-fly is universal and rather on the increase, so that it is quite common for farmers, as well as town-people, to guard their doors and windows with wire screens. The blue or maggot-fly is always on hand when there is a chance to spoil a piece of fresh meat or fish; gnats or black flies are most troublesome in the spring; mosquitoes stay near moist grounds, by the borders of ponds, brooks and marshes. There is a good supply of horse-flies in their season; ants are not entirely unknown, but they are not numerous. The borer threatens to kill the apple-trees; a worm ruins the fall sweet apples; the Colorado beetle, unless prevented, will destroy the potato crop. Arsenic, in the form of paris-green, is very effectual, and is generally applied. Spiders are not numerous or hurtful. A sort of beetle, known locally as the "daw-bug," has, within a year or two, made sad havoc with the hay-fields by eating the grass roots. Caterpillars build their houses in our apple-trees, and of grasshoppers the supply is never short. The hornet builds a large, round nest, suspended from the limb of a tree or bush. The yellow-jacket wasp builds a cheaper house than the hornet, but he is always ready to defend it, whether a boy injures it by accident or design. The mud-hornets or "dirt-haubers," build their mud cabin, deposit their eggs and the food for the young when they hatch out.

The humble-bees are insects of more importance and value; they use for a hive a deserted rat's nest, and contrive to have on hand about a tablespoonful of honey to console the lad who gets a thick upper lip while storming the fort and capturing the honey. The common honey-bee deserves mention among domestic animals. Very few investments pay as well as those made in bee-keeping, but that industry has not made much headway in this town, perhaps not one farmer in twenty keeping bees, although a native of this town now in Florida counts his colonies by the hundred and markets his honey by the ton.

Civil and Political History.—

PETITION FOR AN ACT OF INCORPORATION

"State of New Hampshire, } "To the Senate and House of Hillsborough ss. May 3rd, 1787, } Representatives of said State to be convened the first Wednesday of June next: Your Honours' petitioners most humbly sheweth: Being inhabitants of said State in the township of New Bradford, so-called, labouring under many and great inconveniences for want of being incorporated into a town, we, your Honours' humble petitioners, earnestly desire that said township of New Bradford, together with a part of the town of Washington, and a part of Washington Gore, so called, be incorporated into a town by the name of Bradford, with all the privileges and immunities of a town, and be annexed to the County of Hillsborough, containing all the lands within the following bounds: Beginning at a beech-tree on Hillsborough line, thence running north eighty-two degrees east on Hillsborough line six miles and eighty-four rods to a hemlock-tree; thence, the same point of compass, to the southwest corner of Warner; thence north seven-and-a-half degrees west by said Warner four miles and two hundred and thirty-one rods to Sutton south line; thence westerly by said Sutton line to Fishersfield east line sixty rods from said Sutton southwest corner, being a white-oak tree marked; thence by Fishersfield line to a beech-tree marked, being the northeast corner of Washington Gore; thence north seventy-eight degrees west three miles three hundred and ten rods to a small beech marked on Fishersfield line; thence south two degrees west two miles one hundred and fifty rods to a black ash-tree marked; thence south twenty-seven degrees east two miles and one hundred rods to the beech first mentioned. And in granting these, our desires, your Honours will much oblige your Honours' humble petitioners, and we, as in duty bound, shall ever pray, &c.

"Ebenezer Eaton, Ebenezer Colby, Daniel Cressey, Joseph Presbury, Stephen Ward, Nathaniel Presbury, Jr., James Presbury, John Brown, Abraham Smith, Nehr. How, Peter How, Nathaniel Presbury, Enoch
Hoyt, William Clements, Daniel Eaton, John Stanley, Isaac Davis, Joshua Andrews, Abner Ward, Moses Bailey.

"May 3rd, 1787.

"We, the subscribers, being inhabitants of that part of Washington included in the within petition, desire the prayer thereof may be granted.

"Samuel Crane, Martin Brockway, Uzziel Batchelder, Asa Brockway, Simon Hildreth."

The act of incorporation was passed by the Legislature September 27, 1787. No time was lost before organizing the town government under the act of incorporation, as the warrant calling for a town-meeting was issued in eight days after the act was passed.

FIRST TOWN-MEETING AFTER THE INCORPORATION OF THE TOWN.—

THE WARRANT.

"State of New Hampshire, Hillsboro' [Co].

"Agreeable to an Act of the General Court, at Charleston, Sept. 27th, 1787, for the incorporation of New Bradford by the name of Bradford, I, the subscriber, do notify and warn all the freeholders and other inhabitants of Bradford to meet at the house of Nathaniel Presbury, in said town, on Monday, the 22nd day of this instant October, at ten of the clock in the forenoon, then and there to act on the following articles, to wit:

- "1stly. To choose a town clerk.
 - "2ndly. To choose a constable.
 - "3rdly. To choose three selectmen and all other necessary and customary town officers.
 - "4thly. To see if the town will raise money to repair the highways.
 - "5thly. To act on any article that is thought proper when met.
- "Wm. PROSBOY,

"Bradford, Oct. 5th, 1787.

"By order of the General Court."

PROCEEDINGS OF THE TOWN-MEETING

"Bradford, Oct. 22nd, 1787

"Met according to warning of Wm. Presbury, appointed by the General Court.

"Eaton, Ebene, Eaton town clerk

"Eaton, Daniel Cressey constable

"Eaton, Ebene, Eaton, James Presbury and Simon Hildreth selectmen.

"Voted, to choose all other town officers by ballot.

"Voted, Dea. Presbury, Reuben Whitcomb, Isaac Enoch Hoyt and Simon Hildreth successors of highways.

"Voted, Nathaniel Presbury and Isaac Davis assessors.

"Voted, Dea. Presbury sealer of weights and measures.

"Voted, Nathaniel Presbury sealer of leather.

"Voted, Daniel Young and Isaac Davis fence viewers.

"Voted, Daniel Cressey surveyor of lands.

"Voted, Dea. Wm. Presbury, Isaac Davis and Enoch Hoyt a committee to settle with the selectmen.

"Voted, to raise money to repair the highways, twenty pounds.

"Voted, the selectmen be a committee to lay out roads for the town.

"Voted, that the petition that was carried to the quarter sessions by the selectmen of this town be denied.

"Voted, that Nathaniel Presbury have for services as constable for the year 1786 one pound.

"Voted, That all the highway rates be worked out by the last day of November next.

"Dissolved the meeting."

The foregoing "warrant," or legal public notice of a town meeting, and the town clerk's report of the proceedings of the meeting held pursuant to the call, being the first work done under the new town charter, is of historic interest. These documents are given as types of their class, samples of hundreds of others similar in form, which make up the bulk of the "records" of this and other New England towns.
The New England town is a pure democracy. There every citizen has a right to speak and to be heard on the business affairs of the little commonwealth.
The town is the unpretentious foundation on which the more showy political structures of county, State and national governments are all built; the super-structures might be wrecked and destroyed, and the foundation still remain. In copying from these old records, the writer has thought it best to correct all grammatical errors. The custom very generally prevails of copying all the bad spelling in these and other ancient records and documents. This is bad taste. The rule should be, in copying an ancient document, not to attempt to modernize the sense or the spelling in the slightest degree, but to follow the author exactly in his expression of his statements, but spelling his words correctly for the age in which he wrote. Bad spelling was not a peculiarity of any past age. It is probable that the samples of warrant and record of proceedings given above are sufficient for the general reader, and that a copy of a town ordinance under the title of "voted" will be as interesting as the whole proceedings would be.
Under the head of "annals" will be given the most important incidents of each year from the incorporation of the town to the year 1800.

Annals.—

CENSUS OF 1786.

"New Bradford, June 17, 1786.

"A return of the number of souls in New Bradford, so-called, State of New Hampshire, County of Hillsboro'. The whole number, one hundred and twenty-eight of white (128), 2 negroes.

"JAMES PEVY, } Selectmen
"ENOCH HOYT, } of
"ISAAC DAVIS, } Bradford"

PEITON FOR AUTHORITY TO RAISE MONY TO BUILD ROADS, 1788.

"To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives in General Court convened at Concord on the first Wednesday of June, 1788. The petition of the inhabitants of Bradford, in the state of New Hampshire and county of Hillsboro, humbly sheweth, that they being but few in number, that their roads are extremely bad, notwithstanding they have done much labor on them, therefore, the prayer of your petitioners is, that you would grant us liberty to tax all the land in Bradford one penny per acre for the space of three years, which money shall be laid out for the purpose of repairing and making roads in Bradford, and we, as in duty bound, shall ever pray

" EDEM EATON,) Selectmen

" ENOCH HOYT,) for Bradford.

"Bradford, June 2nd, 1788."

The above was granted by an act passed January 20, 1789.

The first mention of Federal money in the town records occurs this year in the records of the annual meeting, March 11th. At that meeting a bounty of four dollars was voted for every "wolf's pate caught within this town." At an adjourned meeting in May the width of the public roads was established at two and a half rods. It was also voted "That people who have bars or gates across the roads be allowed to keep them till the last day of October next." It was voted to build a "pound near the corner of James Presbury's land," near the "long cassey," so called, James Presbury having agreed to give the land for said pound.

At the annual meeting, March 10, 1789, the votes for President of the State (John Pinkney) numbered twenty-five. Nehemiah How was elected "clerk of the market," which seems to have been a new town office. The appropriation of roads was thirty-five pounds.

The wages allowed for working out taxes on the roads was three shillings per day until the last day of September, then two shillings per day.

"Voted to divide the districts for schooling the same as for highways work." The annual appropriation was nine pounds. It was "Voted to build the pound thirty feet square." The contract for building was given to Nathaniel Presbury, at two pounds twelve shillings. Mr. Presbury also elected pound-keeper.

In 1790 it was "Voted to raise eight pounds for schooling." "Voted that the selectmen provide rum for raising a bridge, and that the men give their time at the raising." "Voted to raise money for preaching." "Voted to raise two shillings on a single poll and estates accordingly." "Voted that the people in this town shall have liberty to hear such preaching as suits them best, and pay when they have their proportion of the money raised." "Voted, Stephen Hoyt, Simeon Hildreth, Ebenezer Eaton, committee to hire preaching the present year."

In 1791 it was "Voted, that the money to hire preaching the present year be in grain, at four shillings per bushel." "Voted, that the selectmen should see that the town is centered, and provide a place for holding public meetings the present year." Mr.

Josiah Carpenter's name as a minister appears for the first time in the town records. He began this year to hold public meetings at the house of Daniel Cresscy. At a town-meeting held July 1st, it was "Voted to hire Mr. Carpenter longer on probation."

Town appropriations for the year 1792 were: For schools, twelve pounds; for repairs of roads, forty pounds; for town charges, four pounds; to build school-houses in the several districts, thirty pounds. "Voted, that each district should be centered."

In 1793 there was appropriated for repairs of highways, fifty pounds; schooling, fifteen pounds; for finishing the school-houses, fifteen pounds; for preaching, ten pounds, to be laid out in hiring a young candidate on probation.

At a special meeting called at the school-house near the pound, January 1, 1795, it was "Voted, to make up the soldiers eight dollars a month, when called into service, until their return." "Voted, to give each soldier one dollar bounty when they list."

At a special meeting, held October 5th, "Voted, the spot for the meeting-house be on the hill, a little east of the school-house, in the Center District." It was also voted to build a meeting-house, and that "Eben^r. Eaton should draft a subscription-paper, and get as many signers as possible." This meeting adjourned to November 2d, when it was "Voted, to build the meeting-house 42 feet wide, 50 feet in length, with two porches," and that "the timber fit for framing should be collected the following winter." The selectmen were instructed to hire Mr. Wood to preach. At a special meeting, December 1st, it was "Voted, to give Mr. Benjamin Wood a call to settle as a minister in this town, and to pay for his first year's salary 40 pounds, and to increase the sum annually 3 pounds until it reaches 70 pounds." The committee for the meeting-house consisted of Isaac Davis, John Brown and Simeon Hildreth.

March 8, 1796, the collection of taxes was bid off by Enoch Hoyt, at four pence half-penny per pound. Twenty pounds were appropriated for the purpose of raising the meeting-house. The voters of Fishersfield united with those of Bradford in the latter town to choose a representative for the two towns. Ebenezer Eaton, Esq., was unanimously chosen.

August 20th it was "Voted, to have a county road laid out through Bradford to Henniker, from Fishersfield."

August 29th, "Voted, to give drink and victuals to the raisers and spectators at the raising of the meeting-house on the town's cost."

At the annual meeting, March 14, 1797, "Voted, not to clear the Baptist Society from the minister tax." "Voted, to raise 40 pounds for schooling." "Voted, not to raise money for preaching." "Voted, that the selectmen lay out a road petitioned for by Josiah Melvin and others." July 3d a committee of three was appointed to build a pound with stone walls, near the meeting-house, in a convenient place, the pound to be two rods each way, the walls six feet high and four feet thick at the bottom.

March 13, 1798, the first town-meeting in the new meeting-house was held. Humphrey Jackman, of Bradford, was elected as the representative of Fishersfield and Bradford. March 20th, at an adjourned meeting, "Voted, to fence the burying-yards." "Voted, to have Brown's district fence their own burying-yard." At a called meeting, on April 18th, Ebenezer Eaton was elected to serve as a grand juror, and Humphrey Jackman and Captain Nathaniel Eaton were drawn to serve as petit jurors. "Voted, to Vendue fencing the burying-yards," and that "the boards should be 15 inches wide and 16 feet long, and three boards high, and the posts within 8 feet of each other. Struck off to Nathaniel Presbury, Jr., at 3 shillings 3 pence per rod." A part of the fence around the burying-yard on "Burying Hill," near Bradford Corner, answers the above description, and, being considerably decayed and covered with moss, is the original structure referred to above, and is now (1885) eighty-seven years old.

April 20th the selectman laid out a road "Beginning at the main road, about two rods southerly of Mr. Daniel Young's house; thence easterly to the brook that runs out of the pond; thence to the bounds between Mr. Marshall's and Mr. Melvin's, on the west end of their lot; thence easterly on the line between sd. Marshall and Melvin to Warner line; said road to be three rods wide, and to remain a bridle-road till paid for." This is the road that leads from Nathan R. Marshall's old place, on "Bible Hill," down by Cummings Pierce's to "Pond Brook," and crossing the brook at "Massachusetts Rock," leads up a sandy hill to the Henniker road, called in the town records the "Main road." A cart-road across the field of Frederick Cheney, near the junction of these roads, leads to where Mr. Young formerly lived.

At the annual meeting, March 12, 1799, it was "Voted that there shall be a new district for schooling where Capt. Eaton lives."

At a meeting held July 15th it was "Voted to lay out the remainder of the minister money on Mr. Colton."

Several money seems to have been more fully adopted in 1800, as at a sale of land for taxes the amounts are carried out in dollars and cents.

VISIT OF GENERAL LAFAYETTE.—The account of this visit is well told in the following letter of the late Captain Miner Hawks, of this town, written for a Manchester paper:

"Editor of the Budget :

"Thinking that some of my comrades would like to learn a little more about that visit of General Lafayette to Bradford, this State, in the early days of the century, a brief sketch of which has been the rounds of the press, I interviewed Attorney-General Tappan recently upon the subject. He was present at the reception in Bradford and related to me the scene as he recalled it. I give it nearly in his own words, and will only add that lined descendants of the gallant Corporal Blood now reside in Manchester: 'I was of just the right age to receive an indelible impression from an excitement of that nature. You have no idea what a furor there was. It seems as though the people loved the French hero more than they did our own Washington. Lafayette was brought to Concord in the most elegant turnout the country could furnish. The driver, a man of splendid physique, was named Norton, and I fully appreciated the honor of his position. It was known about what time the honored guest would arrive and everybody was in waiting. A line of couriers was placed along the Warner road from the hotel to the top of the hill, to give notice of the approach. Presently word was passed down the line, 'He's coming! He's coming!' and everybody yelled, 'He's coming!' and began to rush about in the most frantic manner. The bustle now was to form two lines of citizens along the road. Corporal Blood, commonly called "Old General Blood," by way of compliment, a hero of Monmouth and Brandywine, became so elevated and elated at the idea of meeting his old commander after a lapse of forty years, that the combined strength of three men was required to keep him in place.

"As Lafayette approached, Blood, with a terrible struggle, broke from his attendants and rushed into the centre between the lines in front of the house, dressed in a full suit of the old regimentals, swinging his old cocked hat. Norton pulled up the horses, when Blood called out at the top of his voice, 'General Lafayette!' (with a sharp accent on the last syllable) 'see my old cocked hat!' at the same time throwing the hat, which struck Lafayette fair in the face and was retained by him till he entered the hall. In the centre of the hall the General was seated on a platform, where the presentations were made. I was among the first, and being a child, he took me on his knee and held me through much of the ceremony. I shall never forget the scene when old General Blood was presented. Lafayette seized the old veteran with both hands, and the two men broke into a paroxysm of sobs as they were mutually reminded of the old dark days of the Revolution. The utmost silence prevailed in the hall, while many a little incident and reminiscence of the scenes of courage and privations they had shared were called to mind." "M. H."

Occupations and Industries—FARMERS.—Bradford is a farming town. Whatever other occupations men may follow here, for profit or for pleasure, a part of their time is taken up on the farm or in the garden. From the first settlement of the town the citizens have been industrious, economical and generally thrifty. Some of their fields have been twice cleared,—first of the original growth of forest-trees, and again of rocks that covered the surface of the ground. These rocks are piled up in walls that surround or partition off the farms, or lay in great heaps on the hillside fields. These huge stone piles and walls will long remain as monuments of the industry and energy of the builders, and, perhaps, to excite the wonder of some future race of people that may come here, after our own race and nation, with our literature and traditions, shall have passed into oblivion. These farmers are the most independent class of men. The first of our race must have been farmers, and the last will be the same. The farmers may have enough to eat, though there be not enough to "go clear round;" for they sit at the first table at nature's feast, and help themselves to whatever they like best. What they leave is sent to market to spread the second table for the rest of the world.

Many privileges and luxuries of city life the farmer is deprived of; but many of these he can afford to do without. He need not care for paintings of domestic animals or landscapes with sunset views, for the best of such paintings are but copies on canvas, dead and cold. Their animals, their light and shade, do not move; their clouds never change shape or color. But out on every farm one can see the grand originals of these fine paintings. There are the horses, cattle and sheep cropping the honeysuckle, drinking at the brook, lying down in the shady woods. No painting of scenery or of landscape can equal these. The best of paintings look very tame compared with nature's grand panorama of dissolving views, which she puts on exhibition in the country every day. The stars of the night slowly fade through the dawn, until they are lost in the glory of the opening day. The many-shaped and many-tinted clouds of sunrise, more brilliant than gold or diamond, give way to the fervor of noon, and high noon hastens downward to the clouds that are triumphed with hues of silver and gold and precious stones. These sparkle and dazzle the beholder, take on more sombre shades, fading into the gray twilight, and the stars look out again. These sublime forms and hues no limner can portray.

Besides this, the farmer owns a slice of the great round world, for his farm is the base of a pyramid, the apex of which touches the centre of the globe itself. The farmers are no middle men. They are a deputy Providence, standing nearest to the Divinity who makes agriculture possible; they plant and tend and gather the harvests of bread and fruit and meat, the cotton and wool, that feed and clothe mankind.

Although farming is the only occupation that is absolutely necessary to support life, there are a great many trades necessary to support our present civilization. In nearly all of these the demand will regulate the supply, and we may safely trust the matter to regulate itself. But it is not so in the so-called learned professions, especially those of law and medicine.

Doctors and lawyers should be paid a stated salary, and not by fees. This would immediately change the duties of the doctors,—they would become sanitary inspectors and advisers, and in this way they would lessen greatly the amount of sickness and premature death in the community. Comparatively few would be required; the others could find some other employment, and so many would not crowd into the profession. Lawyers would in this way become peace-makers, and the number of lawsuits grow beautifully less. Will Bradford lead off in this matter, and thus take a long step ahead of the rest of the country towards the millennium?

LAWYERS IN BRADFORD.—Weare Tappan came to Bradford in 1818, and was in the active practice of his profession until within a few years of his death, which occurred at Bradford in 1868, at the age of seventy-eight. He was a graduate of Dartmouth College in the class of 1811.

Hon. Mason W., son of Weare Tappan, was born at Newport, N. H., October 20, 1817. Fitted for college, but was not a graduate, preferring to enter upon the study of his profession without a college course, which study he pursued for five years, and was admitted to the bar in 1844. He was a member of the New Hampshire House of Representatives in 1853, '54 and '55. He was elected from Second District, and served in the Thirty-fourth, Thirty-fifth and Thirty-sixth Congresses of the United States; colonel of the First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers in the War of the Rebellion, and has been Attorney-General of the State since 1876. He has received the degree of A.M. from Dartmouth College.

Lawrence D. Bailey, born in Sutton, read law with M. W. Tappan, and was his law-partner from 1855 to 1857. He afterwards went to Kansas, where he was for some years one of the judges of the Supreme Court, where he still resides, publishing a newspaper and practicing law.

Moses K. Hazleton, born in Lisbon, commenced the practice of law in 1857, and was a partner of M. W. Tappan until he went to the war with Colonel Tappan, in 1861. He was appointed paymaster in the regular army, and died in the service.

E. B. S. Sanborn was law-partner of M. W. Tappan from 1863 to 1868. He removed to Franklin, N. H., where he is still in the active practice of his profession. He has been frequently in the Legislature from that town, and is at present one of the railroad commissioners of the State.

Robert M. Wallace was born in Henniker, N. H.; read law with M. W. Tappan, and was his law-partner from 1868 to 1871. He is now a rising young lawyer in Milford, N. H.; has been in the Legislature and is at present county solicitor for the county of Hillsborough.

Bartlett G. Cilley, of Andover, N. H., was in company with Colonel Tappan in the practice of the law in 1861 and 1862, and until his death, which occurred at Bradford.

Hon. Bainbridge Wadleigh, son of Evans Wadleigh, of this town, read law with Colonel Tappan. He commenced the practice of his profession at Milford, N. H., where he still resides, was frequently a member of the Legislature from that town, and afterwards United States Senator.

PHYSICIANS.—The first physician in town was Dr. Lyman, a skillful and noted surgeon. He came from Warner and returned there.

Dr. Jason H. Ames was Dr. Lyman's successor. He came to the Corner, settled there and has lived there ever since. (See genealogical notes.)

Dr. David Mitchell, of Peterborough, settled at the "Middle of the town," built a house and lived there, and practiced about ten years and died there. He married — Hoyt, and had three children; one was drowned in the well at Hoyt's.

Dr. Frederick Mitchell came to town soon after the death of his brother David; family came with him. He did not remain very long.

Dr. Harvey Studley came soon after Mitchell left, and lived and died in the first house west of the "Uncle Bill Sawyer" place. He was in practice, probably, ten years. He died October 15, 1830, aged forty-one years.

Dr. Colby, of Henniker, came to the same part of town and lived a year or two in the Eben Cressy house.

Dr. Weston was the next. He lived there in the Cressy house about ten years. His family came and went away with him. He was succeeded by Dr. George H. Hubbard, of Sutton. He married Sally, daughter of Samuel Jones, of Bradford. They had one son, George, a druggist in Manchester, N. H., where he died.

Dr. Hubbard was a graduate of the Vermont Medical College. He was a skillful surgeon and a successful and popular physician. He removed to Manchester, and for some time edited the New Hampshire Journal of Medicine. He went into the army as surgeon of a New Hampshire regiment, and was soon promoted to the position of a brigade surgeon. After the war he had charge of a hospital on the Hudson, above Troy, N. Y., where he died from the result of an injury sustained while alighting from a street-car.

Dr. Daniel F. Hale died at Bradford December 7, 1848, aged twenty-nine years.

Dr. Morgan lived a year or two in the Mrs. West house. Dr. Stickney also practiced a short time in this town.

Dr. Fisk lived at the "Mills" fifteen or twenty years and practiced his profession. He sold out to Dr. Clark, who sold out to Dr. Raines, who still resides at the Mill village.

Dr. Carleton, from Webster, practiced a while here before going to Salem, Mass.

Dr. Fitz lived at the Corner, and owned a share in the hotel with Reynolds Rogers.

Dr. Martin was in practice for a few years.

Dr. Ebenezer Harriman Davis, son of Samuel Davis, of this town, read medicine with Dr. G. H. Hubbard, graduated at the Vermont Medical College, and settled in Manchester, N. H., where he became one of the most successful and popular physicians of that city. He was twice married; died in Manchester; had one son, who lives in Florida.

Dr. John Milton Hawks removed from this town and began practice in Manchester.

Dr. Samuel Woolbury Jones, son of Samuel Jones, fitted for medical college under the instruction of Dr. G. H. Hubbard, graduated at the Vermont Medical College, and entered the practice of his profession at Manchester, N. H., as a partner of Dr. E. H. Davis, and continued with him several years. He then became one of the proprietors of the National Hotel at Washington, D. C., where he made a fortune and retired to private life in Boston. His wife was Harriet Wadleigh, of Bradford. They had one son, on account of whose health they removed to Orange County, Fla., where Dr. Jones was drowned.

Dr. Diamond Davis, uncle of Dr. E. H., above mentioned, son of Daniel and Mary (Brown) Davis, lived and died in Sutton.

Dr. Seth Straw Jones, brother of Samuel Woolbury, graduated at the same college.

Dr. Farley studied with Dr. Lyman at the Corner. Dr. C. A. Carleton practiced at the Corner.

Dr. Reuben Hatch lived at the Mills in the Buswell house. He came from Hillsborough in May, 1837; and removed to Newport in October, 1838.

Dr. Davis lived first where Wm. A. Carr now lives.

Dr. Doton was the first to occupy the house where Dr. Raynes now lives; was there six years, and then removed to Manchester.

Dr. Fisk succeeded Doton; the next was Dr. Nathaniel T. Clark, then J. H. Martin, then Dr. John B. Raynes, who came here in November, 1882.

STORES.—At "the Centre."—Eben Cressy, Albert Cressy, Walter Stone, Joshua Jewett, Robert Hale, E. F. Hill, Dana Brown and William C. Hoyt kept store, successively, at the Centre village, that of Mr. Hale being the last.

At the Mill Village.—The veteran merchants of the town are Daniel Carr and Jno. W. Morse; the latter has been in business here about fifty years. Ira Cochrane had a store and residence, fronting the bridge, half a century ago. — Blanchard, formerly of the firm of Baxter & Blanchard, was in business under the firm-name of Morse & Blanchard. Mr. Buswell dealt in clothing, and Lund in saddles and harness.

Among others in business here were Samuel Jones, Weare Tappan, John Cochrane, Enoch Darling, Isaac Darling, Seth Straw, — Rogers, Perley How, Rufus Eaton, John D. Wadleigh, William Robbins, John B. Bailey, Josiah Morse and Wm. A. Carr (now in trade).

At the Corner.—Among the early store-keepers at the Corner were Joel Gay, from Francess-town; he kept his store in the old school-house. Jeremiah Page, of Dunbarton, kept store in the building now occupied by the Marshalls as a tin-shop. A Mr. Stickney traded there; also Albert Cressy and Hiram Davis. Just across the street, on the corner of the Warner and Sutton roads, was the well-known firm of Farley & Chase, which succeeded a Mr. Dodge. Page & Kimball's stove-shop was the next building, since occupied by — Bates for the same purpose. Baxter & Blanchard were in the store on the corner, as were also Martin & Ames, Lyman Brockway, Ira French, Samuel Wells and Amaziah Carter, and the last to do business there were Watkins & Sawyer. There came to be a demand for a store near the depot, and J. P. Marshall built one, which was first occupied by Sawyer & Martin, who were succeeded by Dan. R. Marshall, who kept a cash store and had charge of the Bradford Library, which is still kept in the rear of the store. Marshall sold to A. B. Jenny, who still continues in the trade there. Just across the railroad track is the store of the Colby Brothers.

Among others in business here were Samuel Jones, — Moore, John Kimball, Bard P. Page, Dr. — Farley, Albert M. Chase, Hiram Blanchard, Moses E. Baxter, Robert Wallace, Henry Ames, Horace K. Martin, Freeman Brockway, George Oscar Sawyer, G. B. R. Watkins, Hiram Davis, Nat. Davis and — Wadleigh.

Some of the above-named men were in trade as partners, at least a portion of the time,—Page & Kimball, Farley & Chase, Baxter & Blanchard, Ames & Martin.

Hotels.—John Raymond, for whom the Corner was named, was probably the first landlord in that quarter of the town. Then followed, somewhat in the order named, a Mr. Roby, Daniel Cressy, — Nichols, William Carter, Lyman Brockway, Pearce Swatt, — Nevins, Dudley Kendrick, Dudley Davis, Langdon Littlehale, — West, Reynolds Rogers, Dr. Fitch, — Chadwick and the present proprietor, Charles Gillis.

At "The Mills" Samuel Jones built and kept a hotel. The brick hotel was built by him about 1815. Levi Morrill has twice been its proprietor and popular host. A Mr. Stevens once kept there, and half a century ago Amariah Hall held sway for a while; also, Jeremiah Silver, Seth Straw, — Watson, Way & Tewksbury, — Barber, John L. Nevins, Lyman Brockway and M. C. Bartlett, present incumbent.

The Presbury House—a fine hotel—stood nearly opposite the new town hall. It was built for, and occupied first by, Dudley Davis, of Warner. It was destroyed by fire, and with it the records of the Masonic lodge, containing the autograph of Lafayette, written when he visited the lodge in 1824. The following persons also kept the house: Silas Wilkins, George Hook, — Thatcher and Langdon Littlehale.

General Stephen Hoyt built a hotel at the Centre, which was some years afterwards moved to the Mills and used for other purposes. The hotel was also kept by William Hoyt.

Edward Cressy, father of William, once kept a tavern on the Warner road, on the edge of the Cressy plain, in the two-story house since known as the Stanley House.

The old "Tom Cheney tavern-stand," now occupied by — Ward, is on the west side of the Henner road, at the south end of "the pond," or Massachusetts Lake. This and the Cressy House, being on main roads to Boston, probably entertained real live Vermont and Boston teamsters; but it is many a year since those teamsters, shod with no-heeled slippers, told stories and toasted their shins before the bar-room fires.

The Bradford Springs Hotel, built by General Wilson, is mainly for summer guests. It is pleasantly located and surrounded by some of our finest landscape views and forest roads.

MILLS.—General Stephen Hoyt built and operated a saw and grist-mill west of the centre of the town. The ruins of this mill may still be seen a few rods from the road. Isaac Davis had a mill on his brook, near the pond. The saw-mill now owned by Lucius Wood was built by Eb. Spaulding. The grist-mill has been owned by Maxfield, the — Andrews Brothers and now by — Batman. The fulling and carding-mill, built and first owned by Sanders, then by Adams & Wadleigh, was burned a few years ago and never rebuilt.

Jacob and Edwin M. Bailey have a large shop for manufacturing doors and blinds, next-door to the grist-mill. Frank Brown has a small mill and chair-factory on the road from the Mills to the Fair-Ground.

Before the common use of steam as a motive-power it was necessary to locate mills on a stream of falling water. It is now known to be about as economical to run machinery by steam-power, and that fact will change the location of mills, shops and, consequently, villages. New industries and new villages may yet arise, that will repeople our deserted farms and fill again the old district school-houses.

Societies.—The Free-Masons and Odd-Fellows each have their lodges at the Mill village.

Churches and Ministers.—In the early history of the town Congregationalism was in the ascendency, and dissenters were obliged to pay a minister tax, although they might not like the preaching. It was considerable of a step toward liberalism when the town voted that the Baptists might have their share of the public money, and that "people may have such preaching as suits them best." Rev. Mr. Carpenter was, perhaps, the first minister settled in town. Rev. Lemuel Bliss was one of the early ministers in town. He had no children, and his wife taught the district school. He lived several years at the middle of the town, and died there. Then Hosea Wheeler was taken "on probation." Rev. Robert Paige was settled there several years; he died, and was buried near the town-house. Rev. Mr. Kent also preached there. Rev. Orlando Thatcher lived and died there. He had one son. The next minister was the Rev. Mr. Rogers. While he was there, the non-resistant doctrine was preached in town in connection with anti-slavery. This took away from the church the families of John Brown, Albert Chase, James Farrington and others, and considerably weakened the church. Religious services were held in the town-house until, about forty-eight years ago, the "new" church or meeting-house was built near the old town-house.

The Baptist meeting-house is located between the two villages, the Mills and the Corner. This church organization was "tried as by fire" in 1843, during the Miller excitement. The Second Advent lecturers were allowed the use of the church in which to hold their meetings; the inside walls of the church were hung with great charts, some covered with figures, by which it was ciphered out, in various ways, that the dreams of Daniel, the prophet, and the visions of John, the evangelist, all pointed to 1843 as the time for the end of the wicked world. Other charts were embellished with paintings of monstrous and frightful dragons with numerous heads and horns. With these appliances, aided by fluent and sensational lectures, it is no wonder that Elder Weston raised a storm of excitement; no wonder that emotional women "lost their strength" and fell on the floor; and in the emotional brains of many women and men reason reeled and trembled on her throne. The spell was broken by the charts being stolen and destroyed, and the town breathed freely again.

The Baptists (Free-Will) have a church in the Howlet neighborhood, known as the "Bush Meeting-House," perhaps from the fact that it is in the "bush," or woods. Elder Holmes preached there about the year 1841. Elder Jonathan Rowe and Elder Isaac Peaslee, of Sutton, have preached there. There is no preaching there now, and the unused door-steps and untrodden, grassy door-yard have a neglected look that is depressing to the feelings of the passer-by.

The "Pond Meeting-House" is a peculiar institution. It is sometimes called a union church. It was erected two or three years after the building of the Bush meeting-house, by voluntary subscriptions, principally by Moses Colby, of men of various modes of faith, with the understanding that the house is not to be locked, and that anybody can preach there who wants to. Any man or woman, desiring to be heard on temperance, woman's rights or points of doctrine, has only to "give out word" that there will be such a meeting at such a time, and an audience will be there at the appointed time. The sparring between Elder Holmes and Moses Colby was worth going a long way to hear.

School Districts.—We learn from Mr. Davis' report for the year ending March 1, 1885, that there are in town twelve school districts, or, perhaps, more accurately, eleven, counting Nos. 7 and 9 as one district. Each of these districts is a little republic by itself. Its boundaries are not so definitely defined and fixed as those of a town, for they vary to suit the convenience of even a single family.

A school-meeting is a type of every deliberative and legislative body, from the primary or caucus to the Congress of the United States. The history of every one of these school districts properly told would be more interesting than the general run of town histories. The inhabitants of a school district are more nearly related to one another than to citizens of the town in general, some of whom they rarely meet, and to many of whom they are strangers.

Out of a dozen such histories, covering our whole territory, a history of the town could be compiled that all our people would want.

District No. 8 is united with District No. 17 in Warner. Their temple of learning has been famous for more than half a century, and is known as the "Calico School-house" from a fancied resemblance that the dotted door and window-shutters bore to calico.

After the consent of the towns which are interested, this district was formed by the tax-payers signing an agreement dated October 10, 1825. The signers in Bradford were Ebenezer Bagley, Colburn Hawks, N. R. Marshall, Ebenezer Cheney, Daniel Pierce, Cummings Pierce. Those in Warner were,— Timothy Flanders, Enos Collins, Moses Collins, Newel Brown, John Simmons, Thomas J. Flanders, Samuel Brown, David Bagley, Enos Collins, Jr., Asa Sargent. Of this list of men, only Cummings Pierce survives.

In the Bradford portion of this district there have at times been twenty or more attending school; now the town report shows but two. Well, it is ebb-tide now; let us not be discouraged, the tide will turn. There are live men and brave souls in the old district yet. In the dark hours of the nation's peril, when she called the roll of her defenders, sixteen men who had been schooled here responded to their names.

Roads and Drives.—In the reports of town-meetings and in the proceedings of the selectmen may be found the history of the laying out of most of the public roads. The most important of these are the cross-roads at Raymond's Corner and at the west part of the town and the Henniker road. The north and south road at the "middle of the town" is known as the "Old County road." That from the "Corner" towards Melvin's mills is the "Warner road;" that from the Corner to the Lake Massasecum and along its west shore is the "Henniker road." These roads are intersected by others at all angles, and running in all directions, so that every farm-house, whether located on a hill-top or in a valley, has a public road leading close to its door-yard. As the settlements change from one part of town to another, or as one portion declines and another advances, the roads show the movement of the population. In and near and between the villages the roads are wide and smooth and clear of stones, and kept in good repair. Out two or three miles over the hills, where the dwellings are farther apart, the roads become narrowed down to a single wagon-track, bordered with grass and weeds, prominent among which, near the farm-houses, are the plantain and may-weed. Looking along these neighborhood roads, one sees long lines of this verdure dividing the horse-track from the wagon-ruts. It is a struggle for mastery between nature and art. The smooth, wide road is artificial; the grass and weeds are natural. A good road may be kept open thousands of years, as they have been in Rome; but art is temporary and nature eternal, and she will win at last. In our roads it is interesting to watch nature in the process of reclaiming her own, and gaining a foothold where she had temporarily been thrust aside. As the travel is gradually discontinued, the toe-path and the wheel-ruts grow narrower, and the weeds and grass taller; and here and there blackberry bushes, sumachs and birches come up close to the track, as though their roots had been there all the time waiting and watching for their opportunity to assert themselves. Modest little bushes of all kinds, that had stood almost unnoticed for years along the stone walls at the roadside, become trees, and afford a pleasant shade to those who pass along occasionally in summer. Rank-growing vines cover up the stone walls; grass, weeds, bushes, trees cover the roadway, and very soon nature half-denies that man has ever spent his labor there. But there are signs of civilization not so easily covered up. Where the homestead of the sturdy settler stood, the old cellar and the old well remain. There, too, holding their own for a time against the forest-trees, are the old apple-trees, where the orchard was, and the lilac-bushes that we know stood near the door-way.

There are several pleasant drives out of town. That to the top of Kearsarge Mountain is rather tiresome, but it gives fine views; a visit to Sunapee Lake, where several of our citizens have summer cottages, is always refreshing. But we have pleasant drives within our own borders. One good drive, rich in varied scenery, exhibiting our hills, valleys and plains dotted over with pastures, fields and gardens, farm-houses, school-houses and meeting-houses, also rich in historic interest, is as follows: Starting at the new town-house, which stands on the highest land on the road between the "Mills" and the "Corner," in sight of the railroad, and just across it Colby's and Jenny's stores; diagonally across the square is the Baptist meeting-house, by the door of which hung so long the little box with glass front in which marriage intentions were "published." Here, at the church, is a road leading up to Deacon Marshall's old place. On this road, across from the church, lives Joseph Currier. Then, between the meeting-house and Carr's store, we should pass on the right the residences of Silas Colby, Ward Day, Smith Gillingham, Al Hall, H. Colby, Gillingham, the Andrew place, Daniel Carr, Buswell and Carr's store. One may almost truly say Carr's post-office, he has held it so many years.

Next is the old Tappan place, with its law-office and its tall poplars, which have been a land-mark for miles around for two or three generations. Then the road that leads back to the Samuel Jones place, John W. Morse's store and Wood's grist-mill finish up that side to the bridge.

On our left, as we leave the town hall, and close by it, is Dr. Peaslee's drug-store; then Patch's house; then across the valley Mrs. Farley's, Mrs. Emerson's; then "Woodside," the fine estate of Colonel M. W. Tappan; then the residences of Moses Gould, Frank Tappan, Mr. Wood, William M. Carr, the Buswell store, with Masonic and Odd-Fellows' halls overhead, Bartlett's brick hotel, Hadley's house and blacksmith's shop; then the bridge across the outlet to Todd's Pond, which pond stretches away to the right into Newbury.

While the horse is drinking at the public fountain, just across the bridge, there will be time to observe that here is a public square; that above the fountain are several sign-boards with fingers pointing toward various towns, the names of which are plainly painted, and the distances told in figures.

Having decided to go nearly straight ahead up Cochrane's Hill, we may take time to glance along the street to our right, and see on the right-hand side Bailey's huge, barn-like shop; a little beyond which, and up a gentle grade, is Dr. Raynes' office; a few rods farther on once stood the hall in which the "High School" was held. A little beyond is the pleasant residence and fine garden of Mrs. George Hart. The next house, a few rods away, is Mrs. Rowe's, the last in Bradford, so near is our pleasant village to the edge of the town. Across the street from Mrs. Hart's are the houses of Mr. Wiggin, Blood, Wm. A. Carr and the Deacon Hadley place, occupied by Jesse Marshall. Here lived for a while and died one of our noted men, Rev. John Gillingham, a preacher of the Christian sect. He was sympathetic and emotional, with a gift of language and tone of voice with which he could make one's nerves tingle from head to foot. On the hill facing the bridge live Edwin and Jacob Bailey.

At the left and close by the bridge is the residence of John W. Morse; and just across the street from these are the three great houses of the Wadleigh brothers, Evans, Moses and John D., the former the father of Bainbridge, the United States Senator.

Passing up over the hill, the first house seen on the right was occupied several years by David Hawks and family. Next on the left is the Enoch Sweat place; then the house of Levi Morrill, the retired hotel-keeper; the next is a large, old house on the right, in the Ashby place, now occupied by Walter Abbott. "Jim" Taylor lives next, in a small cottage on the left. The road bears to the left, near a brook, and we come to the Jonathan Peaslee place on the right.

Then, without crossing the brook, we go close to the small saw-mill and chair-shop of Frank Brown. Looking up the road over the hill, first on the right is the house of E. Ring. Near the top of the hill, on the right, lives Albert Brown, the barn close to the road on the left. This little hill is avoided by taking a new road that bears to the left near the mill.

At the foot of the hill, beyond Brown's, is the Elder Steele place. Along a more level and sandy road we soon come to the Fair-Ground, where the sister towns of Bradford and Newbury hold their annual fair and cattle show.

Leaving the Fair Ground on our right, we pass over an undulating, wild and woody country to and across the West meadow, near General Hoyt's old mill-site, the Durrell farm, one of the best in town. Not far beyond, an old road, closed by a gate, leads up a long, steep hill to Oliver Sawyer's (father of Oscar). He has lived there some fifty-five years.

More woods and rocks and miles bring us to the Bradford Springs, noted for their medicinal and healing waters. After the sight-seeing, water-drinking, rest and refreshment here, we can return through "the middle of the town," first passing the house of Mrs. Elbridge G. Hoyt, which is the old General Hoyt place. The old burying-ground, with its moss-covered inscriptions, is worthy of a call. The stone walls around the "pound" are in good repair, and must look very much as they did when Nathaniel Presbury built them, in 1789, for two pounds twelve shillings.

This is all sacred ground. Here stood the old town-house; here were the annual March elections; here spread out the ring of athlete wrestlers; while inside the house our fathers voted for town officers, the minister among the rest, for President of New Hampshire, and, every four years, for President of the United States. But we must drive straight back to the Mill village, and study the history of the settlers at another time.

Another pleasant drive is from the Corner to the "Centre;" then easterly along over the long range of hills where Olin French, the Sawyers, Jewett and Hale lived. On this high road one gets fine views of Lake Massasecum, Guiles' Hill and the Warner hills and old Kearsarge. Looking across to the left, the old Bush meeting-house and its neighborhood seems to be in a valley.

Continuing over rocky hills and a pebbly road, but little used, past the untenanted houses of Deacon and of Silas Abbott, the Lyman Cheney place, the school-house in District No. 5, well-nigh untenanted, down the hill, through a mass of blackberry bushes; then up over a short but steeper hill to the Moses Colby place, now owned and occupied by Prescott Colby and a sister. Here Stephen Ward and his father lived; they sold to Colby, and moved to where Warren Ward now lives. Then on down longer and steeper hills to the Henniker road, near How's old tavern-stand, in the edge of Warner. Here, taking a turn to the left, one soon crosses again Bradford line, and comes to the Sharron Jameson place, first settled by Moses Baley, one of the signers to the petition to have the town incorporated.

A few rods farther, and the same side of the road (the west) at the left in going toward Bradford villages, stands the "Pond meeting-house," the inevitable grave yard being by the road-side south of the house. A few rods down the sandy hill a road branches off to the right, leading past the Shepard Davis and the Samuel Davis places. Close by, on the left, is the old Tom Cheney tavern, with its barn hard by the road on the right. Here, at the right, is the south end of old Bradford Pond, now Lake Massasecum. It is here half a mile wide, and fringed by a beautiful open grove of pines, making as fine a place as could be wished for in which to hold picnic and pleasure-parties. The shore is a white, rather coarse sand. Beaver Dam Brook comes into the pond near by. Looking north, one can see the whole length of the lake, about two miles, with Great Island on the left and Loon Island on the right. Beyond the "Hay-Stack Rock" Guiles' Hill rises from the east side of the lake, with an almost perpendicular side of granite ledges thinly covered with stunted cedars, oaks and blueberry bushes. This hill, by the way, is a famous berrying-ground. As to the mode of spelling this hill, Giles would be preferred; but that would allow it to be pronounced as if written Jiles.

The east side of the lake is wild woods, excepting Frank Davis' pasture at the south end and Cummings Pierce's field at the north end; but along the west margin of the lake runs the "new" Henniker road, the old road being a few rods further west, running along over hills and high ridges. This was called the stage-road, because stages carried the United States mail over it before the railroad came to Bradford.

Before starting up the road, it is only fair to say that the thanks of many readers of this are due to Mr. Ward, at the Cheney place, for the loan of boards for the temporary construction of tables and seats for the use of pleasure-parties in the "pine grove." Now, starting along, one may notice that the road is excellent and considerably shaded. Within half a mile or so a road leads up the hill on the left to Warren Ward's, where Proctor and Stephen once lived. Here the road turns to the left almost at a right angle, and leads still up the hill. At the highest point in the road a "pair of bars" shuts up a private road that leads up on a higher hill to the Sylvester Ward place, where Sumner Ward lived. From these bars the larger road leads down a gentle slope, through a little valley, the road all the way deeply shaded until near the other road where we saw the School-house No. 5. Perhaps there is nothing finer in town than these few rods of retired, quiet shade. At the point where this road leaves the Henniker road a guide-board is marked "Hillsborough."

Descending to the valley and crossing it a few yards, we have, on our left, the old homestead of the Davis family, first cleared by Isaac, the great-grandfather of Charles F., the present owner and occupant, and crossing the brook, on which once stood a mill, we soon pass the old cellar of Lyndon Ward on the right then about a half-mile to a road that leads off on the left, which passes the Rush meeting-house and on to the "Centre." A little way up this road stands the Pond School-house, one of the old institutions of the town. Here, at the angle of the road, is the Daniel Sargent place, first settled by William Young, of Warner, who afterwards built and lived north of Fred Cheney's. Carlos Abbott has lately come into possession of this farm and has made a thorough renovation of the old buildings.

The next place worthy of note is the road on the left, with stone walls on each side, leading up to Ten Pipes, twenty rods or so, the former home of Nathan. The next house is Frederick Cheney's, on the left, and very near the shore of the lake. Here a road leads up to John Howlet's, intersecting the one that branches off at Carlos Abbott's. Here the road is sandy and heavy; a brook crosses the road under a bridge, where the cardinal flowers can always be seen in their season. A few rods of deep, sandy road across the valley or intervalve brings the traveler to Abouiram Jameson's on the right. This is a new place, and seems like an intruder amongst the old veterans. From here the road ascends a sandy but not steep hill, though probably the hardest for teams on the whole road. At the top of the hill a road branches off on the right, labeled "Melvin's Mills, 2 miles." This is the road that was laid out by the selectmen in 1787, and ordered "to remain a bridle-road till paid for." It crosses the bridge over the Pond Brook, and passes up by Cummings Pierce's, Nathan R. Marshall's old place, which lies partly in Warner; here, turning northerly, running over Bible Hill by the Hawks homestead, and down the hill to Melvin's mills. On Bible Hill the town line runs along in the road, and the houses of the late Enos Collins' (now Herbert Ewing's), Moses (now Frank Collins'), Mrs. John H. Brown and Mrs. Harvey Brown are all on the Warner, or east side of the road. As soon as the road crosses the Pond Brook at Massacum Rock, a branch leaves to the left and passes the Timothy Dowlin, or Nathan Pierce, or Leonard Jameson place on the right, and on up to the top of the hill to the old T. L. Dowlin homestead, since owned and occupied by Amaziah Hall; then down the hill to the Samuel Wheeler place, on the left, across the bridge over the united stream from Todd's Pond, Presby's Brook and the Pond Brook, which somewhere along here must begin to wear the name of Warner River, and out on to the Warner road, at Edward Cressy's old tavern-stand. All this, from the top of the hill near Add. Jameson's, is a digression; we are on the Henniker road, at the top of a sand-hill, at the north end of the lake. Did a great avalanche, checked in its progress by the firm ledges of Guiles' Hill, melt away there, and scoop out the deep basin of the lake and pile up the sand, making this hill? The second house that William Young built in town stood west of the Main road, and on the "old" Henniker road. Descending the hill, and passing a peat-bog on the left, and the field and intervalve of Cummings Pierce on the right, we soon reach the houses of George and Pierce Sargent, near together on the left. Down a slight incline and passing a narrow woods on the right, we come out to John H. Collins' place, on the right,—a well-kept and productive intervalve farm. Close by, on the same side of the road, lives Mr. Woodbury; then Collins' barn on the intervalve at the left; then the covered bridge over Presbury Brook. At the bridge, before crossing, the road forks, and one branch goes up to Andrew Jones' place and to the old Deacon William Presbury place, said to be the first place settled in Bradford. A little beyond the bridge the road crosses the track of the Concord and Claremont Railroad, then the Hiram Davis house, then Mrs. Dane's, Bard P. Page's and Marshall's tin-shop, at the "Corner," and on a corner of the Warner road. This is the village square. Gillis' Hotel stands at the left as we entered. Across the street, in front, is the old Farley & Chase store, now finished off into a dwelling-house, owned by J. P. Marshall, occupied by John French. Next is the old Kimball stand, the stove-shop, now owned by Bates. A little farther along, guarded by an iron fence, is the fine residence of J. P. Marshall, on the old Raymond estate. The old brick school-house has been changed to a residence. On the same side of the street (the right) is the fine old residence of Dr. Ames, with its grove of evergreen trees near; the house and grounds have been attractive and prominent features in the village for almost fifty years.

Personal History and Genealogical Notes.—Dr. JASON H. AMES, born December 16, 1796, in Fairlee, Vt. He was a pupil of the famous Dr. Lyman, who lived awhile in Bradford in the house next to the tin-shop at the Corner. Dr. Ames married, December 20, 1827, Clara George, of Warner, and settled in Bradford, taking Dr. Lyman's business and living in a house purchased of David Brown, and built the house where he now resides in 1836. Dr. Ames was for many years the only physician in town. Hundreds of men and women, now past middle life, remember that when sick how much better they felt when the doctor's white horse was reported in sight. He heard the last dying groan of a large portion of three generations of our people, and the welcome birth-cry of as many more.

He was an active and leading member of the Democratic party. He was selected by his townsmen to deliver the address of welcome to Lafayette when the general visited Bradford, in 1824. His wife died December 5, 1868. Their children were,—

1. George, born September 19, 1828; died September 8, 1831.

2. Henry George, born February 6, 1830; married Mary G. Stoddard, of Perry, N. Y., in 1854, and settled at Mt. Morris, N. Y., where he now resides.

3. Martha Jane, born June 30, 1832; married, June

8. 1862, Bartlett G. Cilley, of Andover, N. H., who was born January 1, 1835, died August 21, 1867. He was a law-partner of Hon. M. W. Tappan. Children: George Ames, born November 21, 1863; Winifred B., born October 18, 1865.

DANIEL CARR, son of Moses Carr, of Newbury, Mass., born August 2, 1801. He married, first, February 20, 1827, Rhoda, daughter of Joseph, a descendant of Richard Bartlett, who came from England to Newbury, Mass., in 1635. They had one son, William A., born January 10, 1828. Mr. Carr came to Bradford in the latter part of the year 1836 and engaged in the business of a dealer in general merchandise. He married the second time, January 1, 1839, Caroline L., daughter of Weare Tappan, of this town. Their children were,—

1. Frank Tappan, born October 28, 1841. He married, September 19, 1872, Helen Frances, daughter of John H. and Esther Pierce Collins, of this town, and engaged in trade with Wm. A. for awhile.

2. Kate Elizabeth, born November 2, 1846; married, December 25, 1872, Dr. Charles Augustus Carleton, who settled in Bradford, but soon removed to Salem, Mass., where he has become a noted and very successful physician. They have one son, Frank Carr, born June 10, 1879.

William A., son of Daniel Carr, married, January 10, 1856, Harriet Maria Martin. Their children were,—

1. William M., born May 4, 1857; married, February 22, 1882, Mary L. Hartshorne.

2. Mabel M., born June 28, 1859; married, June 26, 1884, Henry C. Bartlett.

3. Charles B., born October 9, 1860; died June 6, 1864.

4. Frank M., born May 10, 1862; died June 6, 1864.

Mrs. Carr died July 30, 1865. He married, second, Mary E. Proctor, of East Washington, N. H., June 21, 1876. In July, 1851, Mr. Carr was admitted as a partner in business, under the firm-name of D. & W. A. Carr. This firm continued until July, 1875, twenty-one years, when the elder member retired and the business was continued by William A. Carr, who has been postmaster about twenty-eight years.

JONATHAN CHENEY came from Londonderry and settled toward the east part of the town. His children were Daniel, Stephen (a famous fox hunter, who lived on the Henniker road, on the west side of Massachusetts Lake, where his son Frederick now lives), Lydia, Jonathan, Eben, Hannah, Calvin Lyman and Simon.

RICHARD CRESSY was born in Beverly, Mass., September 5, 1737. He removed from Hopkinton to Bradford February 11, 1794. He married Susan Evans, of Methuen, who was born January 28, 1741. Mr. Cressy was a soldier in the War of the Revolution. A pass from General Stark is still in possession of Addison Cressy. He died September 9, 1797. His children were,—

1. Jabez, born September 3, 1762; died Jul. 30, 1778.

2. Hannah, born November 8, 1764; died July 30, 1778.

3. Susannah, born January 27, 1767; died July 27, 1778.

4. Mary, born April 1, 1770.

5. Ebenezer, born February 25, 1773; died young.

6. Richard, born November 10, 1775; died May 20, 1852.

7. Hannah, born August 9, 1778; died July 14, 1781.

8. William, born May 25, 1781.

9. Cyrus, born June 1, 1786. He married Hannah Sawyer. Their children were,—

1. Hannah, born February 7, 1812.

2. William Sawyer, born June 3, 1813.

3. Jabez Woodbury, born August 16, 1815.

4. Greeley Miller, born February 22, 1819.

5. Cyrus Miller, born October 15, 1822.

6. Addison Searl, born December 20, 1825.

7. Antoinette, born March 15, 1831.

Richard Cressy was a Revolutionary soldier, and probably settled in Hopkinton, N. H., immediately after the war. Of his nine children, Cyrus, the youngest, was eight years old when the family moved into Bradford, in 1794. Richard settled on the place where his son Cyrus lived, and where his grandson, Greeley, now resides. Richard was a gun-smith in the army, and he did good service in keeping the old flint-locks in repair. A small vise and screw-driver which he used in the army are kept as relics in the family of his grandson, Addison Cressy, of this town. Mr. Cressy has also another interesting relic of the Revolution; it is a twenty-four-pound cannon-ball that was dug out of Bunker Hill at the time the foundation for the monument was laid. Cyrus Cressy was present when the workmen found the ball; they told him he might have it, if he would take it out of the city without being discovered by the authorities. He put it on his arm and laid his handkerchief over it, and walked off unmolested. The originals of the following copies of military passes are held by the same family as choice relics of those dark days. The first is a week older than the battle of Bunker Hill,—

"METHUEN, June 10th, 1777.

"Permit Mr. Cressy and one more, to pass the guards to our head quarters and re-pass.

"JOHN STARK, C. T."

"CAMPE ON WESTER HILL, Nov. 10th, 1777.

"Richard Cressy has leave of absence for ten days.

"JOHN STARK, C. T."

The following relic of the old first town-house in Bradford is also interesting: the door-latch, made by Richard Cressy. The handle was plated with brass. Two angels are carved on the thumb-piece, and an angel's head and wings are engraved on the handle. Just above this last-mentioned is engraved this sentiment: "While Truth and Benevolence reign within, the Angels keep the door," a very pretty sentiment. Let us believe that our forefathers in council here always deserved and enjoyed the protection of invisible door-keepers.

ISAAC DAVIS came from Plaistow; probably settled in Bradford, as his descendants claim, about 1760. He came three summers in succession and made improvements on his land before he brought his wife here, so says a local tradition. The fire of 1859, which destroyed the buildings at the old homestead, destroyed nearly all the old records. Mr. Davis was probably in Bradford some five years before the grant to John Pierce and George Jaffrey, in 1765.

He built near the "pond," now called Lake Massasecum. The house was in the style of those days; it had no cellar; it had seats running the whole length on each side, and for seven or eight years it answered the purpose of a country store and a hotel.

Mr. Davis had a mill a few rods above the house, on the brook that runs near and discharges into the lake. "The old road" ran much nearer the house than the present Henniker road. Mr. Davis married Katurah Woodward; she died in or about 1811. He died about 1808. All their children were born here, with the possible exception of the first. Their children were,—

I. Betsy, born December 29, 1760; married Stephen Ward; lived in Bradford.

II. Molly, born May 31, 1762; married Abner Ward, of Bradford.

III. James, born February 24, 1764.

IV. Daniel, born February 4, 1766; married Mary Brown.

V. John, born December 21, 1768; died young.

VI. Susan, born January 7, 1770; married Moses Bailey, who settled on the farm now owned by Sharon Jameson. Mr. Bailey afterwards removed to Washington, Vt.

VII. Sally, born April 17, 1772; lived with her sister Betsy; unmarried.

VIII. John, born August 14, 1774; had his name changed to John Washington Davis; married Sally, sister of Stephen and Abner Ward. Their children were John S., Gardner, Harrison, Calvin, Hannah, Julia, Fanny and Preston.

James, son of Isaac, born February 24, 1764; married—Brown. Their children were,—

1. Daniel, married Betsy Davis, of Charlestown, N. H.

2. Polly, married Samuel Jackman, of Enfield.

3. Catharine, married Isaac Ward, son of Abner.

4. Betsy, unmarried.

5. Sally, married John Ward; settled in Claremont.

6. Dolly, married Heman Burpee, of Enfield, N. H.

7. James, married Lucy, daughter of Joshua Davis, of Charlestown.

8. Stephen. He was one of General Scott's staff-officers in the Mexican War. He was in the Union army in the War of the Rebellion, and lost his life there.

9. Sophronia, married Benjamin, son of Joshua Davis, of Charlestown, Mass.

Daniel, son of Isaac, born February 4, 1766; married Mary Brown. She died January 11, 1851. He died November 6, 1842. They had,—

1. Samuel, born March 19, 1790.

2. Enoch, born August 22, 1791; died March 22, 1792.

3. Enoch, born January 6, 1793; removed to Cambridge, Mass. Soap manufacturer there. Died September 17, 1832.

4. Dorcas, born January 23, 1795; died February 28, 1876.

5. Eliphalet, born December 16, 1796; removed to Cambridgeport, Mass., in 1811; he was a soap manufacturer, and acquired a fortune and a world-wide renown in that business.

6. Lydia, born January 4, 1799; died August 29, 1821.

7. Dimond, born April 25, 1802; died in Sutton, December 5, 1861. He was a noted and successful physician there.

8. Hiram, born February 24, 1807; died in February, 1872.

9. Lyman, born October 11, 1809; died April 1, 1860.

10. Isaac, born June 18, 1811. Successful soap manufacturer in Cambridge, Mass.

11. Curtis, born February 11, 1814. Successful soap manufacturer in Boston. The only survivor of the family.

The marriage of Daniel Davis, who was born in 1766, to Mary Brown, born in 1771, was an unusually good combination of the physical and mental forces. Out of eleven children, ten grew up to mature age, and were, as a family, remarkably intelligent, industrious, honest, economical, and consequently prosperous citizens of the various communities where they lived. Of the sons who remained in Bradford, Samuel lived at the south end of Lake Massasecum, near the Warner town line. His children were Ebenezer Harriman (mentioned among the physicians of Bradford), Gilbert, Lydia, Elizabeth and Franklin, who inherited and occupied his father's farm.

Eliphalet is represented in this town by his son, Charles Frederick Davis, who owns and occupies the original homestead of Isaac Davis, mentioned elsewhere. Charles Frederick was born in Cambridgeport, Mass., January 30, 1837. He married, January 29, 1860, Frances Sawyer, daughter of William and Jeannette McKeech Wilson George, who was born in Topsham, Vt., December 7, 1838. Their children are:—

1. Clara Jeannette Allen, born in Cambridge, Mass., March 26, 1861; she died March 19, 1868.

2. Florence Bartell, born in Cambridge, Mass., August 7, 1863.

3. Lewis Warner, born at Deer Isle, Me., August 21, 1865.

4. Arthur Wilson, born in Claremont, N. H., March 7, 1867.

5. Ida Carleton, born in Bradford, April 6, 1869.

6. Marian Frances, born May 29, 1871.

7. Sarah Wentworth, born March 28, 1878.

8. Marshall Graham, born February, 1882.

The last-mentioned three were born in Bradford.

Hiram Davis, born February 24, 1807; married, November 28, 1832, Marietta Ferrin, who was born December 27, 1809. Children,—

1. Caroline Salome, born September 6, 1833; married, November 8, 1858, Frederick Martin.

2. James Warren, born December 28, 1834; died February 5, 1835.

3. Mary Jane, born February 1, 1836; married Jacob Jones.

4. Harriet Newell, born February 17, 1839; married, March 8, 1858, Ira Sargent, of Bradford.

Lyman Davis, born October 11, 1809; married, January 20, 1841, Mary Eliza Palmer, who was born August 11, 1826. Mr. Davis was named for the celebrated Dr. Warren Lyman. His children are,—

1. Curtis, born August 6, 1842; died November 11, 1866.

2. Homer Eliphalel, born November 27, 1845; died July 12, 1865.

3. Dorcas Jane, born February 14, 1848.

4. Walter Farsons, born June 6, 1850.

5. Caroline Elizabeth, born October 20, 1852.

6. Samuel Dimond, born December 31, 1854.

7. Joseph Hiram, born March 28, 1857.

8. Lydia Frances, born March 5, 1859.

WILLIAM DOWLIN was born in 1720, and came to New England in 1753. He married Sarah (probably daughter of John) Norris, of Epping, N. H. He died February 24, 1811. His children were,—

1. Anne, born November 16, 1755.

II. Timothy Leavitt, born February 4, 1762.

III. Elizabeth, born May 15, 1764; died November 22, 1768.

TIMOTHY LEAVITT, son of William Dowlin, was born February 4, 1762. He married, July 24, 1790, Elizabeth Collins, and lived on the farm lately occupied by Amaziah Hall. He was a thrifty farmer and large land-owner. He gave his sons each a farm and his daughters money instead of land. They had twelve children,—

The first (born December 14, 1791) and the second (born March 11, 1793) lived but a few days.

3. Samuel, born February 11, 1794; had a farm on Goodwin Hill.

4. Deborah, born March 25, 1796.

5. Dolly, born March 17, 1798; died December 30, 1798.

6. Timothy, born October 8, 1799; married, June 7, 1824, Catharine, daughter of Farrington Hawks. He settled on the farm since owned by Nathan Pierce, near the Pond Brook. Afterwards the family lived where William Cressey now lives. He died there March 21, 1811. His wife died March 30, 1872. They had nine children, —

I. Elizabeth Collins, born January 3, 1826; she married, February 10, 1848, Moses E. Gould, of Warner. They settled at Mill village. One son, Fred., attorney-at-law, Concord, N. H.

II. Timothy Leavitt, born February 17, 1828; he married, November 17, 1868, Sarah Jane Ingraham, and first settled in Warner.

III. John Hawks, born July 17, 1829; married, December 14, 1853, Ella Frances Colby, of Warner, and settled and now resides in that town.

IV. Sarah Jane, born March 2, 1831; married, March 3, 1851, Alfred Colburn Smith, and settled at Robinson's Ferry; they afterwards removed to Barnstead, where Mr. Smith died. They had three children, two of whom reside at Pittsfield, N. H. The other, a son, perished in a snow-storm on the Western plains.

V. Mary Ann, born August 20, 1832; married — Flanders, of Manchester, N. H., and settled there.

VI. Abby Hawks, born August 24, 1834; married, December 31, 1854, Ezra Dow Gilley, of Manchester, N. H. She died there May 3, 1869. One son, who lives with John H. Dowlin, of Warner.

VII. George Washington, born September 23, 1836; has been a miner in various States beyond the Rocky Mountains; also saddler and collar-maker in Concord, N. H.

VIII. Marshall Richardson, born September 15, 1839; married Sophia Ann Magoon; harness-maker and saddler, Westfield, Mass.

IX. Louisa Catharine, born November 11, 1841; married — Bradstreet, and resides in Rowley, Mass.

7. (Resuming the list of William's children) a child born January 20, 1803.

8. William, Jr., born April 9, 1805. He removed to Lempster, N. H.

9. A child born March 23, 1807.

10. Polly, born February 14, 1809; died March 5, 1810.

11. Caroline, born May 11, 1811; married Cummings Pierce.

12. Irene, born September 9, 1813. She was a very successful teacher of the winter and summer terms of district schools. She was a pious and active Christian worker, and an earnest exhorter in religious meetings. She married Patrick Scully and lived at Mill village.

JOHN FELCH, born in Weare, N. H., June 27, 1794. He married, March 18, 1818, Sally Clark, of Hopkinton, who was born January 6, 1789. He settled on the farm adjoining that of John Brown, near the Corner. He had an excellent farm and managed it well. He died May 22, 1858. His wife died November 17, 1870. Their children were,—

1. Horace C., born April 28, 1824. He married, in 1856, Helen H. White, of Stanstead, P. Q., and settled in Bradford. Have two children,—

1. Fred, R., born July 15, 1860; married, December 25, 1884, Jennie L. Lund. He is an attorney-at-law and resides at Derry Depot, N. H.

2. Emma B., born October 18, 1870.

OFFEN FRENCH was a soldier in the War of the Revolution. On his return from the army he married and moved to Bradford, making the journey on horseback. He bought a lot of wild land and cleared a farm, and built the house where he spent the remainder of his days, and where all his twelve children were born. The farm is a little east of the centre of the town, next beyond that of Joshua Jewett, and is now owned by the widow of Elder Holmes. Some of his neighbors were Timothy Emerson, Captain Sawyer, Josiah, father of Rial Rowe, Nehemiah Colby and Mr. Hale. Ten of his children lived past middle age; two died young. His children were,—

1. Olin, married Phebe Eaton; lived awhile in Canada; removed to Newbury; had four children.

2. Rutana, married Jonathan Muzzy, of Weare; they had three children.

3. Paskey, died unmarried.

4. Seccera, married James Gilmore, of Hillsborough; died there.

5. Daniel, married Abigail, daughter of John Cressy, of Bradford; lived on his father's farm till 1833. He then bought a farm of Hazeltine, who moved to Ohio. He afterwards sold this farm to Eben Wright, and moved into the village. His children were,—

Mary Jane, married Joshua P. Marshall.

Ira, married Hester Goewey, of Lansingburg, N. Y.; was engaged in trade in Bradford several years; removed to Lansingburg, and died there in May, 1883. His only daughter, Hattie, was born in Bradford.

Sabria A., married Frederick, son of Stephen Cheney; they live on the west side of Massasecum Lake.

Christina P., married Thomas Little; settled in Bradford.

John, married Emma, daughter of Ward Day; live at the Corner.

6. Phebe, became second wife of Jonathan Muzzy, of Weare.

7. Susan, married Jonathan Peaslee, of Weare.

8. James, married Hannah Eaton; settled in Alexandria; afterwards removed to Michigan, and died there.

9. Judith, died in Hillsborough; unmarried.

10. Aaron, at the age of twenty-one, removed to Charlestown, Mass.; removed from there to Providence, R. I., where he deals in honey; unmarried.

FARRINGTON HAWKS, son of David and Sarah Colburn, of Dunstable, Mass., was born in that town April 21, 1770. He married, first, Sarah, a sister of David Knowlton, of Newburyport, Mass., by whom all his children were born. He first settled in Hudson, N. H., where his oldest children were born. In 1796 he removed to Warner, having purchased of Reuben Gale, of "Almesbury," "lot No. 7, in the second division of 80-acre lots." This is probably the Shepard Davis place, near Massasecum Lake. Here he lived in a log house, procuring water from a spring near by, and threshing out his grain on a smooth, flat ledge of rock, still known as the "threshing-rock." He probably lived there about two years, sending his two oldest children to the Pond school-house, near the Daniel Sargent place. He then purchased an eighty-acre lot of wild land in the westerly edge of Warner, next to the Bradford line. On this tract he had cut down fourteen acres of the forest, when he sold the whole lot to Enos Collins, of Warner. In April, 1802, he bought half of lot 43, in Bradford, of Richard Marshall, the half lying south of the road to the pond, and west of the Bible Hill road. The next purchase made by Mr. Hawks was the place where he spent the remainder of his days. The deed was given by John Pierce, of Portsmouth, December 4, 1802, in which the tract is described as follows:

"A certain lot of land in Bradford, containing one hundred acres, more or less, and is lot number forty-two in the original town as first laid out, and was drawn and recorded to the right of Joshua Pierce, as may be found by the records of the Masonry Proprietors, reference thereto being had."

The price paid was three hundred and fifty dollars.

Mr. Hawks built and occupied a log house on the northeast corner of his lot, near where the present house stands on Bible Hill. Mr. Hawks was tall, erect, strong and healthy; he was in his day a champion mower and wrestler. He was very fond of hunting, trapping and fishing. His first wife had a good education for a woman at that time. She died in August, 1829. He married, second, Widow Sarah Young, of Pelham, N. H., April 12, 1831. He died November 15, 1859. His children were,—

I. Abigail, born May 5, 1792; married Nathan R. Marshall. She died March 11, 1867.

II. Colborn, born April 14, 1794.

III. Farrington, born June 5, 1796; removed to Cambridgeport, Mass., where he died March 31, 1832. His widow and son Henry still live there (1885).

IV. Catharine, born August 11, 1798; married, June 7, 1825, Timothy L. Dowlin; she died March 30, 1872.

V. John, born October 26, 1801; removed to New York; married, and removed to Ohio. He was a farmer. He died November 20, 1868. His children,— Abigail, born August 11, 1834, and Elhanan Winchester, born July 8, 1836—lived in Norwalk, Ohio, in 1885.

VI. David Knowlton, born May 7, 1804.

VII. Daniel, born August 25, 1806. He was a farmer and worked in Massachusetts. In the Mexican War he was a member of Company K, New England Regiment. He died in hospital in San Angelo; unmarried.

VIII. Moody, born February 25, 1809. He was a farmer; worked in West Cambridge, Mass.; married there and removed to Kirtland, N. Y. He was in the same regiment with Daniel in the Mexican War. He died September 11, 1849. His wife died October 16, 1848. Their children were Frederick Henry, Abigail Lamira, Albert Winn, Sarah Hall. Albert was killed in battle in 1862.

Colburn, son of Farrington, born April 14, 1794, in Hudson, N. H. He married, March 7, 1826, Clarissa, daughter of Dudley Brown, of Wilnot. He died July 26, 1869. He was of slight frame and below the medium in stature, his usual weight being one hundred and ten pounds. He was a farmer, industrious, economical and fairly successful. He bought his father's farm, and built the house now standing in 1823. From this homestead can be seen Kearsarge, Sunapee and Lovell's Mountains, and hills in Warner, Sutton, New London, Newbury and Washington.

Mr. Hawks had surrounded and partitioned off his rocky hillside farm with several miles of stone walls, some of them of great thickness.

His widow still survives (1885). Fully half the credit of acquiring and saving a competency is due to her prudence and economy. Their children were all born and reared on the homestead above mentioned. are,—

I. John Milton, born November 26, 1826. Educated in the district school and at the "High School" at the Mill village. He taught school in New Hampshire, New York and Georgia. Read medicine with Dr. G. H. Hubbard, of Bradford Centre; attended lectures at Woodstock, Vt., and graduated at Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1848. He practiced medicine in Manchester, N. H., from 1848 to 1861, having, in the mean time, visited Florida twice and the West Indies once. In March, 1862, he went out to the Sea Islands of South Carolina as a physician to the freedmen. From July till October, 1862, he was acting assistant surgeon United States army on General Saxton's staff. In October was commissioned assistant surgeon in the First Regiment of South Carolina Colored Infantry. This was the first colored regiment ever mustered into the United States service, and was afterwards numbered Thirty-third United States Colored Infantry. In October, 1863, Dr. Hawks was commissioned as surgeon of Twenty-first United States Colored Infantry, where he served until December, 1865, when he resigned, since which time he has lived most of the time in Florida. He married, October 4, 1854, Esther Hill, of Brentwood, N. H. She graduated at the Boston Female Medical College in 1857; assisted in the military hospitals at Jacksonville, Beaufort and Charleston; is a successful practitioner in Lynn, Mass.

II. Bartlett, born March 3, 1828; died young.

III. Robert Bartlett, born October 16, 1829; a farmer. On the old homestead he salts the sheep and cattle on the same granite ledges where his father and grandfather salted them, and cultivates the same fields they first cleared and then cultivated. Invalid, unmarried.

IV. Helen Maria, born June 26, 1832; married, November, 1853, Prescott Colby, of Bradford, and lives on the Moses Colby farm. They had four children. The first, a daughter, was poisoned in infancy by chewing friction matches; the second, Belle, married J. Currier, of Bradford, and settled on the David Durrell farm, and now live near it; the third, Jesse Prescott, married Clara, daughter of Moody Gillingham, and first settled on the Gillingham place; removed to Danvers, Mass.; the fourth, Flora, resides with her parents.

V. Sarah Knowlton, born September 17, 1835; invalid; lives on the homestead.

VI. Miner, born January 28, 1845; married, first, Georgia, daughter of Edwin Bailey, of Bradford; they had one son, Ralph, born July 30, 1869; died October, 1883. She died of consumption. Second, Mebora, daughter of Wellman George. They had Mertie, who lives in Manchester. Mrs. Hawks died of internal tumor. Miner died June 22, 1884.

The following biographical sketch is copied from the Manchester Daily Mirror:

"Captain Miner Hawks, of Bradford, whose death, on the 23d of June, was mentioned in this paper, has an excellent, and, in some respects, an exceptional military history. He enlisted as a private in Co. K, 1st Rhode Island Cavalry, Oct. 31, 1861, when but little over 16 years old, and served with that regiment until his discharge from a general hospital in Washington, Dec. 21, 1862. A part of the next year he attended the academy of New London; but on the invitation of the surgeon of the 3d Reg't S. C. Colored Infantry he left his studies and enlisted as hospital steward in that regiment, then stationed at Hilton Head, S. C. On May 24, 1864, he was promoted as 2d lieutenant in Co. D, 34th Reg't, U. S. colored troops, commanded by the noted Col. James Montgomery of Kansas, and June 17, 1865, he was commissioned as 1st lieutenant, Nov. 6, 1865, as captain of Co. E, in the same regiment. For a portion of the time till the muster out of his regiment, Feb. 28, 1866, Capt. Hawks was commander of the post at Palatka, Fla. At the expiration of his military service Capt. Hawks, then but 21 years old, commenced the study of law in the office of Cooper & Bisbee, Jacksonville, Fla. Having lost his available funds in an unfortunate investment, he entered the employment of a company at Fort Orange, which failed soon after, and Capt. H. returned to Bradford, where he married a daughter of E. M. Barley, and removed to Council Bluffs, Iowa. In 1864 he returned to Bradford, where his wife died the next year. In 1875 he engaged in the drug and business in Allston, Mass., and afterwards in Manchester, where he resided until the death of his second wife. For the last five years he has carried on the farm of his aged mother. Capt. Hawks was a fluent and graceful speaker and writer. He was at various times reported for Mirror and American and the Union. He wrote sketches of travel in Florida for the Saturday Times and has contributed articles to the Boston Globe, Youth's Companion and other Boston periodicals."

David Knowlton, son of Farrington Hawks, born May 7, 1804; a competent cabinet-maker. He married, about 1825, Susan Straw, and lived a while at the old homestead on Bible Hill. Then for several years in the "Farrington house," which he built at Raymond's Corner; then several years at the Mill village, where his wife died of cancer, October 19, 1854. Mr. Hawks enlisted in the Seventh New Hampshire Volunteers at the age of fifty-six. His children were,—

I. Emeline, born about 1826; married Orlando Bailey; died in Manchester, N. H.

II. John, a hatter by trade, died in Derry, N. H., April 18, 1855.

III. Hartwell, a teamster, died in Boston.

IV. William, a seaman, married an English woman; lost at sea.

V. Frederick was in the United States navy during the Rebellion; married; has a daughter; lives in New York.

VI. Esther, worked at Manchester; removed to Boston.

VII. Helen, married Burke Belknap, of Newport. They live in Lawrence, Mass. One son, Lawrence.

JOHN HOWLET, of Henniker, married Phebe Johnson, of that town. Their children were,—

1. Mary, died unmarried.

2. Betsy, married Nehemiah Knight.

3. Enoch, married, second, Hannah Metcalf, and settled in Freedom, N. Y., where his family still resides.

4. Sally, married Benjamin Flint, and lived in Hillsborough.

5. Thomas, married Eunice, daughter of Enos Collins, of Warner. Their children were John, Perley, Enos, Elizabeth and Sarah.

6. John, born July 22, 1795; married Phebe Cressy. Mr. Howlet is probably the oldest living man in town.

7. Alice, married Israel Andrews.

8. Stephen, married to Sutton and married there.

9. George, married Marinda Cram; died on the home farm.

10. Perley, died at twenty years of age.

11. James, married Dorcas Stevens; lived and died in the next house to John; no children.

12. David, died young.

13. Benjamin, died at twenty-one; unmarried.

14. Caleb, died at two years of age.

15. Phebe, died an infant.

STEPHEN HOYT was born in Hopkinton, N. H., August 30, 1769; he married Phebe, daughter of Deacon William Presbury, born July 29, 1772. "She was the first white child born in the town of Bradford." She died July 29, 1847. General Hoyt, as he was usually called, was a man of marked ability and activity. He built and operated mills, cleared up farms, built houses and in various ways left the impress of his energetic spirit on the social and business life of the town. His children were,—

1. William P., born April 4, 1794; died January 19, 1867.

2. Stephen, Jr., born August 27, 1795; died November 10, 1859.

3. John, born October 3, 1797; died at sea September 28, 1851.

4. Hiram, born December 17, 1800; died October 26, 1825.

5. George W., born January 12, 1803; died October 10, 1826.

6. Olive P., born May 18, 1806.

7. Elisha E., born October 12, 1808.

8. John Raymond, born September 2, 1811; died December 21, 1858.

9. Elbridge Gerry, born September 6, 1814; he married, December 20, 1843, Mary Anne Spaulding, of Warner, who was born November 30, 1814. He lived on his father's homestead; died August 29, 1879.

SAMUEL JONES, son of John Jones, was born in Hopkinton May 12, 1786. He came to Bradford about the year 1809, and taught a district school there. He married Elizabeth Andrews, of Sutton, April 17, 1810, and had seven children. His wife died March 23, 1849. He married, second, Amanda Eaton, of Bradford, April 10, 1851. He died February 12, 1867. "Esquire" Jones, as he was familiarly called, was one of the leading men of the town in his day. He represented the town in the State Legislature for several years. He was also a member of the State Senate and of the Executive Council. He represented the town in the State Constitutional Convention of 1850, and the year following was one of the Presidential electors. He built, and for a while kept, the hotel at the Mill village.

The children of Samuel and Elizabeth (Andrews) Jones were,—

I. George, born April 9, 1811; died May 3, 1882. The following biographical sketch appeared in a Concord paper at the time:

"Concord, May 3, 1882.—Hon. George Jones, whose death from paralysis occurred at his home in North State Street this morning, was born in Bradford, April 9, 1811, and was a son of Hon. Samuel Jones, who was president of the State Senate in 1838. The deceased had held various local offices and represented the town two years in the Legislature. He was chosen register of deeds of Merrimack County in 1838 and subsequently re-elected for several terms. During the administration of President Pierce, Mr. Jones was connected with the postal service, and was cashier of the old Warner Bank many years. While residing in that place he represented the Eighth District in the State Senate from 1871 to 1873. He removed to this city in 1874 and was immediately elected treasurer of the National, afterward Concord Savings-Bank, which position he filled most acceptably for over two years. He formed a copartnership, March 1st, with John E. Robertson and Charles P. Rowell, for the purpose of conducting an extensive wood, coal and ice business, and was on his way home from his office last evening when he was attacked with the fatal illness. Mr. Jones was an enterprising and public-spirited citizen, honest and upright in all his dealings and highly esteemed for his sterling worth and the strict integrity of his character. He leaves a widow and two daughters, beside a brother, Timothy P. Jones, of Bradford, and a sister, Mrs. George Hubbard, of Manchester."

II. Timothy Peaslee, born April 15, 1813; married, April 4, 1839, Mary, daughter of Nicodemus Watson, of Warner, and settled in Bradford, where he spent nearly his whole life. He took an active interest in the welfare of the town and took part in the management of town affairs, having many times held offices of trust. He represented the town in the State Legislature in the years 1874 and 1875. His children were Wilbur Fisk, born July 24, 1840, died November 9, 1841; Prudence Elizabeth, born November 1, 1842, died October 19, 1869; Mary Augusta, born August 6, 1842, married, November 15, 1876, George Harvey, son of Elder Eleazer Steele, of Bradford;

Samuel Nicodemus, born January 1, 1850, died November 8, 1852; Frank Woodbury, born February 19, 1854, died June 20, 1873.

III. Fanny, born April 28, 1815; married — Francis; lived at the Corner; she died June 7, 1867; had two children, who removed to Massachusetts.

IV. Eliza, born April 10, 1817; married Edward Cressy and settled in this town, near Melvin's Mills. Of her three children, James, the eldest, married, for second wife, Antoinette, daughter of Savory Cheney, and lives near the centre of the town. Mariette, married George Denny, lives in Gloucester, Mass., six children; Elizabeth, married Edward Richardson, lives at Contoocook, no children.

V. Seth Straw, born April 4, 1819; died June 23, 1856. He "fitted for his profession under the direction of George H. Hubbard, M.D., of this town; graduated at the Vermont Medical College in 1847, and settled in Ellingham, N. H., in June, 1848, where he resided until 1854, when he was obliged by his failing health to leave his large circle of friends in that place. Few men have in so short a time acquired so strong a hold on the confidence of the community as did Dr. Jones. He was eminently the 'good physician.'"—New Hampshire Medical Journal, July, 1858.

VI. Samuel Woodbury, born December 21, 1821; died July 11, 1878. (Biographical notice under the head of Physicians).

VII. Sally Martin, born September 27, 1825; married Dr. George H. Hubbard, of Sutton, and first settled at Bradford Centre. One son, George, a successful druggist in Manchester; died there.

RICHARD MARSHALL married Esther Pierce, and came to Bradford probably with Josiah Melvin before the year 1787. He bought the land and cleared most of the farm where Cummings Pierce now lives, and remained on it twenty years.

In 1787 he owned the land on the south side of the road that leads up the hill from C. Pierce's and Melvin on the north side. He afterwards bought a lot at the top of the hill in Warner and built a house on the edge of that town, southeasterly from where the old buildings of Nathan R. now stand. This house was probably afterwards moved down to Nathan's, but the site of the old house can still be traced. "Bill" Sargent may have lived first in that house, or possibly north of Nathan's, near the old well at the side of the road. He lived in that immediate neighborhood before Marshall did. The last years of his life he lived in a small house close to Nathan's. His children were:—

Richard, who spent most of his life in Massachusetts, but died in Bradford; has no descendants in town.

Esther, married Josiah Melvin.

Sarah, married Asa Sargent, of Warner.

Nathan Richardson, born June 10, 1792.

Nathan Richardson Marshall, son of Richard, born

June 10, 1792, probably in Bradford, purchased his father's farm and maintained his parents in their old age. He married Abigail Hawks, of Bradford. He was intelligent, thoughtful and progressive. He examined into the claims of phrenology and became a believer in its doctrines. He was a methodical and systematic farmer; a subscriber to and reader of Hill's Farmers' Visitor for many years. He kept a daily journal for half a century. He and his neighbor, C. Pierce, were the first farmers in that locality to substitute hot coffee for rum in the hay and harvest-field and at "huskings." He and his wife were patterns of industry, economy and kindness toward neighbors, and the world is better for their having lived.

Before he gave up work he left the old homestead and fitted up a comfortable residence, where his daughter Esther and her husband, John H. Collins, now live. A neat monument marks their last resting-place, not far from the house, at the foot of the Goodwin Hill. She died March 11, 1867. He died December 6, 1872.

Their children were,—

1. Sarah Knowlton, born February 2, 1812; married, May 8, 1849, John Fernald and settled in London. One son died at twenty. She lives in Boston.

II. Catharine, born December 19, 1814. Invalid; lives at John H. Collins'.

III. Mary, born June 1, 1815; married Sumner Kittredge and lived several years in Massachusetts; then on the Captain Hoyt farm in Warner. They now live at the Corner. One son, Everett, who owns and lives on the John Felch farm, has two children. His wife died in June, 1885.

IV. Joshua Pierce, born February 18, 1818; married Mary Jane French; lived several years in Massachusetts, carrying on a wholesale glassware store in Boston. Residence at Bradford Corner, on the Raymond place. Their children were,—

1. Daniel Richardson, married Vilona L. Simonds, of Washington, N. H. He entered business near the depot in this town. Now lives in New York City.

2. William, died in the West.

3. Addison Joseph, dealer in general merchandise, and is postmaster at Hawks Park, Fla.

4. Mary, died in Bradford.

V. Betsey B., born September 28, 1818; died June 28, 1824.

VI. Esther, born April 18, 1820; died July 23, 1821.

VII. Esther Pierce, born August 19, 1821; married John Harriman, son of Enos Collins, of Bible Hill, Warner, and settled on the Collins homestead. This couple have had a rare and remarkable experience in taking care of the father and mother of both. They first lived with his father and mother; then, some years after the old people died, John and Esther moved over to her parents' home and took care of them. Two children,—Abigail, married — Blaisdell, died in Sutton, leaving one son; Helen Frances, married Frank Carr, of Bradford. They live at the Mills.

VII. Joseph Addison, born July 7, 1826, married, first, Mariette C. Page; second, Sarah M. Chapman. He first settled on the old homestead, his father moving over to his new place on the Henniker road. After the death of his wife he left the farm and engaged successfully in trade in Suffolk Market for several years. He was in a large wholesale business with his brother, J. P., on Congress Street, Boston, on the site of the new city post-office, and was burned out there in the great fire of 1872. The business was afterwards carried on in John Street, lastly under the firm-name of Marshall & Blanchard. Ill health has compelled him to retire from active business.

While living in Bradford he was several times a member of the Board of Selectmen. He died in Bradford, July 12, 1885. His last work was to make out the list of soldiers from Bradford, in the late civil war.

IX. Luella, born March 22, 1828; married Edwin M. Bailey; lived at Mill village; died October 23, 1854, leaving two daughters, Georgia and Florence.

X. Farrington Hawks, born August 23, 1829; married a Miss Farrington, and resides in Boston, where for several years he has been a wholesale dealer in country produce. They have three children,—Walter, married, lives in East Boston; Minnie and Fred.

JOSIAH MELVIN came to Bradford before the year 1787, at about the same time with Richard Marshall, whose daughter Esther he married. Their farms, east of Bradford Pond, were adjoining. But Mr. Melvin's fame was acquired not as a farmer, but as a miller. He owned and operated the grist-mill at the Mill village for several years, living in the house since owned by Samuel Jones. He removed just over the town line into Warner, and bought the grist and saw-mills that had been built by Lieutenant Hoyt and owned by Simmons and others, and run them successfully many years, instructing his five sons in the same business; all have tended those mills, and they well deserve the name Melvin's Mills, in honor of which the post-office and railroad station are named. To every one who knew the "Old Judge," as he was latterly called, the sight or mention of his name will bring up a crowd of pleasant memories. Since the death of Nathan Melvin the mills have changed owners several times, and have worn rather a doubtful, not to say dilapidated, look. But they are all right now. In 1884 the old mills came into the possession of Weare Tappan, youngest child of Josiah Melvin, and he has renovated everything from the dam foundation to the saddle-boards; new outsides, new insides. The hand of the master is there; the mills are good for another century at least, and they will add ten per cent. to the comfort and health of the neighborhood for miles around. From the old family Bible, Miss Ellen M. Straw, of Claremont, N. H., a granddaughter of Josiah, kindly furnishes the following record of the family, giving no other particulars only dates of births:

1. Esther, born October 11, 1795.
2. Richard, born October 5, 1797.
3. Mary M., born December 19, 1799.
4. Sarah P., born June 25, 1802.
5. Hartwell, born August 9, 1805.
6. Nathan R., born January 15, 1807.
7. Susan M., born October 4, 1808.
8. Lucy M., born May 22, 1811.
9. Ruth, born November 9, 1815.
10. Jonah Galusha, born November 6, 1817.
11. Weare Tappan, born June 22, 1820.

Richard Melvin was the only one of Josiah's children who settled and remained in this town. He was a miller by trade. He built the house now owned and occupied by Parker S. Whitcomb, near the Cheney bridge which spans the Warner River, within one-third of a mile of his father's mill. He married Betsy Straw. Their children were,—

1. Proctor Darling, born November 5, 1817; railroad builder and contractor. Married, March 25, 1845, Harriet, daughter of David Bagley, and settled at Melvin's Mills. He died March 4, 1865. Four children,—Margaret F., born 1846, married—Holmes and settled at Melvin's Mills; Richard Edson, born October 25, 1849; Betsy A., born December 14, 1854, died young; Walter, born October 18, 1856.
2. Grosvenor Stickney, born August 29, 1819; died 1826.

3. Harriet Maria, born November 13, 1821; married, July 25, 1844, Clark Whitecomb, of Hillsborough, and settled there; lived several years in Lake village. In May, 1882, they bought the Ebenezer Cheney farm, near Melvin's Mills, and have removed there. Of their three children, two daughters died unmarried, Frank Lawton, born June 7, 1851; married Ida Jennett, of Rockport, Mass.; engineer; lives in Concord, N. H.; has four children.

4. Benjamin Franklin, born February 15, 1824; married, February 7, 1856, Hannah D. Colby, of Warner, who was born February 11, 1827. They lived in Warner. He died February 10, 1873. Children,—Frank Otis, born January 26, 1857; Celia Addie, born September 4, 1860; died July 23, 1863; Maud Muller, born August 19, 1866.

5. Elizabeth, born July 31, 1827; married, May, 1853, Eben Wright, engineer, and settled in Bradford; removed to Concord.

6. A son, born July 29, 1829; died young.

7. Mary Ann, born 1831; died 1832.

8. Esther Maria, born October 18, 1835; married Baxter Codman, of Hillsborough. She died March 3, 1869.

9. Henrietta, born September 3, 1838; married George W. Page; lives in Nashua.

10. Josiah, born March 3, 1841; conductor Concord and Claremont Railroad; has been twice married; lives in Contoocook.

NATHAN PIERCE, born September 7, 1765, probably in Hudson, N. H. He married Phebe Cummings

(born July 8, 1768). He removed from Hillsborough to Antrim, where he remained about a year; then, in 1820, he removed to Bradford, and settled on the farm near the "pond," where he died. Several families, among whom was that of George Maxfield, had lived on the farm. Richard Marshall cleared most of the farm, and lived on it twenty years. The main front of this farm lies along on the east side of the Henniker road, from the land of Frederick Cheney to that of J. H. Collins. Extending easterly, the farm includes the north end of Massasecum Lake and a part of Guiles' Hill. Probably no other farm in town has such a variety of landscape scenery and soil. Its sheep pasture on Cheney's Hill and its noted and far-famed blueberry patches at the top of Guiles' Hill all overlook the Lake Massasecum and the great valley on the west. Its soil embraces every variety from the strong, disintegrated granite of the hill-sides to the fine sand of the pine land and the rich intervals and cranberry meadows along the "pond brook." Before the country was settled by white men, this region was a favorite resort of the Indians. Several of their conave fire-places, lined with stones and containing bits of charcoal, have been found on this farm.

Curiously-wrought stone implements have also been plowed up near the lake, such as axes, gonges, mortar-pestles and flint heads of arrows and spears. Tradition says that a moose was slain at the brook below the barn by Deacon Presbury, the first settler in town.

Mr. Pierce's children were as follows:

I. Nathan, born August 15, 1787; married Abigail Graves, of Washington. During the latter years of his life he lived on the farm first occupied by T. L. Dowlin. He had two children,—Benjamin Franklin and Cynthia. The former lives in Stoughton, Mass.; the latter married Leonard Jameson, and lives on the farm.

II. Susan, born May 23, 1792; died September 13, 1797.

III. Mary, born July 12, 1794; died unmarried.

IV. Cummings, born December, 1796; died December, 1801.

V. Susan, born February 7, 1799; late in life she became the second wife of Enos Collins, of Warner. She was a tailoress by trade, and for many years she worked in families, cutting and making men's and boys' clothes. She worked for twenty-five cents a day and board, and usually worked fourteen hours a day. She was very economical as well as industrious, and out of her earnings she purchased the farm for her brother, Nathan; also the lot and house where she died, now (1885) occupied by Charles Burrill. She possessed a vigorous intellect and clear moral perceptions. She was a warm advocate of emancipation, and for many years a subscriber to Garrison's Liberator. She was also a free and fearless thinker and speaker on religious subjects and a reader of the Boston Investigator and Free Religious Index. On giving up work, she gave her property to Parker Whitecomb for the support of herself and husband during the remainder of their lives. She died January 8, 1875.

VI. Daniel, born July 17, 1801; married and lived in Eden, Vt.; died August 26, 1848.

VII. Cummings, born May 22, 1803; married, February 14, 1833, Caroline Dowlin, of Bradford, and lived on his father's farm, taking care of his parents. He has been, for several years, one of the selectmen of the town. He has been one of the earliest risers and most industrious and frugal of farmers, and consequently he has been very successful and prosperous. His children are,—

1. Lucretia, born May 12, 1838; married John Herbert Ewins, of Warner, farmer.

2. Anna, born August 18, 1849; married Freeman H. Gillingham, of Bradford, who carries on the Pierce homestead.

VIII. Stephen Chapin, born November 1, 1807; married Martha, daughter of Enos Collins, of Warner, and first settled in the Timothy Flanders house at Melvin's Mills. He was a skilled mechanic and an ingenious inventor. He has had some very narrow escapes from making a fortune. His inventions have made other people rich; but thus far he has steered clear of such worldly incumbrances. He has been through life a "free thinker" on theological subjects. He has one son, Daniel, a mechanic, who lives in Warner.

NATHAN PIPER, of Hopkinton, married Hannah Smith, of Bradford, and for a time lived in Bridgewater, N. H. They came to Bradford about 1808, and bought fifty acres of wild land on the west shore of Bradford Pond. He was a carpenter by trade and built the house where his son Truworthy now lives. He also framed most of the houses in that locality. He died in 1821, in the thirty-ninth year of his age. His wife was over ninety-six years of age at her death, and was the oldest person in town. She died in 1877. Their children were Truworthy, born in Bridgewater, N. H., in 1805; (he took care of his parents and inherited the homestead); Sally, born in Bradford in 1809; Keziah, born about 1812, died about 1814; Henry, born 1816.

ELIJAH WEST, blacksmith, came from Henniker in 1808. His children were,—

1. Betsy, married Joseph Shattuck.

2. Polly, married James Presbury.

3. Timothy Kendall, born March, 1800.

4. John, born 1802; died 1817, of spotted fever.

5. Sally, born 1804; died at same time and from same disease as John.

6. Emily, born 1806; married Joshua Wright, of Warner.

7. Leonard, born 1808; married Mary Ayers.

8. Elijah, born 1810; married Jane Abbe, of Vermont.

Timothy Kendall, son of Elijah West, had the following children:

1. Daniel F., born March 6, 1824; died April 22, 1825.
2. Abigail Eaton, born December 19, 1825.
3. Rufus Fuller, born January 26, 1828.
4. Timothy Kendall, Jr., born August 22, 1830; married Polly Wright; died June, 1874.
5. Mary Elizabeth, born July 18, 1832; married Addison Crosby.
6. Daniel Fuller, born October 11, 1831.
7. John, born November 1, 1836; died July 31, 1880.

EXXON.—The ancestors of the Eaton families in this town came from Hopkinton. There were four brothers, as follows:

I. Ebenezer, born April 1, 1757; married, December 7, 1780, Hannah French, born October 12, 1759; died June 29, 1823. He died January 5, 1806. Their children were Abigail, born April 1, 1783; married November, 1804; died September 8, 1839. Samuel born June 1, 1785; married 1810; died August 1, 1864. Elisha, born April 11, 1788; married October 20, 1811; died March 24, 1862. Hannah, born April 4, 1792; married November 25, 1816; died September 21, 1824. E. H. Eaton, son of Elisha, born September 22, 1816; married, March 17, 1840, Roena F. Ayer, born December 22, 1818. She died December, 1882.

II. Nathaniel, born March 20, 1761; married November 9, 1786; died January 24, 1837. He came to Bradford March 22, 1792, and returned to Hopkinton February 20, 1805, and was probably the first of his name in this town.

III. John, born July 14, 1765; married Phoebe Brockway, born April 29, 1770; died February 12, 1851. He died January 19, 1844.

IV. Joshua, born February 25, 1768; married, first, Sarah Hoyt; she died April 17, 1815. He was captain of the Fifth Company, Thirtieth Regiment New Hampshire Militia. The commission, now in possession of his son Joshua, is dated July 22, 1806, and signed by John Langdon, Governor of the State of New Hampshire. A commission as major of the First Battalion in the same regiment is dated June 1, 1809. The family moved to Bradford about 1795. Their children were,—

1. Moses, born April 9, 1793; married Polly Presbury, born 1796; died July 1, 1868. He died November 23, 1858.
2. Mary, born June 5, 1795; married, April 6, 1815, John Brockway, born June 18, 1793; died December 27, 1874; he died November 24, 1870.
3. William A., born April 2, 1800; married Hannah Morse; he died July 5, 1874.
4. Sarah, born February 16, 1805; married Simon Shattuck; she died January 14, 1831.
5. Martha, born December 7, 1808; married, March 11, 1833, Osman Bailey, born September 6, 1806; she died December 12, 1878.

Joshua married, second, January 23, 1817, Anna Blaisdell Hill, of Amesbury, Mass., born February 7, 1788, died January 15, 1861; he died April 11, 1850. They had,—

1. Joshua, born December 22, 1817; married, first, February 20, 1840, Azina E. Gillingham, of Newbury, born April 17, 1823; she died October 6, 1851. He has served as one of the selectmen of the town for eleven years; was representative in the State Legislature in 1856 and 1857; has been one of the justices of the peace in Merrimack County since 1859. He was captain of Second Company of riflemen in Thirtieth Regiment New Hampshire Militia for four years. Their children were Azada, born January 5, 1841; married, April 1, 1866, B. F. Hoyt. Azina, born January 5, 1841; died February 26, 1841. Alverton, born July 27, 1843; died July 2, 1846. Azina, born April 10, 1848; married, July 4, 1870, F. G. Greeley.

Joshua married, second, October 28, 1852, Louisa A. Niel Plumer, of Weare, born October 17, 1823, and had Joshua Willis, born December 24, 1856; married, March 18, 1877, Nettie E. Boyce, born November 10, 1858. They have one daughter,—Ethel E., born April 7, 1878.

II. John Hill, born November 22, 1819; married, first, April 8, 1841, Hannah T. Twiss, of Newbury, born August 29, 1823; she died September 8, 1850. Their children were,—

1. Roxana B., born May 27, 1846; died July 25, 1865.
 2. Ellen M., born February 20, 1848; married, August 18, 1880, Charles E. Palmer.
 3. Hannah M., born August 11, 1850; married, August 3, 1879, Frederick A. Messer.
- John Hill, married, second, February 24, 1852, Mary J. Lawrence, born at Alstead May 8, 1823, and had,—
1. Martha J., born March 11, 1853; married, March 26, 1879, Lawrence E. Davis.
 2. Louisa L., born December 2, 1854; married, November 1, 1881, Dolman C. Hoyt.
 3. John Henry, born October 31, 1858.
- III. Roxanna B., born March 20, 1823; died January 31, 1842.
- IV. Daniel, born September 24, 1827; died June 7, 1828.

V. Albert, born April 22, 1830; married, November 22, 1851, Augusta Colby, of Sunapee, born July 2, 1832; died August 15, 1882; he died March 2, 1885. They had,—

1. Joshua A., born August 21, 1854; died August 15, 1855.
2. Mary J., born July 17, 1856.
3. Ardell, born December 6, 1862; died March 22, 1880.

JOHN W. MORSE, born in Henniker, August 10, 1806; married, August 16, 1835, Lucy Ann Gove, of Acworth, born November 21, 1812. Mr. Morse worked on a farm until he was seventeen years old, then learned the clothiers' trade and followed it until 1833. In that year commenced trade at Weare and remained three years; then sold out and bought in Henniker, where he lived about a year, and in 1837

John W. Morse

removed to Bradford, where he still resides and continues in business. He has been the longest in trade of any individual in town; but the Carrs—father and son together—beat him about a year. Although Mr. Morse is not a radical, as we generally understand this term, yet he believes in progress and thought it good economy to have a stone bridge, and to move the town-house, and to purchase Pleasant Hill Cemetery. He has been in town business considerably, and was postmaster under Pierce's administration. He represented the town in the State Legislature in 1858 and 1859, the old Eighth Senatorial District in 1865 and 1866, and member of the Constitutional Convention in 1876. His children are,—

I. John G., born June 7, 1836, in Henniker; wholesale grocer in Boston.

II. Charles W., born February 11, 1839; married, November 21, 1865, at Plymouth, Josephine P. Merrill; lives in Boston; wholesale grocer there; two children,—Alice J., born October 6, 1866; Florence, born February 26, 1869.

III. Mary E., born July 14, 1843; married, October 1, 1877, Nathaniel T. Lund.

JOSEPH HARTSHORNE, son of John and Hannah (Trince), was born in Amherst, N. H., May 12, 1791; married, March 30, 1817, Mary Ellsworth, of Deering, who was born November 3, 1791, and died January 30, 1862. He died in Concord, N. H., June 27, 1884. He was a non-commissioned officer in the Twenty-ninth Infantry in the War of 1812. He was one of the quota of Amherst men that marched to the defense of Portsmouth in September, 1814, and was the last survivor of Amherst men who served in that war. They lived in Hillsborough till April 6, 1839, when they moved to Bradford. Their children were,—

I. David Henry, born May 27, 1823; married, February 14, 1853, Amanda Forsyth; died in Bradford, April 18, 1874. He had four children,—George Henry, born October 25, 1853; Joseph Albert, born May 31, 1855; Sarah Maria, born February 8, 1859, died May 24, 1860; Mary Lizzie, born July 26, 1861.

II. Mary Antoinette, born January 17, 1826; died January 9, 1841.

III. Ann Maria, born June 29, 1827; married (first), April 16, 1854, Henry Canfield; married (second), June 25, 1856, Hiram Farrington; resides in Concord.

IV. Sarah Dutton, born January 24, 1829; died September 26, 1854. An adopted daughter, Elizabeth Adaline Gibson, was born in February, 1820; married (first), December 9, 1841, Caleb Knight; married (second), Emery Bailey.

ELEAZER STEELE, born August 22, 1784, in Tolland, Conn.; married, at Dover, N. H., June 24, 1826, Eunice Hodgdon. He was ordained elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Bath, Me., June 30, 1822. After spending some time in Canaan and other New Hampshire towns, he located in Bradford, about 1828. Their children were,—

I. Julia Minerva, born May 12, 1827; died December 3, 1829.

II. Eliza S., born October 19, 1828; died June, 1829.

III. Julia M., born January 21, 1830.

IV. Emily M., born September 9, 1831.

V. George, born August 31, 1833; died August 12, 1834.

VI. George, born April 13, 1835; died in infancy.

VII. Ellen Ophelia, born March 31, 1837; died May 2, 1837.

VIII. George Harvey, born May 21, 1839; married, November 15, 1876, Mary Augusta, daughter of Timothy Peaslee Jones, of this town, and lives at the Mill village. He is the only one of the elder's family (five of whom are living) who remains in Bradford.

IX. Eliza Ann, born July 5, 1841; died July 23, 1856.

X. Caroline Kimball, born August 28, 1844.

XI. Harriet Clara, born October 11, 1847.

Military Record—REVOLUTIONARY WAR.—The following-named men of Bradford were in the American army in the War of the Revolution: Private Andrew Aiken, Corporal Abel Revolut, Richard Cressy, John Eaton, Olin French, Jonathan Knight, Abraham Sweett, Abram Currier.

WAR OF THE REBELLION.—The following are the names of soldiers who enlisted in our late Civil War from the town of Bradford, Merrimack County, N. H.:

Colonel W. M. Tappan, Dr. Cyrus M. Fisk, Moses J. Searcy, Willis Cressy, John Lynn, Charles M. Gould, Mansel Bisby, Horace Benton, Joseph C. Hoyt, George Bouton, Newton Cheney, Savory Cheney, John Cleate, John Eaton, Justus A. Dunbar, George F. Smith, George Sargent, Cyrus E. Jones, James Hoyt, P. B. Richards, Henry Presley, Henry Hoyt, Franklin Pierce, William West, Frank West, Ezekiel Hadley, Al Hall, Peter Craig, Charles Tappan, Clarence Bailey, Menn How, David Hawks, Minor Hawks, George L. Ward, Prout D. Ward, Levi Ward, Curtis Davis, Albert Woodbury, Hollis Brockway, George Dunfield, Woodbury Barnes, Timothy Z. Smith.

WAR OF 1812.—The following is a partial list:

John Hartman, John Robbins, Joseph Hartshorne, Hazen Presbury.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JOHN W. MORSE.

To no man is the community more indebted than to the one who, by diligence, attention to business and years of labor, has risen by his own inherent force from poverty to competency, and is acknowledged a "self-made" man. Perhaps no one is more entitled to this appellation in Bradford than John W. Morse. Certainly no man has done more during his nearly fifty years' residence in the town to help its advancement.

Prior to 1635, Anthony Morse was a resident of Newbury, Mass., and one of his lineal descendants, Josiah, married, February 18, 1773, Lois Webster, of Chester, N. H., a member of the same family which produced America's statesman and orator, Daniel Webster. Their son Josiah, on reaching his majority, went to Henniker, where he settled, and married, December 2, 1798, Betsey, daughter of Thomas and Persis (Gibson) Brown. Mr. Morse was a saddler, tanner and carrier. He died December 15, 1833, and his wife died June 12, 1856.

John Webster Morse, their son, was born August 10, 1806, at Henniker, N. H. From the straitened condition of his father's family, John was forced to labor from his earliest years, worked for neighboring farmers while very young, and the most of his small wages went to defray the family expenses and pay the debts of his father. Concluding, when about sixteen, that he could not gain anything by this manner of working, he learned the trade of wool-carding and cloth-dressing, and when twenty-one years old found himself possessed of what was then a good trade and a capital of "fourpence half-penny." A year after he was able to attend school for a term at Derry and part of a term at Hopkinton Academy, and made diligent use of these advantages. He worked at his trade in Weare for six years, in the mean time keeping up his studies, and taught school four winters, in Weare, Henniker, N. H., and Essex, Mass. At the age of twenty-eight, in 1834, Mr. Morse had accumulated six hundred dollars, and he commenced his mercantile life in Weare with James Wallace, under the firm-name of Wallace & Morse, and continued for two years, when he sold out his interest and returned to Henniker and established himself in trade, where he remained for a year, and in 1837 came to Bradford.

Mr. Morse married, August 16, 1835, Lucy Ann, daughter of Hon. Jonathan and Polly (Fisher) Gove, of Acworth, N. H. ["Jonathan Gove was the grandson of Jonathan, brother of Edward, member of the General Assembly of the province of New Hampshire, who was imprisoned in the Tower of London for three years for heading an attempted revolution against the arbitrary proceedings of Governor Cranfield in 1682. Hon. Jonathan Gove settled in Acworth in 1808, and was widely known on account of the many public offices which he held, and also for his high reputation as a skillful and accurate land surveyor. He was elected treasurer of the county of Cheshire when Sullivan was a part of the county; he was several times a representative to the Legislature, twice a member of the Governor's Council, and was offered the office of judge of Probate. His abilities were of a superior order, and his sterling common sense, affability and genial nature made him very popular in all the public positions he filled."]]

The children of John W. and Lucy Ann (Gove) Morse are John G., born in Henniker, June 7, 1836, an energetic and successful business man (wholesale grocer) in Boston, firm name—Morse Bros. & Co.; Charles W., born in Bradford, February 11, 1839, is in business with his brother (he married, November 21, 1865, P. Josephine Merrill, of Plymouth. Their children are Alice, born October 6, 1860, and Florence, born February 26, 1869; and Mary E., born July 14, 1843, married N. F. Lund.

Mr. Morse has been engaged in merchandising in Bradford for nearly half a century, dating back to 1837. The country stores in those days were the exchange bureaus of the farmers. There the produce of the farm was exchanged for the necessary articles of clothing and household supplies, and the enterprise of the merchant was the factor tending most to increase the wealth and prosperity of the section, even while enhancing his own prosperity. To deal with men year after year, to keep their custom and good-will, required not only a high degree of business ability, but honesty of purpose and integrity, and also a facility in reading character, combined with a practical common sense, that would insure success in a different sphere of activity, and when we say that Mr. Morse was successful, we endow him with all the characteristics of a good country merchant.

Mr. Morse is a Democrat in politics, and his first Presidential vote was in 1828, for Andrew Jackson. He has always been of independent thought, decided in his views, acting up to the full standard of his convictions, and has given his most active energies to the support of the Constitution and the principles he deemed founded in truth, and for many years knew every voter in town and how he voted. During his busy and laborious life he has creditably filled many positions of trust and honor, having held every office in the gift of his town. He was town clerk for many years, and re-elected until he resigned, selectman and town treasurer; was appointed postmaster by Franklin Pierce, and served eight years; again appointed by President Cleveland this present year (1885); representative to the General Court; in 1865 and 1866 he represented the Eighth Senatorial District in the State Legislature, receiving more than his party vote, and when nominated for counselor, twice in succession, in a district of more than two thousand majority against him, he ran far ahead of his ticket, even in a heated political campaign, thus showing the respect and confidence in which he was held in the community; he was a member of the State Constitutional Convention in 1868; attended the National Democratic Convention in 1880, as alternate with John H. George.

Mr. Morse is a public-spirited man, always interested in anything of advantage to the citizens. He was the first person to advocate the building of the stone bridge at the "Corner," the moving of the town hall from the "Centre" to its present location, and the laying out of the beautiful Pleasant Hill Cemetery. The town is indebted to Mr. Morse and Colonel Tappan for the movement which resulted in bringing the railroad to Bradford.

Jos. Henry Eaton

He is prudent, practical and honest, and has always lived within his income, and, as he says, has had the satisfaction of being able to pay one hundred cents on a dollar of all claims presented him. He is a sound and safe adviser on any subject, and his advice has often been called for and found of much value.

During this long period of successful labor Mr. Morse has been aided and blessed by his industrious and faithful wife. After having completed a full half-century of happy married life, they are now passing down the declivity of age with the esteem of a large circle of friends, and leading lives that their descendants may worthily emulate.

JOSHUA EATON.

Among the one hundred and two passengers of the "Mayflower," which arrived in Cape Cod harbor two hundred and sixty-four years ago, were Francis Eaton, Sarah, his wife, and Samuel Eaton. Hence the Eaton family is one of the earliest in America, and Francis was one of the signers of the first compact in the nature of a constitution of government. That Puritan band were strong and religious men with undaunted courage and bold hearts, and New Englanders of today are justly proud of their ancestry. Francis Eaton died in Plymouth, 1633. Samuel Eaton was among the twenty-six men who purchased what became the First Precinct in Middleborough, of the Indian sachem, Wampatuck. Said purchase was made in the month of March, 1662, and said Samuel also became one of the pioneer settlers of Middleborough, Mass., where he died in 1684, leaving descendants. Some of the family settled in other parts of Massachusetts. Previous to 1650, Thomas Eaton came to Haverhill, and was the ancestor of the Eatons of Hillsborough and Merrimack Counties of New Hampshire. Thomas Eaton married, for his second wife, a Massachusetts lady, Eunice Sangletory, of Salisbury, December 16, 1658. They had nine children, of whom Job, born April 22, 1671, married Mary Simons, January 19, 1698. Of their four children, the second was Thomas, born February 29, 1701. He married Mehitable —. They had three children,—John, born June 18, 1733; Timothy and Mehitable. John married, first, Abigail Peasley. She was born September 16, 1734, and died February 23, 1772. The children of this marriage were Ebenezer, Mehitable (Mrs. Daniel Cressey), Nathaniel, Daniel, John and Joshua. He married, second, Sarah Clarke, and had three children,—Thomas, Abigail (Mrs. Benjamin Colby) and Elizabeth (Mrs. Nathaniel Gould). He died January 10, 1823.

Nathaniel Eaton was the pioneer of the family in Bradford. He came here in the spring of 1792, settled on the old "Sawyer place," and continued until February of 1805, when he returned to Hopkinton, his former place of residence. Ebenezer, the oldest, emigrated here about the same time, and made a permanent settlement. Joshua, born February 25, 1768, in Haverhill, Mass., came with his wife and two children to Bradford in the spring of 1795, and settled on land which is now occupied by his descendants. Mr. Eaton's first wife was Sarah Hoyt. The children of this marriage were Moses, Mary (Mrs. John Brockway), William A., Sarah (Mrs. Simeon Shattuck) and Martha (Mrs. Osman Bailey). He married, second, Mrs. Anna (Blaisdell) Hill. Their children were Joshua, John Hill, Roxana (deceased), Daniel and Albert (deceased).

Joshua Eaton, Sr., was admirably fitted by nature and temperament for the hardy life of the early settler, having a rugged constitution and a well-developed physique. He devoted himself to the cultivation of his land and the raising of stock, and became one of the prosperous farmers of the town. In 1810 he built the house which is now occupied by his son, John Hill, and at the time of its erection was the best house in Bradford. Industrious and frugal, he managed his affairs with discretion and always had corn to sell and money to lend to a neighbor in an emergency. When the first Orthodox church was erected, he was one of the first purchasers of the pews, of which he owned three. For several years he took an active part in the military organizations of the State, and was commissioned captain of militia in the Thirtieth Regiment, July 22, 1806, and major of the First Battalion of the same regiment, June 1, 1809, by Governor John Langdon. His resignation was accepted September 13, 1814. Mr. Eaton's politics were of the Jeffersonian school. He was a man of influence, good judgment, not given to many words, deliberate in forming his conclusions. His death occurred April 11, 1850.

Joshua Eaton was born at Bradford, N. H., December 22, 1817. His educational advantages were more liberal than many of the farmer's sons, he having had opportunities of supplementing his district school attendance by High School and academic instruction at Bradford, Henniker and Franklin. He was brought up a farmer's boy and was early accustomed to labor, and continued on the home place with his father until after his marriage, February 20, 1849, to Alzina, daughter of James and Elizabeth Gillingham. (See biography of Moody Gillingham, Newbury, for ancestry.) In 1842 he purchased the place which has since been his home. At his father's death he inherited some fifty or more acres of the old homestead farm, and at present he owns about two hundred and twenty acres of land.

The children of Joshua and Alzina (Gillingham) Eaton were Alzada and Alzira, born January 5, 1841 (Alzira died February 26, 1841. Alzada married Benjamin F. Hoyt; has Frederick G., born January 19, 1867; Warren A., born September 2, 1868; Nettie A., born November 8, 1870; Carrie A., born October 27, 1873; and Chester F., born January 26, 1879); Alverton, born July 27, 1813, died July 2, 1846; Alzina, born April 10, 1848. Mrs. Eaton died October 6, 1851, and Mr. Eaton married Mrs. Louisa A. Plumer, daughter of Samuel and Lois (Clark) McNeil. She was born in Weare, N. H. They have one son, Joshua Willis Eaton, born December 24, 1856. He married Nettie E. Boyce; they have one child, Ethel E., born April 7, 1878.

Mr. Eaton has inherited many qualities from his Puritan forefathers, and is a man of weight and influence in the town. He is a Democrat in politics, and as such represented Bradford in the Legislature of 1856 and 1857. Since 1849, when he was first elected and served as selectman, he has been connected with public affairs,—been selectman twelve years and first selectman ten years, and filled many other official positions. He was commissioned justice of the peace as follows: June 17, 1859, by Governor Goodwin; June 9, 1864, by Governor Gilmore; June 9, 1869, by Governor Ouslow Stearns; May 19, 1874, by Governor Straw; May 20, 1879, by Governor Prescott; April 29, 1884, by Governor Hale.

He has also been interested in the militia, and when quite a young man he was employed as marker or guide. In February, 1837, he was appointed sergeant, and in the June following received a commission as lieutenant in Second Company of Riflemen from Governor Isaac Hill, and afterwards that of captain of the same company, which position he held for several years, when he resigned.

Mr. Eaton is a man of integrity, sound judgment, energy and efficiency, and to him has been entrusted important affairs,—the settling of estates, probate business and other matters requiring a cautious, careful, conservative man. He is a good and useful citizen, a kind husband and father, and stands high in the confidence of the community. Like his father, he is a pronounced liberal in religion.

JASON HOWARD AMES, M.D.

Hardly two decades had passed after the landing of the ship "Mayflower" on Plymouth shores when William Ames emigrated to this country and settled in Braintree, Mass., 1638. Of his many descendants was David. The exact date of his birth is unknown, but it was near the close of the seventeenth century. He married Mary Penniman, and resided in Braintree some years after his marriage, then emigrated from Massachusetts, and his death occurred at Cardigan (now Orange), N. H. They had three sons,—David, John (probably father of Hon. Oliver Ames, of Easton, Mass.), Elijah—and two daughters.

David, the oldest, was born at Braintree, Mass., April, 1726, and married Irene Waldo, who was born at Scotland, Conn., April 18, 1738. He died at Royalton, Vt., April 11, 1821, and his wife died August 18, 1811. Their children were (1) Thaddeus, born at Norwich, Conn., May 18, 1755, married Judy Clark;

(2) John, born at Norwich, Conn., September 11, 1756; (3) David, born at Norwich, Conn., October 11, 1758, married Ruth Anin; (4) Nathaniel, born at Scituate, R. I., April 25, 1761, married Sally Anin (he died in Oregon, Wis., in 1863, at the age of one hundred and two years. He was a soldier in the Revolution, having enlisted when seventeen years old, and consequently lived at the time of the three great wars of our country. When one hundred years old he attended a Fourth of July celebration in Madison, Wis., going fifteen miles for that purpose); (5) Susanna, born at Killingsly, Conn., October 8, 1763, married Joseph Daniels; (6) Abigail, born at Killingsly, Conn., August 14, 1766, married Nathaniel Briggs; (7) Anna, born at Killingsly, Conn., March 28, 1769, married Peter Perkins; (8) Jesse, born at Killingsly, Conn., February 12, 1772, married Patty Howard, of Minson, Mass. (he died at Mt. Morris, N. Y., March 10, 1862); (9) Ebenezer, born at Cardigan, N. H., March 23, 1775, married Chloe Osborn, and died at Hamburgh, N. Y., February, 1862. The children of Jesse and Patty (Howard) Ames were Jason H., Polly, Pamela, Roxanna M., Ruth, Cynthia, Martha L., Lyman D. and Loren J.

Jason Howard Ames, M.D., son of Jesse and Patty (Howard) Ames, was born December 16, 1796, at Fairlee, Vt. He is a descendant, paternally and maternally, from families of consequence in the Old World and the New, and inherited, in an unusual degree, qualities which made him pre-eminently a man of mark. After pursuing his medical studies until he obtained his M.D., he commenced the practice of his profession, in company with Dr. Lyman, in Warner, N. H., where he continued for a few years, and then, with Dr. Lyman, removed to Bradford. Dr. Ames purchased the David Brown place, and soon after married Clara George, December 20, 1827. Mrs. Ames was of a prominent Massachusetts family. She was born in Warner, N. H., June 25, 1798, and died December 5, 1868, at Bradford. (For ancestry, see George family of Hopkinton.) She bore him three children,—(1) George, born September 19, 1828, died September 8, 1834; (2) Henry George, born February 6, 1830, died June 7, 1885 (he married Mary Graves Stoddard, of Perry, N. Y. Their children are Clara George Ames, born March 12, 1860, and Harry Stoddard Ames, born May 21, 1861, at Mt. Morris, N. Y.); (3) Martha Jane, born January 30, 1832, married Bartlett G. Cilley, of Andover, N. H. (he died August 21, 1867. They had two children,—George Ames, born November 24, 1863, and Winfred Bartlett, born October 18, 1865, at Bradford).

Dr. Ames has been a resident of Bradford for nearly sixty years, and for half a century his life was that of the faithful, hard-working physician. The work of a medical man fifty years ago was nearly double that of the present time. Almost all able practitioners made and compounded their medicines, and visits to patients were generally made on horseback, with well-filled saddle-bags, traveling late at night and great distances. As learned and skillful men of the medical fraternity were few, Dr. Ames' labors extended to a circuit of many miles. In addition to his large practice and earnest studies in the direction of medical science, he was interested in the public affairs of the town, and this, of course, claimed time, which deprived him of his much-needed rest and recreation. When comparatively a young man, scarcely thirty years of age, he delivered the semi-centennial oration, July 4, 1826, at Bradford, in an able and fitting manner. The document is preserved, and the power, patriotism and piety it contains must have stimulated those who listened to it to good thoughts, good deeds and good conduct. Dr. Ames' ability was recognized by the citizens, and they elected him to the Legislature; and, if his profession had permitted, or inclination had led him into the arena of public and political life, he would have ranked high as a legislator. He was one of the first presidents of the Warner Bank, and filled other official positions.

James H. Snow

J. W. Marshall

Many of the old inhabitants remember Dr. Ames' first advent among them, and describe him as a gentleman dignified and courteous, of few words, and yet social with those with whom he was personally connected in family or medical relations, of rare intelligence and a most successful physician.

But his life-work is accomplished. Some five or six years since, this venerable gentleman, after a long and useful career and unremitting professional duties, succumbed to the infirmities of age, and now, at the age of four-score and ten, he, who for so many years cared for others, receives the loving care and attention so well deserved.

Dr. Ames has done enough to keep his memory green, while the record of this laborious life remains, and we continue to esteem and honor the men who have devoted themselves physically and mentally for the good of humanity.

JOHN W. MARSHALL.

The study of human life is a study of the deepest interest. "No one liveth to himself, and no one dieth to himself." Each is a vital part of the history of the world; but there is an infinite diversity in the kind and degree of individual action. Even in the nineteenth century we have not fathomed the occult influences controlling the destinies of each child of mortality, and it is well to place upon the pages of history, for the perusal, instruction and advancement of coming generations, what we may secure of the environment, characteristics and education of those who have worthily lived lives of usefulness, and who have shown marked traits of character, and who, out of the lowest and poorest conditions, by diligence, patience and untiring labor, have constructed a life-edifice of more than ordinary value. In this record the peculiar educational influences and advantages the individual may have had should be most clearly shown. The world has other schools than those of scholastic renown and moneyed endowments,—schools where the influence of wealth is never known and could never bring advantage. Many are educated by poverty, self-denial and stern necessity, and, in spite of their environments, the graduates of this school have oftentimes outstripped those of the most famed schools of liberal culture.

Among those that New Hampshire has just reason to claim as worthy sons of the last half-century is John Webster Marshall. He was born in Salisbury, N. H., February 9, 1835, and was the son of John Webster and Judith (Jackson) Marshall. At the early age of seven years he was left motherless, and the lad began his years of accountability with little to cheer or elevate him. Poverty hung around his father's house, and the surroundings were ill calculated to bring content. Before John was thirteen years old he had had two stepmothers, and the boy had never known maternal care or love since his own mother was carried to the grave. In the fall of the year, when he was scarcely thirteen, he obtained his father's consent to earn his own living, and with barely clothes enough to serve as a covering, and not even under-clothing, he went out into the world. Coming to Bradford, he secured a place with his uncle, Benjamin Marshall, to work for his board and attend school. He was more than an ordinary boy, quiet and retiring in his manner, kind in disposition and possessed of a strong will. He early showed a fondness for machinery and an aptness for tools. He gave diligent attention to his studies, developed a taste for mathematics and made rapid progress. He labored in the summer for his uncle and other farmers of the neighborhood to acquire a respectable wardrobe, and after two years thus passed he entered the employ of G. W. Wadleigh, of Fisherville, as clerk in his store. After a year of hard work in the store and on the farm, John went to Manchester, and for another year was engaged in the gun-shop of a Mr. Fogg. His natural inclination for mechanics was fostered by this avocation, and it decided his life-work. Determined to become a machinist, he secured a situation in the Manchester Locomotive-Works, where he was employed for about six years. Here life was pleasant, his occupation was congenial, and in the intervals of labor, and during the long winter evenings, he continued his studies of mathematics and drawing, never wasting his time in frivolity or idleness. He had even then marked out for himself a career of steady and persistent progress, and knew that to accomplish it he must be an unceasing laborer and student. In view of this, his thoughts were turned to Boston as the place where a widening sphere of opportunity would be revealed to him, and removing to that city, he worked a year for the Boston Locomotive-Works, and after another year in the employ of a Mr. Osborne, in a locomotive repair shop, he engaged as a machinist in the Atlantic Works, at $1.50 a day. The same devotion to his studies he had shown in Manchester was continued in Boston. The allurements of the great city had no charm for him; his evenings were consecrated to improvement. He became proficient in mechanical drawing and engineering. He was ready for a higher position, and it came unsought, and as a most pleasant surprise. One day the machinists of the shop were asked to vote for one of their number to become the superintendent of the drafting department. Mr. Marshall cast his vote for one he deemed qualified, and little dreamed that he would be the chosen one.

This was a fortunate financial change, the salary being twelve hundred dollars a year. Exercising the same diligence and studiousness which had so signally changed his life, he thoroughly qualified himself for the post of mechanical engineer, to which position he was advanced in about two years' time, with a salary of two thousand five hundred dollars. His patience and assiduity, his modest and unassuming ways and the painstaking accuracy and promptitude with which everything which came in the line of his duty was done, early won the approval and esteem of his employers. This was strengthened with passing time, and, as a further proof of their confidence, he was appointed superintending engineer, and sent to Europe to study the construction of iron vessels, and he passed three months in the leading shipyards of England, Scotland, Belgium and France, adding much to his store of information. Nine months after his return to Boston, the famous firm Peter Wright & Co., Philadelphia, who had learned of his abilities, engaged him to superintend the construction of the vessels which should constitute the Red Star Line, at a salary of three thousand dollars and expenses. He remained in England two years and ten months, his wife visiting him in the mean time, and during this time the three pioneer vessels of the line—"Vaderland," "Nederland" and "Switzerland"—were constructed at Jarrow-on-Tyne. The vessels demonstrated that Mr. Marshall thoroughly understood the principles underlying an intelligent knowledge of his work, and he took the final step in the ladder he had started to mount by being made superintendent of the two lines of steamships owned by his employers,—the Red Star and American. Thus had diligence and application, coupled with energy and improvement of opportunities, and unflinching cheerfulness under all circumstances, brought the unknown youth of poverty to a high position in the great world of business, and to competency and honors, with strong and influential friends.

In 1878 he again went to England to personally superintend the building of the "Belgenland" and "Rhynecland," of the Red Star line, at Barrow-in-Furness. This occupied him about one year. The continued application and overwork for so many years had worn upon a delicate physical organism, and only an indomitable will kept him up. Returning on the "Rhynecland" to America, he tendered his resignation as superintendent, which was not accepted, and this was repeated three times in the course of a few months. The firm valued his services too highly to dispense with them, and he was in their employ until his death, which occurred January 6, 1882, in Boston, after an illness of two years and a half. Up to the last the plans and specifications of the vessels under construction were submitted to him for approval, and it is noticeable that he had just concluded the examination of the last set of papers of the last vessel he had designed when he was seized by the hemorrhage which preceded his death.

Mr. Marshall married, February 11, 1864, Martha J., daughter of Benjamin E. and Olive (Chandler) Wadleigh, of Bradford, a descendant of two early and honorable New Hampshire families. She was a schoolmate of his in his early school-days at Bradford. Both were proficient in the same studies, both worked the hard examples, both "spelled down" the school; but the nature of each was so retiring that they never formed a personal acquaintance until twelve years after, when their congeniality of taste soon drew them together. She was especially adapted to be his companion, entering heartily into his labors and aspirations, and was a true adviser and friend. Their children are Elmer Wadleigh and John Edgar, who, it is to be hoped, have inherited a share of their father's ability.

Mr. Marshall was one of the most unostentatious of men. In forming acquaintances he was reserved and reticent; but he was genial and social to those who won his confidence. He lived a regular and exemplary life, never drinking liquor or using tobacco, and devoted the time so many waste to useful investigations in science. He was not a church member, but a truly religious man, who lived a remarkably pure life. A lover of nature and an admirer of its works, he "looked through nature up to nature's God," and based his life and actions on the golden rule. His integrity and honesty were as clear as the noonday sun, and though millions of dollars passed through his hands, his disposition of them was made in all cases to the best interests of his employers. He was charitable; but, in accordance with the Scriptural admonition, he "let not his left hand know what his right hand did," and this was in harmony with his entire character. Modest and unselfish, he was in this respect a marked contrast to many "self-made" men. He was ever thoughtful of others, their welfare and comfort, and in the closing hours of his life occupied himself with instructions to his wife concerning the happiness of those depending upon him.

May many who read these pages find an instructive lesson in this story of a life, and be encouraged to new aspirations and endeavors to attain a higher and more useful station than fate or circumstance has given them.

Miriam Blanchard

HIRAM BLANCHARD.

From the "History of Acworth" we find that George Blanchard, who was born on English soil, emigrated to Andover, Mass., and among his goodly descendants was Nathaniel, who had three sons,—Joseph, Aaron and Lemuel. Aaron was a soldier in the War of the Revolution, settled in Acworth, N. H., but afterwards removed to Barnard, Vt. Lemuel also took part in the struggles of the colonists and was at the burning of New London. Joseph was born in Shutesbury, Mass., in 1755, and came to Acworth in the early years of its settlement (1790), married Relief, daughter of Aaron Osgood, a descendant of John Osgood, of Andover, Mass. David, his second son, born in 1788, married Betsey, daughter of John and Lydia (Melvin) Gregg, of Acworth. The Greggs were among the pioneers of Londonderry, N. H., and possessed the strong and resolute spirit of those enterprising men, the influence of whose characters has left a strong impress upon the town and community in which they made their home. To David and Betsey (Gregg) Blanchard were born seven children, of whom Hiram was the oldest.

Hiram Blanchard belongs to that class of New Englanders who, while unostentatious and unpretending, are yet the true benefactors of the community in which they live, in that they add to the material prosperity of their respective localities and leave behind them tangible results of their life's work. He had his birth in the quiet, rural town of Acworth, N. H., October 21, 1816, attended the public schools in Acworth and Hancock Academy, and thoroughly assimilated the instruction to his intellectual betterment. He at the same time improved his physical health by laboring on his father's farm. This was his life till he became of age, when he went, first to Boston, then to Bellows Falls and other places; but after the passing of a few months he located in merchandising at Bradford Corner, as a partner of Hon. John W. Morse and M. E. Baxter, under the firm-title of Baxter, Blanchard & Co. This was in 1842, and from that time to his death, November 19, 1872, he was one of the most energetic of the business men of the town and a component factor of its usefulness. He continued in trade at Bradford Corner for about ten years, with various partners, and established a reputation for sterling integrity and honesty of purpose that his whole after-life but confirmed. He afterwards formed a partnership with Mr. Morse, at Mill village, under style of Morse & Blanchard, and until 1870, when, on account of failing health, Mr. Blanchard was forced to retire, they continued in trade, each week and each month but rendering stronger the bonds of friendship uniting the two men. Their business interests were large and diversified, and while Mr. Morse attended to the "outside" part, Mr. Blanchard was the merchant who daily was at his post in the store, and it is not too much to say that the unflinching courtesy which gave a pleasant greeting and a kind word to every one added much to the popularity of the firm and to its success.

Mr. Blanchard married, October 18, 1843, Polly E., daughter of Hon. Jonathan and Polly (Fisher) Gove, of Acworth. (For Gove ancestry, see biography of Hon. John W. Morse.) For nearly thirty years of passing time were their joys and sorrows cheered by mutual sympathy, and, while Mrs. Blanchard was a true helpmeet to him, his unflinching tenderness made the home circle a more than ordinarily happy one. He prized his home dearly; after the wearisome duties of the day were over, here he found a rest for his fatigue and a solace for the discomforts incident to every life. The same qualities which made him the successful merchant and husband and father, caused him to have the respect and esteem of the entire community. He was remarkably winning in his manners, speedily securing the interest of a stranger, which was usually increased and consolidated into friendship by further acquaintance, and, throughout his long and active business career, never dared suspicion to breathe one word against his integrity, nor did a single action of his cause him to be lowered from the high position he occupied in the minds of the better element of the people among whom he had made his home. He was always unassuming, never giving himself full credit for the abilities he possessed, and never boasted of his achievements nor what he could accomplish. A man not given to idle talk, he had great command over his feelings, which were naturally impetuous. He was firm in his friendships, generous to the unfortunate and suffering, but his good deeds were never found out from him; he left others to reveal them if they ever came to the light; only his wife would know of his benefactions, and she cordially shared them with him. He preferred the quiet, domestic enjoyments of home to the turmoil of public strife, and consequently never sought political or official distinction, although supporting, with all his strength, the Democratic principles of the "Father of the Constitution," and of wide influence in the community. He served as postmaster at one time, and was representative to the State Legislature in 1866-67, the only public positions he could be induced to accept. Of an earnest and positive character, whatever he undertook he would accomplish, and this, with his scrupulous fidelity to any trust confided to him, caused him to be almost recklessly unsparing of himself. Hence he was led to a really unjustifiable excess of labor, which weakened a system never vigorous, and brought on consumption, that, after long months of suffering, ended his useful life. He had one son, George H., born in 1848, who resides in Lowell.

Mrs. Blanchard survives her husband and has the esteem and friendship of a large circle for her sterling worth.

By the reading of this memorial sketch many striving youth may see what may be accomplished by diligence, good habits and an honest, manly life. Better than columns of stone and monuments of marble are the records of such a life.

GEORGE HART.

George Hart, the grandson of Nicholas Lawrence (a native of Weston, Vt., who was a very prominent man, and one of the veteran heroes of the Revolutionary War), and son of George and — (Lawrence) Hart, was born at Landgrove, Vt., May 23, 1811. As so many New Englanders had done before him, early in life he was obliged to earn his bread, get his education and wrestle with the world. The condition of his parents was humble. The incessant toil required in a new and sterile land had but served to provide the barest necessities of life, and from his earliest years he struggled with adverse circumstances. His boy-heart yearned to know something of the great world of books in which so many found enjoyment; but he had no money, nor could his parents meet this demand; so he went into the woods, gathered dry trees, stumps, brush, etc., and burning them, he secured the ashes to exchange for the much-desired school-books. But the rains descended, and the prospective capital was lost, as George thought, when his mother came to his relief, dried the ashes in the oven, and his first school-books were purchased. He improved his time in labor and study, and, with the assistance of his brother, while yet a young man, had the satisfaction of seeing his parents in a home which the two boys had provided. Thinking to find a larger field of labor, and one more remunerative, in a manufacturing place, he left his native town and went to Lowell, Mass., where he took a contract for the heavy stone-work required in one of the mills, and thus found employment for a time. He then went to Tewksbury and became the foreman on a farm, and resided in Draent for a short period. But Mr. Hart's ambition for a better position and advantages for adding to his stock of learning soon carried him to Boston, where he engaged in one of the tide-mills for manufacturing lead pipe. Here he continued diligent in business and saving his earnings, when a desirable opportunity offered, and he invested his little capital, and went into partnership with Messrs. Crosby & Cannon in the trucking business. He remained in Boston for more than three years, when he removed to Mt. Tabor, Vt., purchased a farm and devoted himself to agriculture for the next five years, and became a good citizen of the town, interesting himself in its public affairs, serving as town clerk, selectman and also held a commission as justice of the peace. He then removed to Boston, resumed his old business, was financially successful, and having sold out his entire interest, he came to Bradford about 1850, and was a resident here until his death, in the last night of the year 1879.

Mr. Hart married, April 5, 1835, Louisa, daughter of Cyrus and Martha (Millet), Bailey, native of Salem, N. H. Mrs. Hart has been a resident of Bradford since her third year, and is a Christian lady of intelligence and refinement. Their children were Louisa A., born at Mt. Tabor, Vt., January 11, 1838, married Arthur T. Morse, of Newbury, N. H., and has two children, George H. and Arthur A.; Almendo, born at Mt. Tabor November 7, 1840, died in infancy; George A., born at Mt. Tabor December 17, 1841, died in Boston, aged eleven months; George Herman, born at Boston April 17, 1844, died aged two years and four months; Edwin A., born at Boston July 12, 1849 (he married Eugenia C. Delaplaine, and has an adopted daughter, Bertha, now living at Minneapolis, Minn.); William S., born at Bradford September 25, 1851, now living in Florida, is engaged in bee culture, in connection with orange-growing, in which he is successful.

About 1860, Mr. Hart left his Bradford matters in charge of his wife and a trusty man, and went to Enniskillen, Canada, and engaged in boring for oil and dealing in oil lands quite extensively, and this enterprise resulted profitably, as also other business transactions.

We have written thus far concerning Mr. Hart as a business man, and we will now speak of him in the words of a friend, who knew him as friend, citizen and neighbor, of one who saw him in his home, which he had made so beautiful by his own care and artistic taste.

He was a man of grand presence, reserved in his manners, of few words, carrying on conversation for the purpose of gaining or imparting knowledge, but never condescending to trivial details, but when the occasion demanded, his influence, means and friendship were offered freely; kind, sympathetic and benevolent, but always choosing the objects of his charity; unostentatious and unassuming, yet bold and fearless in the cause of the oppressed; a strict partisan, but never intrusive or arrogant; impatient of shams, but a firm friend of all philanthropic undertakings; of a strong and positive will, as is often the case with self-made men; refined, cultured and with a taste for the beautiful in nature, of which he was a great lover, as was evidenced by the adornment and cultivation of his home-place, much of which was the labor of his own hands; a strong temperance man and a zealous worker in the cause, ready with his advice and financial aid; an Abolitionist at the time when to openly avow those sentiments almost amounted to social ostracism. When Garrison was mobbed in the city of Boston, Mr. Hart was one of the foremost to stand forward and offer his strong arm in his defense; also, at one time, when a lady lectured in the church at Bradford in the interest of the anti-slavery movement, and, at the close, asked for some one to take up a collection, and waited for a response, not a person in the whole congregation responded until Mr. Hart, with his dignified and courteous mien, arose, and complied with the request. He was a keen observer of human nature and had a wonderful power in reading character. He had a strong sense of justice and was no respecter of persons. In politics he was a Republican, and his being twice elected selectmen in a town largely Democratic shows the esteem in which he was held. He was thoughtful and tender of his wife and family, even to the very last, when pain and suffering had claimed him for their own.

George Stark

David Durell

Mr. Hart was not a professor of Christianity, but his wife was a member of the Baptist Church, and he contributed liberally for the support of the cause she loved. But he was a believer in God, read the Bible carefully and had been heard to remark that "all nature gave evidence that there was a God." A few days previous to his death, on bidding farewell to a friend, he said,—"Good-bye, I hope we shall meet in a better world, if there is one, and I believe there is."

All in all, Mr. Hart was an honest, upright, conscientious and moral man, and the world was better for his having lived in it.

DAVID DURRELL.

The Durrells are of English descent, and the head of the family is a knight, who lived in a manor-house, whose erection dates back to the fourteenth century. (See biography of Thomas Durrell.) Among the men of note in America bearing the name may be mentioned Judge Daniel M. Durrell, of Dover, N. H., and the yet more famous Judge Durrell, of Louisiana, who are nearly related to the branch that settled in Bradford.

Nicholas Durrell was born in those days, just subsequently to the Revolution, when the depreciation of Continental currency had caused a stringency of times and a shrinkage of values of which we now have not the faintest conception.

The young lad was reared in the midst of the difficulties incident to a pioneer life. He came to Bradford with his young wife, Polly Batchelder, of Northwood, on horseback, over the rough roads, in which rocks, logs and swamps caused slow and tiresome progress, and with brave hearts they set themselves to make a home out of the wild piece of land on which they settled. Not idle were they, but courageously and industriously they devoted themselves to the task before them, and, as the result of their labors, there was developed a splendid farm—the finest in many miles. He was a model farmer, with an eye for a good animal, and took pleasure and pride in his flocks and herds, his fields and his buildings, and many remember the time when "no one raised so good produce, no one drove so fine horses, no one owned such broad lands as Nicholas Durrell."

The old homestead is near Bradford Centre; it has now (1885) passed into other hands, and his descendants are scattered; but "Nicholas, his wife and others of his race now sleep in the small iron-picketed grave-yard on the opposite side of the road, and no male of the name resides in the town."

Nicholas Durrell was an old-time Whig, a man of fine appearance, of social ways and courteous bearing, esteemed by his acquaintances, loved by his family, a happy, honest, successful agriculturist, and, although unable to write his name, left the impress of his strong character, which cannot be effaced. He was a prominent member of the First Congregational Church, for which he did and gave much. He died in September, 1844, at Saratoga, N. Y., aged sixty-five. His wife survived him many years, dying at the advanced age of ninety-two. Their children were Samuel, David, Levi (now living in Surry, N. H.) and Mary (Mrs. Levi O. Colby).

David Durrell, son of Nicholas and Polly (Batchelder) Durrell, was born July 20, 1807, on the homestead of his father in Bradford, and was a life-long resident of the town. He had a good common-school education, his quick mental powers making such rapid advancement that when only sixteen years old he was qualified to teach school, and for ten consecutive years he taught winter terms with flattering results and great popularity. Inheriting in an intensified degree his father's love of agriculture and fine stock, he remained on the home place until he was of age, and purchased the farm, which became his home, for six hundred dollars; married Elvira French, who died, leaving one daughter, Lavinia (Mrs. George Baker). He married, November 15, 1836, Polly P. Colby, daughter of Samuel and Sally Patch. They had three children,—Lizzie S. (Mrs. Walter S. Leach, of Methuen, Mass., whose only child, Lizzie Etta, married William W. Spalding, resides in Lawrence, Mass., and has two children: Helen D. and John W.), Mary Elvira (deceased) and Helen F. G. (Mrs. J. J. Crippen, now residing in Salina, Kan., having three children: Henry D., J. J., Jr., and Helen E.).

Mr. Durrell was an enthusiastic laborer in his favorite and chosen field, agriculture; worked with all the ardent energy of the Durrell nature to excel, made a specialty of raising fine stock, added acre after acre to his original small possessions, until, in a very short period of time, he had acquired much real estate, and owned and gave his name to Durrell's Mountains. He had at one time in his possession as many as seventy-three blooded cattle, was noted for having one of the best stock farms in the State, and had many fine horses, whose reputation for speed and quality stood in high favor among Boston horsemen, who highly valued the "Durrell breed." In all his operations, so successfully conducted as to make him wealthy when only in the prime of life (for when his death occurred,

NOTE.—[Some branches of the Durrell family spell the name with an "r," while others use two, but it is generally spelled with two.—L. H. D.]

September 15, 1854, at the age of forty-seven years, his property inventoried about twenty four thousand dollars), he was not an idle spectator of public affairs. The same qualities shown in his private business were called by the citizens to administration of town matters; he was school committeeman, selectman and filled other offices for various and continued terms, and was one of the ablest and strongest men in Bradford, whose advice and counsel was sought and gladly received, and he was often selected as an administrator, guardian and for other weighty trusts. His operations were large; he employed many men, and the oversight of them in the various departments of his labor made him the busiest man in town. Mr. Durrell was social, warm-hearted, tender and kind in family and neighborhood relations, generous to all deserving charities, but so quiet in his benefactions that many of them were unknown to all save the giver and the recipient. A load of hay would be sent in the long winter to the poor man whose fodder had failed; a cow would be driven to the house where "many children played around the door," and its use given for the season. In these and similar ways was his liberality scattered, like sunbeams, bringing gladness and light to many destitute homes, and when he was called away by death the hearts of many were shrouded in gloom.

The vigorous constitution of Mrs. Durrell, in spite of her active labors of many years, has preserved her intellect unimpaired, and her sallies of wit and appreciation of humor would do credit to a much younger person. Her appearance does not indicate that she has attained her age of seventy-four years, and, blessed with the care and sympathy of three generations of worthy descendants, she is passing down towards the "twilight" of life revered and beloved.

There has been no stronger type of character shown among the settlers of Bradford than that exhibited by Nicholas and David Durrell, and none of its inhabitants have done better service in the development of the town, or left more substantial tokens of their existence, or whose memory is, to-day, more sincerely cherished.

REV. HIRAM HOLMES.

Rev. Hiram Holmes, for many years a useful and faithful minister of the gospel, was born in Rochester, N. H., October 3, 1806. He was the son of Joshua and Polly (Cater) Holmes, and the circumstances of his birth only afforded him the benefit of the education that could be acquired at the common schools of his native town. At a very early age he was deeply impressed with the importance of religious interests, and at the age of twenty-one he became the servant of Christ, and August 3, 1828, was baptized at Strafford (Crown Point) by Rev. E. Place, and joined the Free-Will Baptist Church. Soon after he was convinced that he should become a religious teacher, and, with a few others, established a prayer-meeting, which in a short time bore good fruit and much awakening of the spirit. He now felt that preaching was the vocation to which he was called, and henceforward his life-work was that of a preacher of the Word. In 1829 he commenced holding meetings, and, in January, 1830, the New Durham Quarterly Meeting "gave him approbation to improve as a licentiate," and February 8, 1831, his ordination took place in Strafford, Rev. B. S. Manson preaching the sermon. Previous to this, and afterwards, he traveled in various towns, holding meetings and going from house to house, and his heart was made glad in that many turned to the Lord. He made Wolfborough his home at this time, and in that place did much of his work. He was clerk of the Wolfborough Quarterly Meeting from its organization, August 6, 1831, to 1835, when he removed from the town. He perceived a change and a quickening in religious interests while a resident there, and baptized thirty-seven in Wolfborough and the neighboring towns. He then went to Hopkinton, remaining there from June, 1835, until the following February. His next field of labor was Weare, in 1836, afterwards supplying the church in Epsom for a year. In October, 1837, Mr. Holmes married Susanna, daughter of Josiah and Lydia Brown, of Weare, the marriage ceremony being performed by the Rev. David Moody, the well-known Baptist clergyman. His next pastorate was in Raymond, where he continued for a year or more. His final settlement was in Bradford, which lasted from 1839 until his death, which occurred suddenly May 1, 1863,—a period of twenty-four years. On coming to Bradford, Mr. Holmes purchased the "French farm," and made it his home during his life here, and his widow still resides there. In all these years he supplied Sunapee, Newbury, Wilnot Flat, and did much pastoral work in many places, and was also appointed by the Weare Quarterly Meeting an "itinerant" to visit the destitute churches. His health, however, was feeble, and he was unable to preach constantly; but whenever or wherever an opportunity occurred he "fought the good fight" and labored zealously for Zion's cause. His activity, zeal and persevering endeavor caused him to be respected and esteemed by the people of Bradford, and, in 1860, the Congregational Church being without a pastor, he was invited to fill the pulpit, which he did alternate Sabbaths, "to good congregations and to much acceptance." He was a delegate to the Sixth General Conference, held at Meredith, N. H., 1832; the Seventh, at Strafford, Vt., 1833; and the Eighteenth, at Hillsdale, Mich., 1862.

Mr. Holmes was a public-spirited citizen, interested in reform movements of the day, and in all enterprises tending to further and promote the welfare of the community. The most appropriate and fitting tribute to this good man is that of his friend and Christian brother, Joseph Fullonton: "In all his ministry he answered well the qualifications Paul sets forth as requisite in a minister of Christ: 'A lover of hospitality, a lover of good men, sober, just, holy, temperate.' He was firm in his convictions of right, conscientious in all his duties and of strict integrity in all his business concerns. His heart was in the benevolent enterprises of the age, and in all proper ways he labored to promote them. Coming forward without the benefits of the schools, as many have since enjoyed, he developed preaching talents of good quality. He labored by sound doctrine to convince gainsayers and to persuade the sinful to turn to God. He presented the great truths with such clearness that all could understand; and in all his work he gave the impression that love to God and love to men constrained him to make earnest efforts to win the wayward and perishing to Christ, and with such earnestness, deep feeling and evident sincerity that good results followed. God's people were instructed and comforted, the desponding encouraged and the sinful directed to the Lamb of God. His ministry was successful, and he has entered upon a glorious inheritance in heaven. 'The memory of the just is blessed.'

H. Holmes

Curtis Davis

JOHN BROWN.

John Brown was born in Henniker, N. H., in the year 1777, and, when a child, removed to Bradford, where he ever afterwards resided. He married Sarah Gregg, of New Boston, N. H.; was a farmer, and died March 27, 1856. His wife died October 14, 1849. They had six children, viz.: Hannah, Jerusha, Livonia, Joel H., Jeremiah and Nancy. Hannah married Erastus F. Brockway, lived in Bradford for many years, and afterwards removed to Boston and died there in February, 1869, at the age of sixty-two. Her husband is still living. She never had any children.

Jerusha died, unmarried, May 8, 1838, at the age of twenty-nine.

Livonia married Francis T. Simpson, lived many years in Manchester, N. H., but afterwards returned to Bradford and died there May 18, 1854, at the age of forty-two. She had no children. Her husband died before her.

Joel H. graduated from Dartmouth College in the class of 1841, and became a physician and settled in Newton, Mass., where he died March 18, 1865, aged fifty-three. He married Sarah R. P. Richmond, of Boston, who survives. They had one child, a daughter, who died in childhood.

Jeremiah graduated from Dartmouth College in the class of 1842, was a lawyer, and practiced for many years in Boston, where he died December 26, 1881, aged sixty-seven. He married Mary H. Talbot, who died before him. They had no children.

Nancy married Ambrose S. Brackett, and resided in Bradford, where she died May 14, 1862, aged forty-five. Her husband died in Bradford July 23, 1878, aged sixty-three.

J. Q. A. Brackett is their only child, and the only living descendant of his grandfather, John Brown. He was born in Bradford June 8, 1842; graduated from Harvard University in the class of 1865, and from the Harvard Law School in 1868; was admitted to the bar in Boston the same year and has been engaged in the practice of his profession in that city ever since. He married Angeline M. Peck, of Arlington, Mass., June 20, 1878, and has one son, John Gaylord Brackett, born April 12, 1879. He was a member of the City Council of Boston four years, and president of that body in 1876; has been a member of the House of Representatives seven years, and at present is its Speaker.

CURTIS DAVIS.

The prosperity of New England is largely indebted to its self-made men, who have continually added to the wholesome wealth of the community by their persistent and unwearying efforts, have been workers, producers, and not mere consumers, obeying the ancient law of our race,—“By the sweat of thy brow shalt thou gain thy bread.” Conspicuous among these, and worthy of mention, is Curtis Davis, the son of Daniel and Mary (Brown) Davis. He was born in the beautiful farming town of Bradford, N. H., February 11, 1814, and was the grandson of Isaac Davis, whose eight children were Betsey, born December 29, 1760; Mollie, born May 31, 1762; James, born February 24, 1764; Daniel, born February 4, 1766; John, born December 24, 1768 (died young); Susan, born January 7, 1770; Sally, born April 17, 1772; and John, born August 14, 1774. Daniel married Mary Brown and had eleven children,—Samuel, born March 19, 1790; Enoch, born August 27, 1791 (died young); Enoch, born January 6, 1793; Doreas, born January 25, 1795; Eliphalet, born December 16, 1796; Lydia, born January 4, 1799; Diamond, born April 25, 1802; Hiram, born February 24, 1807; Lyman, born October 11, 1809; Isaac, born January 18, 1811; and Curtis.

Curtis Davis was the youngest of eleven children, and although his father was a well-to-do farmer, yet with such a large family to support, frugality, economy and industry were essential characteristics for the development of the resources of the farm, and the children were well grounded in the principles which lead to success, and formed those habits of perseverance and diligence that have ever been their prominent traits. In 1832, Curtis left his pleasant home, a poor boy and unacquainted with the ways of the world, his education being that afforded by the common schools of the period; but his courage and determination were strong, and his ambition was to engage in some business and follow it. He went to Cambridgeport, Mass., then comparatively a small place, and engaged for a very moderate compensation with a firm in the soap business, of which his brother

Eliphalet was a partner. He continued in their employ for a short time, and then returned to Bradford, where he remained for a year, and in the fall of 1833 he removed to Cambridgeport and resumed his former position, where he worked faithfully and devoted himself to acquiring the details of the manufacture, with a view to establishing himself on his own account, which he carried into effect in 1834 by purchasing the business of Hiram Davis. This establishment he sold in 1835, when he bought another factory of greater capacity, and, in 1837, took into partnership Alexander Dickinson, with whom he was connected until 1851. Mr. Davis then bought and enlarged the buildings he now occupies, and at present (1885) the entire plant covers about one acre of ground, and is the most noted factory in Cambridge, and, also, the largest one of the kind in New England. In the main building are sixteen kettles or boilers, twelve of which are for the stocking and finishing of soap, and have a holding capacity of over two hundred and fifty tons, and still the increasing demand for their manufacture calls for more space, and an enlargement of the works is in contemplation. The soap manufactured by Mr. Davis is a pure article, and the Peerless, Welcome, Extra and Gold Dust brands are used throughout the country, and their quality and superiority are too well known to need further mention. In 1864, Mr. Davis received into his business, as partner, his son-in-law, James Mellen, who has the superintendence of the sales-rooms in Boston. They avail themselves of all the new ideas, are progressive, and their manufactory is provided with the best and most improved machinery. They honestly aim to make a good article, and consequently, are successful.

Mr. Davis married, November 29, 1835, Martha Kemp, a native of Pomfret, Vt. She was born April 1, 1818. Their five children were Christina Van Ness, born April 15, 1849, married James Mellen, Jr.; Eriolina Frances, died December 25, 1854, aged twelve years; Curtis Rockwell, died February 24, 1876, aged thirty-one years; Mary Lizzie, born December 7, 1846, married Samuel Noyes, Jr.; Edwin Alberto, died July 8, 1851, aged twenty-two months.

Mr. and Mrs. Davis have passed nearly fifty years together, and have experienced many joys and many sorrows; yet amidst them all each has been cheered and encouraged by the sympathy of the other, and now, at the twilight of life, they can look back to duties well performed and forward to the bright beyond.

With all his devotion to business, Mr. Davis has not neglected his civil relations towards the place which has been his home from boyhood. He has kept pace with the growth of Cambridgeport, having been identified with its manufacturing interests for half a century, and is one of the solid men of that city. High-minded and honorable, he possesses the respect and esteem of the citizens. Unassuming and retiring in his manners, he has never sought office, but the office has sought him. His integrity and honesty of purpose have been shown in his methods of business, and as director in the Citizens' Insurance Company, and also in one of the Cambridge banks for several years, he has proved himself qualified for important trusts.

His political affiliations from boyhood have been with the Democratic party, and the Jeffersonian and Jacksonian principles and methods as endorsed and carried out by President Cleveland find in him hearty support. He has been a member of the Common Council, served as alderman for two years and for three terms represented Cambridge in the State Legislature.

Mr. Davis embodies and exemplifies those qualities which distinguish what we call our self-made men. He commenced life with no vices; he was prudent, economical and temperate; business success he preferred to pleasure, and to his work he carried enterprise, energy and will. He was essentially a moving force in his work, and this review of his life is of value to our young men, who can see from what Mr. Davis has achieved what can be accomplished by industry, fidelity and an honest purpose.

In all these years his heart has held a firm grasp of his native town, and the home of his parents has ever been tenderly cherished. He has a pride in its scenery, its associations and in the noticeable men it has produced, and Bradford has never had a native who more loyally prized its worth, or who, in the far-reaching realm of business, has done her greater honor.

HISTORY OF CANTERBURY.

CHAPTER I.

Geographical—Original Grant—Town Privileges—First Settlements—Names of Pioneers—Indian Incursions—Capture of Jackman and Dorset—The Fort—The Volunteers—Indian Trading Post—War of the Revolution—Captain Jeremiah Clough's Company—Captain James Shepherd's Company—Canterbury "Train Band"—"Train Band" and "Alarm List"—Various Enlistments.

THE town of Canterbury lies in the eastern part of the county, and is bounded as follows:

North, by Northfield; east, by Belknap County and Loudon; south, by Loudon and Concord; west, by Boscaawen.

This town was granted, May 20, 1727, to Richard Waldron and a large number of associates, and embraced, in addition to its present territory, the present towns of Loudon and Northfield.

March 19, 1741, an act was passed granting the inhabitants town privileges. The original area of the town was increased, by an addition on the south-west side, June 13, 1765. It retained this area until January 23, 1773, when Loudon was set off, and June 19, 1780, it was still further decreased by the incorporation of the northwesterly part of the town as Northfield, Rockingham County. A small portion of the town was annexed to Concord, June 2, 1784, and a small portion was also annexed to Loudon, January 7, 1853.

Settlements were made here soon after the granting of the town, in 1727; but in consequence of its exposed condition on the frontier, it was slowly settled. Among the early settlers were James Seales, Thomas Clough, Thomas Young, James Gibson, William Glines, Ezekiel Morrill, Samuel Ames, Joseph Symonds, John Moor, Richard Blanchard, Jeremiah Clough, Josiah Miles, Ephraim Clough, Samuel Shepherd and Samuel Sias.

Indian Incursions.—The early settlers of Canterbury were not exempt from Indian depredations. For a long series of years the country was in a constant state of alarm, and various towns, or settlements, and Canterbury among the number, erected garrison-houses, where the whole settlement would gather in time of danger. In 1757 five Indians appeared near the house of Thomas Clough, which they entered, and took from it a small quantity of meal; but their object being to take captives, they concealed themselves behind a log fence. They soon perceived a young lad, named Moses Jackman, a neighbor of Mr. Clough, and Dorset, Mr. Clough's negro man. They gave chase and captured them. They were taken to Canada. After a tedious captivity, Jackman was released in 1761, and returned. The colored man was redeemed for a sum of money paid by Mr. Clough. While returning from captivity he lost both his feet, but was comfortably supported by Mr. Clough till his death, which occurred at an advanced age.

At the time of the capture of these young men Mrs. Clough, also, came near falling into the hands of the Indians. On that same day she went from the garrison to her house to bake and prepare for the return of the family. Going directly to her meal-chest, she discovered traces of Indians. She stepped to the door and called loudly for the boys. She fled to the garrison, screaming as she ran, and gave the alarm. All exertions to recover the captives, however, were in vain.

During another incursion Shepherd and Blanchard, two of the settlers, were surprised a short distance from the garrison-house by a party of seven Indians who rose from behind a log within a few feet of the whites. Both parties fired. Shepherd escaped, but Blanchard was mortally wounded. During the hostilities this garrison-house, or fort, was garrisoned by a company of volunteers and was the headquarters for the various scouting-parties who ranged in search of the enemy beyond the line of settlements. This company was commanded by Captain Jeremiah Clough. There was a trading-post in this town in the early days for traffic with the Indians, and the following, concerning this traffic, was voted by the General Court, in 1743:

¹⁷In the House of Representatives At the 23^d 1743 ¹⁸Resolved That Mr. Forham (born) Jr. A. Mr. Hunking Wentworth be a Committee to Purchase thirty pounds worth of Goods to send up to Canterbury for a Supply to Trade with the Indians which shall be laid out in the following Manner viz^t

for Rum	£ 8
for Blankets	3 15
for Cloth Suitable for Indian Stockings	10 0 for Linnen for Shirts	1 15
	5 0

for Powder Shot Bullets & Amm ^o	1 00
Knives Pipes and Tobacco	2 00
	3 00

"And that the Treasurer pay the Said Sum of thirty pounds to the Said Comtee for the End above said out of the Money that Shall be to the Treasury for Contingents on the first day of February Next, And when said Comtee have paid thereof they Shall Convey the Same to the Town of Canterbury & Deliver it to M^r James Scoble, who is hereby empowered to Sell the Same to the Indians, and to pay the Pay in full as at such Prices as shall be Set by said Comtee, and that the Comtee be Governed in Rating the Goods & Amm^o by the Prices that are Set by the Massachusetts Government and that said James Scoble Render an account of the Sale of all such Sales of the Said Goods as he shall Dispose of to the Indians as aforesaid to the General assembly Some time within Six Months of the Date hereof, and all the Produce of such Goods shall be by him paid & Delivered to the Treasurer, and to be there for the use of the Government as shall be Ordered by the Genl^l ass^y And that said Scoble be under oath for the faithful discharge of his Trust, and to have such Allowance made him for his services as shall be Thought reasonable by the Genl^l ass^y at the Time of his rendering his ac^t of the Sales & in terms of such Goods—

"JAMES JEFFERY, Cler^k ass^y"

War of the Revolution.—The town of Canterbury responded promptly to the colonial cause, and the record of its soldiery during that arduous struggle is an honorable one. In the first two years of the war there were thirty-one from this town in the service. The officers were Captain Jeremiah Clough, Captain James Shepherd, Lieutenant Joseph Soper, Lieutenant Laban Morrill and Dr. Josiah Chase. Most of those from this town were under command of Captain Clough, who "first dared to face the English troops in the vicinity of Boston." Captain Shepherd and his command were in the battles of Bennington and Saratoga.

The whole number of soldiers from this town was about seventy. Of these, one was killed and six died.

The following is the roster of Captain Clough's company, August 1, 1775:

"Jeremiah Clough, Cap^t; Aaron Sanborn, Lieut^l; Thomas Lyford, 2d Lieut^l; Josiah Chase, Sergeant; Samuel Chamberlain, Sergeant; Jonathan Heath, Sergeant; Charles Giddens, Sergeant; Jonathan Thomas, Corp^s; Joseph Clough, Corp^s; Samuel Haynes, Corp^s; Nathan Taylor, Corp^s; Simon Robinson, Drum^r; Thomas Warren, Fifer; David Blanchard, Obediah Clough, Elsha Gale, John Curry, Ebenezer Chandler, Humphrey Colby, Joseph Chandler, Winthrop Clough, Andrew Cummings, Thomas Drake, Shubal Dearborn, Nathan Dearborn, John Dearborn, Elkanah Dearborn, Ebenezer Ledman, Jacob Eaton, Benjamin Eaton, William Forrest, Jonathan Falsow, Robert Forrest, Jonathan Foster, Jeremiah Gibson, Jacob Garland, William Glines, Jnr. Moody Glines, James Gibson, Enosh Glines, John Glines, Daniel Gale, Levi Hunt, Philip Hunt, William Hayes, John Eary, Marston Morrill, Levi Marston, John Peterson, John Robinson, Aaron Rawlins, Daniel Randall, Pearson Smith, Simon Sanborn, James Sherburne, Stephen Riggs, Joseph Smith, George Sheppard, Phineas Stevens, Eli Sumonds, Jonathan Smith, William Thompson, William Taylor, Jacob Tilton, Joshua Weeks, Daniel Ward, Tom Boston, Privates."

Captain Clough was of Canterbury, Lieutenant Sanborn of Sambornton and Lieutenant Lyford of Northfield.

Among other soldiers from this town were Edmund and David Colby, Samuel Danford, Phineas Fletcher, Nathaniel and William Glines, William Rhines, Michael Suttan, Merrill Sheppard and William Walker.

The following is the roll of Captain James Shepherd's company:

"James Shepard, Cap^t; Samuel Davis, 1st Lieut^l; Enosh Gerrish, 2d Lieut^l; John Bean, Ensign; Benjamin Hunkton, Philip Flanders, James Johnson, Jon^s Foster, Robert Wey, Samuel Scribner, Cutting Stevens, Ezekiel Lunt, Stephen Galt, Jeremiah Lastman, Josiah Scribner, Daniel Gale, Nathan Rowe, Stephen Haynes, James Gerry, Moses Cross, Daniel Carter, David Emerson, John Foss, Peter Stevens, William Conner, Timothy Eastman, Thomas Gonsra, Cornelius Bean, Jonathan Stevens, Abraham Prasher, Moses Johnson, Urieud Little, John Jackson, Moses Scoble, John P. Sweet, Abanah T. Sweet, James I. ran, John Robertson, Enosh Bishop, John Lapash, Stephen Bethel, Joseph Farrum, Benj^l Heath, Isaac Fitts, Jehoshiah Danford, Joseph Magoon, Ephraim Davis, John Davis, Ezra Blashd, 2d^l Huntress, Samuel Haynes, Nath^l Gilme, William Forrest, William Knib, William Sumonds, Shubal Dearborne, John Dearborne, Jonathan Smith, Timothy Jones, Jonathan Morrison, Samuel Macross, Thomas Crosby, Ezekiel Danford, Ebenezer Bean, Amos Norton, William Phillips, George Kenfold, John Stevens, Sam^l Cook, John Riant, Silas Fay, Joseph Pearce, Joseph Flanders, Thomas Griffin, John Ross, Elsha Cummings, Benj^l Basford, George Shephard, William Shaw, Moses Rendall, Joshua Boynton, Thomas Bodel, James Russ, Privates."

"CANTEBERY "TRAIN-BAND."

"A List of the Men Names From fifty to Sixteen back, — Gallop Heath, William Gilme, Juner, Jannal Hans, Richard Hans, James Maloney, Golden Bartlet, Richard Ellison, Jonathan Galt, Simon Robinson, Walter Hans, Thomas Gilson, Richard Gilme, William Miles, Obediah Clough, Joseph Clough, Sargent Morrell, Abanah Morrell, Thomas Hoyt, Benjamin Heath, David Foster, Ebenezer Clough, Ephraim Carter, Levi Clough, Henry Clough, Ezekiah young, Daniel Fletcher, Phineas Fletcher, Joseph Sanborn, Jeremiah Ladd, Benjamin Welch, Jonathan Wicher, Edmund Kizer, Benjamin Sanborn, Nathaniel Suttan, Joshua Weeks, William Moore, Juner, Stephen Suttan, Mikel Suttan, Robert Curry, Jonathan West, John West, Benjamin Blanchard, Jonathan Blanchard, Joel Blanchard, Nathaniel Moore, John Moore, Juner, Elkanah Colby, Jeremiah Danford, Stephen Hans, John Forrest, Juner, Ezekiel Worthen, Daniel Randall, David Ames, Abner Hoyt, Benjamin Simon, James Towle, Jesse Stevens, Samuel Clough, Asa Foster, Benjamin Johnson, Jonathan Foster, Barnat Stris, John Bean, Humprey Colbey, William Forrest the 1, Joseph Woolman, Samuel Moore, Simon Stevens, William Simon, John Glines, John Foss, Samuel Gerrish, Nathaniel Glines, Robert Foss, Aaron Sargent, Simon Sanborn."

"Total 76—In Number in the Second Company in Colonel Stickney Regiment Taken by us, James Shepard, Cap^t Laban Morrill, Lvt James Glines, Lvt Jeremiah Hackett, Fir."

"The Number of Guns in the Second Company is 26 in Number."

"CANTEBERY "TRAIN-BAND" AND "ARMY LIST."

"The following being a return of the train band as by Command in Canterbury: Lieut^l, Thomas Gilmon, Ebenezer Kimball; Ensign, William Sanborn; Sergeants, Richard Blanchard, Jacob Heath, David Norris, Will^l Perkins; Corpor^s, Jesse Cross, Nath^l Serlson, Gideon Boyer, Joseph Carr; Fifer, Joseph Hancock; Privates, Thomas Cross, John Cross, George Hancock, Benjamin Collins, Thomas Clough, William Kinestone, David Kinestone, John Berlog, Shubal Berlog, William Glines, Wilham Dial, Peter Hurdbold, David Morrison, Nathaniel Wicher, John in Daniel, Jeremiah Daniel, Abner miles, Samuel miles, James Sayer, Nathaniel Parkens, James Blanchard, James Parkens, David Blanchard, Jonathan Woddy, William Kenestone, James Simon, Abanah Berlog, Thomas Cross, Jonathan Sanborn, Ezekiel Gilmon, Obediah Davis, William Hancock."

"Army List Ames.—William Glines, Benjamin Blanchard, Lieut Charles Gilder, Lieut Jonathan Heath, Shubal Berlog, East Archelaus miles, John Cross, Gideon Levit."

"A True Return. For Me, EDWARD BLANCHARD, Captain."

ENLISTMENTS, 1776.

"CANTEBERY, September 5th 1776.

"We the Subscribers do hereby Engage our selves in the Continental Service, and forthwith to March to New York and join the Continental Army there and Continue therein until the first day of December Next unless sooner Discharged."

"As Witness our hands—

— Samuel Gerrish,	Joshua Weeks,
William element,	Nathanabel pillet,
Henry Clough,	Israel Glines,"
Sergeant Morill,

"A Return of the Names of the Continental Soldiers, Enlisted for the Town of Canterbury in the State of New Hampshire for the Term of Three Years or During the War—

- " John Holden, of Canterbury (The Capt. Unknown) 1
- " Elkins Moore (Capt. Robberson) 1
- " Parson Eastman 1
- " George Shepard (in Capt. Stone's Company) 1
- " Robert Hastings 1
- " James Hastings 1
- " Nicholas Hill 1
- " John Rowing (in Capt. Gray's Company) 1
- " Andrew Rowing 1
- " Amer Fowler 1
- " Thomas Hout (in Capt. Lavermore's Company) 1
- " Walter Harris (in Capt. Frye's Company) 1
- " Prince Thompson 1
- " Ebenezer Varnum of Conway (in Capt. Lavermore's Company) 1
- " Pratt Chase, of Concord 1
- " Loyd Jones 1
- " William Walker (in Capt. Frye's Company) 1
- " Aaron Hale, of Rosewren (the Captain Unknown) 1
- " John Mills, of Nottingham 1

" NATH GRIGGS, CAPT. FRYE, Comd. Continental Soldiers.
" SAMUEL DANFORD, Rosewren Detach."

"CANTERBURY, July the 25, 1777.

"Presenting to the precinct from the Honorable Thomas Stark Key Esq We do hereby make a true Return of the Above Mentioned Soldiers they being Enlisted for the Town of Canterbury and State of New Hampshire—

" JAMES SHEPARD, 1 Captain.
" EDWARD FRANCHARD, 1

"CANTERBURY, July 4th, 1780.

"We the subscribers hereby acknowledge to have voluntarily enlisted to serve the United States of America for three Months from the time we shall Join the Army of the 1st United States at the place appointed for Rendezvous by the Commander in Chief of said Army.

"Witness our Hands—

- " WILLIAM FOSTER
- " EZEKIEL MOORE
- " ASA FOSTER
- his
- " DANIEL FOSTER
- mark
- his
- " EUBANK MOORE
- mark
- " MOSES DAVIS."

"CANTERBURY, 20th July, 1781.

"We whose Names are underwritten hereby acknowledge to have voluntarily enlisted to serve as Militia in the Continental Army for the term of three Months from the time of our joining said Army On the encouragement given by the Town of Canterbury at a Muster for the purpose of raising 8th Men. And engage to equip and march whenever we shall receive orders

- his
- " SAMSON DAVIS
- mark
- " OBADIAH CLERY
- " PETER BLANCHARD
- " JOHN SUTTON."

CHAPTER II.

CANTERBURY—(Continued).

Town-House—Vote for Organization of London Parish—Petition for Same—Town Meeting of 1773—Officers Elected—Various Resolutions, &c. — Northfield Incorporated—Petition to be annexed to Hillsborough County—Ratable Polls in 1787—Educational Interests—Physicians—Longevity—Population

The Town-House.—As the history of the Canterbury town-house is a record of the historic first meeting-house, it is deemed advisable to treat it in detail. The following sketch of this historic building is from the pen of Miss Mary E. Clough, being an able address delivered by her at the dedication of the present town-house, in 1881:

"Assembled as we are to-night for the first time in our new and comfortable hall, it seems fitting to say our good bye and pay a passing tribute of respect to the old. Our present building is to all appearance a new one, and yet we need look back only a few months to be reminded that it has a history. We trust that it will not be without interest and profit to tell its story, as we find it in the records of the past. Five hundred dollars were appropriated for the present repairs; we will learn, as well as we are able, what its previous cost has been. No building in town—perhaps none in the State—has known such vicissitudes, none has served such various uses. The younger portion of the audience may not know that it was originally a barn, and that the same frame has withstood wind and water for nearly one hundred and thirty years. Still its timbers are sound and strong. It has been said of the builders of St. Peter's Church at Rome,—"They builded better than they knew," with equal truth may it be said of the framers of this building.

"As early as 1741 we find that an appropriation was made for the building of a fort and meeting-house in Canterbury, but no further action seems to have been taken until 1750. At a meeting of the proprietors of the town, held August 24, at the house of Captain Jeremiah Clough,—"I think of a modern town without a town-house, of a nineteenth century town-meeting in a dwelling house"—it was agreed that a vote passed September 21, 1745, about building a meeting-house for the public worship of God in said Canterbury, the prosecution of which was hindered by the late war referring to the war known in history as King George's War), be confirmed and the dimensions fixed. "Voted that said meeting-house be raised, the outside finished, the windows made and glazed and a lower floor laid at or before the last day of September, in the year 1751. The house shall be forty-five feet in length by thirty-five in breadth." Present measurements show that it preserves the same proportions. A committee was also appointed to prosecute the affairs of building.

"The work seemed to go on slowly. This is not surprising when we consider the difficulties of the undertaking. There was land to till to furnish subsistence, houses to be built to shelter themselves and their families, hostile Indians to watch and fight, the timbers and boards to hew and finish without the aid of modern tools and machinery. We are told that some of the heavy braces were brought on men's shoulders from Newswamp in what is now the burying-ground, Colonel Clough's great-grandfather being one of the men who aided in this work. The records of a meeting, August 9, 1756, show how far the work had gone at this time. "At a meeting of the proprietors, freeholders and inhabitants of Canterbury, held this day at the meeting-house, voted that James Lund sey, Thomas Clough (great-grandfather of one of your present committee) and John Gibson, be a committee to receive the meeting-house in behalf of the proprietors, as far as said meeting-house is done, viz. The outside finished and the under floor laid double."

"We judge that some of the blood of these remote ancestors flows in the veins of the present generation, for in the records of the first meeting held in the house 17 3, is the following. "Voted that three men be chosen to call the committee who built the meeting house to an account to see what they have done with the money."

"An ingenious plan was resorted to for the inside finishing. The pew ground, as it was termed, of which there were eighteen lots, was sold at public vendue. Each purchaser, must, within two years, build his pew in a handsome and workman-like manner. Failing to do this he forfeited his pew-ground, or if he neglected to pay the price of the ground at the specified time, it became again the property of the proprietors.

The house was ready for occupancy in the autumn of 1756, for the records give, under date of August 9, the following:

"The committee to receive the meeting-house, having first viewed and found it finished according to a vote of said proprietors, at said Canterbury, the 21st of September, 1756, have this day received the same for the use of the proprietors and inhabitants of said Canterbury,

- " SAMUEL,
 - " JAMES JANESBY,
 - " THOMAS CLOUGH,
 - " JOHN GIBSON,
- Committee."

"The house as thus finished seems to have served the double purpose of church and town house, without change, up to the year 1788, at which time the matter of repairing or building new was brought up. We will say, in passing, that this was not the first meeting-house in town, the carshed one, built in 1741, stood on the hill beyond where John P. Kimball now lives, was made of logs and was doubtless a triple affair.

"The second and third articles in the town-meeting warrant of February 1, 1789, are to see that the inhabitants will take any measures for repairing the meeting-house and if so how much they will do towards repairing and mending it, and if not, see if they will take it down and build a new one. At the meeting called by this warrant it was voted to raise money for repairing, also to move it across the road northerly, provided it be done by subscription.

"The original site was within the present limits of the burying ground. Also voted 'to shingle and clapboard the fire-side of the meeting-house, and clapboard the west end and repair the east end and by the gallery floor and put rails on the breast of the galleries and put pillars under the gallery girdles.'

"The work does not appear to have been effected at this time, for again, on February 26, 1789, a special town-meeting was called for the same purpose. At said meeting it was voted 'that this meeting-house be removed on the north side of the road, back of the meeting-house' (near where the watering-trough stands), also voted 'to choose five committee-men to make an estimate of repairing this meeting-house, and how much the pew-holders shall pay towards it.' At an adjourned meeting it was voted that Benjamin Blinn had should clapboard and shingle the fire-side of the meeting-house for thirty-four dollars worth of neat stock, and at the same time a committee was appointed 'to see that this meeting-house, on the outside of, be done workman-like.' During the present repairs a standing committee of the whole, self-appointed, seems to have had this matter in charge.

"In June of the same year money that came from the sale of pew-ground not before disposed of, and from the sale of several pews, was voted to the making of two porches, one at each end. Again, the 22d day of the same month, eighteen pounds was voted for repairs. This seems to have ended the struggle, and the then old house was not disturbed again by the sound of axe and hammer for over thirty years.

"Many events of interest occurred in the town in the half century beginning 1775, but it is not our province to chronicle them. It should be remembered that the first school-house was built in 1781. The boys may be interested to know that at the time of which we have just been speaking, 1785-89, a bounty of six dollars was given, not for the noisy crew, nor for the indolent woodchuck, but for the hungry wolf.

"And so the old house, with its two porches, its galleries, its high pulpit and sounding-board and its large, square, pen-kirk pews, stood undisturbed, defying the storms of thirty winters. To its devout worshippers made their weekly pilgrimages, and in it the stony town-meetings were annually held. The first twenty years of Father Patrick's Sabbath ministry was in this house, as we have last described it. The school children may not know that Mr. Patrick was great-grandfather of the Cady boys.

"There came a time, about the year 1823, when the building was thought to be unfit for a place of religious worship, and with good reason, as we shall see. We are told by one now living that the frame had settled so much that on one side an open space of six inches was left between roof and walls, where the winter winds and storms could sweep in at will; there were no stoves, and, indeed, there was no way of warming the building; the windows were old and loose, and many cracks and seams in the sides and about the doors admitted more fresh air than was necessary for the good ventilation. What wonder that the worshippers sang

"... Kindle a flame —
In these cold hearts of ours."

"At this time the house stood about three rods south from the lurch, and not long after it was moved back to its present position, into a frog-pool as the old people say, — the Osgoodites' sing, and as none of the present generation can doubt.

"But we will go to the records. In the year 1823 the voters of the town were called upon to decide whether it should be again fitted up for a meeting-house and town-house, or whether a modern church should be built, and this used for town purposes. As many different parties expected then as there have been in the present contest, and as many town-meetings were held, this much was speedily settled,—that it was not expedient to repair the old meeting-house for a place of religious worship, and it was decided to build a new. But what to do with the building in order to fit it for town purposes called out project after project, and special meeting upon special meeting. The more conservative ones said, spare it, the radicals beat it down. The matter was pending for several years before anything definite was accomplished. At the March meeting of 1825, March 28th an article in the warrant proposed 'to see if the town will vote to build a town-house and adopt measures to carry the same into effect.' Later on 'a committee' was appointed to confer with pew-holders and see on what terms they will relinquish their right as pew-holders.' March 26th, the same year, it was voted that 'the town-house be located within thirty rods of the old meeting-house, that the old meeting-house be cut down to one story, moved and finished for a town-house, on condition that Mr. Greenough, (Richard Greenough),—'After the timber necessary for siling and drawing said house shall be provided by the town, and also after the lower part of said house shall be cleared out by the town—shall cut said house down to one story, new sill, if necessary, and move it to the place where the committee shall direct at his own expense, which condition has been made by said Greenough.' Also voted 'that a committee of seven be raised to locate the house.

And so it would seem if the matter was pretty nearly adjusted. But not so, a petition of thirty or more of legal voters called for a special meeting the 18th of the following April, to reconsider the vote of March 26th, also to see if the town will vote to locate a town-house on the hill west of John Sutton's (where Moses Emery now lives); to see if they will sell the old west meeting-house (the same house), and appropriate the avails for this purpose; to see how much money the town will vote in addition to the two hundred already raised. Another article in the warrant calls for a house in the easterly part of the town,—this to serve as church and town-house. And so the war of words went on. When doct'ors disagree, who shall decide? When voters disagree, a majority usually decides. But not so, said these men. At a meeting of April 18, 1825, it was voted that 'the town clerk go himself, or send some person, to the selectmen of Warner, requesting them to come to this town as a committee to locate a town-house, and their decision shall be final, all parties having the privilege of being heard by the committee;' that 'the committee request those who are engaged in repairing the old meeting-house to suspend their work until the committee to locate shall report.' We do not learn that the town clerk ever attended to this duty or that the Warner men ever came.

"The matter of locating on the hill, near Mr. Sutton's, was called up once after this, but was dismissed, and several other projects shared the same fate. We concluded that the work of reconstructing was going on at the time it was thought necessary to call in the Warner men; for, as you noted, those engaged in repairing were requested to suspend till the committee should report. We judge that after this, Mr. Greenough went on undisturbed in his work. The last mention we find of the matter is March 14, 1827, when it was voted to discharge the committee appointed to settle with the pew-holders.

"And now Canterbury was for the first time a town-house. In the earliest history, 1727-56, the town-meetings were held in the meeting-house at Oyster River Falls and Durham Falls (probably the same, as Oyster River flowed through the town of Durham), or in private dwellings. The first held in Canterbury was at the house of Captain Joseph Chough near Mr. Pillsbury's, August 2, 1759, from 1756 to 1825, in this building, which, in the town records, was at different times designated as the meeting-house, the south meeting-house and the west meeting-house.

"It may have appeared to the young people that religions and secular affairs were in these early times strangely mixed; and so they were, in one sense. The town officers managed the affairs of the church, hired the ministers and levied a tax for their support. Robert Cutler, the first minister who preached in this house, 1756, was paid three hundred pounds in bills of credit (a pound was equivalent to twenty-five cents), three hundred pounds in provisions and had his cows pastured and his wood hauled. In 1769, Rev. Abel Foster's salary was seven hundred pounds (six pounds to the dollar), the use of the parsonage and thirty cords of fire-wood. Mr. Prince, in 1789, had six bushels of Indian corn a Sunday.

"The varied history of our old building for the last sixty years, save that relating to town-meetings, no scribe has written, though much of it is fresh in the memory of our older inhabitants. It was often used as a church, for its crowd embraced all faiths. When the new church was closed against preachers of other denominations than its own (not the Christianity of our ancestors was of the Puritan type) the town-house swung wide its doors to welcome them. It called no one heretic, no one fanatic. It drew away many hearers from the new church and often the larger congregation assembled there.

"While the present school-house was in course of building, it accommodated our school. The teacher in the quaint, old-fashioned desk and the long rows of bright faces looking out from behind the rule and unquipped benches was indeed a picture-spight for modern days. The selectmen's office was a convenient salinary, where the youthful culprit were put to save out their sentence of an added line in spelling of a double-mathematic lesson, for these were not the days of the rod and rule.

"To teacher or to preacher, to school or to meeting, has our venerable building never been known to shut its door. It has been a sort of omnivorous creature, taking in whatever could or could not find a place elsewhere.

"But the annual town-fair, for the first four or five years, a real gala-day for the old house. Here were displayed the best products of farm and garden, of dairy and kitchen, traces of well-ripened corn, specimens of the blacksmith's skill, home-made carpets, rugs of various designs and workmanship, and quilts in various patterns covered the dingy walls; apples, large and rosy cheeked, grapes in rich clusters, juicy pears-tomatoes, smooth and shining, and peaches in their woolly dress graced the fruit-tables; large yellow pumpkins sat on the front seats blankly smiling at the passers by; huge cabbage-heads suggested a great amount of fragrance if not of brains; argus-eyed potatoes took their places on the back seats, looking around complacently on the whole scene; boys and their cousins, the orange-carrots, occupied conspicuous places; near by were the cereals, modest and quiet, but not less important. On the opposite side the cooks were wont to place specimens of their bread, unrivalled in whiteness and sponginess; the dairy women put their rich cheeses and butter,—sometimes suspiciously golden. In an obscure corner were found the products of the sugar-orchard and cane of fruit, tempting, but, alas! sealed. One corner was always reserved for the irrepressible sewing-machine man.

"But these good old days are forever passed, and we now come to a new period in the story.

"Our youthful students of history may form a truer idea of its age and hold in greater respect clean walls and fresh paint if we glance briefly at the events that have taken place in our nation since its heavy timbers were first laid. I have said nation, but you will observe that we were British subjects for the first twenty years of its existence. It was a youthful spectator in the French and Indian War. It silently witnessed the uprising when the odious Stamp Act was passed, and the tax laid on tea and glass, and it saw several brave men from the sparsely-settled town leave their homes and families to fight the Revolutionary battles. It was past the age for doing military service when the War of 1812 took other strong men to the defense of national rights. Again, in 1861, when our nation was startled by the report of bloodshed at Fort Sumter, it was worn and old, and it could only stand as a mute witness while one draft of men was made after another, until it saw about one hundred and forty of our gallant sons go forth to quell the civil strife. It has taken part in twenty-seven exciting Presidential campaigns. It stood here in silent wonder while all the world talked of the first locomotive and steamboat, of the telegraph, the ocean cable and the telephone.

"History repeats itself, and human nature will be human nature to the end of all time; so in our town-house story, there came another year, 1823, when some thought the house needed repairing again, and the following year there began a war, which, in the to-be-written history of Canterbury, may be known as the third town-house war. The active brains of active men set to work devising the best plan for getting a substantial house. These timbers were examined and found firm and sound,—good for another half century,—so, as twice before, the old frame was spared.

"Now for the repairs. One party would have the outside made rain-proof and the inside remain intact; a second thought it better to renew both outside and inside, letting the building stand on the same foundation; some would raise it a few feet, others would move it forward on a line with the church; the party that prevailed (George P. Morrill originating the plan) would raise it enough to admit of horse-sheds underneath, and put the whole building in good condition.

"The work is done, and all now seem inclined to adopt the spirit of the proverb, 'All's well that ends well,' and so amiable and sensible a way have our people of submitting to the inevitable that the current of good-will seems now to flow on as smoothly as if nothing had ever disturbed its course.

"A good word for our new building will not, we trust, be thought out of place here. You remember how the early chroniclers used to ride on horseback from town to town and snatch history as it was making and write it down while it was yet in the heat of action and taking shape before their eyes. It would have been indeed a cheerful task in this way to have watched the progress of the work, but, unfortunately, we had no saddle-horse, and home duties prevented us from acting on the before-committee, so our opportunity to view the building came last week, when we took an hour from the study of musty record-books for this purpose.

"We were first shown to the basement. Here the foundation appears firm and solid enough to resist the effects of rain and frost and March meeting shocks for another fifty years, the space underneath will furnish a warm and convenient shelter for horses through the long months of our bleak winters. (We will honorably except such weather as the Thursday evening furnished.) It is raised enough to entitle it to the respect of its neighbors, and yet it is not inconveniently high; the stone and projecting eaves give it a modern appearance. The double door and wide stairway will prevent a crowd when our audience are coming in or going out.

"But the inside, how changed! Transformed as it by magic! Have you ever read of the Turkish sultan who dipped his head into a tub of water at the direction of a miracle-working doctor and found himself in a strange land by the sea, where he married a wife, had seven sons and seven daughters, lived through years of vicissitudes, and at last, plunging into the sea to bathe, found himself by his own tub again, and was told that only a moment of time had passed? Such is the marvel wrought for us. We are glad that we can look out to night upon familiar faces, to assure ourselves that we are still residents of our good old town. The few unshaken beams remain, suggesting strength and at the same time serving as a bond to connect the past with the present, the old with the new.

"But now we are done with history and with the past; for this evening our time-honored town-house enters on a new career. Nothing about it reminds us of the worn and blackened shingles and clapboards, the high, old-fashioned windows, the antique benches and the smoky walls and ceiling. Let us hope that with these things will be left what ever disfigure or mar or dishonour the manhood and womanhood of the present and coming generations.

"Many who have been to us in this work have boiled up the eastern slope, the meridian sun has shone on them and now they are fast descending the westward side of life. The young men are coming to the front.

"Would that it were in the power of pen and voice to speak to night words that should be hoard and re-echoed down the years. They would urge you to copy only the virtues of the men whose work we have been reviewing. They would entreat you to form correct ideas of truth, of honor, of honesty, of temperance, of morality and of religion. They would ask you, with all earnestness, to banish from political contests bribery and everything dishonest and dishonorable. They would beg you to regard the motto, so lately chosen, 'Peace be within thy walls,' as a prophecy of a new and better day, for the fulfillment of which you are individually responsible. They would encourage you to seek the highest type of manliness.

"Would that it were ours to-night to dedicate these walls to pure political sentiment and action, to liberty of speech, to innocent amusements, to social intercourse (divested of insensivity and falsehood), to high intellectual culture, to whatever is pure and noble and good and true; and, if ever the home goes back to its primitive use, to the true and reverent worship of God!"

The first move for the dismemberment of the old town was the following vote in 1722:

"At a Regular Town Meeting held at the Meeting House in Canterbury on Monday ye 26th day of October 1722.—Then Agreeable to the fourth article in the above Warrant—

"Resolved that the Southeasterly end of the Town of Canterbury be Set off as a distinct Parish, beginning at the corner of the Town, at the buckshorn beach tree, then running South-west across the Easterly end of said Town to that corner bound—then North-west upon the line between Canterbury and Row, five Miles—then North-east to Gilmantown Line—then southeast to the first bounds mentioned.

"A True Copy taken from Canterbury Town Records

"Per Me. AGNES HEAVES Mount Town Clerk

"Canterbury December ye 26th 1722."

The following is the petition for the parish:

"To his Excellency John Wentworth Esq Governor and Commander in chief in and over his Majesty's Province of New Hampshire The Honorable his Majesty's Council and House of Representatives in General Assembly convened the 26th day of January, 1723.

"The Petition of the Subscribers Inhabitants of the North East part of Canterbury in said Province humbly sheweth

"That your Petitioners live at the distance of ten and twelve Miles (as the Roads now go) from the Meeting House in said Town that the Roads are very bad and therefore they can't without great difficulty attend the public worship of God there nor any public affairs of the Town for which reason they have petitioned the said Town for their leave to be set off into a distinct parish in consequence of which the said Town have voted at public Town meeting as follows viz: "Voted that the South Easterly end of the Town of Canterbury be set off as a distinct parish beginning at the corner of the Town at the Back-shore Beach Tree then running South-east across the Easterly end of said Town to that corner Bound then North-west upon the Line between Canterbury and Ben. five Miles then North East to Gilman's Line then South East to the first Bounds Wherefore your Petitioners humbly pray that your Excellency and Honors would give your Petitioners liberty to bring in a Bill for erecting a distinct Parish with the Privileges of other Parishes in the Province within the Limits aforesaid And your Petitioners as a duty bound shall ever pray &c.

"John Dandoth, Daniel Bacheider, Ezekiel Morrill, Junr, Marston Morrill, Eliphulet Rollins, Nathl Bacheider, Samuel Dandoth, Henry Moulton, Jethro Bacheider, Samuel Morrill, Isaac Morrill, Moses Arden, Moses Arden, Junr, George Barnes, Dudley Swanzy, Amasa Dow, Samuel Dow, Samuel Lock, Joseph McGowan, Jacob Towle, Enoch French, Solomon Sias, Benjamin Sias, William Davis, William Boynton, Charles Sias, John Gimes, Jethro Bacheider, Junr, Samuel Rogers, Abraham Bacheider, Abraham Bacheider, Junr, John Sanborn, Philip Jenkins, Samuel Sargent, Jonah Gimes, Samuel Carter, Jonathan Smith, John Smith, Samuel French, Gershom Mathes, Stephen Perkins, Nathan Bacheider, Jonathan Clough, Joseph Tilton, John Drew, Abel French, Thomas Drake, Thomas Swett."

"To the Honourable his Majestys Council and House of Representatives in General Assembly

"Whereas we the Subscribers have been notify'd according to your Honors Directions we therefore shew no Cause why the South Easterly End of Canterbury should not be set off as a Distinct Parish according to the Petition Laid before your Honors for that purpose—

"JOHN HOVE,
"WILLIAM ELLISON, } Selectmen for "JONATHAN CLOUGH, } Canterbury.

"Canterbury, Jan. 29th, 1773."

The parish was set off by an act of the General Assembly, passed January 23, 1773, and erected into a parish by the name of London.

Town Meeting in 1773.

"At a Meeting of the Proprietors of Canterbury Held at the Meeting house in s^d Canterbury on Day of may 1773

"Mr Ezekiel Morrill chosen Moderator for s^d Meeting David Forster Chosen Clerk to s^d Proprietors—

"Voted To Chuse a Committee to Search the Proprietors Books of Records to See if there be any omission or Mistakes in them & to Collect any Papers Relative to s^d Proprietors that ought to be recorded & to get them Recorded & to make Report to s^d Proprietors & that the s^d Committee apply to the General Court if it shall be found Necessary for Power to Record any of s^d Proprietors Papers which have heretofore been neglected—

"Voted Col^o John Gage Archelus Moore & Mr Asa Forster Committee for that purpose—

"Voted Jeremiah Clough Esq^r Cap John Gage & Mr Asa Forster to be a Committee to Settle accounts with any person or Persons who have Transacted any business for s^d Proprietors which have not yet been Settled with—

"The meeting adjourned to Second wednesday in June Next at one o'clock afternoon—

"At a meeting of the Proprietors of Canterbury held by adjournment at the meeting house in s^d Canterbury on wednesday 9th of June the following Votes were pass'd—

"Voted that John Gage Junr Esq^r be Chosen a Committee man in the Room of his hon^o Father Cap John Gage who is unable to attend the business for which he was Chosen.

"Voted that melchus moon Esq^r Mr Asa Forster & David Forster be a Committee to Call Proprietors meetings for the future—

"Voted that Meeting of s^d Proprietors Shall be Called upon Application Sixteen of s^d Proprietors—

"Voted that a Warrant for s^d meeting Shall be Published in the New Hampshire Gazette & also at the Meeting house in s^d Canterbury—

"Voted to Raise four Shilling on each original Right to Defray the Charges of the above mentioned articles into Execution—

"Voted that the Committee for Calling meetings be also a Committee to Raise the above mentioned Rate—

"Voted that Mr Ephraim Clough is a Collector to Gather the above mentioned Rate—

"Voted to give the Collector six Shillings on the hundred for Collecting s^d Rate—

"The meeting adjourned to the 19th of August next two o'clock afternoon at the meeting in s^d Canterbury on the 6th Day of August the Proprietors by s^d met at the meeting house according to adjournment & adjourned to the Twenty fifth Day of August s o'clock the forenoon at the meeting house in s^d Canterbury—

"On the 23rd of August the Proprietors met according to adjournment & Voted that the meeting of s^d Proprietors be further adjourned to the first wednesday in October next at one o'clock afternoon—on the SIXTH Day of October instant the Proprietors of Canterbury met according to adjournment & Voted as follows Viz.

"Voted to Except their Book of Records as they now stand & Continue & Establish all Entries thereon made by the Committee appointed for that purpose—

"The meeting adjourned to the first wednesday of January Next ten o'clock in the afternoon

"On the fifth day of January the Proprietors afores^d met according to adjournment & Voted as followeth

"Voted that the Rev^d Abel Forster be a committee man or agent to Present a Petition to the General Court & to lay their Proprietors Books before s^d Court in order to get the Same Established—

"The meeting adjourned to the first wednesday of April Next at one o'clock afternoon

"A True Copy Test DAVID FORSTER Prop^r Cl^k."

Power of Attorney granted to John Meloy.

"Whereas an advertisement has appeared in the New Hampshire Gazette of the 29th of July 1773 N-tifying the Proprietors of Canterbury to meet at the Meeting House in said Canterbury on the 23rd of august next and among other things to See if the Proprietors will vote to procure a Writ of Review in the Action originally brought by Richard Meloy of the County of Clare in the Kingdom of Ireland against George Kezer of Hampstead in the County of Rockingham for Two Forty Acre Lots in Said Canterbury and (if voted then) to vote how they will raise Money for that Purpose. The Subscribers being Proprietors and owners of as many Rights of Land in Said Canterbury as set against our Respective names, having Considered the above mentioned Notification and think the Same if voted will be prejudicial to the Interest of the Proprietors, And not being able to attend said meeting personally, Therefore we do appoint John Meloy of Canterbury aforesaid yeoman to be our Lawful Attorney in our Behalf & stand to attend Said Meeting, and there to vote according to our Interest (in the same manner as if we were personally present) against the proprietors undertaking to Present said Review or raising any money for that purpose or being anyways concern'd therein. In witness whereof we have hereunto Set our hands & Seals August the 30th and in the Thirtieth year of his Majestys Right George the third King of Great Britain France & Ireland Annosque Dominii one thousand seven hundred & Seventy three—

"Witness for John Warner Esq ^r	No rights
Chas. E. Warner	James Davis 1
No rights	Samuel Davis 1 ^o

The Davis 1	Sarah Hicks 1
Seth Jacobs for Nathl Loney 1	Joseph Hicks 1 ^o Rights right	John Woodman 2 ¹ / ₂ Rts
Sam ^l Emerson 1 right	Jonathan Woodman 1 ¹ / ₂ rights
Ephraim Davis 1 right	Smith Emerson 1 right
Geo: Jeffrey 1 right	Simon Rendell one Rlt & a half
H Wentworth 2 Rights	Ben Jones three Rights
Jonathan Warner 2 Rights	W ^m Jenkins one Rlt
John Penthalow 2 Rights	Rich ^d Jenness one Right
E Russell two Rights	Robert Leathers 1 Right
Peter Gilman 1 right	Joseph Stevens 1 Right
W ^m Appleton 1 right

"Province of August y^e 10th 1773 Then Jane Davis Sam^l Davis Thom New Hampshire Davis Seth Jacobs Sam^l Emerson Ephraim Davis Wad- Stratford ss dow Sarah Hicks & Joseph Hicks all above and Within Subscribed Personally Appeared Before me the Subscriber and Acknowledged the Within Written Instrument to be their free act and deed

"Saml. EMERSON Just peace

"Province of August 10th 1773 Then John Woodman, Jonathan New Hampshire Woodman, Smith Emerson, Simon Rendell, Benjamin Stratford ss Jones, and William Jenkins acknowledged the above and within Instrument to be their free act and deed

"Before ENEKEER THOMPSON Jus Peace

"Province of New Hamp^t } Then George Jeffrey, Hunking Wentworth, Eleazer Rockingham ss } Russell Esq, and John Penhallow Personally appeared before me and acknowledged the above and within Instrument to be their voluntary act and Deed—

"before me DANIEL ROGERS Jus^t Peace—

"Aug^t 12th 1773

"Then Jonathan Warner and Peter Gilman Esq and Wm Appleton personally appeared before me and acknowledged the within Instrument by them Subscribed to be their free act & Deed

"DANIEL ROGERS Jus^t Peace—

"Province of)

New Hamp^t)

Aug^t 20th 1773 Then Richard Jones and Robert Leathers appeared before me and acknowledged their Instrument to be their free act and Deed

"JOSEPH ATKINSON Jus^t Peace—

"Province of)

New Hamp^t)

Stratford ss } August the 21st 1773 Then nat Joseph Stevens personally appeared & acknowledged the foregoing Instrument to be his act and Deed

"before me JAS^t SULLIVAN Jus^t Peace—

Proceedings of Town-Meeting, 1774.

"On the Twenty fifth day of August instant the Proprietors of Canterbury being Legally Warned Met at ye meeting house in Said Town and Pas^d the following Votes Viz—

"Voted That John Gage Esq be Moderator for sd^o meeting

"Voted To Prosecute a writ of Review in the Action originally Brought by Rich^d Meloy of the County of Clare in the Kingdom of Ireland against George Kexzer of Hampstead in the County of Rockingham for Two forty acre Lots in Canterbury So far as SIXTY Dollars will go—

"Voted To Raise Sixty Dollars Toward Defraying Charges of the above Lawsuit—

"Voted that John Gage Esq be a Committee man or agent to Prosecute the above said action & to take Care of the above sd^o money—

"Voted That John Gage Esq have said Money and the Proprietors pay him the Interest for the same till it can be Rais^d—Then the Meeting adjourned to Wednesday the Sixth Day of October Next two o'clock afternoon—

"The Same Day John Meloy Objected to the foregoing Proceedings in Behalf of himself and a number of Proprietors absent as Hezad—

"Canterbury August ye 25th 1773

"A True Copy

"before me DAVID FORSTER Prop^r Clerk—

"On the Sixth Day of October the Proprietors after sd^o Meet at the meeting house aforesaid according to adjournment and Voted as followeth Viz.

"Voted that Lot No 5 in the forty acre Lots shall be Returned to Daniel Davis for his first Division Lot—

"Voted To Establish & Confirm the Transactions of former Votes and former Committees Except those Employed in Chester-Lawsuit—

"Voted That Ephraim Cough be a Collector to gather the above Rates—

"Canterbury October ye 6th 1773—

"A true Copy P^r me

"DAVID FORSTER Prop^r Clerk—

Report of Committee Relating to Line between Canterbury and Chester, 1775.

"The return of the division Line between Canterbury old Town & a Parish proposed to be set off at the North west part of sd^o Town, run by the Subscribers a Committee chosen for that purpose.—Beginning at a Beech Tree standing by the southeast corner bound of a hundred acre Lot in the second hundred acre division laid out to Joseph Denton numbered forty two; running south seventy seven degrees west, to a White Pine spotted standing by the turn of the River above British-Ferry—

"Canterbury June 24th 1775

"JOSEPH MILES
"EDWARD BLANCHARD
"ABRAHAM MILES
"DAVID FORSTER
} Committee

"A true Copy attest

"ARCHELAUS MOOR Town Clerk—

Abstract of Abner Miles' Petition, Soldier, 1778.— In a petition dated November 2, 1778, Abner Miles, of Canterbury, yeoman, states that he "Turned out as a Volunteer in the service of his Country on the Expedition to Rhode Island under the command of Capt. Benjⁿ Sias & served there until the Company Came off the Island;" was taken sick and confined at the house of Joseph Goffe, at Rehoboth, and remained there until September 24, 1778. He asks that the bill of said Goffe, amounting to £39 14s. lawful money, and the bill of Dr. Joseph Bridgeman of £9 6s., may be paid by the State, and the said bills—be allowed by the committee on sick and wounded soldiers. Miles also states that he lost a horse valued at two hundred and fifty dollars in the service at Rhode Island, and Captain Sias certifies to said loss; and Miles introduces the following to prove the value thereof, which was sworn to before Archelaus Moore:

"CANTERBURY March ye 26th 1778

"We Jeremiah Hackett and Obadiah Cough both of Canterbury being appointed by the select men of said Canterbury, to appraise a Horse which Abner Miles of said Town rode to Rhode Island and Lost Last August when he went a Volunteer in Capt^s Sias's company under Col^l Moses Nichols in Genl Whipple's Brigade—We therefore agreeable to the trust deposited in us do truly honestly and impartially appraise said Horse to the best of our Judgment at 475 lawful Money as witness our hands

"JEREMIAH HACKETT

"OBADIAH COUGH

"Consented to

"NEWMAN COTTELL Selectmen for

"DAVID FORSTER } Canterbury.

"At an Annual Meeting held at Canterbury on the 15th of March 1778—

"Upon application of the Inhabitants of the Northwest part of the Town to be set off as a separate Parish—Voted to call the sd^o Inhabitants accordingly, and that Capt Josiah Miles, David Foster, Cap^t Edward Blanchard & Eben^o Archelaus Miles be a Committee to run a Line of division, & make return to the Town at the adjournment of this Meeting for their acceptance—

"A true Copy attest

"ARCHELAUS MOOR Town Clerk—

"The Number of Polls in Canterbury 21 years old & upwards paying for themselves a Poll Tax for 1783—44:

"DAVID FORSTER } Selectmen for Canterbury "

NORTHFIELD INCORPORATED.

Petition for a Division of the Town.

"State of New Hamp^t Rockingham ss. Came this 26th of March 1783 A D 1780 The Humble Petition of ye Subscribers Inhabitants of ye North part of sd^o Canterbury to ye Honorable ye President and members of Council a house of Representatives of said State, we your Humble Petitioners living at a great Distance from ye Center of ye Town Some of us at nine or ten Miles, & Consequently at a very great disadvantage in coming with them in all Publick Town affairs being one out of sd^o Partly by your laying in that Part of ye Town that was laid out for what was called a upper Parish & Partly by ye Kind Reception our Request in which we made to ye Town for admission but more particularly by our dependence in your Honours desire to promote ye Happiness of every part of this State Humbly Pray that your Honours would take our Case into your Serious Consideration and grant that we together with all who lay in sd^o upper Part may be Erected & Incorporated into a body Politick & corporate to have Continuance by ye name of Northfield—with all such Powers & Authorities Privileges Immunities and Franchises which the other Parishes or Towns in this State in General hold & Enjoy which ye Petitioners as is duty bound Shall forever pray

"Will^o Kristiano James Blanchard, Will^o Williams, Jerem^o M^o Daniel, Bone Blanchard, Tho^o Cough, Jun^r, Joseph Carr, B^o Harri Blaylock, Simon Sabinson, Tho^o Gilman, Charles Giddens, John Dearborn, Joseph Lovitt, Shubal Dearborn, Jun^r, Will^o Forrest, Shubal Dearborn, Jacob Merrill, Aaron Stevens, Jun^r, Sam^l Miles, John Forrest, Nathaniel, Tho^o Cough, John Cross, John Wallough, Abner Miles, Jacob Heath, George Hancock, John Sumner, Joseph Hancock, Benj^o Collins

Abram Dearborn, Will^m Hancock, Nat^l Perkins, James Lud Perkins, Archelus Miles, Edward Blanchard, Will^m ad Perkins, David Blanchard, Aaron Stevens, Reuben Whittier, Will^m Samborn, John M Daniel, Ebene^r Kimball, Gideon Levitt, Mathias Ham.

The petition was granted. The northwest part of the town was set off, and incorporated by the name of Northfield.

Petition to be annexed to Hillsborough County.

"State of) To the Hon^{ble} the Senate & House of Representatives
New Hampshire) of said State in General Court convened.

"The petition of the Subscribers being Inhabitants of the town of Canterbury in the county of Rockingham humbly shews: that they labour under great disadvantages, by reason of their distance from Portsmouth & Exeter where the Courts are held & publick records kept for said County—Wherefore they pray that the town of Canterbury in said County together with the said town of Canterbury may be annexed to the County of Hillsboro, & that for the future half the Courts for said County of Hillsboro may be held at said Concord, and your petitioners, as in duty bound shall ever pray &c

"Jeremiah Clough, Archelus Moore, Thomas Clough, David Morrill, Sam^l Eames, Laban Morrill, Gideon Bartlett, John Forrest (his X mark), David Foster, Jerol Clough, Jr, John Sutton, Ezekiel Moore, John Moore, Joshua Weeks, Nath^l Glines, Benjamin Samborn, Zebadiah Sargent, Shubael Samborn, Elijah Sargent, John Carter, William Hazeltine, Obadiah Hall, Sams^o Eames, John Benn, Joseph Clough, John Moore, Jr., William Foster, Jonathan Bradley, Masten Morrill, Jesse Stevens."

Orders from several Subscribers, 1781 to 1783.

"CANTEBURY March 7th 1781.

To Nicholas Gilman Esq^r Treasurer for the State of New Hampshire. S^t please to pay the select Men for Canterbury the Sum Total of what shall be made up to Us in the pay Roll as Soldiers in the six Months Service the Sumner past and their Receipt shall Answer the same to the subscribers.

"Thomas Hoyt, Ebenezer Chandler
mark

"Benjamin Glines Ebenezer Moss

"Thos. Hoyt £917.6—order granted & Roll signed by A. Foster—J Pearson

"Please to pay the balance of the within order to Abiel Foster Esq^r

"DAVID FOSTER } Select Men
"O. MOONEY } for Canterbury "

John Sutton, of Canterbury, in a similar order, directs his wages to be paid to Captain Laban Morrill, —amount £5 5s. 2d.

CANTEBURY, March 31st 1783

"To the Hon^{table} Nicholas Gilman Esq^r State Treasurer for the State of New Hampshire. S^t Please to pay my Honourd father John Glines of London the wages Due to me on muster Role; made up by Capt Ebenezer Webster of Salisbury, for five months serving as a Soldier under him at Coos, in the year A. D. 1782, and this Endorsed shall be a Discharge for said wages of yours to Serve

"ELI GLINES."

Sams^o Bates orders the amount due him for three months' service in Captain Nathaniel Head's company to be paid to James Norris. Date, January 15, 1785; amount, £4 16s. 4d.

Thomas Curry orders the amount due him for three months' service in 1781 to be paid to David Foster. Date, November 7, 1785; amount, £5 15s. 5d.

In a petition dated June, 1786, Noah Sinkler, of Canterbury, states "That when he was in the Continental Army at St. John's in June, 1776, he received two musket Balls through his wrist, by means of which he then lost the use of his hand." He asks the Legislature to "grant him such relief as a faithful soldier may dare to ask, or his ill fortune may demand," etc.

The committee reported that he be enrolled at the rate of fifteen shillings per month from the time his pay ceased, which report was accepted.

Abiel Foster petitions, Decem^{br}, 1788, to have the wages of William Ervine, who was three months in the service as a ranger, in Captain Ebenezer Webster's company, at Coos, in 1782, and who had deceased, paid to him for the benefit of the town of Canterbury. Amount, £8 19s.

Vote concerning Paper Money.

"At a Legal Town Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the Town of Canterbury held at the Meeting House in said Town on Monday the fourth Day of September A. D. 1786, Proceeded as follows Viz—

"Voted M^r Gideon Bartlet moderator for the well Regulating Said Meeting—

"Then it was put to Vote to See Whether or no they would have a Paper Currency Made or not, and better than two Thirds of the people Voted in the affirmative to have a paper Currency made on such footing as the General Court in there Wisdom Shall think best,—and the other part in the negative not to have a paper Currency.

"A True Copy attest.

"ARCHELUS MOORE Town Clerk"

Number of Rateable Polls in 1787.

"These may Certify whom it may concern that the Number of Polls, paying Taxes in the Town of Canterbury being carefully Numbered by us the Subscribers do find the Amount Thereof to be Two Hundred and Six as may more fully Appear by the Inventory of said Town for the Year 1787—

"OBADIAH MOUSEY } Selectmen for
"OBADIAH HALL } Canterbury

"Canterbury Feb^r 9th 1788."

Schools.—Previous to the year 1781 schools were kept in private houses. In that year the first school-house was built, but it was not until 1793 that the town was divided into school districts. From this date educational matters received much attention, and before the year 1833 fifteen persons from this town had graduated from college, viz: William Rolfe, graduated at Dartmouth in 1799; Ebenezer Greenough, Harvard, 1803; Samuel Haines, Dartmouth, 1803; Jonathan Kitteredge, Dartmouth, 1813; Charles G. Haines, Middlebury College, 1816; David Ames, Dartmouth University, 1817; Asa E. Foster, Dartmouth, 1822; Abiel Foster, Dartmouth, 1823; Henry Clough, Dartmouth, 1823; Cyrus Parker, Dartmouth, 1824; Alfred Kitteredge, Dartmouth, 1827; Josiah Emery, Schenectady College, 1828; Adam Shepherd, Middlebury College, 1826; Galen Foster, Amherst, 1831; William P. Haines, Dartmouth, 1831.

Henry Parkinson, A.B., spent the latter part of his life in this town. He was a graduate of Princeton College, in 1765. He was a quartermaster in the Revolutionary War; died in May, 1820, aged seventy-nine.

Physicians.—The first physician in Canterbury was Josiah Chase, who located in about 1762, and remained here about fifteen years. He was in the War of the Revolution, and was surgeon's mate under Colonel Stark at Bunker Hill in 1775. He moved to Maine, and was drowned in the Saco River.

Jonathan Kitteredge commenced practice here in 1788, and continued until 1810. He subsequently removed to Salisbury.

Joseph M. Harper commenced practice here in 1810. He was a prominent citizen and held various official positions. He was several years a member of the Legislature, and in 1831, while president of the Senate, he was acting Governor of the State, Governor Harvey having resigned. He was a member of the Twenty-second Congress, and re-elected in 1833. Other physicians have been Thomas Cobbett, R. S. Morrill, etc.

Numerous cases of remarkable longevity in this town are mentioned. Captain John Palmer died here in 1846, aged one hundred and two years, and the last remarkable case was that of the late Mrs. Lovey Glover, who lived to a very advanced age, some claim one hundred and three years and others one hundred and eight.

For more than twenty years she prayed every morning and night that God would not allow her to become a pauper or be buried as one, and the intelligence of her death had no sooner got abroad in the town than the good people of Canterbury contributed a generous sum, which paid all the burial expenses, with some remaining over for the son.

Population.—The population in 1790 was 1038; in 1800, 1114; in 1810, 1526; in 1820, 1702; in 1830, 1663; in 1840, 1643; in 1850, 1614; in 1860, 1522; in 1870, 1169; in 1880, 1034.

CHAPTER III.

CANTERBURY—(Continued).

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

Congregational Church—First Free-Will Baptist Church—The Shakers.

Congregational Church.¹—The first appropriation by this town for religious purposes was made in the year 1735. In 1742 the proprietors were taxed three shillings and nine pence each.

The Rev. James Scales seems to have been the first minister of whose preaching at Canterbury there is any account. He graduated at Harvard College in 1733; he removed to Canterbury, from Concord, about 1743, in which year the town voted him twenty pounds for ministerial services. It is uncertain how long Mr. Scales preached in Canterbury, probably but a few years; he was afterwards ordained the first minister of Hopkinton, where he died July 26, 1776. He was town clerk of Canterbury for several years, and seems to have taken a great interest in the affairs of the town.

Some time about the year 1755 or 1756, the Rev. Robert Cutler preached in the town as a candidate, and received a unanimous call to settle there. In the convention of ministers, held at Newmarket, September 28, 1756, this call was considered by a committee of the convention. This committee reported that "we utterly disapprove of your choice of Mr. Cutler for your minister," and with this disapproval gave five reasons for it, either of which was good and sufficient. Mr. Cutler had previously been dismissed from the charge of the church in Epping. The result was that Mr. Cutler was never settled over the church in Canterbury.

Mr. Timothy Walker, of Concord, a graduate of Harvard College, in 1756 was employed as minister at intervals until 1760. Mr. Walker was licensed to preach at the association meeting held at Haverhill, Mass., September 11, 1759. It does not appear that he was ever settled over a church, but preached occasionally for about six years, supplying his father's pulpit in Rumford (now Concord) in 1762, while his father visited England, and also supplying other vacancies in the neighboring towns. Mr. Walker did not preach much after 1765, and in 1777 he was appointed justice of the Court of Common Pleas. He died in 1822.

A call was extended, in 1760, to Abiel Foster, another graduate of Harvard College, a native of Andover, Mass., born August 8, 1735, and graduated in 1756, who was ordained at Canterbury January 21, 1761, and preached there until 1779; he married, May 17, 1761, Hannah, daughter of General Joseph Badger, of Gilmanton. She died January 10, 1768. His second wife was Hannah Rogers, of Ipswich, Mass. In 1779, Mr. Foster retired from the ministry and entered on public business; he was chief justice of Rockingham County, and Representative to Congress from 1783 to 1786, and re-elected in 1789. He was a member of the first, fourth, fifth and sixth sessions. He was a man of acknowledged ability and rendered important service to the town and State; he died February 6, 1801. From this time, 1779 to 1791, the church appears to have been without a settled minister; several candidates preached to the people, but no one was selected until January 5, 1791, when the Rev. Frederic Parker was ordained and installed over the church. He was born in Shrewsbury, Mass., May 4, 1762, and was graduated at Harvard College, 1784. After graduating he was employed as teacher in Portland, Me., for about two years, during which time it is said that he read the service in the Episcopal Church in that city. He afterwards became attached to the Congregational form of worship, and was ordained at Canterbury as above stated. His successor, the Rev. William Patrick, said of him, that "his religious sentiments were moderate Calvinism." He died at Canterbury suddenly, April 21, 1802.

The Rev. William Patrick, the next settled minister, son of John Patrick, was born in Weston, Mass., July 4, 1773, and graduated at Williams College, September, 1799. He read divinity with Rev. Charles ¹By Hon. Lucien B. Clough.

Baekus, of Somers, Conn.; was licensed to preach in June, 1801; ordained and installed over the church in Canterbury, October 26, 1803. He was dismissed at his own request November 22, 1833; he, however, continued to preach a part of the time for some years after his dismissal. He died at Boscawon, October 25, 1862. His first wife was Mary Gerrish, daughter of Colonel Joseph Gerrish, of Boscawon; his second wife was Mary Mills, of Dumbarton.

The successor of Mr. Patrick was the Rev. Howard Moody. He was born in York, Me., May 4, 1808. Until he became of age he pursued his studies in the common schools and with the educated ministers in his neighborhood. He commenced teaching in 1829 and pursued this occupation for ten years; entered the Gilmanston Theological Seminary, and graduated in 1843. Rev. Corban Curtis, who died at Tilton, January 19, 1881, was a classmate of Mr. Moody at the Theological Seminary.

Mr. Moody was ordained and installed over the church November 22, 1843. He was dismissed at his own request December 19, 1869. After his dismissal he supplied the pulpit for two years. In 1862 he went to Ohio and supplied the churches in Amherst and Vermillion one year. He took charge of the church in Canterbury again in 1864, and continued acting pastor until 1869, when he commenced preaching at East Andover.

Rev. Josiah L. Arms, who supplied this church as pastor during the time Mr. Moody was in Ohio, was born in New Salem, Mass., January 22, 1811. He pursued his academical studies at the Leicester Academy and Hamilton College, New York. His theological studies were pursued under the Rev. Dr. Blake, of Mansfield, Mass. He was settled over the church in Plymouth, Mass., in June, 1841, and afterwards over the church in Wilnot. He commenced his labors in Canterbury April 1, 1863, and closed April 1, 1865.

Rev. James Dohlt was settled over this church in February, 1870. Mr. Dohlt was born in Groton, Mass., September 30, 1809, where he acquired his early education in the district school and at the Groton Academy. In 1827 he went to Lexington, Mass., and was engaged in mechanical employment for three years. He removed to Nashua about 1831, and in 1833 united with the Olive Street Church. He then immediately commenced his studies preparatory to the ministry at the Pembroke Academy, and with Professor Daniel Crosby, of Nashua, entered Gilmanston Theological Seminary in 1838, and graduated in 1841. He supplied the church at Ossipee Centre three months in 1841, after which he preached at Ellingham for a year and a half. He was ordained and installed over the church at North Wolfeborough September 21, 1843, and in May, 1848, was dismissed at his own request, and in the same month took charge of the church in Milton, where he remained twenty-one years and eight months. At the close of his labors in Milton he took charge of the church in Canterbury, as before stated, in February, 1870, where he still continues.

First Free-Will Baptist Church.—Few churches have struggled into being through greater conflicts than the one in Canterbury. The old church in 1779, was the first to declare free-will and free salvation. Some years after the Shakers' belief was accepted by pastor and a large part of the members, leaving only a small remnant who remained true to their faith. After this followed the Osgoodites, who drew large crowds after them, so that popular sentiment was decidedly against this little band, making it disrespectful to attend their meetings otherwise than from curiosity. As a sect they were regarded as religious outlaws, and their meetings were disturbed with impunity, making it necessary for the appointment of officers to keep order when gathered for worship.

June 29, 1796, a council from the Yearly Meeting, consisting of Whitney, Buzzell, Randall and Boody, assisted by Aaron Buzzell and John Shepherd as ruling elders, ordained Winthrop Young, who was, at this time, thirty-three years old; he was born in Stratford, taught school in early life, removed to Canterbury in 1787 and remained pastor of the church thirty-five years.

In 1819, Obadiah Morrill was received as minister of Christ, a revival following.

In January, 1821, Samuel Hill was ordained as ruling elder.

May 8, 1823, Jeremiah Clough, Amos Cogswell, Mark Davis and their associates formed into a church, to be known as the First Church of Christ in Canterbury.

March, 1829, Elder John Harriman was received as minister to baptize and receive members, and as an assistant to Elder Young.

April 10, 1838, Joseph M. Harper, Jeremiah Clough and Joseph Clough were set apart as evangelists; good revival interest and prosperity attended the church for a number of years, the members numbering nearly a hundred. We find on the church record items of interest, showing the church to be alive and active on the subject of temperance, passing strong resolutions against, and exercising rigid discipline of some of its members who did not count it sinful to traffic in spirituous liquors.

In 1842 and 1843 a great revival followed, and upwards of one hundred and fifty were added to the church.

September, 1848, Jeremiah Clough was appointed pastor over the whole church, which consisted of three Sabbath Meetings and four Monthly Meetings.

In 1851 arrangements were made for building a new church; the following May the old church was sold at auction to John Keze for thirty-five dollars;

¹ By Rev. A. D. Smith.

Alpheus D. Smith

Lorenzo J. Ames

it was moved a short distance and used for worship until the new church was completed.

June 22, 1852, the new Free-Will Baptist Church was raised; Rev. Jeremiah Clough made appropriate remarks and offered prayer. February, 1853, the first meeting was held in the new house.

Seasons of revivals alternating with times of declension, prosperity and trials, have been experienced.

Rev. Jeremiah Clough continued pastor until his death in 1879; during the last few years he was unable to preach, and the labors of others were secured as needed.

Rev. A. D. Smith commenced his labors in April, 1874, and has continued until the present time.

The Shakers.—In 1774, Ann Lee, the founder of a religious denomination called Shakers, came to this country from England, and a branch of the denomination was established in this town in 1792. Their first minister was Elder Job Bishop, who occupied the position many years. They are a frugal, industrious and temperate people, intelligent and successful tillers of the soil and breeders of stock, and are, at present, a prosperous community.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

REV. ALPHEUS D. SMITH.

Rev. Alpheus D. Smith, son of Dr. Alpheus and Mehitable (Foster) Smith, was born in Lebanon, N. H., August 25, 1813. Dr. Alpheus Smith, of Rhode Island, was educated in Providence, and practiced medicine in Rhode Island some time previous to moving to Lebanon. He practiced medicine here about twelve years; was the physician to the Shakers. In June, 1813, he went with a New Hampshire regiment as assistant surgeon, and died in November of the same year at Chateaugay, near Plattsburg, N. Y. Mrs. Smith was born in Saubury, N. H., and died June 17, 1827. There were four children by this union—Foster, who left home in December, 1837, and was never heard from afterward; Solomon K., went to Oregon in 1832, lived and died there, (he was State Senator and president of the State Historical Society); Josephine, who died young; and Rev. Alpheus D., the subject of this sketch, was left fatherless when but two months old, and remained with his mother until eight years of age, from which time until he was fourteen years old, the time of his mother's death, he found a home with various families. A short time previous to her death she made a contract for her son to remain at his then present home until he was of age. He found, as was customary in those days, plenty of work and but little opportunity for an education. He remained there until twenty years of age, when he made some little preparation for the ministry. On the evening of November 5, 1834, he preached his first discourse from the text: "For many are called and few are chosen." He was licensed the May following, after which time he spent a few months at N. Parsonfield's seminary, under the instruction of Rev. Hosea Quimby, D.D., holding meetings on the Sabbath several miles away; was ordained June 22, 1837, at Corinth, Vt., where he held his first membership. In July following became pastor of the First Free-Will Baptist Church in Dover, N. H. A precious revival followed; more than one hundred were baptized and united with the church. Mr. Smith's health failed the second year of his pastorate, and he returned to the hills of Vermont to recuperate, but he was soon able to resume his work.

July 2, 1838, he married Emily B. True, of Corinth and they had two children,—Josephine E., who married S. W. Sanders, of Laconia, N. H., and Alpheus D., a practicing physician of Manchester, N. H. In 1839, Mr. Smith became pastor of the Second Free-Will Baptist Church of Corinth, which relation continued until 1844. He then spent one year in East Randolph, Vt.; then returned to Dover, N. H., and continued his labors for four years. Spent a few months at Farmington; from there he went to Concord, N. H., where he remained two or three years; assisted in raising a church-debt of twelve hundred dollars; from there he went to West Fairlee, Vt., where a new church was organized and he remained in charge for about two and a half years; from here Mr. Smith was called to Lyndon; from there he went West for some time, but not liking the climate, returned to New England, and was called to Laconia, N. H., the second Sabbath in July, 1857, where he remained nearly four years. Next to East Tilton for three years; but returned to Laconia, where he resided until April, 1873.

Mrs. Smith died in October, 1872. Mr. Smith found, after traveling for some time and supplying destitute churches, the need of a regular home and place of service. He married, for his second wife, Mrs. Mary E. Clough, of Canterbury, in January, 1874, and since that time he has supplied the First Free-Will Baptist Church of the town, with the exception of one-fourth part of the centre of the town. In 1883 his health failed and would not admit of his preaching, but he has been able to resume his labors in the last year. He is now interested in the Kezer Seminary, with a fund of fifteen thousand dollars to build the institution and pay expenses of running the same. Mr. Smith has ever had the esteem and confidence of those with whom he has been brought in contact, always trying to do all within his power to promote the welfare of his fellow-men.

LORENZO AMES.

Among the early settlers of Canterbury, and of its hardy stock of tillers of the soil, was (1) Samuel, the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch. The time of his arrival is not known, but it was probably about the year 1745. He became the possessor of a large farm near the meeting-house, and was noted for the thrift and energy displayed in the management of his business. He was born February 13, 1723-24, married Hannah Daloff, and died in Canterbury January 16, 1803. His wife, Hannah, was born January 18, 1728-29, and died January 23, 1804. From this union there were four children. (2) David, the grandfather of Lorenzo, was born May 27, 1749, and succeeded his father in the possession of the large farm in the "borough." He married Phoebe, daughter of Thomas Hoyt, who was a Revolutionary soldier, and they had ten children,—three sons and seven daughters. David died in Canterbury September 22, 1812, and Phoebe in 1836. (3) Samuel, the father of Lorenzo, was born at the old homestead July 29, 1784. He married Myra, daughter of Jonathan Ayres, of Canterbury, and lived on the homestead inherited from his father until his death, June 30, 1870. His wife, Myra, died October 14, 1873. From this union there were seven children, the eldest of whom was (4) Lorenzo, who was born at the homestead May 22, 1814. His boyhood was spent at home, assisting in farm-work in summer and attending the district school in the winter. That he might assist his father more effectually, and having a taste for trade, he, at an early age, went to Boston, and engaged in the wholesale mercantile business. Remaining there for a few years, during which time he developed a capacity for business, he returned to his native State, and was for a short time in business in Concord. In 1845 he went to Albany, N. Y., and with his brothers, Samuel F. and Jeremiah F., engaged extensively in the flour and grain business. They were successful, and won an enviable reputation for thrift and honesty. A local writer has recently said of this firm: "Some forty years ago there came over from New Hampshire three brothers of the name of Ames, and settled in Albany, where they have been carrying on an extensive produce business. They have well maintained the name of honest Yankees in an honorable and successful business. They are among the land-marks of the capital city, where they have made records which would form pleasant reading, not only for the young, but for men of every age." Business integrity and enterprise, fairly and fully established, insured social position in the city of their adoption.

Lorenzo was deacon of the Congregational Church there, of which Rev. Ray Palmer, D.D., was pastor, and was interested in religious, educational and civil matters.

Mr. Ames has retired from the active business at Albany to his farm in Canterbury, where he is deacon of the Congregational Church and a much esteemed and highly-valued citizen.

October 14, 1852, Mr. Ames married Lydia Page, daughter of Hon. Ezekiel Morrill, of Canterbury.

From this union there are four children. The youngest, (5) Samuel Patten, born May 29, 1865, alone survives.

DAVID MORRILL.

In the early history of Canterbury few names are more conspicuous than that of Ezekiel Morrill, who came from South Hampton to this place about the year 1750. He was a deacon of the Congregational Church, his name appears many times on the old record-books as town clerk, and he often served on committees appointed by the town to attend to matters of importance. To this Ezekiel Morrill, David, the subject of this sketch, traces his ancestry in direct line. Ezekiel was the father of fifteen children. His second child was David. David's eldest son was Reuben, who married Miriam Smith. These were the parents of Captain David, as he is familiarly called. He was born in Canterbury August 12, 1798, on the place where he now lives, and was the third of nine children. His education was obtained in the district school, which he attended till he was twenty-one years old. At this time he began to teach winters. His first school was in Northwood; here he taught two terms, then two winters in Pittsfield, one in Madbury, one in Londonderry, and three terms in District No. 1, Canterbury. In 1828 he built a saw-mill. The management of this and of his large farm have occupied him through his long life. He has a fine set of buildings; his farm is well situated, and by care and industry he has brought it to a good state of cultivation. Mr. Morrill is in many respects a man of the old school,—a working and thinking farmer. Without doubt, many a business problem has been thought out while his hands have been occupied with the hoe and scythe. In town matters the captain has always been on the side of progress and reform. He has held the office of selectman several times. In 1859 he represented the town in the Legislature. In 1860 and '61 he was a member of the Senate. While here his opinions were respected and even sought for by his colleagues. He is a Republican in politics, though not a partisan. He was early in the anti-slavery movement, being associated with Stephen S. Foster and his co-workers. He has always taken an active interest in the educational affairs of the town. Although a scholar of the olden time, he adheres only to what is good in the old methods. He is a Congregationalist in religious faith, having united with that denomination when a young man. Mr. Morrill has been twice married,—in 1825 to Comfort, daughter of Marsten Morrill, and in 1843 to Mrs. Sally Kimball. By the first marriage he had seven children, six sons and one daughter; by the second, two sons. Three of his sons were in the Civil War. He is a man of strict integrity, of sound judgment, of great firmness and of practical common sense. At the advanced age of eighty-six,

David Merrill

J. P. Kimball

his mind is clear and he retains an active interest in public affairs.

JOHN PEVERLEY KIMBALL.

Richard Kimball was born in Canterbury May 31, 1798. He married Sally Sanborn, daughter of John Peverley, of Canterbury, October 24, 1826. They moved to Boseawen the next day and settled on the Rolfe farm, near his brother Benjamin, where they resided until Mr. Kimball's death, which occurred September 30, 1829. Their only child, John Peverley, the subject of this sketch, was born in Boseawen December 23, 1827. After the death of his father he moved with his mother to his grandfather Peverley's, where he resided until he married Mary Eliza, daughter of Samuel Hill, of Canterbury, June 3, 1852, and settled on the homestead of her father, near the centre of the town. Here he resided until her death, November 6, 1874. Deprived of a father at the early age of three years, young John experienced many of the difficulties of other boys in like circumstances. At the same time there were advantages. His mother was a judicious, energetic woman, and he became industrious, persevering, resolute and self-reliant. These elements of character, thus early formed, have done much toward making him successful in all his business affairs. His education was gained mostly in the common school. After leaving this he attended Gilmanton Academy and the New Hampshire Conference Seminary two terms. During his partnership with his father-in-law, they devoted themselves chiefly to agriculture, and the fine exhibits of corn, grain and vegetables made annually at the town and State fairs were good proof of their success. Mr. Kimball has in recent years made stock-raising a speciality, and his excellent Herefords have attracted much attention. He has made great efforts to improve and multiply this stock in Canterbury and in neighboring towns. For several years past he has sent fine herds to the State and New England fairs. He has always been a fancier of good horses, and several of his own raising have made a very creditable record on the turf at the county and State fairs. With a view to comfort and convenience, the homestead buildings were, some years ago, put in excellent condition. A large barn was built, having modern improvements, and the house was made commodious and attractive. Mr. Kimball has always shown a good degree of interest in the educational affairs of the town, and has at all times advocated good schools. His disposition is social, he is prompt to do a kindness, and has many warm friends. He is a prominent member of the town and State Grange, and a member of other societies that have for their object social and educational improvement. He has contributed much to make Canterbury's annual fair successful and creditable to the town. He is a Republican in politics, and a Congregationalist in his religious sympathies. Mr. Kimball had, by his first marriage, four children. The eldest, George Edwin, died at the age of six years. The second and third, Frank Edwin and Ida Grace, were born May 13, 1859.

The youngest, Georgianna Eliza, was born October 10, 1867. He married for his second wife Mrs. Mary A. Kilton.

Mr. Kimball traces his paternal ancestors back to the eighth generation. His grandfather's name was Richard. Richard's father's name was Caleb, then John, Joseph, another John, and still another, this last John making the eighth.

COLONEL DAVID MORRILL CLOUGH.

A town depends more upon the character of its inhabitants for time than upon its natural advantages. Canterbury was originally settled by strong men, who have left their impress on the present generation. They were the Cloughs, Gibsons, Fosters, Blanchards, Morrills, Kimballs, et al., of the present generation. Colonel David M. Clough is one of the most energetic, enterprising, successful and noted farmers within the Granite State, and has deservedly earned the title of "the Corn King" of New Hampshire. The colonel is the great-grandson of Jeremiah Clough, who settled in Canterbury in 1727 and built the old garrison. Here the hardy pioneer raised a family of five boys and three girls. He was a man of superior ability and great physical force and energy. The children all became prominent, and were noted for building large two-story houses, carrying on large farms and having much influence in their day. The oldest boy, Jeremiah Clough, succeeded to his father's home farm. Henry Clough joined the Shakers and became a leading man in that denomination, being one of the founders of Lebanon (N. Y.) Community. Thomas Clough settled on Bay Hill, in Northfield, and left no issue. Abner settled on "Clough Hill," in London, giving name to that section of the town, and has left numerous descendants. Joseph Clough settled on the farm now owned by Colonel Clough; he married a Lawrence, from Epping; had no children, but adopted his wife's niece, who married a Gerrish and became owner of the farm. Leavitt, the grandfather of the colonel, settled on the farm lately owned by Edward Osgood. One of the sisters married a Gerrish, of Boseawen, and left a numerous progeny. Leavitt Clough married, first, Hannah Fletcher, of London; second, Peggy Mason, of Chichester. Leavitt was a remarkable man—powerful physically, strong intellectually, energetic, prompt to keep his engagements, trusted by the community, a devout Christian, a successful and wealthy farmer. Sally, his oldest daughter, married Abner Clough, of London Hill. Hannah, another daughter, married Josiah Haines, of Canterbury, and Susan, the third daughter, married Jeremiah Clough. Leavitt, Jr., was their only son. Leavitt Clough, Jr., was born October 30, 1778; married, October 27, 1800, Abigail Morrill, the youngest daughter of Deacon David Morrill, and aunt of Hon. David Morrill, a prominent citizen of Canterbury. She was born February 8, 1779, and died May 10, 1853. He was held in high esteem by his townsmen, was a justice of the peace, selectman and representative when he died, August 13, 1825. She was a woman of great natural ability and skill, and took great interest in all that was happening in the outside world. Like his father and grandfather, Leavitt Clough was orthodox in creed and carefully attended to religious observances. Toward the close of her life Mrs. Clough was liberal in her views. The children of this couple were (1) Henry Clough, born September 17, 1801, graduated from Dartmouth College in 1823, and died in Maryland August 28, 1824; (2) William Patrick Clough, born October 25, 1802, married and settled first in Canterbury, but later in life moved to Andover, and for many years lived with his only daughter, Cornelia, who married the late Rev. Howard Moody; (3) Mary Ann Clough, born January 8, 1804, married, in April, 1825, Deacon Jonathan Brown, of Gilmanton; (4) David M. Clough; (5) Merinda Clough, born February 14, 1808, married Jonathan Prescott, of Gilmanton; (6) Leavitt Morrill Clough, born September 10, 1809, who went South and disappeared about the time of a noted steamboat explosion, and never having been heard from, was supposed to have been lost; (7) Thomas Carmel Clough, born February 16, 1812, a promising young man, who married Martha Emery, of Concord, and was one of the first settlers on the Western Reserve (Ohio), he died in early manhood, and left one daughter; (8) Daniel Webster Clough, born August 17, 1814, is unmarried and lives in Hill.

Colonel David M. Clough was born on his grandfather's farm June 9, 1805, and succeeded to the homestead on coming of age. His education was received at the district school, supplemented by three terms at Gilmanton Academy. What he was taught he was able to impart to others, for at the age of eighteen he was engaged in teaching winter schools; at the age of nineteen he was commissioned in the State militia, promoted to captain at twenty-one, and to the rank of colonel after five years' service. At his father's death it devolved upon him to help settle the estate, and thus early in life he became immersed in business. In 1832 he settled in Gilmanton, remaining there ten years, when he returned to the neighborhood of his old home. In 1848 he took a trip of inspection and discovery through the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Iowa, and after an absence of several months returned with the firm conviction that New Hampshire offered as many inducements to the farmer as any State in the Union, and accordingly purchased a small farm near his early home, which he brought to a higher state of cultivation and sold in 1856. He bought, that very fall, the farm he now owns on the Merrimack Intervale, between the Canterbury and Boscawren stations, paying four thousand six hundred dollars, it being the same farm that his great-uncle, Joseph Clough, formerly owned.

To this farm of some five hundred acres he gave work and capital. In thirteen years he brought its market value up to seventeen thousand dollars, and its supporting capacity from twelve cattle to that of over one hundred. He has added outlying pieces as they have come into the market, until he now owns about twelve hundred acres of land. His average crop of corn on the ear is some three thousand bushels. He has now one hundred and twenty head of cattle, one hundred and fifteen sheep and six horses.

He has served the town of Canterbury as selectman for four years, and as representative two years. Three times he received the nomination of the Democratic party for member of the Governor's Council, and was elected during Governor Weston's first term. During his term in the Legislature he was a strong advocate for the establishment of the Agricultural College and was one of the board of trustees for several years. In politics the colonel has been a Free-Soil Democrat, attending the National Convention which nominated John P. Hale. After the abolition of slavery he gravitated into the Democratic party. In agricultural, rather than in political circles has Colonel Clough been most prominent. He was a charter member of the Merrimack River Grange and a charter member of the State Grange, of which he was treasurer for six years and for a long time one of the executive committee. He is a member of the Merrimack County Agricultural Society, for two years its president, and a life-member of the New Hampshire Agricultural Society.

A great aim and ambition of his life has been to give dignity to the farmers' vocation, and, by experiment, to develop the science of farming in his native State. By precept and example he has been a champion of the farmers' rights and a pioneer in every advance. He has been a prosperous and successful farmer; he has made two blades of grass grow where one grew before.

In 1832 he, with his wife, joined the Free-Will Baptist Church of Canterbury, and for many years was clerk of the society. He has always been a temperance advocate, abstaining from cider as well as from stronger drinks, and also from tobacco all his life.

As a citizen in his neighborhood, in his town, in the county and in late years throughout the State, he has enjoyed the respect and confidence of his fellow-citizens. He has been thoroughly upright in all his dealings, scorning dishonesty in politics and in business, and in his ripe old age is surrounded by comforts and luxuries well earned and well deserved. He married, first, October 25, 1828, Almira Batchelder, daughter of Ebenezer Batchelder, of Canterbury. She was born June 7, 1805; was the mother of five children; died November 5, 1851. He married, second, June 17, 1856, Mrs. Caroline (Gibson) Tallent. His children are as follows:

1. Ann Maria, born in 1830; died August 9, 1838.

2. Henry Leavitt, born February 17, 1834; has been prominent in business and political circles of Concord; a candidate for high-sheriff of Merrimack County, and now resides with his father; unmarried.

3. Mary S., born in 1836; died August 2, 1838.

4. Edwin Davis, born October 5, 1843; married Eliza Couch, daughter of Elder Couch, of Concord; has had two children (one of whom is living), and is a member of the firm of E. D. Clough & Co., of Concord.

5. Charles Newell, born January 15, 1849; married Emma T. Morrill, and has one child,—the colonel's only grandson, David Morrill Clough, Jr.

D. M. Clough

HISTORY OF CHICHESTER.

BY D. T. BROWN.

CHAPTER I.

CHICHESTER, Merrimack County, is bounded on the north by Pittsfield, on the east by Pittsfield and Epsom, on the south by Pembroke and on the west by London. It is about six miles long and three miles wide, and contains about eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-eight acres. Distance from Concord to centre of town, eight miles. It is watered by the Suncook River, which forms its eastern boundary for about one mile, affording excellent water-power at several points, only one of which is at present utilized. Another small stream, known as Lynxfield Brook, flows out of a pond by the same name, situated in the southwesterly part of the town, and furnishes the power to drive Sanders' board, shingle and lath-mills, and flows into the Suncook in the easterly part of the town. Another small stream flows through the northeasterly part of the town, known as Gilman-ton Brook, and furnishes the power to drive Fellows' mills, and also flows into the Suncook. It was upon this stream that the first saw-mill in Chichester was erected by the early settlers. There are no mountains in town, and the only hills of note are Bear Hill, situated in the westerly part of the town, and Garvin's Hill, situated in the southerly part of the town, from the top of which, on a clear day, the White Mountains can be seen. The original growth of wood is pine, hemlock, chestnut, beech, birch and maple. When the town was settled, a large proportion of its surface was covered with a very heavy growth of wood and timber. For the first fifty years after its settlement the original owners devoted a considerable portion of their time to cutting down and burning up the growth of wood and lumber, preparatory to breaking the soil and fitting it for cultivation; and within the last twenty-five years, more especially, the lumbermen of this and other towns have invaded our forests, and are making sad havoc with the original growth of pine, hemlock and chestnut until, to-day, there is but little of it remaining in town. Looking from the summit of the surrounding hills, the surface of this town appears to be much broken and uneven; still, there are many highly-cultivated farms, especially that of Charles H. Carpenter, Esq., lying on both sides of Suncook River, which is one of the largest and most productive farms in Merrimack County. The soil is generally good, and in some parts is very fertile. Farming is almost the only employment; trade, manufacturing and mechanic arts are carried on to a very limited extent. Population, seven hundred and eighty-four; number of polls, two hundred and sixty-four.

ORIGINAL GRANT OF TOWN

"George, by the Grace of God, of Great Britaine, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c.

"To all People to whom these Presents shall come, Greeting: Know ye that we of our special Knowledge and meet motion for the Dew Encouragement of Settling a new Plantation By and with the advise and Consent of our Council have Given and Granted and by these Presents as far as in us Lies do Give and Grant in Equall Shares unto Sunnary of our beloved subjects whose Names are Entered in a Schedule hereunto annexed that Inhabit, or shall Inhabit, within the Said Grant within our Province of New Hampshire all that tract of land within the following bounds, viz: To begin on the South west Side of the Town of Barnsted, and from thence Runing South westerly on the head of the Town of Nottingham until Eight miles be a completed, and then North west Eight miles, and then North East Eight miles, and then South East by the said Town of Barnsted to the Place where it first began, and that Ye same be a Town Corporate by the Name of Chichester to the Persons afore Said for Ever. To Have and To Hold the Said land to the said grantees and their heirs and assigns for ever, and to such associates as they shall admit upon the following Condition, (1) That the Proprietors within three years Inhab, or Cause to be Built, Sixty Dwelling Houses and Settle families in the Same and Clear three acres of Ground Fitt for Planting or mowing, and that Each Proprietor by his Proprietion of the Town Charges when and so often as occasion shall Require ye same. (2) That a meeting house be Built for ye Publick Worship of God within the Term of four years. (3) That upon Default of any Particular Proprietor in Complying with the Conditions of this Charter upon his Part, such Delinquent Proprietor Shall forfeit his share of ye said land to the other Proprietors, which shall be disposed of according to the major vote of ye Said Proprietors att a Legall meeting. (4) That a Proprietor's share be Reserved for a Parsonage, and another for ye first minister of the Gospel that Shall be there settled and ordained, and another Proprietors share for ye Benefitt of a Schole in ye Said Town, provided nevertheless that ye Peace with ye Indians continue for ye Space of three years, but if itt should happen that a warr with ye Indians Should Commence before the Expiration of the afore Said Term of three years that then ye Said Terme of three years Shall be allowed the Proprietors after ye Expiration of the warr for ye Performance of ye afore Said Conditions Rendering and Paying therefore to us our heirs and Successors, or such other or others as Shall be appointed to Receive the Same, the annuall quit Rent or Acknowledgment of one Pound of Hemp in ye Said Town on ye last wensday in march yearly for Ever if Demanded. Reserving also unto us our heirs and Successors all most Trees Growing on Said Tract of land according to acts of Parliament in that case made and Provided and for ye better order Rule and Government of ye Said Town we do by these Presents and for our selves, our heirs and Successors, Grant unto the Said men Inhabitants, or those that Shall Inhabit Said Town, that yeely and every year upon the Second Wednesday in March for Ever Shall meet to Try and Close by the major part of the Proprietors then Present, Constable, Selectmen and other Town officers according to ye Laws and usages of our adforesaid Province with Power, Priviledges and authority as other Towns and Town officers within our adforesaid Province have and Enjoy, and for ye Noting and calling of ye first Town meeting we do hereby appoint Peter Weare, Esq; John Sanborn and Jacob Tilton of the first Settlement, and thax to Continue in Said Respe five other as Selectmen until ye Second Wednesday in ye month of March, which Shall be in ye year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and Twenty Eight, and until other Select men shall be Chosen and appointed in their Stead in such manner as in these Priviledges Express'd. In Testimony whereof we have caused the Seal of our Said Province to be hereunto affixed.

"Witness, John Wentworth, Esq; our Lieutenant Governor and Council in Chiefe in and over our Said Province att our Town of Portsmouth, in our Said Province of New Hampshire, ye Twentieth Day of May, in the thirteenth of our Beigne, Anno Domini 1727.

"By order of his honour the Lieutenant Governor with the advice of the Council.

"RICHARD WATSON, Clerk of ye Council"

"JOHN WENTWORTH

On the 13th day of March, 1728, the original proprietors of the town of Chichester held their first annual meeting at the house of Captain Wingate, in Hampton, and elected William Stanford clerk, and Benjamin Perkins, Benjamin Lambre and Jethro Tilton selectmen, chose Peter Gilman, Captain John Gilman and Nathaniel Healey surveyors, and Deacon Weare, John Sanborn, Peter Gilman, John Robinson and Samuel Martin a committee to lay out the town. For some reason this committee did not act. They held other meetings, and chose other men with no better success, until December 24, 1728, when they held a meeting at the house of Captain Wingate, and chose Simeon Martin, Samuel Martin, Jeremiah Sanborn, Captain Tilton and William Stanford a committee to lay out the town, and Ichabod Roby a surveyor; the committee to have ten shillings per day, and the surveyor fifteen. This committee, it seems, attended to the business assigned to them immediately; for we find them back to Hampton again January 28, 1729, when another meeting of the proprietors was held at the house of Captain Wingate, to pay them for services rendered. Their pilot, William Hill, received five pounds, seventeen shillings, Captain Tilton six pounds, Simeon Martin six pounds, Samuel Martin six pounds, Jeremiah Sanborn and William Stanford six pounds each. This committee ran what they supposed to be the line between what was then Nottingham and Chichester, and Pembroke and Chichester. Beginning at a birch-tree at the south corner of Barnstead, which they found marked with "B" and other letters, they run eight miles southwest to a beech-tree; this tree they also marked. They then run eight miles northwest to a white oak tree; having marked this tree and others near by, they returned. This running, although according to their grant, took in a part or all of Epsom. We can account for this only in this way: When the county was mostly covered with forests, grants were made without any definite ideas of exact locations. Charters often overlapped each other or left irregular strips of land between them. In this case it seems that the same territory was granted to Epsom and Chichester; but as the grant to Epsom antedated that of Chichester by a few days, Chichester lost, and Epsom gained the land in dispute. It seems by the record that the proprietors of Chichester did not willingly relinquish their claim to this portion of the territory embraced within their grant; but it was the source of a great deal of perplexity and vexation, if not of actual litigation, and committee after committee were chosen to settle the matter with Epsom, and finally a committee was chosen to represent their situation to the Governor, and, if possible, get him to grant them new territory equivalent to what Epsom took from them; but their efforts in this direction seem to have been fruitless, as there is no record of any territory being annexed to Chichester afterward.

At their annual meeting, held March 12, 1729, a committee was chosen to lay out a bridle-path through the town of Nottingham to Chichester, and also select some desirable site for a settlement. This committee employed a surveyor, and reported as follows: They took their departure from the end of Bow Street, in Nottingham, at a great white pine tree; thence running northwesterly through Nottingham; and thence northwest about two miles to little Suncook River (now Epsom); here they concluded was a desirable place for a settlement. Soon after the return of this committee the proprietors held a meeting, and appointed a day upon which to come up through the way just laid out, and fell the trees, and clear up the rubbish, and prepare a bridle-path, and those men who went were to receive six shillings, and those who remained were to pay six shillings. After the bridle-path had been prepared, Peter Weare, Jabez Smith, Ichabod Robey, Josiah Moulton and Jasper Blake were chosen a committee to fix upon a spot for a settlement, lay out house-lots and highways to accommodate them, locate a block-house, etc. This committee came up and laid out the following road:

"Beginning at the Suncook River, about forty rods below where little Suncook runs into the main river, and run east-southeast three hundred rods, thence southeast one hundred rods, thence east two hundred and forty rods, thence southeast one hundred and seventy rods, thence east-southeast four hundred and twenty rods."

They then selected a spot for a centre, or meeting-house lot, "about one mile upwards, on the fifth course of the above highway." They then laid out around this centre twenty-acre lots, one for each proprietor, and numbered them. This location for a settlement was in Epsom, but probably made before the proprietors were aware of the fact. The committee then returned to Hampton, made a plan of the highways and house-lots, with the numbers of each lot, submitted their plan to the proprietors, who accepted it, and immediately drew their lots; but none were allowed to draw their lots until they had paid their proportion of the expenses incurred in laying them out. At a meeting held at Hampton, March 11, 1730, it was voted that "ye proprietors build a meeting-house thirty-five foot long and twenty-five foot wide, and to be cleaven foot stud;" said house to be completed on or before the last day of November next. "Told, that Daniel Weare, Captain Wingate and Nathaniel Healey be a committee to let out ye meeting-house." January 30, 1731, it was voted "that the meeting-house should be twenty-five foot long and sixteen foot wide, with nine foot stud, being built with timber six inches thick, and shall be called a log house." The price to be paid for this house was fifty pounds. The proprietors found no difficulty in finding men who, for pay, would come up and survey house-lots and highways, locate meeting-houses and forts; but when they looked for men who were willing to leave their comfortable homes in Hampton and vicinity, and come up here into the forest to fell the huge trees, and break the untried soil, and build for themselves rude log houses, through the cracks and crevices of which the snows of winter and rains of summer would beat, surrounded, in many cases, by hostile savages, and endure all the privations and hardships of the frontier settlers, they were not very plenty. So we find them holding meeting after meeting and taxing their inventive faculties to the uttermost to devise some plan which should offer sufficient inducement to families to settle in the new town.

At one of the meetings they voted that if sixty men of the proprietors, or men procured by them, should forthwith settle in said town of Chichester, and continue here for the space of three years, they should receive two hundred pounds the first year, to be paid upon their first settlement, and one hundred and fifty pounds yearly for the next two years. May 3, 1733, it was voted "that if fifteen men, or under, would go and speedily settle in Chichester, they shall have a full Proprietor's share throughout ye town of Chichester." There is no evidence that any one accepted this offer of the proprietors. For several years we find them holding their annual and other meetings and discussing different plans for settling the town, also the difficulty with Epsom in relation to the dividing line between the towns. Finally a committee was chosen to petition the General Court to establish the line. The committee carried the matter to the court, and the line was established, which gave the original twenty-acre house-lots, meeting-house-lot and highways which the proprietors laid out soon after the grant of the township to Epsom. This made it necessary for the proprietors of Chichester to start again; hence we find them, with characteristic zeal, pushing ahead and making preparations for another survey; and on the 26th day of June, 1749, they chose Obadiah Worth, James Prescott, Jeremiah Sauborn, Nathan Clough and Jonathan Sweet a committee to come up and lay out a fifty-acre lot for each proprietor. The committee employed a surveyor, came up and laid out the first division of lots in Chichester as follows:

"We be an our interfering roof and compass, to lay out a Street or row of a large open Pond, running from the South side of said road and going into the woods, to the North side road, which trees stand clear into our street, about six rods wide, and we numbered a line of said road, with the letters H. W. and the numbers one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, which trees of four rods distant from the center of the whole division, we ran Northwest and half of one pole more South, to the said Canterbury road. Then we ran the center of said road of ninety rods, and when we had so run fifty rods, then we marked a tree that stood two rods distant North-east and by North to the center of the West half North line with the number one, and the other side of said road distant from said last mentioned tree South west and half of one pole, beyond a tree number one; also then we went on North-east half North fifty rods and marked a tree that stood two rods distant from said North-west half North line with number two, and over again to the other two rods from said line, we numbered another tree with number three, and then fifty rods and numbered two other trees standing in a line, and distant as the trees as before described, with number three, four, five, and six, and all the numbers are in figures, and we layed-out a center line to an each side of said Canterbury road. The numbers in our survey, from one to seventeen, as before mentioned. Then we returned to the two trees first mentioned in this return, and ran South west and by south one hundred and sixty six rods and there marked a tree with letters H. W. for a highway, then four rods for said way, then measured one hundred and sixty six rods, and then marked a tree again with the letters H. W. and then ran up North west half North a tree before we began to run North west half North with the numbers one, two, both numbers on one tree, the number one on the North East side of said tree, and number two on the South west side of said tree, and then ran fifty rods and marked another tree with one, two, as before, then fifty rods and marked another tree with the numbers three, four, then fifty rods and marked a tree five, six, and soon to number thirty four, and the road hereof four rods wide, it lays on the South west side of the numbered and spotted trees, and then we returned again to the trees first mentioned in this return standing on Canterbury road, and from the tree that stands on the North East side of said Canterbury road, we ran North East and by North one hundred and sixty six rods, and marked a tree with the letters H. W., and then measured four rods on the road, all the roads that are upon the North East side of Canterbury road, which is the road between the third and fourth range, lays on the North East side of the spotted and numbered trees. All the eight ranges begin their numbers at the South East end thereof and increase their numbers as they go North westward. The fifth range are all seven numbers from two to thirty four. The second from number one to thirty three all odd numbers. Range the third is numbered from one to seventeen, both even and odd numbers. Range number four is likewise. Range number five is numbered from two to twenty-eight, all even numbers. Range number six is numbered from one to twenty seven, all odd numbers. Range number seven is numbered from two to twenty eight, all even numbers. Range number eight is numbered from one to twenty seven, all odd numbers. All the lots are numbered at each end, and are one hundred and sixty six rods long and fifty rods wide. The ranges are numbered from the Southwest to the North East. Range number one is the South west side range. Then next is range number two. Then next is range three, which lays on Canterbury road, on the South west side thereof, and so on North Eastward. The first cross road, which is four lots distant North westward from the South last half end of the ranges, is two rods broad. The second cross road, which is four lots distant from the road last mentioned, is four rods broad, and where said road crosses Canterbury road there is a center square, of about four acres, which takes off a corner from each of the four lots adjoining to said roads. The center square is five rods and twenty five rods on the end of each of the four lots, and twenty five rods on the side of each of said four lots adjoining to said roads, and there is a straight line from the end of said twenty five rods, in a right angular form. The third and last cross road is four lots distant North Westward from the last mentioned four rods road, and is two rods broad, and in all of this return we have referred to a Plan of said division drawn by Walter Bryant, and received this day.

—Walter Bryant, Obadiah Worth, James Prescott, Nathan Clough, Jeremiah Sauborn, Jonathan Sweet, committee."

The following is a list of the original proprietors and the lots which they drew:

Nathaniel Gookin, range 6, lot 23, John O'Brien, range 6, lot 25, Christopher Page, range 8, lot 3; Peter Weare, range 5, lot 26; Edward West, range 2, lot 21; Nathaniel Healey, range 5, lot 12; Jabez Smith, range 6, lot 17; Josiah Bachelier, range 1, lot 32; Jonathan Fitch, range 1, lot 23; Pam Wingate, range 3, lot 17; Nicholas Gilman, range 8, lot 23; Nathaniel Locke, range 4, lot 12; William Stanford, range 2, lot 25; Sion-bell Sanborn, range 7, lot 24; John Webster, range 8, lot 11; Benjamin Thomas, range 4, lot 1; Joseph Taylor, range 2, lot 5; Samuel Martin, range 1, lot 4; Mathias Plant, range 3, lot 11; Jonathan Garland, range 2, lot 33; Jacob Freese, Jr., range 2, lot 15; Benjamin Sanborn, range 4, lot 15; Daniel Weare, range 1, lot 22; John Prescott, range 2, lot 9; Minster Whipple, range 2, lot 13; Joshua Wintate, range 6, lot 13; Nathaniel Weare, range 8, lot 27; John Sherburn, range 6, lot 11; Jonathan Philbrook, range 1, lot 28; Benjamin Perkins, range 7, lot 2; Charles Steward, range 4, lot 16; Charles Treadwell, range 3, lot 4; Nathan Longfellow, range 6, lot 7; John Swett, range 5, lot 14; Moses Blake, range 7, lot 26; Jacob Freese, range 3, lot 15; Abram Drake, range 8, lot 25; John Rodman, Jr., range 3, lot 11; Nathaniel Drake, range 5, lot 24; Samuel Thyring, range 1, lot 2; Samuel Gilman, range 1, lot 20; Thomas Webster, range 1, lot 12; Peter Gilman, range 8, lot 5; James Leavitt, range 7, lot 12; Joseph Dearborn, range 3, lot 6; John Robinson, range 5, lot 18; Benjamin Landre, range 6, lot 19; Josiah Moulton, Jr., range 7, lot 6; John Bachelier, range 6, lot 21; Samuel Palmer, range 5, lot 16; Bezael Tappan, range 2, lot 31; James Ruff, Jr., range 4, lot 14; Eben Weare, range 6, lot 15; Thomas Perre, range 2, lot 11; Windthrop Hilton, range 2, lot 29; Joseph Rodman, range 1, lot 18; James Jeffrey, Jr., range 4, lot 11; John Rodman, range 4, lot 14; Thomas Cram, range 4, lot 6; John Dearborn, Jr., range 4, lot 17; Henry Bass, range 6, lot 5; John Gilman, Esq., range 8, lot 15; Andrew Wiggin, range 7, lot 8; Captain John Gilman, range 1, lot 2; John Downing, range 8, lot 17; William Fellows, range 5, lot 20; Samuel Tibbets, range 8, lot 1; Ephraim Dennis, range 4, lot 3; William Odion, range 3, lot 4; William Perrell, range 1, lot 34; Joseph Frost, range 3, lot 16; John Tuck, range 7, lot 4; Colonel Mark Hunking, range 1, lot 8; David Currier, range 3, lot 7; Cyrrus Jeffrey, range 8, lot 9; Benning Wentworth, range 1, lot 14; Hunkin Wentworth, range 4, lot 13; John Wentworth, range 7, lot 18; William Wentworth, range 5, lot 6; Jeremiah Sanborn, range 8, lot 17; Jethro Tilton, range 5, lot 8; Batholomew Thyring, range 4, lot 5; John Cram, range 1, lot 12; Bradstreet Wiggin, range 6, lot 27; Steven Sanborn, range 6, lot 1; Benjamin Cram, range 7, lot 28; Richard Willard, Jr., range 6, lot 3; George Jeffrey, range 3, lot 19; Richard Waldron, Jr., range 3, lot 3; Benjamin Gaudin, range 8, lot 13; Jonathan Chushing, range 2, lot 17; John Bradford, range 4, lot 7; John Jennis, range 7, lot 10; Hezekiah Jennis, range 3, lot 2; John Gerrish, range 2, lot 23; Peter Weare, Esq., range 3, lot 1; John Plaster, range 5, lot 19; James Davis, range 4, lot 4; Theodore Atkinson, range 1, lot 20; Eben Stevens, range 2, lot 19; Captain Paul Gerrish, range 6, lot 9; Richard Jennis, range 7, lot 14; James Jeffrey, range 4, lot 2; John Sanborn, range 1, lot 6; George Frost, range 8, lot 23; Col. Shattuck Walton, range 7, lot 16; George Jeffrey, range 3, lot 2; Richard Wibond, range 2, lot 27; Colonel Thomas Westbrook, range 1, lot 16; Archibald Mackphedus, range 8, lot 7.

John Frost, lot 30, first range; Jotham Odion, lot 7, second range; Henry Sherburn, lot 20, range 7; Governor Belcher, lot 10, range 1; each a proprietor's share, with a home lot and five hundred acres to Hon. Samuel Shute and Governor Wentworth.

The proprietors seemed anxious to know how much land they possessed up here; so, on the 19th day of March, 1750, they chose Jeremiah Sanborn, James Prescott, Jonathan Swett, Samuel Drake and Josiah Shaw a committee to run the line around the town, and also lay out two fifty-acre lots to each of the proprietors. This committee employed Simeon Dearborn as surveyor, who came up and laid out the second and third division of lots; but as this land, with the exception of one range in the third division, is now in the town of Pittsfield, it is not proper that I should give an account of the doings of this committee. A large proportion of the township was now surveyed and lotted off, but as yet no permanent settlement had been made, although the proprietors had offered, what seemed to them, very flattering inducements. The Indian wars in which the people had been engaged and other causes no doubt prevented an early settlement. But in 1756, Paul Morrill, for five hundred acres of land, was induced to come up into the woods and commence a clearing, and make for himself and his posterity a home and a name. The tract of land which he selected was in the southwest corner of the town, and has ever since been known as "Morrill's Grant." He cleared up a piece of land and built a house near the residence of John F. French. At the "Horse-Corner" Mr. Morrill cleared up a farm, upon which he spent the remainder of his days. He settled several of his sons near him,—one upon the place where John F. French now resides, another upon the place where James F. Towle lives, and still another on the C. H. Staniel's place.

John Morrill, one of the sons of Paul Morrill, was born about the time his father settled in Chichester, and is supposed to be the first child born in the town, as we find that the proprietors gave fifty acres of land to the first child of Paul Morrill, born in Chichester. The proprietors continued for several years their efforts to induce others to settle here, and thereby create a demand for their land, but very little was accomplished in this direction until about 1770, when John Cram, for a grant of land and the water-power which he had discovered on the great Suncook River, in what is now Pittsfield, built a saw-mill,—an institution of great importance in those days, and without which no extended settlement could be made.

The rich soil, favorable location and heavy growth of timber induced the ambitious young men of Hampton and vicinity to emigrate; and soon we find the Dows, Sanborns, Drakes, Davis', Hilliards, Browns, Hooks, Lakes and many other young men of pluck and strength coming up here, and settling in different parts of the town to hew peaceful homes and fruitful farms from the wilderness, and provide a competency for themselves and families by arduous toil and rigid economy. Those of the original proprietors who had not already sold or lost their shares in consequence of not paying their taxes still remained in Hampton, selling their lands as they had opportunity, and holding their annual meetings from year to year for the election of town officers, in accordance with the terms of their grant.

Colonel Simeon Hilliard came up and settled on Brown's Hill, near the residence of the late Abner P. Brown. He had a large family of children, but none of their descendants remain in town now. About the same time came Jonathan Leavitt, Esq., who purchased a large tract of land situated on both sides of Canterbury road, a portion of which is owned and occupied by his grandson, Hazen K. Leavitt. Captain John Langmaid settled on the farm now owned and occupied by Samuel W. Langmaid, and the farm has been in the possession of the Langmaid family ever since. About the same time came David Brown, who bought the farm now owned and occupied by David T. Brown, who is the fourth generation from the original settler. Thomas Lake settled on the farm where J. T. Lake now resides, from which the large family of Lakes descended. Joseph Dow and his brother settled on Loudon road, the former on the farm now owned by Thomas Berry and sons, and the latter near "Kelley's Corner."

Joseph Dow was proprietors' clerk and afterwards town clerk, and thereby acquired the name of Clerk Dow. Soon after, Joshua Lane, Esq., and Jeremiah Lane purchased land in north part of town, and erected houses where Arthur Deering and S. R. Watson now reside. Captain Dyer Hook and Peter Hook purchased the intervalle farm now owned and occupied by Charles H. Carpenter, Esq. The house, which Mr. Carpenter moved from its original location a few years ago, before building the new and elegant residence which he now occupies, was built by Captain Dyer Hook, and is thought to be the first frame house built in town. Deacon Ebenezer Lane came to Chichester in 1790, and settled on a part of the Governor Wentworth grant, in the southerly part of the town. George W. Lane, his grandson, still owns and occupies the farm. Joshua Lane, another grandson, resides near by, upon the farm formerly owned and occupied by his father, Eben Lane.

But in 1797, John Hilyard, Joseph Dow, Joshua Lane, Jacob Sanborn, John Bickford, Thomas Lake, Timothy Prescott, Asa Lane, Daniel Tilton, James Drake, Robert Tebbets, Jonathan Perkins, Joshua Berry, Abram Greene, John Cram, William Chase, Enoch Butler, Joseph Sanborn represented to Abram True, a justice of the peace, that they were proprietors, owners and grantees of more than one-sixteenth part of the township, and requested him to call a meeting for the election of proprietors' officers at the house of Lieutenant John Hilliard, in Chichester. This meeting was held the 25th day of July, 1797. Joseph Dow was chosen clerk, and Robert Tebbets, Esq., and Abram True, Esq., were chosen a committee to bring the record-book of the proprietors up to Chichester. It was accordingly brought up by this committee on the 4th day of December following. Another meeting was called by Abram True, Esq., agreeable to a petition of proprietors, on the 29th day of May, 1800. A board of officers was chosen and an attempt made to raise a tax to pay up the indebtedness of the proprietors, but not much was accomplished, except to adjourn their meeting from day to day until they had adjourned nine times; the last adjourned meeting was never held. These adjourned meetings occupied about three years' time, during which a large part of the proprietors' rights had been sold to pay taxes and claims, Governor Shute's five hundred acres included. Thus ends the recorded doings of the original proprietors of our town. We have followed them from the time they obtained their grant, in 1727, to 1800,—a period of seventy-six years,—and given an epitome of their votes and transactions relative to the settlement of Chichester. We would be glad to give a more extended and particular account of them, but the limited space allowed us in this work forbids. We are fortunate in having in our possession the complete records of all meetings of the proprietors, written in a legible hand and in a good state of preservation.

Having said all that our limited space allows about the original proprietors, we will now go back several years and take up the "original settlers;" and we find that on March 18, 1773, they presented a petition to John McClary to call a meeting of the legal voters for the election of town officers. General McClary issued the following order:

"PROVINCE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, ROCKINGHAM, SS.

"Whereas, application is made to me, the subscriber, one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the County aforesaid, in a petition signed by a number of the freeholders and inhabitants of the township of Chichester, to call a town meeting as soon as may be, at some convenient place in said town, to choose town officers as the law directs. Therein they complain of never having had the advantage of any legal meeting in said town heretofore. Pursuant to the aforesaid application, I do hereby notify and warn the freeholders, and other inhabitants of the township of Chichester, qualified by law to vote at said meeting, to meet at the Dwelling house of John Loverin, in said Chichester, on Thursday, the first day of April next, at ten of the clock, forenoon, then and there to choose a Moderator to govern said meeting, also Town Clerk, Selectmen, Constable and all other town officers as the law directs, and to pass votes for the same."

"JOHN McCLARY, Justice Peace."

Agreeable to the above order, the citizens of Chichester held their first town-meeting and "elected John McClary moderator and John Cram town clerk; John Cram, Samuel Davis, Ebenezer Barton, selectmen; Samuel Prescott, Jonathan Leavitt, assessors; John Worth, constable or collector together; Edward Sargent, Edmon Rand Leavitt, John Blake and Elijah Ring, they all surveyors of highways." The settlers had scarcely got started in the new town when the difficulties which had for a long time existed between the colonies and the British government assumed such formidable proportions that war seemed almost inevitable.

Already people in the lower towns of the State were almost driven to overt acts, but were restrained by the prudence of leading patriots. The settlers, though far removed from these scenes, caught the spirit and began to make preparations for the coming storm; for, early in 1775, they voted to enlist four Minute-Men to be ready at a moment's warning for any emergency, and to pay each man two shillings per day, and raised one pound, six shillings to purchase pork and bread, and store it in town for the use of the Minute-Men. January 23d of this year Elijah Ring was chosen as a deputy to go to Exeter to choose delegates to represent this province in a Continental Congress proposed to be held in Philadelphia in May next. On the 8th of May, John Cram was chosen deputy to represent the town in the Provincial Congress to be held at Exeter on the 17th instant, with full power to "act and adopt everything according to a letter from the Provincial Committee." In 1776 the town chose Simeon Hilliard, Jonathan Stanyan, Thomas Johnson, David Knowlton, Israel Hook a Committee of Safety, and in 1777 voted to give thirty pounds, lawful money, to each man who enlists into the Continental army for three years, and chose Jonathan Leavitt, Jeremiah Sanborn and Jeremiah Garland a committee to hire the men. They also chose John Cram, William Chase, Elijah Ring, John Langmaid, Simeon Hilliard to regulate the prices of articles in town, so as to correspond with prices in other towns. They also voted to purchase a good supply of gunpowder, lead and flints, and store them at the house of Captain Dyer Hook for the use of the Minute-Men. In 1778 the town raised one hundred and fifty pounds, lawful money, to hire men to fill the quota of the town in the Continental army, and chose James Cram, Jonathan Leavitt, Edward Sargent a committee to look after the families of those who had gone into the army, agreeable to a resolve of the General Assembly.

In 1779 a convention of delegates was held at Exeter to draw up a new system of government, and John Cram, Esq., was chosen to represent the town. This convention met and proposed a new form of government, which was submitted to the people and rejected. This year a convention was held at Concord to regulate the price of articles, and Ensign Elijah Ring was chosen as a delegate from Chichester, who received twelve pounds, lawful money, for his services. In 1780 the people were thoroughly aroused, and determined to do all in their power to aid the Continental army and secure the independence of the colonies. They chose Captain Jonathan Leavitt and Ensign Elijah Ring a committee, with instructions to furnish all the men that may be called for during the year, from this town, as soldiers in the army; and the selectmen were also instructed to furnish the committee with the money to pay them and to assess a tax upon the ratable polls to raise it. It was no easy task for farmers, at this period, with but very little of their land under cultivation, with a distant market and the difficulties attending transportation, to raise money; yet they did raise it to the extent of their ability, and when they could not raise money, they furnished beef and corn, and conveyed it to Hampton with horses and oxen. The town furnished this year six thousand five hundred and twenty pounds of beef and delivered it. In 1781 the Continental Congress asked them to furnish eight thousand one hundred and fifty pounds of beef and forty-eight gallons of rum for the army, and it was raised and forwarded. They also voted to raise all the men wanted from this town for the army during the year, and passed the following very singular vote, which not only shows the ingenuity of the people, but shows to what extemity poverty and zeal in a just cause had driven them:

 Voted to go to raising young stock, and that each and every citizen of the town who enlisted for the term of three years, or during the war, and actually went into the service, should receive, at the expiration of his term of service, twenty three-year-old heifers, and chose Jeremiah Sanborn, Captain Jabez Haskel and Joshua Berry a committee to hire the soldiers, and voted to pay this committee forty dollars per day for time spent in furnishing the men, and thirty dollars per day for use of horse.

We do not know how many men accepted this offer and received the heifers; but we find the town, some time after, taking measures to procure them. This was the last vote passed by the town, as no more soldiers were called for after this year. The people of Chichester should ever remember that their ancestors performed well their part in the great struggle of the colonies for liberty, and that no town rendered more willing and efficient aid. If men were wanted, she furnished them without a murmur. If the families of volunteers needed help, their wants were supplied, and everything that the circumstances of the people would allow was done to bring about the glorious consummation of the war. The Revolutionary War left the country deeply in debt. Congress had no power to establish a system of imports; consequently heavy taxes were levied on polls and estates. This, in connection with other circumstances, produced a season of distress and suffering, from which Chichester did not escape. The war over, the settlers began to talk about dividing the town: for John Cram and his numerous friends, aided by that great civilizer, the saw-mill, had already built up quite a settlement around the water-power (now Pittsfield village). Paul Morrill and his family and friends had settled in the extreme southerly portion of the town; so, when an attempt was made to fix upon a centre for a church, etc., a difficulty arose which they could not surmount. The people at the north part of the town wanted it there, and those at the south wanted it there. So, on the 26th day of December, 1781, they voted to divide the town as follows: That the second division of land below Sancock River in Chichester, with that part of the third division below the river, and the six northerly ranges above said river in the third division, with all the privileges and proportion of public land belonging to said divisions, may be incorporated into a town or parish by themselves, with all town privileges as other towns in this State. And John Cram, William Chase and Jonathan Leavitt were chosen a committee to petition the Legislature to confirm the above vote. This was done, and in 1782 the General Court created the town of Pittsfield, in accordance with the previous vote of the town. During this year the town business of both towns was carried on together; but in 1783 they divided their books. The town of Pittsfield took the "law-book," which had been the guide of the town officers hitherto, and Chichester took the record-books of the selectmen and town clerk. These books are in the town clerk's office in Chichester, and are in a good state of preservation. In 1784 the town voted to purchase lot No. 3, in sixth range and first division, for a town centre and parsonage, upon which to build a house for the transaction of town business and public worship on the Sabbath. This lot was purchased, and twenty acres of trees were felled preparatory to building; but they afterwards decided to build elsewhere, and sold all but two acres, which they reserved for a town cemetery.

In 1785, Simeon Hilliard was chosen as a representative to represent the towns of Pittsfield and Chichester in the General Assembly. In 1788 the new Constitution, which had been formed at Philadelphia the year before, was presented to this State for adoption. Considerable opposition was manifested toward it. A convention was called at Exeter to consider it, and Benjamin Sias was chosen as a delegate to represent this town. This convention, after considerable discussion and delay, ratified it, New Hampshire being the ninth State to accept it. Thus the number necessary to put it into operation was complete. We have now brought our "Historical Sketch" down to the adoption of the Federal Constitution. From this time onward, for many years, the town steadily progressed in wealth and population and all that adds to the comforts of civilized life, though we are sorry to say that there were then, and have ever been, those who were unable to support themselves and families. We think that the first man to apply to the town for help was Daniel Perkins. The town immediately held a meeting and chose a committee to aid him at the expense of the town. Other applications followed. The town, for several years, either aided them at their own homes or furnished small farms for them to live upon. Afterwards, for several years, they were set up at auction, and their board for the current year struck off to the lowest bidder. In 1839 the town voted to purchase a town farm, upon which to support their paupers, and chose a committee to select a suitable one. This committee recommended a farm on Canterbury road, now owned by James B. Towle & Son. The farm was purchased by the town, and fitted up for the convenience of the poor. An agent was employed annually by the town to carry on the farm and take care of the paupers. This custom was continued until 1866, when the town farm was sold to its present owners, since which time the town has had but very few paupers, and these few have since then been boarded in town.

In 1845 the town voted to build a town-house, the old meeting-house having become ruinous and unfit to hold meetings in, but for a long time were unable to agree upon a location. Several meetings were held, and considerable excitement engendered. It was finally voted to locate it on the "centre lot," near the Methodist Church. A committee was chosen, and the building framed and erected; but before it was finished, the people at the north part of the town rallied the voters and got the former vote rescinded, and the location changed to where it now stands. Accordingly, it was taken down, moved back, erected and finished, and has ever since been used for town purposes.

The next event of importance in the history of the town is the War of the Rebellion, and on the 14th day of December, 1861, the town passed the first vote in relation to soldiers, viz.: "Voted to aid the wives, children or parents of any inhabitants of the town who have enlisted into the military service of the United States agreeably to an act of the Legislature of New Hampshire, authorizing towns and cities to aid the families of volunteers, and also instructed the selectmen to pay a bounty of two hundred and fifty dollars to each volunteer who may enlist up to September next, to fill the quota of this town under the call of the President for volunteers." At a meeting held September 21, 1862, the town voted to pay a bounty of three hundred dollars to all those who may hereafter enlist to fill up old regiments, and two hundred and fifty dollars to all those who may enlist into new regiments prior to September 15th, and one hundred dollars to those enlisting for nine months to fill the quota of the town. September 29, 1862, "Voted to raise twelve thousand dollars to encourage voluntary enlistment, and voted to pay a bounty of two hundred dollars to those who may or have enlisted for nine months to fill the quota of the town under the last call of the President." September 12, 1863, "Voted to raise a sum of money to pay a bounty of three hundred dollars to those who may be drafted to serve in the military service of the United States, or to his substitute who shall be mustered into the army of the United States, and that the selectmen be authorized to borrow, on the credit of the town, the sum of five thousand dollars therefor."

December 8, 1863, "Voted to raise six thousand dollars to encourage voluntary enlistment in the town of Chichester, and that the selectmen are authorized to apply the same, or such parts thereof as they may think proper, to pay bounties to soldiers to fill any quota that may be assigned to this town."

June 14, 1864, "Voted to raise the sum of ten thousand dollars to encourage voluntary enlistment in this town, to fill any quota of the town under any call of the President during the present political year, and that the selectmen pay such bounties as they think proper to each volunteer who may, at any time during the year, enlist into the military service of the United States, and also that the selectmen pay a bounty of three hundred dollars to all persons who have been, or may be, drafted or conscripted into the military service from this town, during the existing rebellion, or to any substitute for such conscript." "Voted to raise fifteen thousand dollars in addition to the sum already raised, and that the selectmen be authorized to enlist twenty men immediately, and put them into the service, for a reserve to fill any quota of the town during the current year."

August 24, 1864, "Voted to raise twenty-five thousand dollars to encourage voluntary enlistments in the town of Chichester, and that the selectmen be authorized to pay a bounty of one thousand dollars to each and every man who shall enlist from this town, and be mustered into the service of the United States for the term of one year, to fill the quota of the town under the call of the President of July 18, 1864." Sixteen men of the town enlisted under this vote, and received one thousand dollars each.

December 10, 1864, the town passed its last vote in relation to raising men for the army. "Voted that the selectmen be authorized to pay a bounty of three hundred dollars to any one who has been since the date of this warrant, or may be hereafter, mustered into the military, naval or marine service of the United States for three years, as a substitute for any enrolled man in the town of Chichester."

In accordance with the above vote, Jacob S. Sanborn, David T. Brown, S. W. Langmaid, C. C. Shaw, John Shaw, James B. Clifford, Thomas B. Lane, Hosea B. Langley and James Hook furnished substitutes. Drafted men who furnished substitutes,—Geo. M. Munsey, Abram M. Drake, Stephen P. Perkins, John Y. Lane, Freeman H. Fogg, Moses R. Lake, Edward Langmaid, Jr., Franklin O. Kelley, George W. Towle, James P. Hook, John W. Severance, Ira Sanborn and Nathaniel S. Edmunds.

Citizens of the town who enlisted and were mustered into the service of the United States during the Rebellion,—

George S. Sanders, Edridge G. Locke, James McGuire, Albert Hook, William H. Jackson, John P. Haines, Hiram E. Locke, William Spiller, Joseph C. Munsey, Frederick Brown, William Duzzell, Chellis E. Call, Charles H. Edmunds, Joseph C. Perry, Samuel M. Perry, Ira B. Perry, Henry M. Sanborn, James Stanyan, Charles H. Towle, Cyrus Sanborn, James H. Haines, Thomas Haines, Peter Mehier, Thomas Ames, William Stanley, Hugh Burns, Alfred Langmaid, Charles Robey, Charles H. Daniels, John A. West, Hiram Hook, Levi Hook, James M. Meserve, Joseph Gilley, Warren Langmaid, Jonathan H. Leavitt, William Sanborn, Hiram Stanyan, Edward West, George H. Haines, Herbert T. Sanborn, Charles L. Brown, Charles H. Greene, Alonzo P. Hall, James P. Hook, George P. Haines, Charles H. Johnson, James Bacheider, George A. Lear, Sewel B. Bailey, John M. Haines, James J. Locke, Joseph M. Walker, True Sanborn, Jr. (enlisted September 29, 1861, Fourth Regiment, second lieutenant; promoted to first lieutenant June 12, 1862; promoted to captain November 3, 1864), Jonathan D. Leavitt.

The following is a list of men who were hired by the selectmen to fill the quotas of the town, under different calls of the President, and substitutes for drafted and enrolled men,—

William Walker, George H. Pearson, John Ames, Thomas Egan, John Pratt, Edward Morris, Joseph Miller, William Robertson, James Noble, William R. Fleming, Charles Hogan, John Smith, James Johnson, John Thomas, Edridge L. Swan, Edward Anster, Joseph O. Perkins, Charles H. Marston, William Stearns, Edgar L. Carr, George Johnston, Joseph Johnston, Benjamin Johnston, Joseph G. Johnston, Lewis Woodbury, John Wilson, Orrin H. Weeks, William Suckare, George W. Darnall, Patrick G. Garris, Joseph Murry, Minor Smith, Peter White, Andrew T. Colman, James Wilson, Martin Johnson, James Smith, Richard Rodgers, Charles Anderson, John Rodgers, Thomas Williams, Nathan Munsey, George W. Fitch, Francis Dolan, William D. Locke, William Cook, John Cate, John Ames, John F. Stanyan.

The town responded to every call of the President of the United States for men to go into the Union army, and promptly filled every quota assigned to it, paying bounties ranging from one to ten hundred dollars to each man. To do this, the town borrowed the money from year to year, as it was needed, and at the close of the war had incurred a debt of thirty-six thousand six hundred dollars. This amount was in notes, ranging from fifty to three thousand dollars. The interest and part of the principal was paid each year until 1881, when it was found that about sixteen thousand dollars of the original indebtedness of the town remained unpaid. The town, this year, voted to fund the town debt, and authorized the selectmen to issue bonds bearing four per cent. interest annually, with one thousand dollars payable each year until the debt should be paid. The bonds were issued and sold; hence, in about twelve years the war debt of Chichester will become extinct.

Schools and School-Houses.—The people of Chichester early turned their attention to the subject of education. We find, that a few years after the settlement of the town, when there were but few houses, and these very much scattered, that a few pounds were appropriated "for schooling." There were then no school-houses in town, and the scholars met at private houses, and were taught to "read, write and cipher" by Joseph Dow, one of the first settlers of the town, who also filled the office of town clerk for many years, and is now remembered by the old people of the town as "Master Dow and Clark Dow." It does not appear that the subject of education was ever lost sight of, though the poverty and distress of the people, occasioned, or at least increased, by the heavy taxes imposed upon them to raise men for the Continental army during the memorable struggle of the colonies for independence, prevented the full accomplishment of their laudable design. In 1788 the town built four school-houses,—one near the mouth of Loudon road, one on Bear Hill, one on Canterbury road and one near the settlement of Paul Morrill. The school-house last mentioned was burned in 1840, and the present one in that section of the town (District No. 5) was erected in 1841. A school-house in the Lane District was built about 1790, which was burned in 1815, and the present house erected in 1816. In 1842 a union district of Chichester and Epsom was formed, and in 18—, a union district of Loudon and Chichester was formed, and a school-house located on Pleasant Street. Another union school district of Chichester and Loudon was formed and a school-house built on Canterbury road, making eight school districts with as many school-houses. The money appropriated for the support of schools is divided among the several districts, according to the appraised value of property in each district.

The Revolution.—The following men were furnished by the town for the Continental army :

Josiah Barton, Ephraim Garvin, Jonathan Locke, John Bickford, Nathaniel Martin, James Ahearn, Benjamin Brown, Benjamin G. Berry, Jacob Abbott, Ephraim Conner, Daniel Paige, Neil Cate, Joseph Morrill Daniel Seavey, Joseph Brown, Joseph Dow, Joseph Goss, Jeremiah Abbott, Eliphalet Conner, Simeon Lovering, Dudley Swain, Joshua Smith, Riel rd Smith, John Chase, John Maxfield.

War of 1812.—The following men were furnished by the town for the War of 1812:

Joseph Dearborn, Isaac Stanyan, Samuel Drake, Theophilus Mason, Christopher Page, Jonathan Maxfield, Benjamin W. French, David P. Shaw, Edward Edmunds, David M. Carpenter, Mathew Sanborn.

POPULAR VOTES OF THE TOWN.

In 1801.—For Representatives to Congress: Abel Foster, 33; Michael McClary, 49; Samuel Tenney, 40; George B. Tappan, 36.

1810.—Jonah Bartlett, 80; Samuel Dinsmore, 80; John A. Harper, 80; David Morrill, 80; Obed Hall, 80; George Sullivan, 33; William Hale, 33; James Wilson, 33; Roger Vose, 33; Daniel Blanchell, 32.

1823.—For Governor: Samuel Bell, 173. For Counselor: John Bell, 173. For Senator: Isaac Hill, 87; Ezekiel Morrill, 81; John McClary, 1. For Treasurer: William Pickering, 173. For Register: Seth Walker, 173.

1830.—For Governor: Mathew Harvey, 136; Timothy Upham, 36. For Counselor: Francis N. Fisk, 137; John W. Parson, 36. For Senator: Joseph M. Harper, 135; Samuel Morrill, 37. For Treasurer: Jonathan Eastman, 136; John Wilson, 37. For Register of Deeds: Samuel Coffin, 133; John West, 34.

1841.—For Governor: John Paige, 147; Enos Stevens, 34; Daniel Hoyt, 10. For Counselor: Moses Norris, 146; Arthur Breams, 25; Frederick Sanborn, 9. For Senator: Peter Renton, 144; Simeon B. Little, 35; Samuel Forrest, 9. For Treasurer: Caleb Morrill, 147; D. K. Foster, 35; Samuel Morrill, 9. For Register of Deeds: Mitchell Gilmore, 147; Joseph Morrill, 35; John T. Morton, 9.

1850.—For Governor: Samuel Dinsmore, 133; N. S. Berry, 37; Levi Chamberlin, 15. For Counselor: Greenleaf Clarke, 133; Edmund Worth, 33. For Senator: Samuel Montgomery, 133; John S. Fernald, 15; Charles E. Bartlett, 15.

1860.—For Governor: Asa P. Cate, 143; Ichabod Goodwin, 88. For Railroad Commissioner: Frederick Vose, 143; Jeremiah C. Tilton, 88. For Counselor: James Butler, 143; Reed P. Clarke, 88. For Senator: Henry P. Rolfe, 142; David Morrill, 88.

1870.—For Governor: John Edell, 70; Onslow Stearns, 74; Lorenzo Burrows, 5; Samuel Felm, 73.

1880.—For Governor: Frank Jones, 137; Charles H. Bell, 90; George Dodge, 1.

Congregational Society.—From the settlement of the town until 1791 but little is known concerning the preaching of the gospel in Chichester. We find that before and after the Revolutionary War appropriations of a few pounds were made occasionally at their annual meetings to hire a gospel minister to preach a part of the year, but who was employed or where they preached we have no means of knowing; but as the business meetings of the town were held alternately at private houses in different parts of the town, the presumption is that the religious meetings were held in the same way. But during the memorable struggle for independence through which the colonies passed, although the subject was brought up at almost every annual meeting, the people were so much engaged in furnishing men for the military service, and were taxed so heavily to raise funds to procure these men, that no appropriation was made for the support of the gospel. In 1791, Rev. Josiah Carpenter, a Congregational minister, came here from Vermont and preached a part of the time, and the town raised fifteen pounds to pay him for his services; and on the 7th of June of this year the people, who for several years had contemplated building a house for public worship, but could not agree upon a location, decided to build a meeting house, which should be used for the preaching of the gospel and the business meetings of the town; the house to be forty feet wide and fifty feet long, and fixed upon a spot a few rods east of where the town-house now stands for a location. The building committee were Abram True, Captain James Marden and Jeremiah Sanborn.

The records do not tell us just when the house was completed, but they do tell us that the pews were sold at auction in 1794 to the highest bidders, at prices ranging from two to fifteen pounds.

At a meeting held at the barn of Captain John Langmaid, July 23, 1791, it was voted to set apart August 3, 1791, as a day of humiliation and prayer to Almighty God for his direction and presence with them in all their undertakings; also, to call a council of neighboring ministers to establish a church in this town, in order to have an ordained minister, and Jonathan Leavitt, Billyard Shaw and Joseph Morrill were chosen a committee to call the council and make preparations for their entertainment.

The council convened August 3, and was held in connection with the exercises of fast-day. This council established the Congregational Church in Chichester. On the 3d day of September following, the town voted to extend a call to Rev. Josiah Carpenter to settle with them in the gospel ministry upon the following terms: Salary for the first year, fifty pounds; for the second year, fifty-five pounds; for the third year, sixty pounds; for the fourth year, sixty-five pounds, and that the last-named sum of sixty-five pounds should be his stated salary each year during the time he should remain with them in the gospel ministry; said salary to be paid yearly, as follows: One-third part in specie, computing six shillings to the dollar; the other two-thirds in beef, pork, corn and grain at the following rates: Good grass-fed beef, at seventeen shillings nine pence per one hundred pounds; stall-feed beef, at twenty-five shillings per hundred; pork weighing from nine to twelve-score, four pence per pound, from twelve-score upwards, five pence per pound; corn, three shillings per bushel; rye, four shillings; and wheat at six shillings per bushel. That until the parsonage lot should be cleared and put in condition to produce grass sufficient to winter and summer two cows, one horse, six sheep, the town would furnish Mr. Carpenter annually and every year with six tons of good English hay and pasturing sufficient and convenient for the above stock; then he was to cultivate the parsonage lot himself and to have all of the income. They also agreed to furnish him annually with twenty-five cords of good birch-wood, delivered at his house; also to give him boards, shingle and clapboards to the amount of fifteen pounds and labor to the amount of forty pounds, towards building him a house. Mr. Carpenter accepted the call and was soon ordained, and remained in the gospel ministry about thirty-five years. During these thirty-five years a tax was assessed annually, and in a majority of cases cheerfully paid, to pay his salary, but from the start there had been dissenters, some on account of the location of the meeting-house, and some on account of conscientious scruples, not believing in compulsory support of the gospel; these dissenters became more numerous as time rolled on. The town had been accustomed to abate the minister tax of those people who furnished certificates from Rev. Ebenezer Knowlton and Rev. Benjamin Sargent, Free-Will Baptist ministers of Pittsfield, that they were regular attendants upon their meetings.

After the law was passed by the State allowing individuals to form religious societies, with power to admit members, make rules and by-laws for their government, assess and collect taxes of its members for the support of a minister of their own denomination, it became exceedingly difficult to collect the taxes assessed for the support of Mr. Carpenter, some positively refusing to pay their taxes, and there is a tradition that in several cases the goods and chattels of delinquent tax-payers were taken by process of law and sold to pay their proportion of the minister's salary. It now became evident to the people that something must be done to dissolve the contract made in 1791 between the town and Rev. Josiah Carpenter, as his salary was still going on and the town already in arrears with him. Consequently, the town, in 1826, chose a committee to make a final settlement with him. The committee attended to their duty, and on the 11th day of December of this year the following agreement was signed by both parties:

"Know all men by these presents, That I, Josiah Carpenter, of Chichester, County of Merrimack, and State of New Hampshire, Minister, for and in consideration of five hundred dollars paid by the Selectmen of Chichester, do give up, relinquish and forever abandon the contract made with me, the said Josiah Carpenter, and the town of Chichester in the year 1791, being in full for my support for the term that I have remained the minister of said town of Chichester.

" ABRAM DEAKE,

" BENJ. EMERY,

" JAMES DEAKE.

" JOSIAH CARPENTER."

Thus ended the long and successful pastorate of the Rev. Josiah Carpenter in this town. Of the particular results of his public and private ministrations we know but little, as our ancient records of the church are supposed to have been burned in 1840; but we have no doubt that the religious sentiment that has existed in our town during the present century is largely attributable to the pure life and wise counsels of this godly man, who for so many years "went in and out before the people." During these years the population of the town nearly doubled, and we have no doubt that the number of church-going people correspondingly increased. It is said that the people came from all sections of the town to attend church on the Sabbath, some of them coming four or five miles, and as there were no carriages in those days, they either walked or rode on horseback, not unfrequently two or three upon the same horse, and in winter to sit all day in a cold house, without any fire or any other means of artificial warmth, except in some cases the ladies carried a little tin stove, about ten inches square, in which were deposited a few coals, which diffused a little heat in their respective family pews. Those of our people who ride to church in richly upholstered sleighs, to sit only half a day upon a nicely-cushioned seat, in a warm room, hardly realize the hardship and physical endurance it cost our ancestors to attend church.

The contract between the town and Rev. Josiah Carpenter being dissolved, and universal taxation to support the Church done away with forever, we trust, the people of different religious proclivities were left free to form societies of their own, admit members, adopt rules and regulations for their government, assess and collect taxes for the support of a minister of their own denomination, build and repair churches, etc. Consequently, a few individuals, who were in favor of forming a Congregational society in Chichester, met at the hall of David M. Carpenter, in said town, on the 20th day of December, 1826, and chose Nathan Marden, Benjamin Emery and Nathaniel Sherburne a committee to designate a title by which the society should be known. At a subsequent meeting the committee reported, and the meeting adopted the following title: "The Union Congregational Society of Chichester, in the County of Merrimack."

At this meeting John Chandler was elected clerk, Abraham Drake, Nathaniel Sherburne and Abijah Lane were elected assessors. For several years the church was without a settled pastor; money was raised by the society almost every year, and expended by the committee in supplying the pulpit in the old meeting-house. Although during this time several candidates were tried, it was not until 1832 that a call was given to any one to settle in the ministry. This year Rev. Rufus A. Putman preached for a while, and the church and the society were so much pleased with him that the church, on the 30th day of July, 1832, voted to give him a call to settle with them in the gospel ministry, and chose Deacon Enoch Tilton, Deacon Ebenezer Lane and Joshua Lane, Esq., to present the call. On the same day the society voted to concur with the church in regard to giving a call to Rev. R. A. Putman and settling him in the ministry, and chose D. K. Foster, E. K. Webster and John Marden to act in unison with the committee chosen by the church.

On the 6th day of August following, the Rev. Rufus A. Putman accepted the call, and remained the settled pastor of the church and society for twelve years, and with the exception of his illustrious predecessor, Mr. Carpenter, the longest pastorate any minister ever had in Chichester. Mr. Putman is remembered by the old people of the town as a man of sterling qualities and undoubted piety, and noted more for his depth of thought than for brilliancy of oratory. The old edifice, which had been used for so many years as town-house and church, was now in rather a dilapidated condition, and must either be repaired or a new church built. As is always the case under such circumstances, the society were divided in opinion, some being in favor of repairing the old house and others in favor of building a new one; finally, the latter class triumphed, and David M. Carpenter, J. N. C. Leavitt and Simeon Stevens were chosen as a building committee. But here again the question of location, which had disturbed the fathers so much almost a half-century before, when contemplating building the old church, presented itself again; but after holding several meetings and discussing the matter thoroughly, Stephanns Kelley, Chas. H. Staniels, Jonathan Marden, Benjamin Farrington and Samuel S. Moulton were chosen a committee to select a location for the new church. This committee, after considerable delay, reported in favor of the spot where the Congregational Church now stands. A plan was procured and estimates made, and the contract to build awarded to Newell Sanborn for one thousand eight hundred dollars. The house was finished the latter part of 1838, the majority of the pews sold, the bills paid, and from that day to this the society have had no debts of any amount existing against them. Although the church has had new blinds and been several times painted and otherwise repaired, the bills have always been paid by the society.

In 1843, the people no longer desiring the services of Rev. Rufus A. Putman, he was dismissed. In 1844, Rev. Ezekiel Dow preached a part of the year, and on September 1st of that year Rev. Chas. Willey commenced preaching, and preached one year on trial, when the church and society gave him a call to settle with them in the gospel ministry. He accepted the call, and on October 15, 1845, he was ordained, and continued to preach and labor among us until December 3, 1850, when a council was called and he was regularly dismissed. The church and society were without a settled pastor for several years. During this time several candidates were employed, among them Rev. Thomas Kidder, until, in 1853, Rev. Silas Blanchard commenced preaching, and preached for about four years. In 1858, Rev. Joshua Gay commenced preaching, and preached for five years. The society was without a pastor for some time. In 1865, Rev. Mark Gould commenced preaching and preached until 1872. In 1873, George A. Foss preached for a while, when the church and society, on January 26, 1874, voted to give him a call to settle with them in the gospel ministry. He was ordained February 24, 1874, and preached for about three years, when a council was called to convene at Chichester September 7, 1877, and dissolve the pastoral relations existing between pastor and people. The church was without regular preaching for a time, during which time several candidates were tried, when the assessors secured the services of Rev. John F. Aiken, who commenced preaching in 1879 and preached until August, 1880, when, after a brief illness, he died. This was a sad day for the Congregational Society in Chichester, for, within my recollection at least, no man in our town ever had the respect and love of the people, which amounted almost to adoration, that was manifested for Rev. John F. Aiken. The church was without a pastor until 1882, when Rev. H. W. L. Thurston commenced to preach, and remained until the fall of 1884, when he resigned and went away.

Free Baptist Society.—In 1821 and 1825 an extensive revival of religion prevailed in Chichester, as the result of a series of meetings held in different sections of the town by Rev. William Swain, a Free-Will Baptist minister from Pittsfield. Up to this time there had been no Baptist society in town, although there were many favorable to that denomination, who had attended meeting at the Baptist meeting in Pittsfield, at which Rev. Ebenezer Knowlton and others preached. During this revival, at the meetings and on other occasions, the expediency of forming a Free-Will Baptist Church in Chichester was discussed. Finally they laid the subject before the Elders' Conference of the New Durham Quarterly Meeting, held at London in May, 1825. The Conference, after duly considering the matter, decided in favor of forming a church, and appointed Elders Winthrop Young, Samuel Dyer, Ebenezer Knowlton, Arthur Caverno to organize the church. On the 27th day of May the above-named elders, with the exception of Elder Dyer, met the people at the house of Benjamin Kaime and organized by choosing Elder Winthrop Young as moderator and Elder Arthur Caverno as clerk. A church was here formed, consisting of the following baptized members: Benjamin Kaime, Ebenezer Fellows, Stephen Robey, John Fellows, Samuel B. Miller, Dearborn Mason, Levi Staniels, Sarah Fellows, Mary Miller, Sally Kaime, Rhoda Page, Mary Mason. At this meeting Benjamin Kaime was chosen clerk of the church.

The church was now organized and ready for Christian work, but had no church edifice in which to hold their meetings. So the next thing to claim their attention was the raising of funds for this purpose. They set about it with characteristic zeal. Benjamin Kaime gave the land upon which to set the church, and many others contributed generously according to their means, so that in 1826 the house was built and dedicated, Elder Caverno preaching the dedicatory sermon. Jeremiah Lane, Joshua Lane, Stephen Perkins, Stephen Robey, Benjamin Kaime, Simon Mason, Edmund Mason, Nathaniel Bacheider, Josiah Page, Obadiah Marston, Ebenezer Fellows, John Fellows, Henry Robey, John Berry and Amasa Kelley were the principal contributors. The church completed, they then set themselves to work in earnest to procure a minister, but it was not until December, 1827, that they succeeded in obtaining one. Then Elder William Swain, of Pittsfield, was settled as pastor, who continued to preach and labor among them for six years, at the close of which, although he ceased to be their pastor, he continued to preach occasionally in the church during the remainder of his life, and also attended many funerals of former parishioners and friends, and to the close of his life was always deeply interested in the prosperity of the Baptist Church in Chichester. He spent the last years of his life on a farm on Canterbury road, now owned by William Carroll, and died September, 1865. For the next four years the church was without a pastor, although they had preaching occasionally. But in 1837, Elder Silas Bean was engaged to preach one-half of the time; he remained with them until some time in 1840, since which time there has been no settled pastor, although every year there has been more or less preaching at the church. Elders Garland, McCutchins, Knowles, Holmes, Quimby, Brown, Mack, Harvey and others have preached there from time to time during the last forty years. Elder Joseph Harvey has held more meetings in the church and at private families, and preached more funeral sermons in that section of the town, than any other minister; in fact, he seems to have had the general supervision of the church and society for the last forty years.

In 1833 the old church had become so much out of repair, and assumed such an old and antiquated look, that the good people, not only of that section of the town, but others who did not worship there and some former residents,—children of those who built the house,—determined that the old church should not, in their day at least, crumble and fall, but be put in condition to compare favorably with other buildings in that locality. James W. Smith, and others took hold of the matter, clapboarded and painted it, projected the eaves, put in new windows and doors. Charles H. Carpenter, an active member of the Congregational Society in Chichester, gave the windows, so that the old Baptist Church near Kelly's Corner and the new school-house standing near by give the neighborhood a thrifty look.

Methodist Episcopal Society.—The first germ of Methodism seems to have been planted in 1819 by Rev. John Lord, who visited the town and preached in different localities. The subsequent history of Methodism in Chichester proves how faithfully he did his work. For the next nine years there seems to have been no material progress made, though of what efforts were put forth to establish a Methodist Church in Chichester, or by whom, we know but little. But in 1829 another movement was made to continue the work already begun. This year Rev. Ezekiel Stickney preached half of the time, Chichester then, and for many years after, formed a circuit with the surrounding towns. The class which existed at that time in Chichester was composed of the following members: John Mason, leader; Hannah Winslow, Nancy Bachelder, John Morrill, Betsey Seavy, Hannah Drake, Josiah Knowles, Deborah Marston, Amos Barton and Mehitable Barton. At the session of the New Hampshire and Vermont Conference held at Barre, Vt., June 23, 1830, Rev. Orlando Hinds was appointed to Pembroke Circuit, in which circuit Chichester belonged. Mr. Hinds then came to Chichester and spent the remainder of his long and useful life among the people. In 1830 a great revival took place in the Methodist class under the ministrations of Mr. Hinds; a four days' meeting was held in the Old Congregational meeting-house and many were converted. In November of this year a meeting was held in the Centre School-house to see how many wished to join the church, and as the result, about sixty persons of both sexes united with the church, which was then in reality formed, for that which existed before was a class and not a church. The members were divided into three classes, and the leaders were Elijah Sanders, John Baily and Hiram Chase.

In 1831 no special interest was manifested among the people, yet the church was becoming more and more firmly established. The circuit of this year embraced Pembroke, Epsom, Northwood, London and Chichester. In 1832, Mr. Hinds was a supernumerary preacher, but was still pastor of the church, though he preached in Chichester but half of the time. The church now began to feel the need of a church edifice, and steps were taken to erect one, for previous to this they had had no stated place for public worship, but the school-houses in town had been used for this purpose. The foundation for the new church was this year put in, and some of the building material secured and a sufficient sum of money raised so that work upon the church could be commenced. In the spring of 1833, Rev. Mr. Hinds went to Boston to solicit funds towards building, and obtained from Hon. Lee Claffin one hundred dollars. Rev. Amos Binney also contributed something; this, with what the citizens of the town paid themselves, enabled them to complete the house that year without incurring any debt of the society. The building committee were Abraham Drake, Elijah Sanders and Cheney Reed; the contractors were True Sanborn and Hiram Chase; the master-workman was Caleb Beede, a local preacher. According to tradition, the house was dedicated November 23, 1833. The Rev. George Stores preached the dedicatory sermon. With the close of 1833 ended the pastorate of Mr. Hinds, and it is safe to say that no minister of this church ever had a greater public respect or a deeper personal affection. Next came Rev. William S. Locke, who remained one year; from 1835 to 1836, Rev. William S. Kidder; from 1836 to 1837, Rev. Warren Wilber; from 1837 to 1839, Rev. Arnold Adams; from 1839 to 1840, Rev. B. D. Brewster; from 1840 to 1841, M. A.

Howe; from 1841 to 1842, Rev. Rufus Tilton; from 1842 to 1843, Rev. Lewis Howard; from 1843 to 1844, Rev. J. G. Gale; from 1844 to 1845, A. H. Worthing; from 1845 to 1846, Rev. C. F. Bailey; from 1846 to 1848, Rev. F. A. Hewes; from 1848 to 1849, Rev. A. Folsom; from 1849 to 1850, Rev. A. Heath; from 1850 to 1852, Rev. G. W. T. Rogers; from 1852 to 1854, James Adams; from 1854 to 1855, Elijah Wilkins; from 1855 to 1857, John Gould; from 1857 to 1858, Rev. A. Kidder; from 1858 to 1860, J. Fawcett; from 1860 to 1862, Rev. William D. Cass; from 1862 to 1864, Rev. M. T. Cilley; from 1864 to 1866, Rev. C. H. Smith; from 1866 to 1868, Rev. S. F. Lougee; from 1868 to 1869, Rev. H. H. Hartwell; from 1869 to 1872, Rev. George Beebe; from 1872 to 1874, Rev. Samuel Belle; from 1874 to 1875, Rev. Lorenzo Draper; from 1875 to 1876, no preacher; from 1876 to 1878, Rev. A. R. Lunt; from 1878 to 1881, Rev. A. A. Caswell; from 1881 to 1882, Rev. S. Holman supplied; from 1882 to 1883, Rev. A. Twichel; from 1883 to 1885, J. W. Bean.

Advent Society.—We hardly know when, or under what circumstances, the Advent Society in Chichester came into existence; but since 1843, the time fixed by the Advents, generally, for the final consummation of all terrestrial things and the end of the world, there have been a few of these people in town, who held meetings occasionally, in school-houses, until 1864, when Mr. Eneas Ordway, one of the most enthusiastic of the sect, determined to erect an Advent chapel in which to worship; but not being able to bear all of the expense himself, solicited aid from those who favored the enterprise. Several responded cheerfully to his call, and a small sum was subscribed and paid to Mr. Ordway, who built the chapel and paid the balance of the expense himself, and in 1864 the house was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies, and the following very singular notice posted in the vestibule: "All seats free, and no politics or slavery to be preached in this house." The society has never had a settled pastor, although there has been more or less preaching in the house every year since by ministers of different denominations of this and other towns. In 1884, Mr. Ordway died, and in 1885 the chapel was sold by his administrator to Mr. George H. Haines, who proposes to use it as a store-house for carriages and sleighs, of which he is an extensive manufacturer and dealer. As the leading members of the society are either dead or removed from town, and the church turned into a carriage mart, the Advent Society is in a fair way to become extinct in Chichester at no distant day.

Physicians.—Amasa Kelley, the first physician in Chichester, was born at Amesbury, Mass., in 1765; studied medicine with Dr. Cogswell, of Atkinson; practiced medicine in Pittsfield from 1795 to 1799; came to Chichester in 1799 and settled at Kelley's Corner, the place subsequently occupied by his son, Daniel R. Kelley, Esq., who died upon the old homestead. Dr. Kelley practiced medicine forty years in Chichester, and died April 7, 1847, at the age of eighty-two.

Dr. Kelley was considered a very successful physician, and universally respected by all. In his religious belief he was decidedly orthodox, and held firmly to that doctrine. He was conscientious and upright in all his dealings, constant in his attendance upon public worship, while his age and strength would permit, and an example of temperance, faith and charity.

Dr. James A. Tilton was born in Canaan, N. H., December 1815; graduated at Dartmouth College; entered the Medical Department and graduated October 26, 1841, and soon came to Chichester and commenced the practice of medicine. While here he was married to Miss Sarah T. Stanyan, daughter of Abram Stanyan, who died at Newburyport, Mass., April, 1881. After practicing here for several years he removed to Penbrooke, N. H., and thence to Amesbury, Mass.; remained there twelve years and established a good reputation as a physician. From Amesbury he removed to Newburyport, where he remained in successful practice until his death, which occurred in 1861. Dr. Osborn came here in 1793 and practiced a while. Dr. Samuel Sargent commenced to practice in 1818 and died in 1851. Dr. Wilder also practiced here a while. Dr. W. A. Mack was born at Haverhill, N. H., October 3, 1824; fitted for college at Gilmanton Academy and graduated from the Academic Department of Dartmouth College in 1844; entered the Medical Department and graduated from there in 1847; practiced medicine in company with the late Dr. Tenney in Pittsfield two years; he then came to Chichester, where he was in active practice for seven years; he then removed to Pittsfield, and practiced medicine several years; he then gave up the practice of medicine and went into the apothecary business, in which business he still remains.

Dr. Moses Hill was born at Warner, N. H., May 3, 1805; graduated from Dartmouth Medical College in 1831; began the practice of medicine in Chichester the same year; removed to Northwood, thence to Manchester, and in 1849 went to California; returned in 1852, then removed to Louisiana, where he died in 1875.

Dr. John Fellows came to Chichester in 1862 and practiced medicine several years, also held the office of town clerk one year; he then removed to Concord, where he also practiced medicine until his death.

Dr. Bradley H. Bartlett was born at Grantham, N. H., March 18, 1829; removed to Pittsfield when a young man; served in the Union army in the War of the Rebellion; studied medicine; graduated at the Philadelphia Medical University February 21, 1866. Commenced the practice of medicine in Chichester in 1868; remained nearly two years; he then removed to Anherst, where he had an extensive practice until his death, which occurred December 29, 1878.

Dr. Whidden came to Chichester in 1869; practiced medicine a short time and died.

Dr. George Beebe came to Chichester in 1870, and practiced medicine three years, and also preached to the Methodist Church and society; also held the office of superintending school committee.

Orrin Strong Sanders, M.D., was born in Epsom, N. H., September 24, 1820. He is the son of Colonel Job and Polly Sanders, being the eldest of four sons. He was educated at the district school in his own town, and at Gilmanton and Pembroke Academies in New Hampshire, paying his expenses by teaching schools in his own and neighboring towns, and it is said of him that, as a teacher, he was eminently successful. He commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Hanover Dickey, of Epsom, and in 1841 he attended his first course of medical lectures at Dartmouth Medical College. He afterwards continued his studies with Dr. Haynes, of Concord, N. H., and also with Drs. Chadbourn and Buck. In the spring of 1843 he went to Lowell, Mass., and completed his studies with Drs. Wheelock, Graves and Allen. In the fall of 1843 he graduated at the Castleton Medical College, Vermont, and commenced the practice of medicine in Effingham, where he remained until 1847, when he came to Chichester; he remained here about a year and a half in successful practice; he then moved to Boston, Mass., and from that time to the present Dr. Sanders has followed his profession in Boston, and has been from the first conspicuous among the physicians of that city for his extensive and lucrative practice and his successful treatment of disease.

Civil List.—The following is a list of the proprietors' town officers:

1728.—William Stanford, clerk; Benjamin Perkins, Benjamin Lambre, Jehro Tilton, selectmen.

1729.—William Stanford, clerk; Jabez Smith, Charles Stuart, Jacob Moulton, selectmen.

1730.—William Stanford, clerk; David Wear, Jonathan Garland, Nathan Longfellow, selectmen.

1731.—William Stanford, clerk; Jabez Smith, Josiah Moulton, Josiah Batchelder, selectmen.

1732.—William Stanford, clerk; Benjamin Lambre, Charles Treadwell, Edmund Rand, selectmen.

1733.—William Stanford, clerk; Ichabod Roby, Nathaniel Drake, Christopher Page, selectmen.

1734.—William Stanford, clerk; John Sheatsorn, Jonathan Cram, Joseph Fosse, selectmen.

1735.—William Stanford, clerk; Rodger Shaw, Abram Drake, Benjamin Moody, selectmen.

1736.—William Stanford, clerk; Rodger Shaw, Abram Drake, Benjamin Moody, selectmen.

1737.—William Stanford, clerk; Shubal Sanborn, John Dearborn, William Stanford, selectmen.

1738.—William Stanford, clerk; John Batchelder, Benjamin Hilliard, Samuel Palmer, selectmen.

1739.—William Stanford, clerk; Ichabod Roby, Jonathan Garland, Benjamin James, selectmen.

1740.—William Stanford, clerk; Christopher Page, John Dearborn, Benjamin James, selectmen.

1741.—William Stanford, clerk; Joseph Worth, Benjamin James, Edmund Rand, selectmen.

1742.—William Stanford, clerk; Thomas Cram, Jonathan Garland, Samuel Martin, selectmen.

1743.—William Stanford, clerk; Thomas Cram, Jonathan Garland, Edmund Rand, selectmen.

1744.—William Stanford, clerk; William Stanford, Nathan Tilton, Josiah Moulton, selectmen.

1745.—William Stanford, clerk; Josiah Moulton, Abram Drake, William Stanford, selectmen.

1746.—William Stanford, clerk; Christopher Page, Edmund Rand, Solomon Page, selectmen.

1747.—William Stanford, clerk; Edmund Rand, Jabez Smith, William Stanford, selectmen.

1748.—William Stanford, clerk; Christopher Page, Josiah Moulton, William Stanford, selectmen.

1749.—William Stanford, clerk; Jonathan Garland, Christopher Page, Nathaniel Ward, selectmen.

1750.—William Stanford, clerk; John Sherburne, Jacob Moulton, Abram Drake, selectmen.

1751.—William Stanford, clerk; Jabez Smith, Abram Drake, Thomas Rand, selectmen.

1752.—William Stanford, clerk; Abram Drake, Jeremiah Sanborn, Obediah Worth, selectmen.

1753.—William Stanford, clerk; Edward Shaw, Jeremiah Sanborn, Obediah Worth, selectmen.

1754.—William Stanford, clerk; William Stanford, Jonathan Leavitt, Nathaniel Drake, selectmen.

1755.—William Stanford, clerk; Joseph Johnson, Jonathan Towle, Obediah Worth, selectmen.

1756.—William Stanford, clerk; Joseph Johnson, Jonathan Towle, Jonathan Cram, selectmen.

1757.—Jonathan Leavitt, clerk; Samuel Garland, Joseph Johnson, Benjamin Moulton, selectmen.

1758.—Jonathan Leavitt, clerk; Joseph Johnson, Samuel Garland, Jonathan Towle, selectmen.

1759.—Jonathan Leavitt, clerk; Joseph Johnson, Jonathan Towle, Jonathan Shaw, selectmen.

1760.—Jonathan Leavitt, clerk; Jonathan Leavitt, Jonathan Shaw, Joseph Woad, selectmen.

1761.—Jonathan Leavitt, clerk; Jonathan Leavitt, Jonathan Towle, Samuel Garland, selectmen.

1762.—Jonathan Leavitt, clerk; Jonathan Leavitt, Jonathan Towle, Samuel Garland, selectmen.

1763.—Jonathan Leavitt, clerk; Jonathan Leavitt, Jacob Moulton, Jonathan Towle, selectmen.

1764.—Jonathan Leavitt, clerk; Jonathan Leavitt, Josiah Moulton, Jonathan Towle, selectmen.

1765.—Jonathan Leavitt, clerk; Josiah Moulton, Joseph Johnson, John Moulton, selectmen.

1766.—Jonathan Leavitt, clerk; John Moulton, Josiah Moulton, Jonathan Leavitt, selectmen.

1767.—John Moulton, clerk; Jonathan Leavitt, John Moulton, Josiah Moulton, selectmen.

1768.—John Moulton, clerk; Josiah Moulton, Jonathan Leavitt, Thomas Rand, John Moulton, Joseph Johnson, selectmen.

1769.—John Moulton, clerk; Josiah Moulton, Jonathan Leavitt, Thomas Rand, John Moulton, Joseph Johnson, selectmen.

1770.—John Moulton, clerk; Josiah Moulton, John Moulton, Thomas Rand, John Lamprey, Cotton Ward, selectmen.

1771.—John Moulton, clerk; John Moulton, Jonathan Leavitt, John Moulton, selectmen.

1772.—John Moulton, clerk; Christopher Tappan, Micajah Merrill, John Lamprey, selectmen.

1773.—John Moulton, clerk; John Moulton, Josiah Moulton, John Lamprey, selectmen.

1774.—John Moulton, clerk; John Moulton, Josiah Moulton, John Lamprey, selectmen.

1775.—John Moulton, clerk; Josiah Moulton, John Moulton, John Lamprey, selectmen.

1776.—John Moulton, clerk; John Lamprey, Samuel Drake, John Moulton, selectmen.

- 1777.—John Moulton, clerk; John Lamprey, Samuel Drake, John Moulton, selectmen.
- 1778.—John Moulton, clerk; John Lamprey, John Moulton, Edward Shaw, selectmen.
- 1779.—John Moulton, clerk; John Lamprey, John Moulton, Edward Shaw, selectmen.
- 1780.—John Moulton, clerk; John Lamprey, Edward Shaw, John Moulton, selectmen.
- 1781.—John Moulton, clerk; John Moulton, Joshua James, John Lamprey, selectmen.
- 1782.—John Moulton, clerk; John Moulton, Joshua James, John Lamprey, selectmen.
- 1783.—John Moulton, clerk; John Moulton, Joshua James, John Lamprey, selectmen.
- 1784.—John Moulton, clerk; John Moulton, Joshua James, John Lamprey, selectmen.
- 1785.—John Moulton, clerk; John Moulton, Joshua James, John Lamprey, selectmen.
- 1786.—John Moulton, clerk; John Moulton, John Dearborn, Joshua James, selectmen.
- 1787.—John Moulton, clerk; John Moulton, John Taylor, Benjamin Sanborn, selectmen.
- 1788.—John Moulton, clerk; John Moulton, Joshua James, Jeremiah Lane, selectmen.
- 1789.—John Moulton, clerk; John Moulton, Joshua James, Jeremiah Lane, selectmen.
- 1790.—John Moulton, Josiah James, David Kichelder, selectmen.
- 1791.—John Moulton, clerk; William Chase, John Moulton, Joshua James, selectmen.
- 1792.—John Moulton, clerk; John Dearborn, John Moulton, Joshua James, selectmen.
- 1793.—John Moulton, clerk; John Dearborn, John Moulton, Joshua James, selectmen.
- 1794.—John Dearborn, John Moulton, Joshua James, selectmen.
- 1795.—John Moulton, Benjamin Sanborn, Joshua James, selectmen.
- 1796.—Joseph Dow (first proprietors' clerk in Chichester), John Hilliard, Samuel Brown, Ebenezer Prescott (proprietors' first Board of Selectmen in Chichester).
- The following is a list of the first town officers:
- 1773.—John Cram, town clerk; Ebenezer Barton, Samuel Davis, John Cram, selectmen.
- 1774.—John Cram, town clerk; Ebenezer Barton, Samuel Davis, John Cram, selectmen.
- 1775.—John Cram, town clerk; John Cram, David Knowlton, Jonathan Stanyan, selectmen.
- 1776.—John Cram, town clerk; Jonathan Leavitt, John Brown, Jeremiah Sanborn, selectmen.
- 1777.—John Cram, town clerk; Jeremiah Sanborn, Jonathan Leavitt, Jeremiah Garland, selectmen.
- 1778.—John Cram, town clerk; Jonathan Leavitt, Dyer Hook, Samuel Philbrick, selectmen.
- 1779.—John Cram, town clerk; Dyer Hook, Jonathan Leavitt, Samuel Philbrick, selectmen.
- 1780.—John Cram, town clerk; Simeon Hilliard, James Cram, selectmen.
- 1781.—Dyer Hook, town clerk; Simeon Hilliard, James Cram, Elijah Ring, selectmen.
- 1782.—Simeon Hilliard, town clerk; Benjamin Jackson, Jeremiah Sanborn, selectmen.
- 1783.—Simeon Hilliard, town clerk; William Seavey, Jonathan Leavitt, Dyer Hook, selectmen.
- 1784.—Simeon Hilliard, town clerk; Elijah Ring, Simeon Hilliard, Benjamin Jackson, selectmen.
- 1785.—Simeon Hilliard, town clerk; Elijah Ring, Edmund Leavitt, Simeon Hilliard, selectmen.
- 1786.—Simeon Hilliard, town clerk; Elijah Ring, Edmund Leavitt, Simeon Hilliard, selectmen.
- 1787.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; Elijah Ring, Edmund Leavitt, Simeon Hilliard, selectmen.
- 1788.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; Jonathan Leavitt, Abram True, Nathaniel Morrill, selectmen.
- 1789.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; Abram True, Nathaniel Morrill, Simeon Hilliard, selectmen.
- 1790.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; Simeon Hilliard, Abram True, Nathaniel Morrill, selectmen.

- 1791.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; Abram True, Nathaniel Morrill, Zebulon Hilliard, selectmen.
- 1792.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; Abram True, Nathaniel Morrill, Zebulon Hilliard, selectmen.
- 1793.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; Dudley Sanborn, Joshua Lane, Edmund Leavitt, selectmen.
- 1794.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; Edmund Leavitt, Joshua Lane, Moses Seavey, selectmen.
- 1795.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; Edmund Leavitt, Joshua Lane, Moses Seavey, selectmen.
- 1796.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; Moses Seavey, Abram True, Joshua Lane, selectmen.
- 1797.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; Moses Seavey, Abram True, Joshua Lane, selectmen; Nathaniel Morrill, representative.
- 1798.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; Moses Seavey, Abram True, Joshua Lane, selectmen; Nathaniel Morrill, representative.
- 1799.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; Joshua Lane, Moses Seavey, Abraham True, selectmen; Nathaniel Morrill, representative.
- 1800.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; Joseph Dow, Jonathan Leavitt, Asa Lane, selectmen; Nathaniel Morrill, representative.
- 1801.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; Moses Seavey, Abram True, Moses Lane, selectmen; Nathaniel Morrill, representative.
- 1802.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; George Seavey, Enoch Tilton, Jeremiah Lane, selectmen; Nathaniel Morrill, representative.
- 1803.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; George Seavey, Jonathan Stanyan, Joseph Dow, selectmen; Nathaniel Morrill, representative.
- 1804.—Joseph Dow, town clerk; Enoch Tilton, George Seavey, Jeremiah Lane, selectmen; Nathaniel Morrill, representative.
- 1805.—Moses Seavey, town clerk; John Marden, Asa Lane, Joseph Sanborn, selectmen; Nathaniel Morrill, representative.
- 1806.—Moses Seavey, town clerk; George Tilton, Moses Seavey, Joseph Dow, selectmen; Nathaniel Morrill, representative.
- 1807.—Moses Seavey, town clerk; Ebenezer Tate, Joseph Sanborn, Asa Lane, selectmen; Nathaniel Morrill, representative.
- 1808.—Moses Seavey, town clerk; Ebenezer Tate, Joseph Sanborn, Asa Lane, selectmen; Abram True, representative.
- 1809.—Moses Seavey, town clerk; Joshua Lane, Jacob Moulton, Jacob Sanborn, selectmen; Abram True, representative.
- 1810.—Moses Seavey, town clerk; Joshua Lane, Moses Seavey, Jacob S. Moulton, selectmen; Abram True, representative.
- 1811.—Moses Seavey, town clerk; Joshua Lane, Jacob Moulton, John Marden, selectmen; Abram True, representative.
- 1812.—Moses Seavey, town clerk; selectmen same as previous year; Abram True, representative.
- 1813.—Moses Seavey, town clerk; selectmen same as two previous years; Moses Seavey, representative.
- 1814.—Jacob Moulton, town clerk; Joseph Sanborn, Jacob S. Moulton, John Marden, selectmen; Moses Seavey, representative.
- 1815.—Jacob Moulton, town clerk; selectmen same as last year; Moses Seavey, representative.
- 1816.—Jacob Moulton, town clerk; Joshua Lane, Asa Lane, John Marden, selectmen; Moses Seavey, representative.
- 1817.—Joshua Lane, John Marden, James Hook, selectmen; Samuel Langley, representative.
- 1818.—Jacob Moulton, town clerk; selectmen same as previous year; Samuel Langley, representative.
- 1819.—Jacob Moulton, town clerk; Joshua Lane, Enoch Tilton, Moses Seavey, selectmen; Joshua Lane, representative.
- 1820.—D. M. Carpenter, town clerk; Joshua Lane, James Hook, James Blake, selectmen; no representative.
- 1821.—D. M. Carpenter, town clerk; Josiah Mason, Jacob S. Moulton, Nathaniel Sherburne, selectmen; Joshua Lane, representative.
- 1822.—D. M. Carpenter, town clerk; Henry Robey, James Batchelder, Ephraim Leavitt, selectmen; David M. Carpenter, representative.
- 1823.—D. M. Carpenter, town clerk; Henry Robey, James Batchelder, John Marden, selectmen; D. M. Carpenter, representative.
- 1824.—D. M. Carpenter, town clerk; selectmen same as previous year; D. M. Carpenter, representative.
- 1825.—D. M. Carpenter, town clerk; Henry Robey, James Batchelder, Cal-4 Parker, selectmen; D. M. Carpenter, representative.
- 1826.—D. M. Carpenter, town clerk; Joshua Lane, James Batchelder, John Marden, selectmen; D. M. Carpenter, representative.
- 1827.—Chester Reed, town clerk; Benjamin Emery, James Batchelder, David Kelley, selectmen; no representative.
- 1828.—Chester Reed, town clerk; selectmen same as last year; D. M. Carpenter, representative.

- 1826.—D. M. Carpenter, town clerk; Henry Roby, James Batchelder, David Drake, selectmen; Samuel Sargent, representative.
- 1829.—D. M. Carpenter, town clerk; David Drake, John True, Henry Roby, selectmen; Samuel Sargent, representative.
- 1831.—D. M. Carpenter, town clerk; Benjamin Kaine, James Batchelder, Abram Drake, selectmen; Henry Roby, representative.
- 1832.—Nathaniel Sherburn, town clerk; Abram Drake, John True, Benjamin Kaine, selectmen; Henry Roby, representative.
- 1833.—Nathaniel Sherburn, town clerk; Henry Roby, John True, Abram Drake, selectmen; Nathaniel Sherburn, representative.
- 1834.—Nathaniel Sherburn, town clerk; J. N. C. Leavitt, James Batchelder, Henry Roby, selectmen; Nathaniel Sherburn, representative.
- 1835.—Nathaniel Sherburn, town clerk; D. R. Kelley, D. M. Carpenter, J. N. C. Leavitt, selectmen; John True, representative.
- 1836.—Nathaniel Sherburn, town clerk; selectmen same as previous year; John True, representative.
- 1837.—Nathaniel Sherburn, town clerk; D. K. Foster, G. S. Mason, William Swann, selectmen; James Batchelder, representative.
- 1838.—Nathaniel Sherburn, town clerk; selectmen same as previous year; James Batchelder, representative.
- 1839.—Nathaniel Sherburn, town clerk; Nathaniel Sherburn, John Baly, H. C. Knowlton, selectmen; J. N. C. Leavitt, representative.
- 1840.—E. Langmaid, town clerk; selectmen same as previous year; J. N. C. Leavitt, representative.
- 1841.—E. Langmaid, town clerk; D. R. Kelley, James Batchelder, H. C. Knowlton, selectmen; John Bailey, representative.
- 1842.—E. Langmaid, town clerk; D. M. Carpenter, Nathaniel Seavey, D. R. Kelley, selectmen; John Bailey, representative.
- 1843.—E. Langmaid, town clerk; G. S. Mason, D. M. Carpenter, H. C. Knowlton, selectmen; Nathaniel Seavey, representative.
- 1844.—E. Langmaid, town clerk; E. Langmaid, D. M. Carpenter, G. S. Mason, selectmen; Nathaniel Seavey, representative.
- 1845.—E. Langmaid, town clerk; H. C. Knowlton, Malachi Haines, George S. Mason, selectmen; Hosca C. Knowlton, representative.
- 1846.—H. C. Knowlton, town clerk; E. Langmaid, Malachi Haines, G. S. Mason, selectmen; Hosca C. Knowlton, representative.
- 1847.—H. C. Knowlton, town clerk; E. Langmaid, D. R. Kelley, J. N. C. Leavitt, selectmen; George S. Mason, representative.
- 1848.—H. C. Knowlton, town clerk; selectmen same as previous year; George S. Mason, representative.
- 1849.—H. C. Knowlton, town clerk; H. C. Knowlton, Peter J. Hook, G. S. Mason, selectmen; Edward Langmaid, representative.
- 1850.—H. C. Knowlton, town clerk; H. C. Knowlton, Peter J. Hook, Joseph C. Greenough, selectmen; Edward Langmaid, representative.
- 1851.—H. C. Knowlton, town clerk; D. K. Foster, G. S. Mason, J. C. Greenough, selectmen; Peter J. Hook, representative.
- 1852.—George P. Haines, town clerk; G. S. Mason, H. C. Knowlton, Joshua Lane, selectmen; Peter J. Hook, representative.
- 1853.—E. Langmaid, town clerk; E. Langmaid, Joshua Lane, Thomas Berry, selectmen; John Lake, representative.
- 1854.—E. Langmaid, town clerk; E. Langmaid, Thomas Berry, John S. Durign, selectmen; John Lake, representative.
- 1855.—E. Langmaid, town clerk; H. C. Knowlton, James Blake, Benjamin F. Leavitt, selectmen; Charles H. Carpenter, representative.
- 1856.—E. Langmaid, town clerk; H. C. Knowlton, B. F. Leavitt, Hiram Batchelder, selectmen; Charles H. Carpenter, representative.
- 1857.—William F. Locke, town clerk; Charles H. Carpenter, Hiram Batchelder, Madison Bailey, selectmen; Benjamin F. Leavitt, representative.
- 1858.—William F. Locke, town clerk; C. H. Carpenter, Madison Bailey, J. L. Batchelder, selectmen; Benjamin F. Leavitt, representative.
- 1859.—William F. Locke, town clerk; J. N. C. Leavitt, J. L. Batchelder, Charles H. Carpenter, selectmen; Joshua Lane, representative.
- 1860.—John Fellows, town clerk; J. N. C. Leavitt, J. L. Batchelder, J. S. Sherburn, selectmen; Joshua Lane, representative.
- 1861.—John Fellows, town clerk; J. N. C. Leavitt, J. S. Sherburn, Stephen Perkins, selectmen; Thomas Berry, representative.
- 1862.—David T. Brown, town clerk; J. L. Batchelder, Amos Hoyt, Stephen Perkins, selectmen; Thomas Berry, representative.
- 1863.—David T. Brown, town clerk; J. L. Batchelder, C. H. Carpenter, Amos Hoyt, selectmen; Moses R. Lake, representative.
- 1864.—David T. Brown, town clerk; C. H. Carpenter, G. S. Mason, D. A. Farrington, selectmen; Moses R. Lake, representative.
- 1865.—Charles Lake, town clerk; C. H. Carpenter, D. A. Farrington, G. S. Mason, selectmen; Madison Bailey, representative.

- 1866.—Charles Lake, town clerk; D. A. Farrington, David T. Brown, G. S. Mason, selectmen; Madison Bailey, representative.
- 1867.—Charles Lake, town clerk; David T. Brown, G. S. Mason, Augustus Leavitt, selectmen; Hiram Batchelder, representative.
- 1868.—Charles Lake, town clerk; A. Leavitt, Charles C. Shaw, John Fellows, selectmen; Hiram Batchelder, representative.
- 1869.—John C. Leavitt, town clerk; selectmen same as previous year; John S. Sherburn, representative.
- 1870.—John C. Leavitt, town clerk; A. Leavitt, Charles Lake, E. W. Towle, selectmen; John S. Sherburn, representative.
- 1871.—G. W. Lane, town clerk; Augustus Leavitt, Charles Lake, Lewis W. Towle, selectmen; no representative.
- 1872.—G. W. Lane, town clerk; Charles Lake, James S. Greene, E. W. Towle, selectmen; Samuel Langmaid, representative.
- 1873.—George W. Lane, town clerk; Augustus Leavitt, S. Ambrose Brown, Asa F. Hutchinson, selectmen; Samuel W. Langmaid, representative.
- 1874.—G. W. Lane, town clerk; S. Ambrose Brown, Asa F. Hutchinson, Jeremiah L. Perkins, selectmen; John Fellows, representative.
- 1875.—George W. Lane, town clerk; David T. Brown, Hiram Batchelder, Jacob S. Sanborn, selectmen; John Fellows, representative.
- 1876.—Charles Lake, town clerk; J. S. Sanborn, John Shaw, George M. Warren, selectmen; Carpenter S. Stevens, representative.
- 1877.—C. A. Langmaid, town clerk; John Shaw, George M. Warren, Horace Carpenter, selectmen; Charles Lake, representative.
- 1878.—C. A. Langmaid, town clerk; D. T. Brown, G. Munsey, Hiram Carpenter, selectmen; Charles Lake, representative.
- 1879.—C. A. Langmaid, town clerk; D. T. Brown, George Munsey, Stephen R. Watson, selectmen; George W. Lane, representative.
- 1880.—C. A. Langmaid, town clerk; A. Leavitt, Albert Sanborn, Jacob S. Sanborn, selectmen; Geo. W. Lane, representative.
- 1881.—C. A. Langmaid, town clerk; Augustus Leavitt, Jacob S. Sanborn, Albert Sanborn, selectmen; David T. Brown, representative.
- 1882.—C. A. Langmaid, town clerk; G. M. Warren, Noah Edmunds, Benjamin Shaw, selectmen; David T. Brown.
- 1883.—Nathaniel Batchelder, town clerk; George M. Warren, Noah G. Edmunds, Benjamin Shaw, selectmen; Hiram Hook, representative.
- 1884.—Nathaniel Batchelder, town clerk; Noah G. Edmunds, Benjamin Shaw, Nathan Fitts, selectmen; Hiram Hook.
- 1885.—Walter S. Langmaid, town clerk; N. G. Edmunds, John S. Sherburn, Abram M. Drake, selectmen; Charles C. Shaw, representative.

Manufacture of Carriages and Sleighs.—About 1857, Mr. Reuben Locke and four sons, all journeymen carriage-painters, came here from Gilmantown and erected a commodious shop for the manufacture of carriages and sleighs, and for some five years carried on quite an extensive business in that line, especially in the department of carriage-painting; but the war for the suppression of the Rebellion coming on, the sons all enlisted into the Union army; the father, left alone, soon sold out and left town. Not much was done in the carriage business for several years, but, in 1867, Mr. George H. Haines, a Union soldier, began the carriage business in a small way in the shop formerly occupied by the Lockes. From the commencement Mr. Haines' business steadily increased, so that in 1869 it became necessary to occupy more commodious and convenient buildings; he therefore erected his main shop, the lower story of which he uses for a wood-shop and the upper story for a paint-shop and trimming-room; also erected a blacksmith-shop, and soon after built a large two-story building for storing stock and finished carriages, in which can be found at all seasons of the year a large variety of carriages and sleighs of different styles and values. A few years ago Mr. Haines built a second blacksmith-shop, and more recently purchased the old Advent Chapel and fitted it up for a sales-room for his wares, making in all five large buildings, all of which are used to their uttermost capacity in his increasing business. Mr. Haines not only has a home-trade, but is shipping his goods to Boston and other cities of New England.

Turnpike.—The construction of a turnpike road from Concord to Piscataqua bridge, in Durham, through the town of Chichester, was one of the greatest events of the eighteenth century to the original settlers. For, previous to the building of this turnpike, Canterbury road had been the great thoroughfare upon which the people traveled, who had occasion to pass through the town. The road was very cheaply built, and without sufficient bridges, so that at times it was almost impracticable for travel. This was the first constructed turnpike in New Hampshire. The company building it was incorporated in 1797. Upon its completion and for many years afterward there was an extensive travel upon it. Merchants from Central New Hampshire and Vermont transported their goods from Portsmouth up over this road, and immense quantities of lumber, beef, pork and farm produce was carried down to exchange for goods. Toll-gates were established at different points along the line of the road, and gate-keepers appointed to collect toll of travelers using the road.

The extensive travel upon the road made a demand for hotel accommodations. Consequently one was erected in Chichester, and kept by John T. Leavitt, who did a flourishing business. This house is still standing and owned by Charles C. Drake. After Leavitt, Benjamin Emery and John Langly kept the house. In 1817, when President Monroe passed down the turnpike from Concord to Dover, he halted here for a while to rest his horses; and many were the calls made by Daniel Webster and other distinguished jurists and public officials when going to and from Portsmouth. General Lafayette, when he visited this country (1824), passed over this road. In 1807, General James Blake erected a hotel and blacksmith-shop, and carried on an extensive business until 1838, when he left, and his son, James M. Blake, continued the business until 1844, when he closed up. The lucrative business which hotel-keepers and toll-gate keepers had done on the turnpike was now at an end; for other routes and means of transportation had been discovered. The railroad and steam-engine were already taking the place of the turnpike and horses and oxen. The company that built the turnpike gave it up; the town took it up, and have ever since kept it in repair. A. J. Sherburn kept a hotel here, on the Blake place, from 1862 to 1868, when his hotel was burned.

Country Stores.—The first store was kept on the turnpike by a Mr. Bradley, in 1800. Next came Benjamin Emery, in 1817, who remained for several years. Then Jonathan Pierce and Olive Smart commenced keeping store in 1825, and did business four or five years, who were succeeded by Philip Deane, who also remained four or five years. Then Jonathan Pierce again, from 1833 to 1839, and then Leavitt & Son kept a grocery-store to a while about 1870. Nathaniel Seavey commenced keeping store in 1833, and did a successful business until December 4, 1851, when he was suddenly seized with violent hemorrhage in his store and died. Mr. Seavey was a man who carried into the business transactions of every-day life all the Christian virtues, and was known, far and wide, as the honest merchant. Messrs. Fisk & Fellows kept a grocery-store at the Pine Ground from 1830 to 1835. Mr. Charles Hopkinson also kept a store a while there. Henry Robey did business for several years; then Sumner Spaulding traded a while, when Joseph Morse purchased the store and goods in 1863, and has kept a country store since. George P. Haines commenced trading at the Pine Ground in 1847, and carried on the manufacture of matches, in connection with his store for several years; then kept hotel for a while; he also carried on quite an extensive shoe manufacturing a number of years, since which time he has continued his store only. Mr. Haines is a veteran merchant, having been in trade longer, and sold more goods than any of his contemporaries or predecessors, and is celebrated throughout this section of the county for honesty and fair dealing.

In 1857 a union store building was erected at Chichester Centre, near the Methodist meeting-house, and Carter Wilder kept a country store for several years, when John S. Drake bought the goods and continued the business for three or four years, when he sold out to Jonathan H. Leavitt. Mr. Leavitt remained in the grocery business several years, when Charles L. Brown purchased the stock of goods and continued the business for a while. Next came Jonathan Kendall, Jr., son of Jonathan Kendall, of Lowell, Mass., who remained several years in trade, when Augustus Sheldon purchased the goods and leased the store building. Mr. Sheldon kept a grocery-store and also the post-office for two or three years, when Herbert T. Leavitt, son of Hazen K. Leavitt, came here from Tilton, N. H., where he had been in successful business for several years, and purchased the stock in trade of Mr. Sheldon, filled up the store with a choice line of groceries and dry-goods, and has ever since done a flourishing business for a country merchant. Mr. Leavitt is quite an extensive dealer in corn and flour, having last year leased a building erected for the purpose, at the Chichester railway station, for storing his corn, flour, grain and other heavy goods which he is constantly receiving from the West by the car-load.

Cemeteries.—There are five public cemeteries, besides several private ones, in town. For the first fifty years of the town's history the dead were buried upon their own land or that of their neighbors, or, in some cases, several families would unite in incluing a small piece of ground for a cemetery. One of these is located on Brown's Hill, in the north part of the town, in which many of the early settlers in that section of the town are buried. We find that one hundred or more are buried in this cemetery. Many of these graves will forever remain unknown, as no marked stone has been erected. In fact, we find upon no grave-stone in town an earlier date than 1804, and this upon the grave-stone of Jonathan Leavitt, Esq. Another cemetery is located near the hearse-house, on Canterbury road, in which were buried several of the early settlers of the town. The first settled minister of the town and several members of his family, including Hon. David M. Carpenter, were buried here, and a fine marble monument marks their final resting-place. Very few persons have been buried here during the past forty years. Another cemetery is located near the former residence of H. C. Knowlton, Esq., in which were buried the early settlers of that section of the town,—the Leavitts, the Lanes, the Stanfords and others. The yard has recently been enlarged and improved. The town cemetery, situated at the Pine Ground (so called), containing two acres, was set apart by the town for a public burial-place, and is one of the most suitable locations for such a purpose to be found in town. There are over one hundred and fifty persons buried here, a large proportion of whom have died within the last twenty-five years; and about a dozen marble and granite monuments are erected. Among the most expensive and beautiful, are the granite ones erected by Charles H. Carpenter, Esq., and Charles C. Shaw, Esq. Reuben Lake and the Hook family have fine marble monuments.

The new cemetery, situated on a beautiful swell of land, a few rods west of the Methodist Church in Chichester, was built by a stock company incorporated at the session of the Legislature in 1854. The original stockholders were Hazen K. Leavitt, Solomon Leavitt, Jacob P. Leavitt, Benjamin F. Leavitt, G. W. West, Moses W. Page, Richard Locke, True Sanborn, True Sanborn, Jr., and Benning Sanborn. This company purchased several acres of land, inclosed it with a neat and substantial fence, constructed a beautiful drive-way across a valley to it, divided it off into lots, set out shade-trees and otherwise improved it. Many of the lots have been sold, and one hundred and thirty persons of all ages are buried here. Some very fine monuments have recently been erected, notably those of Hazen K. Leavitt and Benning Sanborn.

The following persons paid taxes to the amount of ten dollars and over in 1812:

John Berry	$10.97	Jonathan Leavitt	$10.89
Peter Hook	14.40	Edmund R. Leavitt	14.91
James Hook	13.40	Samuel Sargent	13.63
Malachi Barnes	11.06	Thomas Lake	13.44
Joshua Lane	12.78	Abram True	11.17
Jeremiah Lake	11.69	Samuel Langley	13.88
William Lake	11.93	John T. Leavitt	11.30

John Mayfield	$11.70	Caleb Pearson	$16.66
Ebenezer Lane	10.00	Jacob Stanyan	16.47
David Miller	12.96	Joshua Shaw	11.27
Myahaj Morrill	13.03	John Stanyan	12.73
Stephen Perkins	12.26	David Brown	12.34

The following persons paid taxes to the amount of ten dollars and upwards in 1820:

Abram True	$19.27	Benjamin Shaw	$11.20
Moses Newey	16.61	Jeremiah Sanborn	11.00
John Stanyan	11.49	Caleb Parker	10.27
Stephen Perkins	10.99	Samuel Langley	10.19
John T. Leavitt	10.41	Jonathan Leavitt	11.32
Thomas Lake	12.75	William Lake	18.48
Simon Lane	11.20	Jeremiah Lake	13.35
Joshua Lane	13.74	Philip C. Kelley	13.74
Amasa Kelley	10.33	Malachi Barnes	11.27
James Hook	11.26	Peter Hook	12.35
David Brown	11.78	James Brown	10.72
James Blake	12.03

The following persons paid taxes to the amount of ten dollars and over in 1830:

James Blake	$13.52	Peter Hook	$20.12
David M. Carpenter	10.69	William Lake	13.97
Samuel Langley	11.32	Stephen Perkins	14.61
Jacob Perkins	13.33

The following persons paid taxes to the amount of ten dollars in 1840:

John Berry	$13.39	Peter Hook	$20.12
James M. Blake	13.06	Jeremiah Lane	11.50
David M. Carpenter	19.54	Isiah Lane	10.44
Abram Drake	10.83	William Lake	16.88
I. C. Greenough	13.75	Thomas Lake	11.13
John Lake	12.27	J. N. C. Leavitt	11.27
John Lake (2d)	10.99	Jacob Perkins	29.62
David P. Shaw	11.69	John True	13.73

The following persons paid taxes in 1850 to the amount of ten dollars:

James Brown	$11.58	Joshua Lane	$11.41
Thomas Berry	11.32	Moses G. Lane	13.53
Nathaniel Rachelier	19.57	Isiah Lane	15.79
James Blake	12.76	Edward Langmaid	11.18
Charles H. Carpenter	12.42	William Lake	21.15
Abram Drake	10.85	John Lake	12.26
Edward Edmunds	12.17	True Lake	13.73
Nathaniel Edgerly	10.11	J. N. C. Leavitt	15.20
Jose Garvon	12.08	Richard Locke	17.91
Wilson D. Garvon	11.85	Harris Marden	11.08
Joseph C. Greenough	22.13	Nathan Marden	11.35
Peter J. Hook	23.06	Daniel P. Maxfield	10.43
Malachi Barnes	12.31	Robert Munsey	10.51
Chandler Hutchinson	14.37	Nathaniel Messer	12.08
Benjamin Kaine	19.27	Jacob Perkins	37.32
Stephen Perkins, Jr	21.32	Stephen Perkins	14.88
David P. Shaw	20.70	William Swain	10.80
John Shaw	10.84	Abram Stanyan	11.51
Samuel Stanyan	12.66	J. S. Stanfords	10.79
Simon Stevens	10.59

The following persons paid twenty-five dollars taxes in 1860:

Thomas Berry	$29.04	J. C. Greenough	$32.18
Charles H. Carpenter	76.65	Stephen Perkins	72.21

The following persons paid taxes to the amount of fifty dollars in 1870:

S. Ambrose Brown	$56.07	L. A. Foster	$84.81
Thomas Berry	104.24	William Lake	72.97
Charles H. Carpenter	272.50	M. R. Lake	78.54
Chandler Hutchinson	50.50	Joshua Lake	67.50
E. Langmaid	52.12	Nathan Marden	59.85
Samuel W. Langmaid	66.86	Oliver Messer	55.90
John Shaw	69.55	Stephen Perkins	139.40
J. S. Sanborn	64.01	Benjamin Shaw	60.05

Chas. H. Carpenter

The following persons paid taxes to the amount of fifty dollars in 1880:

Thomas Berry	57.00	Charles H. Carpenter	83.42
Josiah Lake	66.48	Charles Lake	127.26
Stephen Perkins	99.40	John Shaw	15.20
Bennam Shaw	55.46	J. S. Sanborn	100
Joseph Moore	68.96	Samuel W. Langmaid	60.76
Josiah Lane	30.00

1845.—Amount of money tax, $17,119; school money, $36,222; poll tax, $1,771; salaries of town officers, $94.18.

1850.—Amount of money taxes, $15,623.61; school money, $70,683; poll tax, $1,771; salaries of town officers, $114.07.

1860.—Amount of money taxes, $18,870.01; school money, $62,422; poll tax, $1,630; salaries of town officers, $243.96.

1870.—Amount of money taxes, $30,347.61; school money, $90,480; poll tax, $1,000; salaries of town officers, $284.70.

1880.—Amount of money taxes, $48,786.11; school money, $76,078; poll tax, $1,021; salaries of town officers, $76.75.

1884.—Amount of money taxes, $58,441.11; poll tax, $1,200; salaries of town officers, $79,042; amount of school money, $96,703, divided among the several school districts as follows: District No. 1, $17,777; No. 2, $14,148; No. 3, $11,244; No. 4, $10,760; No. 5, $18,311; No. 7, $3,000; No. 8, $10,300; No. 9, $52.58.

Town property: Town-houses, at cost, 1571; barns—house and barns, 570.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

CHARLES H. CARPENTER.

Charles H. Carpenter was born in Chichester, December 18, 1818. He had an illustrious and patriotic ancestry, which is traced in a direct line to William Carpenter, who emigrated from England in 1638, and settled in Weymouth, Mass. From his son Joseph the line of descent is easily traced to Josiah, the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, who was born in Stratford, Conn., October 6, 1762. Though but fourteen years of age at the breaking out of the War of the Revolution, himself and three brothers served in the patriot army, and one of the brothers was killed at Roxbury Neck. After the war Josiah entered Dartmouth College and graduated in the class of 1787. He then studied for the ministry, and on November 2, 1791, he was installed as pastor to the first organized Congregational Church in Chichester, where he remained for nearly forty years, when he died, beloved and respected by all. He ever labored earnestly and diligently for the public good, and was highly esteemed as a citizen and minister of the gospel. He married, April 13, 1790, Hannah Morrill, of Canterbury. They had six children, David Morrill being the second one. He was the father of Charles H.

David Morrill Carpenter was born in Chichester November 16, 1793. He received a good academic education and commenced active business in his native town as a country merchant, and followed it, with much success, for a number of years. He then turned his attention to agriculture, purchased an extensive farm and cultivated it for several years in a most successful manner. Notwithstanding the constant demands of his private occupation, his services were constantly claimed by his fellow-citizens, and for twenty-five years he held one or more of the various town offices and for several years represented his native town in the State Legislature. He discharged all his official duties with ability and fidelity. He also held county office as one of the commissioners for Merrimack County. He was for a long time one of the directors of the Mechanics' Bank of Concord, and for more than thirty years one of the trustees of the Merrimack County Savings-Bank, in the same city, and rarely failed to attend the weekly meetings of the boards of both institutions. He was married, January 13, 1818, to Mary Perkins, daughter of Jonathan Chesley Perkins, who settled in London in 1788, where he cleared a large farm and became a prosperous and influential citizen. The children of David M. and Mary (Perkins) Carpenter were Charles H., Josiah, Clara A., Sarah L. and Frank P., besides two daughters, who died in early life. Subsequently, Mr. Carpenter removed to Concord, where he died December 9, 1873, his wife having died seven years before, on November 4, 1866, at the age of sixty-eight years. He was a man of wide influence and universally respected in the community where he was known.

Charles H. Carpenter, whose engraving appears on another page, received a common-school and academic education. When he was ten years of age his father gave up his store and bought a farm at Chichester Centre, where young Carpenter remained till he was of age, working on the farm summers, attending school at other seasons, and teaching school for several winters. The homestead where he was born has since been used as a parsonage. Young Carpenter possessed the military, patriotic spirit of his ancestry, and became actively interested in military affairs while yet a young man. He received a lieutenant's commission at the age of nineteen, and was subsequently commissioned a captain in the Thirty-eighth Regiment. He had his company uniformed, and it became an object of much pride to the young captain as well as to the whole regiment. When he became of age he went to live with his uncle, Jacob Perkins, a brother of his mother, who lived on the large farm that, as it happened, Rev. Josiah Carpenter moved to in 1791, and where he lived until the parsonage had been erected. Mr. Carpenter has always continued to reside there.

Mr. Perkins was one of the wealthiest and most influential citizens of the town or county. He was an active, energetic business man, and accumulated considerable property for those times. Although he carried on a large farm, his principal business was in connection with trading and financial matters, and he largely engaged in the cattle business, buying in Northern New Hampshire and Vermont and driving them on foot over the Indian trail by Baker's River and the valley of the Pennigwassett and along the turnpikes and highways to a market at Brighton. Behind large droves of cattle, young Carpenter would walk from beyond Montpelier to Boston, gaining health and strength with every day's exertion, and strengthening and improving a naturally good constitution.

When the Pittsfield Bank was formed, in 1851, Mr. Carpenter was chosen its cashier and acceptably held the position for about five years, when Mr. Perkins' failing health compelled him to resign his position and devote a larger share of his time to the duties at his home in Chichester. He has always maintained a connection with the Pittsfield Bank, either as cashier, director or president, having held the latter office since 1870.

For the last thirty years Mr. Carpenter has been placed in responsible positions in the interests of the town. He was called to represent the town in the State Legislature in the years 1855 and 1856, and acquitted himself with honor and credit. He is a lifelong Democrat, and has ever taken a deep interest in national affairs, always anxious that true men should triumph and right measures prevail. During the trying days of the War of the Rebellion he stood manfully at the helm in directing the affairs of the town, providing the town's quota of troops and meeting the extraordinary burdens which the war produced. During nearly all those years he served as chairman of the Board of Selectmen and town treasurer, and received all the money paid into the town, and disbursed the same with rigid honesty and correctness. He was one of the projectors of the Suncook Valley Railroad. He contributed of his means to the first survey of its route, was actively interested in locating and building it, and contributed five hundred dollars of his private means towards its completion, and has served on its board of directors since its organization, where his judgment and business experience have proved of value to the interests of the corporation.

Mr. Carpenter has a model farm in the rich valley of the Suncook,—the homestead farm, consisting of seven hundred broad acres in one body, with over one thousand acres in woodland and pasturage outlying. He cuts one hundred and fifty tons of hay and winters one hundred head of choice cattle. For the past twenty years a cross between the Devon and Durham has been his favorite breed of stock, and his beef animals find a ready market at good prices. Though he has carried on farm operations extensively, he is largely engaged in financial matters and in trading in live stock, besides doing a large lumber business, buying on the stump and manufacturing and handling annually large amounts of lumber. He has large interests in Pittsfield, where he has invested considerably in real estate. He was actively interested in starting the Pittsfield Aqueduct Company, and holds much of the stock, and he is part owner of the New Opera-House Block. He was one of the promoters of the Farmers' Savings-Bank of Pittsfield, chartered in 1883, and is one of its trustees.

His farm buildings are models in their way, being among the finest in the State. His residence is newly erected, spacious and elegant, commanding a fine view. With all his business and multitudinous cares he finds time to entertain his friends and give valuable advice and counsel to many who often seek it from a man of his large business experience and ripened judgment.

Mr. Carpenter is an active member of the Congregational Society, though he has never connected himself with the church. He takes a deep interest in its affairs, and contributes liberally for preaching the gospel and forwarding its philanthropic works.

Mr. Carpenter married Joanna Maxfield, the adopted daughter of his uncle, on October 28, 1841. She died July 5, 1882. She was noted for her generosity and hospitality. She was an exemplary wife, an efficient help and adviser to her husband and a tender and loving mother to her children, of whom there were five, viz.: John T., Mary J., Electa A., Sally P. and Clara A.

The Carpenter family has been prominent in the political, social and business circles of Chichester and the county of Merrimack for three generations. They have been the leading citizens of the town, strong, energetic and successful.

Charles H. has done his full share towards helping achieve this reputation for the family name.

CHARLES C. SHAW.

The first of the Shaw family in Chichester was Benjamin Shaw, who was born in Hampton, N. H., December 25, 1766, and came to Chichester when a young man. He was twice married—first to Abigail Paige, who was born 1773 and died January 17, 1831. She had two children—John and David P. John died March 6, 1819. Benjamin married as his second wife Ruth Sherburne. She died May 4, 1849, leaving no issue. In politics Mr. Shaw was a Democrat. He was a member of the Congregational Church of Chichester.

David P. Shaw was born May 27, 1797; was educated at the common schools of Chichester and at Pembroke Academy. He married Clarissa, daughter of Rev. Josiah and Hannah (Morrill) Carpenter, of Chichester.

Rev. Josiah Carpenter was a native of Connecticut; born October 6, 1762. He came to New Hampshire and was installed first pastor of the First Congregational Church of Chichester, and retained that pastorate for a period of nearly forty years. He married Hannah Morrill, of Canterbury, April 13, 1790.

David P. Shaw was much interested in militia matters, and was appointed, April 17, 1826, captain of militia in the Thirty-eighth New Hampshire Regiment. He also served in the War of 1812, and was stationed at Portsmouth. He was like his father, a member of the Congregational Church and a Democrat.

C. C. Shaw

A. C. Knowlton

He married Clarissa Carpenter, October 16, 1823. Their children were: John, Josiah C., David C., Charles C., and Benjamin. Josiah C. and David C. live in Concord, while John, Charles C. and Benjamin own large farms in Chichester, on which they reside.

Charles C., the fourth son of David P. and Clarissa, was born at the old Shaw homestead in Chichester May 4, 1830. He received his education at common school and at New Hampshire Seminary, at Sanborn-ton Bridge (now Tilton), N. H.

He learned the trade of machinist and was employed in that capacity in the Concord Railroad shops nine years. Previous to this—in the years 1851 to 1853, inclusive—he was employed as a machinist in Sandusky, Ohio. Returning to Concord, he remained there until 1862, when the declining health of his aged parents induced him to return to the ancestral home and assume their care—a duty which he faithfully performed to the close of their lives. Mrs. Shaw died November 9, 1881, and Mr. Shaw, April 2, 1884.

Charles C. married Sophia F., daughter of Hon. Aaron and Ariannah S. (Barstow) Whittemore, of Pembroke, N. H., June 2, 1861. They have one (adopted) son, John Langdon.

Mr. Shaw is one of the most prosperous farmers and most highly respected citizens of Chichester. He is a large owner of real estate, and, in addition to his farming operations, has been engaged several years in lumbering. He has served as justice of the peace several years; was selectman of his town in 1869 and 1870, and November 4, 1884, he was elected from Chichester to represent the town in the State Legislature. In politics he has not departed from the faith of his fathers, but is an earnest Democrat. He attends the Congregational Church. He is of an earnest, sanguine temperament, active, pushing and enterprising, and is one of the solid, successful men of his town.

HOSEA CHASE KNOWLTON.

Hosea Chase Knowlton, whose portrait, which accompanies this sketch of his life, was taken when he was in the eighty-seventh year of his age, was born in Northwood, county of Rockingham, State of New Hampshire, March 31, 1799. He comes of a hardy, long-lived family; was one of nine children, himself being the seventh, and on the paternal side is of English descent. His grandfather, Thomas Knowlton, came from England to Portsmouth and settled in Hampton, afterwards in Kensington, and in 1769 moved with his family to Northwood, where he was one of the first pioneers and settlers; that region, until his day, being a wild, unbroken forest.

Ebenezer, the father of the subject of this sketch, at the time of this removal to Northwood, was about ten years of age, and fifteen years later, in 1784, then at the age of twenty-five, he married Elizabeth C. (Wells), of Vermont, built a log cabin on the site of a lot of wild land in Northwood, a short distance from his father's, commenced clearing, and in 1805 had it converted into a productive farm, with improved and substantial buildings. Upon this farm Hosea C. was born, and here he worked as a farm-boy until the age of sixteen, receiving in the meantime the facilities and privileges of the district school, which, at this early period, was limited to yearly terms of but three months. He then desired of his father aid in acquiring an academical education. But his father refused all help, though he gave him liberty to go and try his fortunes at any institution he pleased on his own responsibility. Hosea readily accepted this condition, and on the morning of April 10, 1816, with his little pack of clothes and not a dollar in cash nor promise of help from any one, he started afoot and alone to Hampton, a distance of thirty miles, and there procured a boarding-place with Mr. Simeon Shaw, and entered the academy. Being penniless, he borrowed money of his new-found friend, Mr. Shaw, with which to purchase books and pay his tuition, and this money, together with his board-bill, was due Mr. Shaw when Hosea was through at the institution. Soon after this academical term at Hampton he commenced teaching school in the town of Brentwood, where he taught four months at twelve dollars per month, eagerly pursued his private studies in his spare time, received his forty-eight dollars, returned to Hampton and applied it in payment of his obligations to his kind benefactor, Mr. Shaw.

In the month of April, 1817, he commenced teaching in the town of Kensington a term of ten months, and at the close of his school entered the Academical Institution at Newmarket, under the care and tuition of Martin Reuter as principal and Moses White assistant, and there completed his English studies, attending especially to trigonometry and the art of surveying.

In the following April, 1818, he returned to Kensington, where he resumed and followed teaching for two years, a calling for which, by natural gifts and acquirements, he was eminently adapted and fitted. He then engaged himself for one year as clerk in the store of Ebenezer Coe, of Northwood; but he loved the school-room, and in the next two years was engaged in teaching in his native town of Northwood.

For one year, about 1823-24, he was employed as book-keeper and clerk with Captain Obadiah Wright, a retired sea-captain, in a wholesale store of general merchandise, on Long Wharf, Boston, where he gave the highest satisfaction to his employer, and could have remained at increased wages; but he returned to Northwood, where for some years he followed school-teaching and farming.

For two years—1832-33—he was employed as head clerk in the counting-room of Hon. Isaac and Horatio Hill, editors and publishers at Concord. Here, aside from his official hours in the counting-room, he edited and compiled "Welch's Revised Arithmetic," which, in the vastly improved edition, found great acceptance with the best teachers of New England.

May 26, 1825, he married Betsey Sovey, daughter of Moses Sovey, Esq., of Chichester, and resided at Northwood (except his two years' counting-room service at Concord) till the autumn of 1834, when he purchased the right and interest of the heirs to the estate of his father-in-law, in Chichester, and moved upon this farm with his family that same fall of 1834. Here he not only actively and successfully worked his farm and improved his home, but for a number of years taught school winters, and in all public and educational matters ever took a prominent, active interest.

In 1832, while in the employ of the Hill Brothers, at Concord, he was duly appointed justice of the peace, and by regular renewals of his commission has held this office continuously to the present writing,—a period of fifty-three years. His services as a most reliable and accurate surveyor of land were largely sought, not only in Chichester, but also in all the adjacent towns. He served twelve years on the Board of Selectmen and as town treasurer, five years as town clerk, two years as representative in the State Legislature and two years as county commissioner. Besides these positions of public trust and confidence, ever most faithfully and ably filled, he executed a great many deeds, wills and other public and private documents, was executor and administrator of numerous estates, and all to the entire satisfaction of all his patrons. He had born to him four children,—Eben, Melissa, Alonzo and Sallie S., only the latter of whom survives.

His estimable wife, Betsey, died December 1, 1861, and on January 1, 1863, he married Adaline B. Sherburne, relict of Uriah Sherburne, late of Chichester.

By energy, economy, fidelity and perseverance he has acquired a very respectable competence, the comfort and benefits of which he lives to enjoy in a good degree of health, at the advanced age of nearly eighty-seven years.

Religiously, he is of the Congregational faith, and a professor; a Democrat politically. His first Presidential vote was cast for James Monroe, and every Democratic candidate for the Presidency since, to the election of Grover Cleveland, has unwaveringly received the aid of his vote. Yet,—

"I am not old, though my friends and my foes
 Alike have gone to their graves;
 And left me behind to my joys and my woes,
 Take a ship in the midst of the waves,
 For youthful memories round me throng,
 Old times, and manners, and men,
 As I look away on my journey so long,
 Of near four-score years and ten,
 I look back o'er the past and my life seems a dream,
 A strange, sweet dream forsooth,
 For all that I am and all that I seem,
 My life is full of youth."

OLIVER DRAKE.

The family of Drake is of Saxon origin and one of great antiquity, extending back previous to the time of the Norman conquest of England.

Adown the centuries some references to the name have survived the general wreck of time.

As early as the year 1272 one John Drake is recorded as holding lands by grant from Edward I. of England. In 1313, Edward II. gave permission to John Drake "to go beyond sea." Other ancient members of the family by the name of John are mentioned in history.

The name of Robert was also a very prominent one among the Drakes. On April 23, 1556, one Robert, minister of Thundersby, in Essex, England, with five others, suffered martyrdom by burning at the stake in Smithfield, in the reign of Mary. His memorable reply to the bishop, when exhorted to renounce his heresy, was in these decisive words,—"As for your church of Rome, I utterly deny and defy it, with all the works thereof; even as I deny the Devil and all his works."

He then had laid nearly a year in prison, and immediately thereafter was ordered to execution.

English records also contain various titled names of Drake, as Sir John Drake, of Ashe, in 1360; and, in later years, Admiral Sir Francis Drake, who circumnavigated the globe when English navigation was comparatively in its infancy. His father's name was Robert, Sir Francis being one of twelve brothers, most of whom followed the sea and died in foreign parts. Several other Drakes have also been named Robert.

Among the illustrious Drakes of England may be mentioned Samuel Drake, D.D., of eminent literary attainments, who died in 1673, and whose equally eminent son edited Archbishop Parker's works; also Roger Drake, D.D., of St. Peter's, London, an author and most excellent man, who suffered much for his non-conformity; Francis Drake, M.D., surgeon of York, F.R.S., and who was a great antiquary; Nathan Drake M.D., of Hadleigh, in Suffolk, the well-known essayist and most skillful and successful annotator and biographer of Shakspeare; and before him in point of time was Dr. James Drake, F.R.S., whose discoveries in anatomy are not surpassed in importance to those of Hervey.

From this old English stock, notably a branch of the family of Ashe, came John Drake, a member of the Council of Plymouth, England, who was one of the original company established by King James, in 1606, for settling New England, and from whom sprang most, if not all, the earlier families of Drake in America. Several of his sons came to this country. It is known that one of them, John, reached Boston in 1630, with two or more sons, who finally settled in Windsor, Conn.

Also, Robert, brother of John, with two or more sons and one daughter, who was settled in Exeter some time prior to 1643; for that year the name of Abraham Drake, son of Robert, with twenty others, was signed to a petition to the General Court of Massachusetts against the encroachments of settlers, and it is therein set forth that those people "knew we long since purchased these lands and quietly possessed them."

Olinus Drake

We can learn but little of Robert Drake's personal history, except that he was born in Devon, England, in 1580; came to this country before 1643 (possibly, we think, with his brother John in 1630, or with Rev. John Wheelwright's company in 1638); that March 15, 1650, he bought of "Francis Peaboddie house and lands lying and being within the bounds of Hampton," and removed thereto from Exeter early in 1651, and acquired in Hampton a considerable estate; that he was then called "aunt Mr. Drake;" that he left a will—a full copy of which is extant—dated May 5, 1663; that he was a man of eminent piety and highly respected, and "departed this life" January 14, 1668, at the great age of eighty-eight years. His son, Abraham, already mentioned, was also a very prominent man of his time, capable of any business, a good penman and forward in all public service. In 1663 he was chosen to lay out four thousand acres of land "west of Hampton bounds and away to the great pond;" and in 1668-69 was chosen to run the town lines; also in 1673 was appointed marshal of the county of Norfolk, in which office he probably continued till the separation of New Hampshire from Massachusetts, in 1679. He lived to a very advanced age, being alive in 1712 and at that time eighty-four years old. But the year of his death is not definitely known.

Dim and distant as this early period of New England may seem, it is known that most, and probably all, the Drakes of New Hampshire are the direct descendants of Robert Drake (1), of Hampton, N. H., through his son, Abraham (2), already named, and so on in the generations that have followed to the present time. Many members of the family name have been very prominent and leading citizens of their times, in the varied affairs of church, military and civil life.

The generations of one branch of the Drake family in New England have descended, as shown by the indices, in the following order: Robert (1), Abraham (2), Abraham (3), Abraham (4), Thomas (5), Josiah (6), Thomas (7), Oliver (8).

Passing over the third and fourth generations, of whom much could be laudably written, we have to say of Thomas (5) that at some period of his life he was settled in Epping, N. H., where he owned lands adjoining the farm of his brother Simon; but finally removed to Chichester,—though in what year the writer has been unable to determine,—where he owned a farm and lived some years, and where he died August 16, 1816, aged eighty-three years.

Josiah (6), grandfather of Oliver, was a life-long resident of Chichester, and succeeded to the farm of his father in the southeasterly quarter of the town, where he led an exemplary life and died August 18, 1832, aged seventy.

Thomas, Jr. (7), Oliver's father, was born in Chichester October 12, 1796, and reared to manhood, which in his day, even more than now, implied hard persevering labor and the closest economy. A few years, however, in his early manhood he worked at hat-making and nail-cutting in Malden, Mass. He fixed the "Jr." to his name, and was so known by his townsmen, because of another Thomas Drake, a senior cousin of his, who also lived in Chichester. He was a careful, painstaking man in all he did, and withal of a mechanical, ingenious turn of mind; was a great lover of music, an excellent player on the violoncello and had a rare musical voice, with which he ever loved to aid in the services of the sanctuary. He was an upright, public-spirited citizen, ever ready with his share of effort in the furtherance of any good object or purpose. About the year 1829 he bought the farm next south of his father's in Chichester—now owned by Mr. Wilder Hall, in School District No. 4, and soon had his future home improved by the erection of the good buildings which have since been further improved and are still thoroughly preserved. He married Mablett Seavey, youngest daughter of Daniel Seavey, of Chichester, of Welsh extraction—a man of less than medium stature, but possessing a genial, happy spirit, and of a tough, hardy constitution, which prolonged his years in general soundness of health to the end of his life, which occurred December 27, 1853, at the great age of ninety-two years and eight months. They soon moved to their new home referred to, where they spent the remainder of their lives, devoted to their young and growing family, which, in 1839, when all were living, consisted of three sons and three daughters, and in whose young minds they sought, by precept and example, to inculcate truthfulness and rectitude of conduct and character. The parents lived and died consistent members of the Congregational Church. In the midst of his days the father came to his death by quick consumption, April 11, 1844, aged forty-seven years and six months; and on November 5, 1847, the devoted mother died of pleurisy fever, also at the age of forty-seven and one-half years.

Oliver Drake was born in Chichester, Merrimack County, N. H., August 18, 1830, and, as already shown, is of the eighth generation of the family name in this country. His brothers were Simon S. and Francis, though the latter in his adult years is called Frank; his sisters were Samantha T., Sallie and Joanna M. Two of the family are no longer of earth,—Sallie, who died in 1839, aged two years, and Simon S., a most estimable man, who died February 22, 1885, at his home in Vallejo, Cal., in the fifty-fourth year of his age, lamented by all who knew him.

By the death of their parents the children were called to meet the stern realities of life at an early, untried age. Up to the death of his father, young Oliver, then thirteen, had been raised a farm-boy and so was inured to toil. By his comrades he was called a strong boy, and was seldom sick or ailing. The little farm, at his father's death left to his mother, was indeed a precious home for the family. His brothers mainly did the work at home with their mother and young sisters till the mother's decease, while for two years Oliver worked out at farming, except winters, when he was at home attending the district school. In the spring of 1847, the year of his mother's death, in November, he apprenticed himself to Deacon Jacob S. Sauborn, of Chichester, with whom he faithfully worked and learned the trade of shoemaking, intending to set up shop for himself at the old home with his mother, when through with his apprenticeship, for this was in an age of shoe manufacturing, when little single and double-handed shops were scattered all about this part of the State, with Lynn, Mass., as the head-centre, and not, as now, merged into the general factory system of manufacture with machinery. It was then a leading, lucrative trade for many hundreds of young men at their homes in the country. But the death of his mother shattered the fond hopes of Oliver's coming home, and so the little family was soon scattered, and to Oliver, the oldest of the family, there came a burden of solicitude and care not often experienced by one of his age.

Continuing his residence in Chichester, he followed his trade steadily till December, 1849, when he went in search of a better education than he had as yet had the privilege of obtaining; and his aim was to do so at as small expenditure of his limited means as possible. December, 1849, found him at the Walnut Grove Boarding-School of the veteran teacher, Moses A. Cartland, in Lee, N. H., a most excellent school, wholly unsectarian, though rather of the Quaker persuasion, where the willing mind was led and vastly aided in broader, deeper channels of thought than those contained in the text-books. Here Oliver obtained board and tuition till the following March, paying his way by all sorts of work nights and mornings, while in all respects making good progress with his studies.

Returning to Chichester, he worked at his trade till December, 1850, and then took up his studies again at Walnut Grove School, in Lee, where he remained continuously till August, 1851, working, as before, for his board and tuition to the full amount, excepting four dollars, which he thankfully paid in cash. October, 1851, he commenced his first school as teacher in Strafford, N. H., in what was known as the "Caverly District," a term of nine weeks; and while here he was engaged by Prof. J. C. Cram (the veteran singing-school teacher) to take the school of his district, in Deerfield, N. H. He commenced teaching on Monday following the close of the school at Strafford, the Friday previous, and taught the winter term of eleven weeks, thus making for him a continuous run of twenty weeks. In both of these schools he met with the happiest success. Immediately following these, he taught a private school at the "Pine Ground" (so-called), in Chichester.

A few weeks later, while on a visit to friends in Lee, Oliver received by letter, from his old Walnut Grove School "chum" and esteemed friend, Benjamin Chase, Jr., of Auburn,—who now for many years has been an active citizen and prosperous manufacturer in Derry, N. H.,—a proposition that they "take a voyage at sea." They had together read Dana's "Two Years Before the Mast," and in their young enthusiasm had discussed many an "ocean tale," till, with their natural love for adventure, they felt a strong desire to be upon the "rolling wave" and tread another shore across the "ocean blue."

The proposal of his friend was readily accepted. As a matter of business combined with their pleasure sought, and also to learn about real sea-life, they planned to go as part of some ship's crew. It would have seemed too tame to have gone otherwise; at all events, one object of the two adventurers was to meet expenses. An able seaman's pay was then fourteen dollars per month.

Going to Boston and donning their young sailor rig, they at last succeeded in shipping as "boys," at ten dollars per month, "before the mast," on the noble, square-rigged, one-thousand-ton ship "William Wirt," commanded by Captain Erastus Samson—one of "nature's noblemen" and one of the best officers that ever trod a quarter-deck. The points of destination were not fully known to the men before sailing, only "to one or more southern ports of the United States, thence to one or more European ports."

They set sail April 27, 1852, and the voyage proved to be to Mobile, Ala., loading there with cotton,—slave cotton, no doubt,—thence to Liverpool, Eng., and then returning to Boston with a load of two hundred and eighty-seven immigrants, in the old shipping line of Enoch Train, arriving in Boston, Oct., 1852. The "boys'" duties of course, were those of common sailors before the mast, with whom they lived in the fore-castle and worked the voyage through. It was to them a new phase of life with but slight embellishments. Resolutions repeatedly formed, however, during the trip, not to "follow the sea" as a calling, alone or chiefly, resisted the fascination of making, as sailors say, "one more voyage." The voyage was devoid of serious accident, but replete with many a lively incident. Lying six weeks in the docks of Liverpool, though living and working aboard ship during the day, the privilege of evenings and Sundays, and now and then a "liberty day" ashore, gave fair opportunity for seeing much of English life and considerable of its scenery.

Returning to Chichester from his sea-voyage, Oliver was soon called by his old teacher, Moses A. Cartland, to assist him in a school that he had recently opened in North Weare, N. H. Here Oliver remained most of that winter (1852-53) and spring, pushing on with his own studies as well as acting as tutor in the school. With an aptness for learning, a great love of study has been a marked feature of his life. The following May (1853) he became a student at the New Hampshire Conference Seminary, at Northfield (since moved across the river to Tilton), and continued here till the close of the fall term, November 9, 1853, when he took a very creditable part in the examination exercises. He was a member of the V. A. S. Association (a literary society of the seminary), and was ever an earnest factor in promoting its welfare, New Hampshire's future United States Senator, Henry W. Blair, being at the same time an active brother member, whose talents and sterling qualities gave bright promise of his future career.

Returning from the seminary, Oliver taught a prosperous private school in his native district, No. 4, in Chichester, and continued his services with the winter term of the district; and then immediately followed with the school in the adjoining district, at the "Horse Corner" (so called); after which, and running into the spring of 1854, he taught the term in the Union District of Chichester and London, on the Chichester north road.

Teaching was to him a pleasure, and the best of success rewarded his efforts. But as a business, he desired some more lucrative calling.

During these years of 1852, '53, '54 the Northeast Protective Union stores were having their day. One was organized in Chichester in 1854, and opened in the present store building on the corner opposite the Methodist meeting-house. Oliver Drake was chosen its agent. But organizations of this class all through New England, though for a time popular, were waning, and in some two years after, or a little longer, had all gradually passed into private hands. As agent, he conducted the affairs of the store to the best advantage possible, under the impracticable circumstances that prevailed, till the spring of 1856, when he resigned.

With regrets to himself and many friends, he then left his native town to try his fortunes in a broader sphere. For a year thereafter he was employed as book-keeper by the large teaming firm of Critchett & Gilman, in East Boston, Mass.

The three following years, 1857, '58, '59, he was variously engaged in the grocery and provision trade in Boston, where for a time he worked in Faneuil Hall Market.

In 1860 and '61, till spring of '62, he was employed as first accountant in the wholesale grocery business of John G. Kaulback, Jr., 196 Water Street, Boston. Here, from the sedentary confinement of the counting-room, his health became much impaired, for which reason, as a more physically active employment, he betook himself again to the market.

But that autumn (1862) he was taken down with a slow, lingering fever, from which the following spring did not find him fully recovered. He then accepted a situation as book-keeper for the ship-building firm of Curtis & Tilden, of East Boston, actively engaged at that time in building war steamers for the United States government. He remained here till the autumn of 1863, and then became proprietor of the West Lynn Market, in the city of Lynn, Mass., and at once entered upon this branch of trade, which he steadily and successfully followed for the succeeding six years.

Just at this period (1868-69) the White Pine mining excitement of Nevada was at fever heat, such, probably, as the world before never saw. The famous Eberhardt, in which his brother Frank was a fifth owner by location, was turning out its hundreds of thousands of silver. Naturally of an active, hopeful temperament, Oliver was thus drawn westward. September 1, 1869, he sold out his West Lynn Market, and soon completed arrangements for an inspection of the Nevada mining business. He reached Treasure City, Nev., where his brother was, on November 5, 1869, and from that date to the present has been actively connected with mining interests, sharing with others some of its vicissitudes as well as its fortunes.

"White Pine" was first the name of the mining district, but has since become the name of the county including the district. Except a three months' visit home in the fall of 1870, Oliver remained at White Pine till November, 1871, when, with his family, he moved to Greenville, Plumas County, Cal., where he soon became superintendent of the Indian Valley Gold Mine, having in that vicinity also mining interests of his own. He was thus engaged till September, 1875, when he was called to become secretary and cashier of the Eberhardt Mill and Mining Company, which was extensively and prosperously engaged in silver-mining at Eberhardt, White Pine County, Nev., his brother Frank having been appointed the company's manager,—positions of great responsibility and trust in which the two brothers have been retained continuously to the present writing (August, 1885,) except the years 1879-80, when Oliver had withdrawn himself to engage in an extensive milling enterprise of his own.

The Eberhardt Company (Limited), with which the Drake brothers so long have been connected, is an English incorporation, with its directors and head office in London.

August, 13, 1862, Oliver Drake married Sallie S., youngest daughter of Hosea C. Knowlton, Esq., of Chichester, whose likeness and sketch of life are given in this book. Four children have been born to them,—one son and three daughters,—the youngest of whom, Alma K., born in California, alone survives. Save in the loss of children, his domestic life has been eminently a happy one. Religiously and constitutionally, he is a Congregationalist, regarding the polity of this church as possessing the very spirit of genuine democracy. Whether East or West, he has ever allied himself in some way with church life, so long as it visibly existed in his community. Music has been to him one cherished source of recreation and delight. Of a cheerful, social turn of mind and heart, and in all respects of correct and abstemious habits, his generally excellent health through life has been but little disturbed, and his near associates and warm friends have been of the good and true.

Though politically an ardent Republican, he is no partisan. His only votes for a Democratic candidate for the Presidency were for Stephen A. Douglas, who was defeated, and James Buchanan, which vote he has ever since regretted. Political office he never desired, sought nor accepted, though repeatedly urged to consider it.

As inculcated by his venerated parents, one trait and motto of his life has been, that "whatsoever thy hand findeth to do," do it well.

The amities of life, with strict fidelity in all positions of trust, have brought their reward in the confidence and respect of his fellow-men, which he long has largely shared.

MAJOR ARTHUR DEERING.

The origin of the Deering family was English; as far back as the French and Indian War two brothers came from England, from whom have descended all the Deerings in this country. The elder brother in all English families inherited the estate, and it often happened, as in the case of these two brothers, that the younger brothers came to this then new country to carve out a fortune for themselves. One of these brothers was killed during the French and Indian War, and a son of the other, by the name of Isaac, settled in Scarborough, Me., at Blue Point.

This son had a son named after himself, who was the father of the subject of this brief history. Isaac Deering, the father of Arthur Deering, married Sarah Sawyer, whose ancestors came from Scotland, and were descendants of the old Marr family, of whom "Lady Helen" Marr was one. To Isaac and Sarah Deering were born eleven children,—three girls and eight boys,—of whom Arthur was the youngest, who was born March 24, 1820, the year the State of Maine was admitted into the Union.

Mr. Deering had a common-school and academical education, and then graduated at the Free Baptist Theological School, at Whitestown, N. Y. He entered the gospel ministry at the early age of twenty, and preached his first sermon at East Parsonfield, Me., and had his first settlement at Bath, Me. From Bath he went to Central New York and preached in several places; he was ordained in Philadelphia, Jefferson County, N. Y., June 18, 1853, after being refused an ordination three times on account of more advanced views on moral and natural depravity and on the atonement. He did not believe that moral depravity, or sin, could be transmitted from parent to child, or charged upon any human being before coming to years of intelligence and human accountability; but sin is an intelligent, voluntary, intentional violation of a known moral law, and that sin, or moral depravity, can never pertain to man's nature, but to his character. And as to the atonement, he did not believe that Christ suffered any penalty of any law in our stead; did not believe that He died to help God out of any difficulty in which Adam's transgression had involved Him; but that all that Christ did and suffered was wholly and entirely for man's benefit. He believed that God always was able to pardon penitent sinners, and that He was always willing to pardon penitent sinners, and all the reason He did not pardon them was because they would not repent; and that Christ's mission into the world was to be a mighty moral power to induce men to repent.

After spending some nine years in New York he returned to Maine, and settled with a church in China; he afterwards preached in West Waterville, Richmond and several other places in Maine, and in 1871 came to Pittsfield, N. H., and preached with the First Baptist Church there three years, and in 1871 purchased the old Foster farm in Chichester, where he now resides.

Mr. Deering has always taken an active part in politics; when but eighteen years of age he embraced the anti-slavery cause and often addressed public meetings upon that question. In 1840 he took the stump for James G. Birney, who was the candidate of the Liberty party for President, and in 1841 cast his first ballot; there being no candidates at that election in his town, he wrote upon his ballot "Abolition" and put it in the ballot-box. He often attended the Liberty party County and State Conventions, was frequently on their committees on resolutions, and always kept well posted upon the question of slavery, and was one of their able and popular speakers.

In 1848 he was a delegate to the Free-Soil National Convention at Buffalo, and earnestly advocated a union of all the anti-slavery elements into one party to oppose the extending of slavery into free territory; and, with other members of the old Liberty party, assisted in the organization of the Republican party in Maine in 1855. He took an active part in the Presidential campaign in 1856, and spoke with Josiah H. Drummond and A. P. Morrill for Fremont and Dayton. And again, in 1860, when he was president of the Republican Club in Richmond, Me., his club accepted the challenge of the Democratic Club, and chose him to meet their speaker in public discussion of the political issues, the result of which, as freely admitted by his opponent, was the changing of twenty-five votes to the Republican ticket. In the fall of 1863 he was elected to the Legislature by the town of Richmond, where he was several times called to the Speaker's chair in his temporary absence, and was appointed Speaker to conduct the proceedings of the "mock session." Being at home from the army in 1864 on a short furlough, Governor Coney voluntarily obtained from Secretary Stanton an extension of his furlough for twenty days, that he might take part in the September election; and a few days after he was requested by Hon. J. G. Blaine, then chairman of the Republican State Committee, to take the stump until election; which he did, with other speakers; and on his return to Philadelphia, where he was ordered on detached duty as member of a military court, he was made an honorary member of the Union League, and as his military duties occupied but a few hours of his time during the day, he was on the stump most of the time until the November election. He spoke in Philadelphia, Reading and other places in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware. Mr. Deering acted with the Republican party until 1868, when he became satisfied that all of the political difficulties growing out of the war had been settled, and that the next great question before the American people was the liquor traffic; he left the Republican party and helped organize the Prohibition party in Maine, since which time he has been an earnest advocate of its principles. In 1868 he was appointed by the Grand Lodge of Good Templars in Maine as State lecturer, and during the year spoke in every county but Washington in the State, in doing which he traveled more than eight thousand miles, speaking every evening from one and a half to two hours. He was again employed in 1869. In 1870 he was employed by the Grand Lodge of New Hampshire, and lectured some time in that State, moving to Pittsfield, N. H., in March, 1871. In 1874 he commenced the publication of the Pittsfield Times, a local non-partisan paper, and in 1875 he took charge of editing and publishing the Prohibition Herald, which had been published and edited by Rev. Mr. Millen, and continued their publication until Feb., 1876, when his office was burned and their publication discontinued.

Maj. Arthur Seeving

In 1875, Mr. Deering was nominated by the Prohibition party for Senator in the Fourth Senatorial District, and again in 1876, which resulted in a great deal of political trouble in the State. He received votes enough to defeat an election in the district, but the Democratic candidate had a plurality of the votes cast, and it was soon ascertained that the law required that a man, to be eligible to serve as Senator, must have been a citizen of the State seven years, and that Mr. Deering had only been in the State a little over five years. This fact coming to the knowledge of the Governor by the affidavit of Mr. Deering, which the Governor caused to be taken, the Governor and Council threw out Mr. Deering's votes and thereby gave the election to Mr. Proctor, the Democratic candidate, and by Mr. Proctor's election the Senate was Democratic. At that time many of the county offices were appointed by the Governor, and removed by an address of the Senate and House. The Governor during 1876 was Mr. Weston, a Democrat, who had filled many of these offices with Democrats, who, unless removed by address of the Senate and House, would hold over, and in that case the money now expended by the Republican politicians in the several counties to carry the election would be lost. And this was the only issue in the case, and, although Mr. Deering was entirely innocent, knowing nothing of the provisions of the State Constitution, yet unlimited abuse was poured upon him because of this affair. The Boston Journal said that he did it knowingly, intending to defraud the voters of their votes. But no man who knew him ever supposed that he would do such a thing intentionally.

Mr. Deering then told his enemies, jokingly, that "he would steal the whole government next time;" and fulfilled the prophecy in the fall of 1884, in going to New York and speaking for the Prohibition party, which rolled up a vote of twenty-five thousand for St. John, taking a large majority from the Republican party, and thereby giving the State to Cleveland and making him President.

He was the only Prohibition speaker who canvassed Jefferson County, which only gave Dow thirty-six votes in 1880, and gave St. John six hundred and thirty-six in 1884.

When the war broke out it found Mr. Deering at Richmond, Me. As he had been an earnest opposer to the extension of slavery, so he was now ready to meet the result of that opposition; he had been ready to pray, preach and vote against American slavery, and as slavery had now arisen in arms to rend the Union asunder, so he was just as ready to fight against the extension and existence, even, of slavery, if need be, as he was to talk against it. In August of 1862 he held patriotic meetings in the towns of Richmond, Dresden, Bowdoinham and Topsham, and enlisted one hundred men for a company in the Twenty-fourth Maine Regiment, and was by them elected captain. When the regiment was first organized he was the ranking captain of it. The regiment left Augusta, Me., in November; went to East New York and remained there until January, 1863, when it went to New Orleans. Remaining in the city a few weeks it then went to Bonnet Carre, forty miles up the river, to form a part of the outer defenses of the city, between the river and Lake Pontchartrain. The regiment remained here until June, when it marched to Port Hudson and took an active part in the siege of that place, after which it returned, by the way of Cairo and Chicago, to Maine.

While the regiment was at Port Hudson, Corporal William Lancaster, of his company, being somewhat deranged by sickness, stabbed and killed Lieutenant Newell, of Captain Deering's company, and was tried the day the regiment left for home, so that no testimony could be presented in his behalf. After the regiment returned to Maine, Captain Deering gathered the facts in the case and personally laid them before Vice-President Hamlin, and secured his pardon. Some years afterward this same William

1 They said "he stole the Senate."

Lancaster saved the son of Captain Deering, William A. Deering, from drowning in the Kennebec River at Richmond.

After the regiment returned, and was mustered out of service, Captain Deering was appointed recruiting officer and enlisted recruits for the old regiments. During his term of service in the Legislature, in the winter of 1864, another call was made by the President for more men, and two more regiments were organized, the Thirty-first and Thirty-second, and Captain Deering was commissioned a major in the Thirty-second Regiment. At the close of the session of the Legislature he went into camp at Augusta and took command of the six companies then formed, as no other field officers could be commissioned with that number of companies.

The regiments then raised in New England were assigned to General Burnside, and their destination was then expected to be to North Carolina. In April, Major Deering received orders to take the six companies and report to General Burnside at Annapolis, Md., but when he reached Baltimore his destination was changed to Washington, as General Burnside had been ordered to report with the Ninth Corps to General Grant, in Virginia. On arriving at Alexandria the Thirty-second Regiment was assigned to Second Division, Second Brigade, Ninth Army Corps, and reached the Wilderness on the second day of the fight.

The regiment was not much exposed the next day, which was Saturday, and at night started for Chancellorsville, which it reached Sunday morning, and Major Deering was detailed brigade officer of the day, and had charge of the picket line, and turned it over to General Fararro, who had charge of the Third Division of the Ninth Corps, which were colored troops. The regiment was severely dealt with at Spottsylvania, where it was exposed to the rebel fire all day without any protection, and fifty out of three hundred were either killed or wounded; and in the second attack on the enemy's left flank, sixteen more were killed and wounded.

The regiment was under severe fire at the Tolopotomy, where Major Deering only escaped death by the narrowest chance. In the evening he went to the front to push out the picket line, which was stationed too near the main line, and as he was returning, while but a few rods in front of his breast-works, firing commenced upon the left and soon came down the line, one regiment after another joining in the rapid firing, which soon reached his own regiment; supposing that an attack had been made upon the line, they too opened fire, and in a moment the air was full of whistling bullets; some of the picket line were killed, but, as fortune would have it, he escaped unharmed.

At another time two men were shot down, one on each side of him, as he led his men into the fight. He was hit once on his spur and once on the scabbard of his sword, but finally came out of every fight without a scar. He was in all of the fights, from the Wilderness to Petersburg, in which his corps, the Ninth, was engaged; and so much had his regiment become reduced by killed, wounded and sick, that when it mustered, on the 1st of July, 1864, in front of Petersburg, there were but fifty men for duty. The colonel, Mark F. Wentworth and the lieutenant-colonel J. M. Brown, joined the regiment at the North Anna, but soon after it arrived at Petersburg, one was wounded and the other was sick, so the command again devolved upon Major Deering. But constant working and fighting, the climate and the unwholesome water, by the middle of July, brought on the diarrhea, and after remaining a while at the front hospital, he was sent to the officers' hospital at Philadelphia. By the last of August becoming able to do light duty, he was detailed on court-martial duty, where he served for six months, trying during that time one hundred and ten cases; and, what was unprecedented in any other court in the army, every finding and sentence in each case was approved by the commanding general of the department. The court was then dissolved, and Major Deering received notice that some two months before his regiment had been consolidated with the Thirty-first Maine Regiment, and all of the field and a part of the line officers had been mustered out of service, and this order made him a private citizen again, and he returned home. Since his return he has spent his time in the ministry, on his farm and in the lecture field.

He was employed during the Presidential campaign of 1884 by the Prohibition party in Jefferson County, New York, where the vote of the party was increased from thirty-six to six hundred and thirty-six, and the vote was carried in the State up to twenty-five thousand, which determined the result of the contest.

HISTORY OF BOW.

BY HARRISON COLBY.

CHAPTER I.

HISTORY satisfies the desire which naturally arises in every intelligent mind to know the transactions of the country or town in which he lives. Facts interest our curiosity and engage our attention. The early history of Bow is an anomaly in the history of New Hampshire towns; it is a triune township,—Bow, Pennacook and Suncook, three in one. Prior to the settlement of New England by the English, Passaconaway, the powerful chief of the Pennacooks, held absolute sway over the country bordering on the Merrimack, from Lake Winnipiseogee to Pawtucket Falls. In 1631 they were estimated at about five hundred men, having been greatly reduced by sickness about twenty years before. The Mohawks were hostile to them, and tradition says they had a terrible fight near Sugar Ball, on the east side of the river, northeast of the main village of Concord. Passaconaway was regarded with the highest veneration by his tribe as chief, priest and physician. He died about 1665, supposed to have been nearly one hundred years old. He left four sons and two daughters. Wonalancet, his second son, succeeded him as sachem of the Pennacooks. In 1670 he moved to Pawtucket, near the south line of the State, and built a fort there. He embraced the Christian faith under the influence of Elliot, the Indian missionary, in 1674. During King Philip's War, in 1675, he withdrew to the woods in the northern part of New Hampshire to avoid being involved in any way in the war, and it being good hunting-ground for moose, deer and bear, he remained there all winter—at this time there was not over one hundred of the Pennacook and Namskeag Indians, whereof he was chief.

Wonalancet returned from his retreat in 1676, bringing from captivity a Widow Kimball and her five children, whom he was the means of saving alive after they had been condemned to death and fires made ready to burn them. We last hear of him in 1697, placed under the care of Jonathan Tyng, of Dunstable, and the General Court allowed twenty pounds for keeping him. The time and place of his death is unknown. The last sagamore of the Pennacooks was Kancamagus, or John Hawkins, as the English called him, a grandson of Passaconaway. He, with the Pennacooks, went to the eastward in 1685. The last we hear of him is in a fort on the Androscoggin, which was destroyed by Major Benjamin Church, September 12, 1790, and a sister of Kancamagus was slain. On the 29th of November, 1690, a treaty of peace was made by the government of Massachusetts and the eastern sagamores, among whom was John Hawkins, and this is the last we know of him. The Pennacooks existed as a distinct tribe for many years, and, finally, it is supposed those hostile to the English mixed with the Penobscots in Maine, and others with the St. Francis in Canada, and some remained here until 1725 and after, and were useful citizens. Wattanumon was the name of the Indian chief that cultivated the field near Horse-shoe Pond when the Pennacook settlers arrived there. It is quite probable that portions of the alluvial lands on the banks of the Merrimack have been cleared of the growth by fires, for the cultivation of Indian corn and grass for grazing of deer and moose, for a long period of time.

By virtue of her original charter, obtained in 1628, Massachusetts claimed all lands lying between three miles northward of Merrimack River to the source, and three miles to the southward of Charles River, and in length of the described breadth from the Atlantic Ocean to the South Sea. Men were sent to discover its source in 1638, who found it to extend north of forty-three and a half degrees. In 1652 the General Court of Massachusetts ordered a survey to ascertain their northern boundary and appointed commissioners for that purpose, who, with Indian guides and a nineteen days' voyage in a boat, found the head source of the Merrimack to be in latitude forty-three degrees and forty minutes at a place now called the Weirs; the whole expense of the expedition amounted to eighty-four pounds. The General Court of New Hampshire claimed that the said territory was within their patent and jurisdiction, founded on a grant from the Council of Plymouth to John Mason, dated November 7, 1629, which conveyed the land "from the middle part of Merrimack River to the Piscataqua, along the sea-coast, and up said rivers to the farthest head thereof; and to extend sixty miles up into the land westward from the sea coast, together with all islands within five leagues' distance of the premises."

In 1641, there being but few settlements in New Hampshire, for their better defense and security against the Indians, agreed to place themselves under the jurisdiction of Massachusetts, which continued until 1689. Edward Hilton, of Exeter, a friend of Governor Winthrop, favored the usurpation and was made a magistrate. Hence, being under one government, in 1659 inhabitants of Dover and Newbury petitioned the General Court at Boston for a township at a place called Pennacook, which was granted on certain conditions. In 1663 inhabitants of Chelmsford and Salem were granted a plantation six miles square on condition of getting twenty families on it in three years. The conditions not being fulfilled, the foregoing grants were forfeited.

In June, 1714, the people of Salem again petitioned that the grant to them at Pennacook in October, 1663, be confirmed to them. In 1679, Charles the Second commissioned John Cutt, of Portsmouth, to be the first president of the Council, saying,—

"Whereas, our Colony of the Massachusetts have taken upon themselves to organise a government and jurisdiction over the inhabitants of the towns and lands in the Province of New Hampshire, not having any legal right or authority to do so, now for it known that We, by and with the advice of our Privy Council, have thought fit to appoint a President and Council to take care of the said Tract of Land called The Province of New Hampshire and the inhabitants thereof, and to order, rule and govern the same, and do hereby appoint our trusty and well beloved subject, John Cutt, Esq., of Portsmouth, to be first President of said Council, to continue in office for one year, or until We or our successors appoint some other person to succeed him."

A question may arise in the minds of some whether, if Massachusetts had no legal right over the lands in 1679, had they in 1663, or subsequently?

In May, 1721, over one hundred of the inhabitants of the county of Essex, claiming to be straitened for accommodations for themselves and their posterity, petitioned the honorable Council and House of Representatives of the Massachusetts Bay for a grant for a township extending southerly seven miles from the mouth of the Contoocook and three miles east of Merrimack River. June 9, 1724, a committee was ordered to view the land, which had been previously surveyed. June 17, 1725, a petition, signed by Benjamin Stephens and others, a committee appointed by and in behalf of the petitioners formerly for a tract of land at a place called Pennacook, was presented to the "Hon^{ble}. Wm. Dunmce, Esq., Lieut. Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over His Majesty's province of the Massachusetts Bay in New England, to the Hon^{ble}. His Majesty's Council and House of Representatives in Gen. Court convened at Boston, Humbly Showing That they had at two several times petitioned for the aforesaid grant of said tract of land at Pennacook, and are informed it did not meet with a concurrence, wishing to renew our petition, hoping you will please to take the premises again into your wise and serious consideration, and make them a grant of it accordingly; and suggesting that applications had been made to the Government of New Hampshire for a grant of the said Land, which undoubtedly belonged to Massachusetts; yet it is probable that a parcel of Irish people from Nutfield, who have built a fort there, will obtain a grant from New Hampshire for it, unless speedy care be taken by your Hon^{ble}. Court to prevent it. If New Hampshire should make them a grant, which we conceive would be without right, yet it would be attended with much difficulty to pretend to root them out if they should get a foot hold there. We therefore pray that a grant of the land may be made to us on such conditions as to the wisdom of this Court shall seem best." The petition was favorably received and was successful. The court decided it would be for the interest of the province that lands seven miles square be set apart for a township, "beginning where the Contoocook empties into Merrimack river, and to extend east seventeen degrees, north three miles, and west seventeen degrees, south four miles, to be the northerly bounds of the said township; and from the extreme parts of that line to be set off southerly at right angles until seven miles shall be accomplished from the said north bounds."

A committee was appointed to see that the rules and conditions of the grant be punctually observed by those admitted settlers,—

"The tract to be divided into one hundred and three equal shares; that one hundred persons or families be admitted, such as the committee supposed to be able to pursue and bring to pass the settlement of their lands within three years, five pounds to be paid by each settler to the committee for the use of the province at the time of drawing his lot; to build a comfortable dwelling for his family, and to break up and fence in six acres within three years.

"As soon as one hundred accepted persons are obtained, the committee are to notify a meeting to make such rules as they may think best to carry forward the settlement, the whole Charge of the Committee to be paid by the settlers, and the committee to execute deeds in behalf of the Court to all admitted settlers for the aforesaid tract, for the sole use of them, their heirs and assigns forever, saving of former grants—

"Read and concurred January 17, 1725."

A meeting was held February 7th, at which the settlers unanimously agreed to fulfill the conditions and orders of the court respecting the settlement; and having a strong prejudice against the Irish people, they agreed that no alienation of any lot should be made without the consent of the community. Surveyors, with chainmen, were appointed to proceed to Pennacook to lay out the land in to lots.

May 12, 1726, they started from Haverhill, surveyors and chainmen, with a number of the admitted settlers, attending them, to proceed to lay out their town. They arrived there on the 13th, about five o'clock, and encamped on Sugar Ball Hill, east of the river. They organized their number the next morning into two divisions, one to survey the west side of the river, the other the east side. About twelve o'clock on the 14th, a committee, consisting of Messrs. Nathaniel Weare, Richard Waldron, Jr., and Theodore Atkinson, appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor and Council of New Hampshire, came to their camp, attended by about half a score of Irishmen, who kept some distance from the camp. The New Hampshire government, being then a weak community, were very attentive to the Scotch-Irish people of Londonderry, and did much to please and encourage them, for which they were very grateful. The aforesaid committee informed them that the government of New Hampshire, being informed of their business here, had sent them with a request not to proceed to appropriate their lands, for they lay in the province of New Hampshire, and Massachusetts' making a grant might be attended with very ill consequences to the settlers, and ordered them in an amicable way to withdraw themselves forthwith from the said land and their pretensions to it by virtue of the vote of the General Assembly of Massachusetts, and assured them that their proceedings were highly displeasing to the government of New Hampshire, and that they might depend upon it, when the boundary between the two provinces should be determined, the poor, misled people who might be induced to settle there under the color of a Massachusetts grant would be dispossessed of the said lands or suffer some other inconveniences equally grievous; and that the message on which they were sent, and the fair forewarning they had given them, would take away all occasion of complaint when they should be compelled to leave the said lands, and lose the benefit of their improvement. The Massachusetts people were pleased to reply,—that as they were sent by the government of New Hampshire, so were they sent by the government of Massachusetts, and that when they returned home they should lay before their General Assembly the order of Council of which they had delivered them, who would, without doubt, pass thereon as they, the General Assembly, should think proper.

Lieutenant-Governor Wentworth, in his speech to the General Assembly, held at Portsmouth, April 11, 1726, says,—“The Massachusetts are daily encroaching on us. A late instance we have in voting a township should be erected and settled at Pennycook, which will certainly be in the very bowels of this province, and which will take in the most valuable part of our lands.” Pursuant to which, the aforesaid committee was appointed to immediately report to Pennacook, and forewarn them from laying out or taking possession of or settling at that place. They still persisted in making the survey of their grant.

It was ascertained, on making the survey, that a five hundred acre grant to Governor Endicott, east of the river, at Sewell's Falls, afterwards known as the Sewell farm, came within their township. The committee appointed to look after the settlement petitioned the Great and General Court of Massachusetts that a like number of acres of the unappropriated lands joining the township might be granted to the settlers as an equivalent therefor.

August 6, 1728, the General Court of Massachusetts, Resolved, That in consideration of the 500 acres of land formerly granted to Governor Endicott, which falls within their boundaries, the settlers are allowed to extend the south bounds of that township one hundred rods the full breadth of their town, as an equivalent for the aforesaid five hundred acres; which was read and concurred in Council. The determination of the Massachusetts government to establish their claim to all that part of New Hampshire west of a line three miles east of Merrimack River is apparent in the above proceedings; they had located a township on territory that had been covered by people of old Essex for three-score years.

A cart-path had been cut through the forest, a survey of lots had been made sufficient to accommodate the admitted settlers, and preparations were being made to inhabit the township within the next two years.

May 20, 1727, the New Hampshire government, in order to maintain their claims to the territory on both sides of the Merrimack River, granted to Jonathan Wiggin and many others, including the members of the Council and the Governor's friends, the town of Bow, to be nine miles square, covering over three-quarters of Pennacook and the territory immediately south to below the mouth of the Suncook River.

August 6, 1728, in answer to a petition of volunteers, under the command of Captain John Lovewell, the Massachusetts government granted a township on both sides of the Merrimack, “to begin where Pennacook new grant ends, which is 100 rods to the southward of their first Grant, and thence to extend the lines of the East and West bounds on right angles until six miles square of lands shall be completed,” which extended nearly one and a half miles below the junction of the Suncook River with the Merrimack, taking in the Gault and Heald farms, east of the river, in what is now Hooksett.

Tradition says the first permanent settlers in the Suncook parish, in Bow, were Francis Doyme and wife, who built a log hut north of the road leading from Penbrook Street to Garvin's Falls, in 1728. James Moore made a purchase there in 1729, and it is supposed Samuel Gault and others, whose descendants afterwards settled west of the Merrimack, were there about that time. The first meeting of the Suncook proprietors was held at Chelmsford December 10, 1729. It was voted that a committee of five, with an able surveyor, should view the lands of the township, and lay out sixty lots of not less than forty acres each, and an additional lot for the first settled minister. These lots were east of the river, extending from Garvin's Falls to the southern limits of their township. April 10, 1733, Voted to build a log meeting-house, twenty-four by thirty, as soon as may be. The house was built and answered the purpose for several years.

In the fall of 1734 money was raised in Rumford for building a bridge across Suncook River, "one-third part of the expense to be at the cost of the town," and appointed a committee to take care that the bridge over the Suncook be well done. The next spring the Suncook proprietors voted thirty pounds for the same purpose.

The first meeting of the proprietors at Suncook was held at the meeting-house September 17, 1735.

A bridge was built across the Suncook in 1737, near where the Concord railroad bridge now is, and a road laid near the river to the great bend, where a ferry was established in 1738.

A minister was to be settled. The Presbyterian element predominated; but the organization being in the hands of the Orthodox party, Rev. Aaron Whittemore was given a call, which was strongly protested by the Presbyterians of the town, some fifteen in number. The Orthodox Church was in the minority at the time.

In 1739 the proprietors' clerk not having taken the oath of office before a qualified officer, a committee was chosen to lay the case before the General Court of Massachusetts, and ask that their acts be legalized. The favor was granted. On March 5, 1740, the present southern boundary of New Hampshire was established, and Suncook and Pennacook was found to be outside of the province that had granted their charter.

As before stated, Bow was granted by Lieutenant-Governor John Wentworth, with advice of Council, May 20, 1727, in the following words, viz.:

"George, by the Grace of God of Great Brittain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c.

"To all People to whom these Presents shall come Greeting: Know ye that we, of our special Knowledge and full motion, for the Due Encouragement of Settling a new Plantation, By & with the advice & Consent of our Council, have given & granted, and by these Presents, as far as in us lies, do give and Grant in Equal Shares unto Sundry of our beloved Subjects, whose names are Entered in a Schedule hereunto annexed, that Inhabit or shall Inhabit within s'd Grant within our Province of New Hampshire, all that Tract of land within the following Bounds, viz.: Beginning on the South East side of the town of Chichester & running nine miles by Chichester and Canterbury, and carrying that Breadth of nine miles from each of the aforesaid Towns Southwest until the full Complement of Eighty-one square miles are fully made up, & that the same be a Town Corporate by the name of Bow to the Persons aforesd, and their associates forever. To have & to hold the said Land to the s'd Grantees and to such associates as they shall admit for ever upon the Conditions following:

"1. That the Proprietors build, or cause to be built, seventy-five Dwelling-Houses on s'd Land, & settle a family in each House, & clear three acres of Land fit for mowing or plowing within Three years, and that Each Proprietor pay his Proportion of the Town Charge when & so often as occasion shall require.

"2. That a meeting-House be built for the Public Worship of God within the Term of four years.

"3. That upon Default of any Particular Proprietor in Complying with the Conditions of the Charter upon his part, such Delinquent Proprietor shall forfeit his share to the other Proprietors, which shall be disposed of according to Major vote of the s'd proprietors at a Legal Town meeting.

"4. That a Proprietor's share be reserved for a Parsonage, another for the first settled minister of the Gospel which shall be ordained in s'd Town; Provided, nevertheless, that the Peace with the Indians continue During the space of three years; but if it should so happen that a war with the Indians shall commence before the Expiration of the s'd Three years, then the term of Three years shall be allowed the Proprietors after the Expiration of the war for the Performance of the aforesaid Conditions. Rendering & Paying, therefore, to us, our heirs & successors, or such officer or officers as shall be appointed to receive the same, the annual quit rent or acknowledgement of one ear of Indian Corn in the s'd Town on the first Friday in December, yearly, forever if demanded, reserving also unto us, our heirs and successors, all the Mast Trees growing on s'd Land, according to acts of Parliament in that case made & Provided, & for the better order, rule & Government of the s'd Town, We do, by these Presents, for ourselves, our heirs & successors, Grant unto the s'd men & Inhabitants, or those that shall Inhabit the s'd Town, That yearly, & every year, upon the first Thursday in April, forever, shall meet to elect & choose, by the major part of the Proprietors then Present, Constables, Selectmen and other Town Officers according to the Laws and usages of our s'd Province, & we do appoint Andrew Wiggan, Esq., George Veasey and William Moor to be Selectmen our s'd Town until the first Thursday in April, which will be in the year of our Lord 1728, with full Power & authority, as other Town selectmen have, to call a Town Meeting or meetings as there may be occasion, and to continue until other Selectmen shall be chosen in their stead in such manner as in these Presents expressed. In Testimony whereof, we have caused the seal of our s'd Province to be hereunto affixed. Witness, John Wentworth, Esq., our Lieutenant-Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over our s'd Province, at our Town of Portsmouth, in our s'd Province, the Twentieth Day of May, in the thirtieth year of our King, Anno Domini, 1727.

"J. WENTWORTH.

"By the The Lt. Gov., Concurred with advice of the Council.

"RICHARD WALDRON, Clerk of the Council.

"A Schedule of the Proprietors of the Town of Bow.

"Jonathan Wiggan, Thomas Wiggan, Samuel Piper, Thomas Veasey, George Veasey, William Moore, Edward Field, William French, James Palmer, Jonathan Chase, Moses Leavitt, Joshua Hill, Thomas Rollins, Richard Crockett, Isaac Fass, Thomas Piper, Richard Kelly, Samuel Goodhue, Joseph Mason, John Hannaford, Joseph Rollings, Satchel Bandler, John Mead, Joseph Morrill, Nathaniel Stevens, David Robinson, Jonathan Dearborn, Joseph Morrill, Jr., John Piper, Samuel Veasey, James Thompson, John Sinclair, Saguol Green, William Burley, Benjamin Hoag, Samuel Hilton, Matthew Thompson, Benjamin Palmer, Owen Rannels, Joshua Neal, Thomas French, Nathaniel Piper, Joseph Jewett, John Hill, Thomas Odell, Abraham Stockbridge, Richard Colley, Jr., Thomas Briar, Joseph Mason, Jr., Edward Fifield, Jr., William French, Jr., Ephraim Leavitt, Benja. Veasey, Thomas Veasey, Jr., Nathan Taylor, Jon's Clark, George Veasey, Jr., John Leavitt, Tymon Wiggan, Samuel Stevens, John Sachel, John Speed, Thomas Wiggan, Jr., Saml. Piper, Jr., Chace Wiggan, Thomas Wiggan (50), Benja. Mason, Joshua Kenison, Walter Wiggan, Caleb Rollins, Joseph Palmer, Edward Taylor, Benja. Norris, John Green, Joshua Stevens, Thos. Piper, Jr., Nathan's Folsom, Henry Wiggan, Joseph Praxey, Jeremiah Folsom, John Palmer, James Norris, Ab'm Morgan, Brad't Wiggan, Theoph. Smith, Stephen Thurston, Robt. Wilson, John Avery, Joseph Hoey, Benja. Taylor, Jr., Benja. Follet, Nathaniel White, Benjamin Wentworth, Hunking Wentworth, Wm. Wentworth, Mark Wentworth, Richard Willard, Jr., George Jaffrey, Jr., Henry Root, Cyranus Jaffrey, Eben's Wear, Robt. Ananias, John Reed, Samsun Sheaf, George Long, Richard Waldron, Jr.

"Admitted Associates.

"His Excellency and Hon'rs Samuel Shute, Esq. and John Wentworth, Esq., Each of them 500 acres of land and a home lot. Col. Mark Hunking, Col. Waldron, George Jaffrey, Rich'd Willard, Col. Tho's Westbrook, Archibald McPhedris, John Frost, Jonathan Odiorne Esquires, Each a Proprietor's Share. Peter Wear, John Plaxel, James Davis, John Gilman, Andrew Wiggan, Capt. John Downing, Capt. John Gilman, Saml. Tibbets, Paul Gerrish, Ephraim Bennett, John Sanborn, Theodore Atkinson, Eben's Stevens, Capt. Wm. Fellows, James Jaffrey, Joseph Loverin, Daniel Loverin, Za'hr. Hannaford, Joseph Wiggan, Pierce Long.

"Bow Schedule Certified By

"RICHARD WALDRON.

"Clerk of the Council.

"Joseph Low, James Robinson, Noah Barker, George Clark, Daniel Moody, Thomas Wiggan, junr., John Rollins, Benjamin Tyler, Hobbidge Kelly, Daniel Davis, Wm. Moore, Junr., Abgal Powell, Mary Smith, Mary Jones, Catharine Wiggan, Nicholas Wiggan. These sixteen Persons above named are part of the schedule added By order of the Lt. Govern'r and Council.

"RICH'D WALDRON, Clr. Council.

"A true Copy taken off the Proprietors' Book.

"AMOS MOSES LEAVIT, Proprietor, &c."

"Prov. of New Hampshire, Nov. 25, 1727.—The above was Entered & Recorded according to the original in the Book of Charters.

"By THOMASRE ARKINSON."

Pennacook was granted by Massachusetts January 17, 1725. Bow was granted May 29, 1727, by New Hampshire. Suncook was granted August 6, 1728, by Massachusetts. Bow included nearly all of both Massachusetts grants, which was to have the supremacy. If New Hampshire's claim sixty miles inland was valid, the Bow proprietors were the rightful owners of the territory; if Massachusetts' claim three miles north of the Merrimack extended to Lake Winnipiseogee, then the Pennacook and Suncook proprietors were included in the province of their choice. Their first meeting, at Pennacook, was October 14, 1730, at the meeting-house.

March 29, 1731, the conditions of the original grant of the plantation being complied with, the proprietors petitioned to the General Court of Massachusetts for the rights and privileges of a town. The court ordered a meeting to be called for the choice of town officers. Nathaniel Abbot was authorized by a justice of the peace of Essex County, Mass., to call a meeting to be held at the meeting-house, September 14, 1732, for the choice of a clerk, and to transact any business they should think best, which was done, and, February 27, 1733, Pennacook, in the county of Essex, Mass., was incorporated as a township by the name of Rumford, the inhabitants having equal powers, privileges and immunities of other towns in Massachusetts. They had thrown off their plantation garb and were permitted to assume the responsibilities of a town, but they were fearful they might not be subjects of the Massachusetts government, which could not be known until the line was established between the two provinces. Massachusetts claimed the lands from three miles north of Merrimack River, thence running parallel with the river as far as the crotch at Franklin, and thence due west to the sea. On the other hand, New Hampshire claimed that their southern boundary should begin three miles north of the middle of the channel of the Merrimack where it empties into the Atlantic Ocean, and from thence should run on a straight line west up into the mainland until it met His Majesty's other governments, or New York. An appeal was made to the King, who appointed a commission to settle the conflicting claims as to the boundary between the two provinces.

August 1, 1739, this commission met at Hampton. Their decision was unsatisfactory to both parties, and the subject was, by means of agents, referred to His Majesty's Council in England, who decided, March 5, 1740, the present southern boundary of New Hampshire, viz.: a similar curve line pursuing the course of the Merrimack River at three miles distance to Pawtucket Falls, thence due west to the sea, and to other governments.

In accordance with the above decision of the King, New Hampshire extended her jurisdiction over all the inhabitants within her bounds, and Rumford and Suncook were henceforth no longer subjects of the government of Massachusetts Bay. The inhabitants of Rumford being strongly attached to the Massachusetts government, petitioned to the King praying to be annexed to Massachusetts, but to no purpose.

They found they were living on territory belonging to individuals instead of the State; that the title to their lands, which they had received from Massachusetts, was disputed by the proprietors of the town of Bow. They could get no redress from New Hampshire courts, for judges and juries, and nearly all government officials, were among the Bow proprietors, and had warned them at their peril to desist in their attempts to establish a town at Pennacook under a Massachusetts grant, as it might be attended with very ill consequences to the settlers.

April 28, 1742, the proprietors of Suncook parish voted not to urge the demand for town privileges, but wished their rights to be respected, without the sacrifice of their homes, lands and the labor of years.

A committee was appointed to look after the interests of the proprietors against the claims of the inhabitants of New Hampshire in the province courts, or in the courts of Great Britain, and undivided lands were sold to pay the expense of defending their property. In 1744 a committee was empowered to come to an absolute agreement with the Bow proprietors, if it could be done on reasonable grounds. Many of the settlers being of the Scotch-Irish stock of Londonderry, whom the Lieutenant-Governor had cherished and defended from encroachments that would have disturbed their settlement, they were permitted to go on with their parish as best they could under conflicting titles and plans. The Bow proprietors were willing that those who had made improvements should enjoy them. The court was called upon to remove those impediments, to annul the survey of the home lots of Bow so far as they interfered with the Suncook survey as far as executed, and a new survey of the undivided land to order. The call was favorably received and answered; they got all they asked for, and the inhabitants became, for the time being, citizens of Bow.

The war between France and England had extended to their respective provinces in America. The French in Canada had instigated the Indians in that region to make depredations on our frontier. Block-houses or garrisons had become necessary for a refuge for the inhabitants in most every town. Several were established in Rumford in 1746, and men with their families were assigned to their respective garrisons for protection from the Indians. Scouting-parties were organized,—one at Canterbury, an extreme frontier; one at Rumford, under Captain John Chandler; and Captain Ladd's company was scouting in Pembroke and vicinity to warn the people of the approach of Indians that they might flee to their garrisons. The New Hampshire government looked upon Rumford and Suncook as outlaws, and were slow to protect them; but Canterbury was the favored town on this frontier, not merely on account of its position, but because it was a New Hampshire town, settled by New Hampshire people and granted by the New Hampshire government. In the spring of 1747, and in the course of the summer, the Indians made frequent attacks. On the 20th of May they made an attack on the people of the Suncook parish, in Bow. Robert Buntin, with his son Andrew, a lad of ten years, and James Carr, were plowing near the west bank of Merrimack River. Towards night Indians that had been concealed in a thicket rushed on them. Carr, in attempting to run to the river, was shot, and fell dead on his back. As they ran up to scalp him his large dog attacked them, but was stunned by a blow of a tomahawk and left for dead. The people in garrison at Suncook heard the firing, but it being near night, did not venture an immediate pursuit for fear of being taken by the Indians. The dog, having revived during the night, was found the next morning with his nose laid in the hand of the corpse of his master; nor would the faithful animal permit any one to touch the body without flattery and some force. Carr is said to be the only person killed by the Indians in Bow. Buntin and his son offered no resistance, and were hurried into captivity through the wilderness to Canada and sold to a French trader in Montreal. The father purchased his freedom in about eleven months, but the son was a captive nearly three years, when he returned safely home. The General Court of New Hampshire soon ordered a garrison of eight men to be stationed at Suncook for the protection of the inhabitants. Owing to the dual governments of Rumford and Suncook (two Massachusetts towns included in a New Hampshire town), the collector was unable to collect the minister tax; the New Hampshire government would not interfere. The Massachusetts government, that gave them their charter, was petitioned for authority to compel each one to pay his share towards the support of the minister, which was granted in the case of Suncook, it having two churches nearly equal orthodox and Presbyterian; but Rumford, being unanimously orthodox, needed no compulsion.

Although the attacks of the Indians were less frequent, the government did not relax its efforts for defense, as they sent out scouts and reinforced garrisons. Ebenezer Eastman had a company of fifteen men on duty at Pennacook in the winter of 1747-48, and Captain Moses Foster had a company of twenty-six men guarding the fortress at Suncook in 1753. In 1754, John Chandler had a company of nine men eight days scouting in the neighboring towns.

February 7, 1749-50 George Vasey and Abram

Tilton, selectmen chosen by the proprietors of Bow, remonstrated to Governor Benning Wentworth and Council against a petition of inhabitants on a tract of land, called Pennacook, to be incorporated with town privileges, as the bounds mentioned make great infringement on land belonging to the town of Bow. Walter Bryant, of New Market, who, with eight assistants, was employed by the New Hampshire government to mark the boundary between New Hampshire and Maine, perambulated the town line of Bow about the year 1749. He says in his report,—

"I began at the Reputed Bound of the town of Chichester at the head of Nottingham, and from thence Run northwest four miles to the head of Epsom, there marked a maple tree with the word Bow and Sunday Letters, and from the said tree, which I called the East Corner of said Bow, I Run northwest four miles to the west corner of Chichester, then north east one mile to Canterbury South Corner, then north west five miles on said Canterbury, then South west nine miles, which Runs to North west of Rattlesnake Hill and most of the Pond that lays on the north west side of said hill, and said Line Crosses Hopkinton Road, so called, and takes part of said town in; then we marked a tree and Run South East five miles and marked a tree, then one mile South west, then South East four miles, then north east nine miles to where we began. I Crossed Merrimack River within two mile of Canterbury Line and found all the Inhabitation to the South of Canterbury and East of the Merrimack, which late in Rumford to be in Bow.

"1752.

"WALTER BRYANT."

September 23d a committee of the Suncook proprietors divided into lots of about twenty acres each the intervals on the west side of the Merrimack River, extending from the southerly line of Bow to the head of Garvin's Falls.

Vexatious law-suits were instituted by the proprietors of the common and undivided lands in the town of Bow. A suit in an action of ejectment against Deacon John Merrill, who occupied a tract of eight acres of land, with buildings, at the lower end of Main Street, which was claimed by them to be in Bow. This suit was brought to test the right of the proprietors of Bow to the lands included in the Pennacook grant.

The Rumford settlers were united in their purpose to maintain their right to their township. Common lands were sold to meet the expenses of the suit. Impartial trials were impossible in New Hampshire courts, as judges, juries, councilors and all were in the interest of the proprietors of Bow.

May 30, 1753, the selectmen of Bow were ordered to raise and levy, upon the ratable polls and estates within said town, the sum of sixty pounds in new tenor bills of credit on this government, and July 26th, a further levy of thirty-one pounds, four shillings was ordered, both to be paid before the last of December; a list to be committed to the constable for collection in bills of credit, or in the products of the soil at stipulated prices. The selectmen petition to the Governor and Council, saying,—

"They are ready to obey every order of Government, yet are at a loss as to the boundaries of Bow. One of the purchasers of Capt. Tuffton Mason's right is of the opinion that their South East side line should be carried up about three quarters of a mile further towards the north west. The Pennacook settlers allege that they do not lay in Bow, and many would refuse to pay their tax, and consequently they should be thrown into many Law-suits that would probably ruin them as to their estates, asking that the Boundaries be fixed, or that if they shall think proper, which, if followed by them, they may obey the commands laid by the Court without the least detriment to themselves. Signed by—

"MOSES FOSTER, 1
 "JOHN CHANDLER, 1
 "RICHARD FASSMAN, 1
 "DAVID AMBER, 1
 "WILLIAM MERRILL, 1

"Bow, Oct. 29, 1754."

The persons on whom those taxes were to be assessed were, with three or four exceptions, inhabitants of the Rumford and Suncook settlements. They deputed Rev. Timothy Walker to represent to His Majesty in Council their grievances by reason of the law-suits commenced against them by the proprietors of Bow, and solicited of the Massachusetts government such aid as they should in their wisdom see fit. One hundred pounds was granted.

July 25, 1754, Clement March, Zebulon Giddings, Daniel Peirce, as agents in behalf of the proprietors of the township of Bow, petitioned the New Hampshire government, saying,— "That the said proprietors commenced an action of ejectment against one Merrill for the recovery of eight acres of land lying within the said Town of Bow, that the said action was carried through the Law here and said proprietors recovered judgement at the Superior Court of Judicature; that the said Merrill had complained to his Majesty in Council, who was pleased to order a hearing of the action before him in Council in October next, and they humbly pray for a Loan of one hundred pounds, Sterling money, to defend their title to the said land, and they are ready to give such security as the Assembly shall order.

"Whereupon, Ordered that a bill be drawn in favor of the petitioners on John Thomlinson, Esq., agent for the Province at the Court of Great Britain, for the sum of £100 Sterling of the interest in his hands belonging to this Government."

In the spring of 1755, Jonathan Lovewell was appointed to call a town-meeting in Bow, on the 22d of April, for the choice of officers, which he accordingly did, and reported to the General Court that he attended at the time and place appointed, and but one inhabitant of Bow attended. In contempt of the law and in defiance of the government, they refused to elect the necessary officers to levy and collect the taxes, which was resented by the government.

May 25th it was enacted that "Ezra Carter and Moses Foster, Esq., and John Chandler, Gent., all of said Bow, assess the Polls and Estates within the said town of Bow, as the Limits were run by Walter Bryant in 1749, in a just and equal proportion, the sum of £580 lss., New Tenor Bills of credit." Timothy Walker and John Noyes were appointed collectors, with all the powers of constables for collecting public taxes. If said assessors neglected or refused to collect said tax, the province treasurer was directed to issue his warrant to the sheriff to levy said tax, together with damage sufficient to pay the extra expense of collecting.

In 1756 the committee appointed by the proprietors of Suncook to settle with the Bow proprietors were successful in their endeavors.

January 1, 1757, a petition was presented to the General Court of New Hampshire by Daniel Pierce,

Thomas Wiggin and Daniel Marston, 2d of Bow; William Pottle, blacksmith, and Benjamin Norris, yeoman, as a committee of the proprietors of the town of Bow,—

"Showing that there are many persons claiming lands by title derived from Bow Prop'rs, that they had made major vendors and had expended law suits with said Proprietors which had cost them many times that many of the settlers who hold their titles under the proprietors of Suncook have desisted of a settlement of these disputes and were willing to become not only inhabitants of Bow, but to be taken into the Bow Proprietors, who were desirous of having the question settled without further expensive law suits, by reasonable concessions on their part, notwithstanding the willingness of the parties, impudently evaded. The Home lots, or first Division in Bow, which were laid out for acres, fall short some of them nearly one half, and the lots laid out by the Prop'rs of Suncook run across the Bow lots obliquely, so that one of these matters with several of these in many places, that the only way to quiet the possessors unless the laying out of some of the said Home lots should be annulled and adjudged common lands, is to relate to those claiming under them, and they ask to have liberty to bring in a bill accordingly.

"Read in Council Jan. 6, 1757.

"THOMAS WIGGIN, S. C. C.

"In the House of Representatives Jan. 7, 1757. And ordered to be printed two weeks successively in the New Hampshire Gazette.

"ANDREW CLARK, S. C. C.

"February 3d. The petition being read in the House and it appearing that the order of Court had been complied with, New persons appearing against it, and the Bow Committee, the petitioners humbly pray to have liberty to bring in a bill accordingly.

"ANDREW CLARK, S. C. C.

"R. WILLIAMS, S. C. C. C.

The small lots both sides of the Merrimack River were annulled and adjudged common land. Forty acres immediately south of the Suncook were sold to Henry Hemphill and a tract above the same river to the Garvins.

In 1758, John Noyes, in behalf of the inhabitants of Bow living east of the Merrimack, petitioned for parish privileges, which was granted November 1, 1759, by the name of Pembroke.

April 6th the selectmen of Bow remonstrated against the petition of John Noyes for the reason,—

"That a great majority of the settlers came on there without right and have endeavored to hold the lands from the proprietors of Bow, the lawful owners thereof, as appears by many actions that have been brought against them and many more now depending, and is that the proposals of accommodation made on both sides were humbly offered, that, if they should be favored with their request, it would strengthen them in their error and weaken our just right, and prevent the proposed agreement from being vigorously pursued, we humbly desire that they might not to be so fully disintegrated from the town of Bow and exempted from subjection to it as they ask, but that they be a Parish in the town of Bow, for we cannot conceive what right or power to make a township and grant privileges to a society of residents there by suffering the laws of the land when we are putting the same laws in execution to dispossess them, for these and many other reasons we humbly beg the prayer of the said petition may be granted.

"ALEXANDER TYLE, S. C. C.

"JOHN ST. KATHLEEN, S. C. C.

"JAMES DWARREN, S. C. C.

"J. SEEBY, S. C. C.

Notwithstanding the foregoing remonstrance, the Council and Assembly thought it would not only be agreeable to the town of Bow, but would be of great service to them, as well as the petitioners, and would promote the settlement of the land thereabouts. Accordingly, November 1st, it was enacted by His Excellency the Governor, Council and Assembly that all that part of Bow east of the Merrimack River and between the Soucook and Suncook Rivers be incorporated by the name of the parish of Pembroke, invested with all the powers and privileges of other parishes in the province. This territory included most of the settlers of the Suncook grant, and their troubles with the Bow proprietors were at an end. But it was not so with the people of Rumford; they were obstinate and determined not to give in their invoice or pay their part of the public charges until they were given town privileges, which the New Hampshire government was slow to grant. A like difficulty respecting taxation existed in that part of Hopkinton claimed by Bow. About twenty-six families had settled there who wished to be taxed in Hopkinton, and permission to do so was granted in 1763.

November 7th the sheriff of the province of New Hampshire was ordered to attach the goods or estates of Benjamin Rolf, Esq., Daniel Carter, Timothy Simonds and John Evans, all husbandmen of Bow, to the value of one thousand pounds, and for the want thereof, to take the bodies, if they may be found in the precinct, to answer unto the proprietors of the common and undivided lands lying within the township of Bow in an action of ejectment, wherein the plaintiffs demanded possession of about one thousand acres of land and appurtenances, "beginning at a stake on the South west of the Great River in Bow, 116 rods below John Merrill's Ferry; thence running west to Turkey river until it comes to within 20 rods of Nath'l Smith's Grist-Mill; Thence south to said river; thence on said river to where it empties into the great river; thence up the great river to the first-mentioned bound," said proprietors alleging they were entitled to the one thousand acres as part of the eighty-one square miles of their grant. These suits of ejectment were brought to test the right of the Bow proprietors to the lands claimed by them. The cause was brought on trial in the Inferior Court September 2, 1760. The jury gave a verdict in favor of the Bow proprietors. The Rumford settlers prayed for an appeal to the next Superior Court, which was allowed. On the second Tuesday of November, 1760, in the Superior Court, the jury again gave their verdict for the respondents. The appellants, conceiving themselves greatly aggrieved, prayed and were allowed an appeal to His Majesty in Council. Rev. Timothy Walker was deputed as their agent for that purpose, and succeeded in getting the verdicts of the New Hampshire courts reversed, and the appellants he restored to what they had lost by means of said judgments. "Whereof the Gov'r. or Commander-in-Chief of His Majesty's Province of New Hampshire for the time being, and all others, are to govern themselves accordingly." December 20, 1762, this final decision was made.

In 1761 the order for taking the inventory of the polls and ratable estates in Bow was delivered to Colonel Jeremiah Stickney, of the Rumford parish. He refused to act, saying: "We never understood we had power to act under the incorporation of Bow, in which, if we were mistaken, it was our unhappiness." It is difficult to see why he had not power to act, and retained the remaining part of Bow in one township.

The selectmen of Canterbury were appointed in April of the same year to take the inventory of the polls, stocks and improved lands in the township of Bow, which was nearly all in the Rumford grant. Samuel Rogers, Francis Carr, Ephraim Foster, John Noyes, Jr., Samuel Welch, Ebenezer Carlton and Reuben Currier lived on the territory now included in Bow. The invoice consisted of 154 polls, 91 houses, 341 acres planting-ground, 498 of mowing, 16 of orcharding, 16 oxen, 222 cows; 85 cattle, three years; 90 cattle, two years; 103 cattle, one year; 77 horses, 37 under four years; 150 acres pasture land, 6 negroes; 6 mills, yearly income, £125. The valuation was £4828 10s. and £1000 damage. Signed by Ezekiel Morrill, Thomas Clough, selectmen of Canterbury. We have no means of knowing that the tax was collected.

The Rev. Mr. Walker visited England for the third time in the fall of 1762 to attend the trial of the cause, which was yet pending. It was finally decided on the ground that whoever settled under a grant, from either side, if he happened to be on the wrong side of the line when it came to be settled, his possession should be his title, and what a man claimed under a certain title, part of which he improved, was his property.

In 1764, Solomon Heath, Edward Russell and Thomas Chandler, lately settled in the northwest part of the present township of Bow, petitioned the General Court June 12th, saying they "understand there is a very great Province Tax laid on the inhabitants of Bow the last year, this present year and the next year for their Delinquency for the past seven or eight years last past, which would almost ruin them if obliged to pay any proportion of it, and wish to be relieved from so doing." Said petition was read in Council and House June 14th, when it was voted that a hearing be had next August, and the selectmen of Pembroke and Ezra Carter, Esq., and Captain John Chandler, assessors of Bow, be served with a copy of the petition and the order of court, and they stated to His Majesty's Council "that there are 41 polls, with the estates they possess, within the limits of Bow that are exactly similar to these petitioners, and also sixty or more Polls and estates of minors, and so not liable to be taxed when the rates were due for which this Tax is ordered, but have since come of age; many have left town and some the Province since these taxes were assessed and are exempt from our power of taxing them, and they ask whether there is not the same reason that these others should be freed as that the petitioners should, which, if the Case, we are well assured that it will be impossible for the small remainder to pay the whole of said tax." In the House of Representatives, January 9, 1765, this petition was read and it was "Voted, that the prayer be granted, and that the petitioners have leave to bring in a bill accordingly. In Council read & concurred Jan. 10th."

The inhabitants of Bow outside of Rumford felt the oppression of taxation in arrears. It is stated in the petition of Timothy Walker in behalf of the inhabitants of Rumford, April 11, 1764, that "they would have been glad to have acted even under the incorporation of Bow if they could, although highly inconvenient for them, as it blended part of three towns whose interests had always been separate; that they conceive themselves greatly aggrieved the heavy tax in arrears that nobody has power to collect. They therefore most humbly pray To be incorporated by their former known boundaries, and that the Inhabitants may be abated at least one-half of the arrearages." In answer to this petition, the House of Representatives reaffirmed that "what the town of Bow is now in arrears for the Province tax shall be collected, and all the inhabitants on lands between Canterbury, Bow and New Hopkinton shall be taxed and pay their proportion."

May 25, 1765, "Whereas there are sundry arrearages of taxes now due, which the inhabitants aforesaid apprehend they cannot levy for want of sufficient authority, and several of them praying they might be erected into a town or parish and enjoy the common privileges of other towns in this province: Be it enacted" (here the boundaries of Concord are inserted, beginning at the southeast corner of Boseawen at the mouth of the Contoocook; thence running south, seventy-three degrees west, four miles; thence south, seventy-three degrees east, seven miles and one hundred rods; thence north, seventy-three degrees east, about four miles to Merrimack River—this last the present line between Bow and Concord; then crossing said river the same course to the Soucook River, etc.) "that the polls and estates within the same bounds be made a parish by the name of Concord with all the powers of other towns in this province excepting the laying out of roads, when application shall be made to the Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Province."

The selectmen of the new parish were to unite with John Noyes and Edward Russell to assess the arrearage taxes.

The triune township of Bow no longer exists. The New Hampshire government has tenaciously adhered to their original purpose of giving Bow the pre-eminence, and disallowing all the claims of Rumford as incorporated by Massachusetts. The idea advanced in the order of the government to the surveyors of Penacook, in 1726, that the Massachusetts government granting a township there might be attended with very ill consequences to the settlers had been verified, All concerned are heartily tired of this state of things, and pray for a reconciliation, which can only be attained by giving the Rumford settlers their township. The Bow proprietors were not actual settlers, and living in the eastern part of the State, held their annual meetings at Stratham, independent of the Rumford and Soucook settlers, and the few families outside refused to act. Their feelings can be best known by the following, which also shows who the actual settlers were at that time:

"To His Excellency, Benning Wentworth, Esq. Governor and the Hon'ble His Majesty's Council and House of Representatives in General Assembly. The petition of sundry of the Inhabitants of the town of Bow and within Concord, humbly sheweth that Great Difficulty and hardship hath arise by our being Rated with old Arraiges in years past with Concord People and some Difficulty arise with our being Rated with them now and it hath been a Great burthen to many more Settlements being made in s'd Bow. Wherefore your s'd Petitioners humbly Pray your Excellency and Honors to take their Circumstances under Consideration and Relieve them from being Rated with Concord any Longer, as your Excellency & honours shall in your Great Wisdom and Clemency See fit, and your Petitioners, as an Duty Bound, shall ever Pray.

"James moor, Joseph Rogers, James Boswell, John Chace, antony manuell, Eleazer Emerson, William Robertson, Samuel Rogers, John Noyes, Jr., Samuel Alexander, Thomas Carlton, Elisha Clough, Jr., Francis Carr, Solomon Heath, Edw. Eaton, William Parker, David Merrill, Joseph Riker, Jr., Samuel Smith, jun'r., Samuel Welch, Elisha Clough, Edw. Russell, Thomas Chandler, Ephraim Foster, John Robertson, John Gracie, Ephraim moor, Benjamin Noyes.

"In Council, July 2, 1766.—Read and ordered to be sent down to the Hon'ble house."

The first enumeration of the people of the province was made in 1767 by order of the General Assembly. The return from Bow was as follows, viz.:

Unmarried men from sixteen to sixty	17
Married men from sixteen to sixty	34
Boys under sixteen	50
Men sixty and upward	2
Unmarried females	50
Married females	34
Widows	2
Total	187

The Rumford parish being granted town privileges by the name of Concord, those living outside, not yet acting in the capacity of a town, a petition, of which the following is an answer, was presented to Jeremiah Page, Esq., of Dunbarton,

"In answer to a petition to me Presented by fourteen of the inhabitants of Bow who are not set into any Parish, Humbly Sheweth that they should be allowed to meet at the Dwelling House of William Robertson of s'd Town on Wednesday the eleventh Day of March next, at Ten o'clock in the forenoon to act on the following affairs.

"Furthermore all the freeholders and other Inhabitants of s'd Bow that are not in any Parish are hereby Notified and warned to meet at the Dwelling house of William Robertson on the eleventh day of March at ten o'clock in the forenoon, to act on the following particulars, viz.:

"1st, To choose a moderator to govern s'd meeting.

"2d, To choose Town Officers of the Town sees Cause.

"3d, To see if the Town will subscribe to build a Meeting House.

"4th, To see if the Town will agree on a place to set s'd house.

"Hated ye twenty-first Day of February, 1767.

"JEREMIAH PAGE, Justice of Peace."

At said meeting they made choice of Samuel Rogers for moderator; William Robertson, town clerk; Samuel Rogers, Ephraim Moore and Samuel Welch, selectmen; Francis Carr, constable; Edward Russell,

Elisha Clough and John Robertson, committee to examine selectmen's accounts; James Moor, John Grushee, Edward Carlton, Thomas Chandler and Benjamin Noyes, surveyors of highways. "Voted to build a meeting-house by Subscription." "Voted to adjourn s^d meeting to the first Tuesday of May next, to meet at the House of Ephraim Foster." Met according to adjournment, and adjourned to the 13th of July, at which time the aforesaid officers made oath to be faithful in the discharge of their offices according to law. This was the first town-meeting of the inhabitants of Bow, a notice of which being served on the proprietors, they, at their annual meeting at Stratham, the first Thursday in April, 1767, agreeable to charter, declared:

"As it may be Necessary that s^d Inhabitants should act in Town affairs separate from the Proprietors, it is the order by s^d Proprietors voted, that as no laws in them Lies, they approve of s^d Inhabitants' choice of s^d Town officers to their Respective Offices aforesaid.

"Attested by

"SAMUEL LANE, Proprietors' Clerk."

From this time the inhabitants managed their own affairs independent of the original proprietors, but were still rated with Concord. August 28, 1767,—

"The Selectmen, in behalf of themselves and inhabitants of s^d Bow, as Inhabitants of such as are set off into Parishes, Humbly sheweth that they have chosen a town officers agreeable to Bow Charter and are ready and willing to assess, collect and Pay on proportion of Publick charges with other towns in this Province, your petitioners have been and are now greatly abused by being Rated with Concord, for their Selectmen are the main part of the assessors and they make the rate as they see fit. Wherefore, the s^d petitioners Humbly and Earnestly Pay your Excellency and Honors to take their distressed Circumstances under consideration, and Relieve them from being Rated any longer with Concord, in such manner as your Honors shall see fit, and your Petitioners, as to duty bound, shall Ever Pay—

(Signed)

"SAMUEL ROGERS,] Selectmen

"SAMUEL WELSH,] do do

"EPHRAIM MOOR,] do do."

"In Council August 28, 1767.—Read and Ordered to be sent down to the Honorable House.

"T. ARKINSON, JR. [Secretary]"

September 30th the selectmen called a meeting of the freeholders and other inhabitants of Bow, to be held at the house of Ephraim Foster, in said town, on the 19th of October, when it was "Voted to allow what roads the selectmen have laid out, and that no more be laid this year." "Voted to work three days' work on the highway this year." The road from Concord down the Merrimack River to the northerly corner of Samuel Welch's land was laid prior to 1767. A drift-road, two rods wide, was opened "from that by s^d Welch's land, through John Noyes, Jr.'s, land to the ridge about forty rods above John Noyes, Esq.'s, House, following said Ridge till it strikes the river; thence down the river to Starkstown line; thence Beginning at Benjamin Noyes' Ferry, forty rods above his house, crossing the river to the mouth of Simcook River & up s^d river to Allentown line."

In 1768 the annual meeting was held at the house of Joseph Rogers. He was chosen moderator; William Robertson, town clerk; Edward Russell, John Robertson and Aaron Kinsman, selectmen; James Moor, constable; Caleb Buswell, William Robertson and John Hemphill, committee to examine selectmen's accounts.

"Voted to build a Pound near Ephraim Foster's House, s^d Foster to be Pound-keeper," and "Voted forty Dollars to repair highways, to be worked at forty shillings per day." Roads were returned from Tom Merrill's bridge, west of Seriah Morgan's, easterly by John Robertson's house to Baker's ferry, to be two rods wide; also from Samuel Welch's land northwesterly to Thomas Kinsman's Mills, two rods wide, thence to Kinsman's Mills, thence northerly to Concord line, keeping the breadth of four rods; also a road from Kinsman's Mills at Turkey River bridge (to be four rods wide) to Tom Merrill's bridge, thence to the meeting-house near Elisha Clough's land, thence to White Rock Brook, over Wood Hill, by Samuel Rogers' house, to Dunbarton line.

It is supposed the line of travel from one settler's dwelling to another was on or near the newly-returned roads,—first a foot and horseback path, perhaps, then a cart-road, and finally a formal highway. Turkey River bridge and Tom Merrill's had been built previous to this date. The amount of ratable estate in town at this time was £1500; the tax £3, 10s. on £1000. There were forty-eight ratable polls over sixteen years old. In 1769 the meeting warned by James Moor, constable, in the name of His Majesty, met at the house of Francis Carr. Edward Russell was chosen moderator, William Robertson, town clerk; John Noyes, David Clement and Edward Russell, selectmen; Joseph Rogers, constable. "Voted to accept the road from Dunbarton to Concord over Wood Hill." At an adjourned meeting, "Voted to accept the road from Wm. Parker's house to Merrimack River." The State being divided into five counties, Bow was included in Rockingham.

At the annual meeting in 1770, Edward Russell, Ephraim Foster and Moses Garvin were chosen selectmen. "Voted sixty dollars to be worked on the highway at forty shillings per day." At a meeting called by Samuel Welch, constable, by order of the selectmen, to be held at the meeting-house, "Voted to pay Mr. Wooster thirty dollars for preaching this year."

The annual meeting at the meeting-house in 1771, chose Edward Carlton, Benjamin Noyes and Joseph Baker selectmen, and other town officers. "Voted thirty dollars for preaching," and "Voted not to raise money to hire a School-Master this year." "Voted to buy a town-book and Pay William Robertson for drawing of the records."

In 1772, Edward Russell, John Grushee and Leonard Harriman were chosen selectmen. "Voted thirty dollars for preaching and thirty dollars for a town school." "Voted to sell all right or title to a forty-acre lot in Pembroke, as laid out by the Proprietors, to Ebenezer Frye." "Voted to release Stephen Kinsman's and Francis Carr's minister tax, they giving the town a discharge for boarding the minister." Benjamin Noyes, Leonard Harriman and James Buswell, a committee chosen to settle with the selectmen, find the following notes due the town:

	£	s.	d.
One signed by Ebenezer Fry	3	0	0
One signed by Joseph Rogers	1	3	0
One signed by Samuel Welch	1	1	0
One signed by James Moor	0	16	8

Fourteen of the past selectmen signed a paper, giving all their services as selectmen.

At a meeting called for the purpose, February 24, 1773, Aaron Kinsman was chosen to serve as a grand juror to His Majesty's Superior Court of Judicature, to be held at Portsmouth in and for the county of Rockingham. At the annual meeting, Edward Russell, Ephraim Foster and Benjamin Noyes were chosen selectmen; John Grushce and Leonard Harriman, deer-reeves; Edward Carlton, town clerk. The new proportion, settled by the General Assembly, gave Bow sixty-four polls, sixty-eight ratable estates; tax on £1000: £3 5s. According to a census taken by order of Governor John Wentworth, Bow contained 398 inhabitants,—58 married men and women the same, 101 unmarried females, 5 unmarried men from sixteen to sixty, 84 boys sixteen years and under, 2 men sixty years and upward. Signed by Benjamin Noyes and Solomon Heath.

In 1774, Timothy Dix signed his name as town clerk at a meeting called for choosing a grand juror to the September court; James Buswell was chosen. At the annual meeting James Buswell, Enoch Noyes and John Carr were chosen selectmen. "Voted that the meeting-house be on the Hill, where it now stands, and not at the Centre." "Voted to give Mr. Fessenden an Invitation to settle with us in the ministry, giving him one thousand pounds, Old Tenor, in Lands for his settlement, besides a yearly salary of forty pounds, and to advance his salary as the town grows able, and chose a committee to Treat with him." He was probably their settled minister for three years; he then preached for the Presbyterians in Pembroke one year; then, with Rev. Mr. Pearson, supplied in Bow. The church at this time was mixed,—Congregational, Presbyterian and Baptist.

A decade had now passed since the British Parliament made a law that it had a right to tax the colonies. The Stamp Act was passed, which provided that all deeds, notes, bills and other legal documents should be written on stamped paper, at certain fixed rates. Americans denied that Parliament had a right to impose taxes on them, and expressed their opinion in the sentiment that "Taxation without representation is tyranny." Public meetings, protesting against the Stamp Act, were held in all the colonies, and public opinion nullified the law and it was repealed.

Parliament then put a tax of three-pence a pound on tea; but the people determined not to import any tea. The press, the pulpit and Colonial L. 280 Times denounced the acts, and an attempt to raise a rebellion in America by taxation proved a failure. British troops were stationed at Boston and New York. The colonists resolved to consult together, and the First Continental Congress was called at Philadelphia September 5, 1774, which recommended the suspension of all commercial intercourse with England, and agreed to meet again in May, 1775. The General Assembly of New Hampshire sent letters to the several towns in the province requesting them to send deputies to a convention, to be held at Exeter, to choose delegates to a General Congress to meet at Philadelphia. Accordingly, a meeting was called, to be held January 12, 1775, "to see if the town of Bow will vote to Chuse a man to go to Exeter to set with the Provincial Committee to Chuse delegates to go to Philadelphia to the Congress in May next. Voted not to send a man, but voted to Buy a town stock of ammunition; also to get the money due from Lieut. Fry soon as they can without cost."

At the annual meeting, April 6, 1775, Benjamin Bean, John Noyes and Leonard Harriman were chosen selectmen. "Voted to raise 30 dollars for schooling, also to divide into districts as last year, and to raise eight dollars to repair highways. Bought a town-book for fifteen shillings."

On May 11th, pursuant to call, a town-meeting was held, and it was voted to send Benjamin Noyes as a delegate to the Fourth Provincial Congress at Exeter the 17th of May; it was also voted to drop school and highway rates for the year, probably on account of the war. Aaron Kinsman received a captain's commission, March 24, for the Seventh Company, First Regiment, Colonel John Stark. June 23d the town militia was organized by the choice of Ephraim Foster, captain; Ephraim Moor, lieutenant; Ralph Cross, ensign; and Esquire Bryant, James Moor, Samuel Rogers, John Noyes and Benjamin Bean, a Committee of Inspection or Safety.

An order was sent to the several towns in the province, by the Provincial Congress, August 25th, for the taking of an exact count of the number of inhabitants by the selectmen of the several towns. The following is the return from Bow:

Males under 16 years of age	58
Males from 16 to 50	17
Males above 50 years of age	11
The Persons zone to the army	17
Females	155

Total 258

*Gains in Bow, 25; towns wanting, 14; Bow let, 1 depends

BY BENJAMIN BEAN.

JOHN NOYES.

LEONARD HARRIMAN.

*Sept. 6th, 1775, Sworn to before

JOHN BRYANT, C. P.

February 3, 1776, Edward Russell being appointed a justice of the peace by the House of Representatives, the selectmen and Committee of Safety renoun-strated against commissioning him until the town had an opportunity to recommend another man. February 14th a meeting was called for that purpose, to be held the 22d, when Ephraim Foster was chosen as the man.

At the annual meeting, April 4th, John Bryant, Benjamin Noyes and Ephraim Foster were chosen selectmen, and "voted to raise 50 dollars for preaching, to be proportioned above and below Merrill's bridge, according to money raised, and 50 dollars for schooling." Captain Caleb Page was representative at the September session from Bow and Dunbarton, and John Bryant at the December session.

In Congress, March 14, 1776, "Resolved that the Committees of Safety of the United Colonies immediately cause all persons to be disarmed who refuse to associate to defend, by use of arms, the United Colonies against the British Fleets and armies."

April 12th the Committee of Safety of New Hampshire requested the selectmen of towns to desire all males above twenty-one years of age to sign the following declaration, called the Association Test: "We, the subscribers, do hereby solemnly engage and promise that we will, to the utmost of our power, at the risk of our lives and fortunes, with arms, oppose the hostile proceedings of the British Fleets and Armies against the United American Colonies." The act of signing the above was similar to that of the patriots who signed the national declaration, July 4th. The signers in Bow were,—

Ephraim Foster, Joseph Rogers, Nathaniel Collier, John Bryant, Ralph Cross, John Brown, Benjamin Bean, Antony Mannell, Palfiah Clement, James Buswell, Timothy Dix, Richard Clough, Jr., John Carr, Samuel Dow, Henry Hemphill (his X mark), Stephen Eastman, Elisha Clough, Joseph Baker, David Carr, Elisha Clough, Jr., Samuel Welch, John Grisle, Thomas Hardy, William Robertson, Jonathan Clement, Edward Carlton, Aaron Noyes, Solomon Heath, Samuel Rogers, Jr., John Noyes, Edward Russell, Aaron Kinsman, James Reddell, David Foster, Reuben Currier, John Garven, David Elliot, Richard Clough, Goin Hemphill, John Colby, John Robertson, John Moad, Abraham Colby, James Moor, Samuel Alexander, Willahy Colby, Leonard Harriman, Samuel Welch, Jr., Elisha Colby, John Sullway, Jacob Stebbins, Joseph Rogers, Jr., Enoch Noyes, Jonathan Clough, Ephraim Moor, Samuel Winslow, Benjamin Noyes, Amos Dow and Simon Heath.—Total, 62.

* Errors excepted.

* SAREEL ROGERS.

* I not being satisfied, Errors excepted.

* WILLIAM ROGERS.

* Bow, September 30, 1776.

* Returned to the Committee of Safety by the Selectmen."

Heretofore the annual meetings had been called by the province of New Hampshire, but the meeting for April 3, 1777, was warned by the State of New Hampshire to the inhabitants of the town of Bow.

In 1777, Edward Russell, Edward Carlton and Jonathan Clement were chosen selectmen, and Captain Benn, James Moor, Esquire Bryant, John Noyes and Joseph Baker were chosen a Committee of Safety. No money raised for preaching, schools or highways. John Bryant, representative for Bow and Dunbarton at the session to be held at Exeter, June 1, 1777, and Jeremiah Page, Esq., of Dunbarton, at the December session. The State tax was £40,000. £118 6s. 8d.,

Bow's proportion, was paid by Edward Evans, constable.

In 1778, William Robertson, David Carr and Samuel Alexander were chosen to do the town business for the year. "Voted to hire a man to go to Stratham to get a copy of the names of the Proprietors of the unimproved lots in town. Joseph Baker, James Buswell, Edward Carlton, John Bryant, William Robertson, Ephraim Foster, Edward Russell, Benjamin Bean, Leonard Harriman, John Noyes, Enoch Noyes and John Carr gave to the town their services as selectmen from 1768 to April 1, 1778, and Timothy Dix gave his services as town clerk since.

In 1774, "voted 100 dollars for preaching and 100 for schools, and to exempt John Garvin from paying his tax this year, on account of his loss by fire, and also Reuben Currier, he having lost his horse and cow." "Voted the invoice he taken the second week in April this year, and to send John Bryant to the convention at Concord in June next."

In 1779, Edward Russell, Benjamin Noyes and Ephraim Foster were chosen selectmen. The meeting-house built in 1770 was probably a rude structure. The inhabitants now began to feel the need of a better one. We now find them voting to build a meeting-house at the centre, and choosing a committee to find the centre, by measuring from where the line between Bow and Concord strikes Merrimack River to Dunbarton, near Samuel Welch's, where Alfred A. Elliot now lives; then beginning at Bow and Dunbarton line, near Benjamin Noyes', and running to the outside of Solomon Heath's land. John Noyes was commissioned captain of the Eighth Company in the Thirteenth Regiment, March 17, 1779, by M. Ware. The Continental and State tax was £267 11s. 6d.; school tax, £33 2s. 5d.; minister tax, £27 5s. ½d.—total, £327 18s. 11½d. Ephraim Foster and Leonard Harriman were appointed a committee to settle with the selectmen. "Voted to accept the Bill of Rights and Plan of Government established at Concord; 30 persons present, 18 voted yea, 3 nay." Joseph Rogers was chosen grand juror to Portsmouth.

In 1780, Edward Russell, Benjamin Noyes and Jacob Green were chosen selectmen. After choosing other town officers, it was "Voted to allow the Constable sixpence upon the pound for collecting, and the selectmen Ten dollars per day for their services." Owing to the depreciation of the currency in April four thousand pounds "Continental money" was equal to one hundred pounds silver. There was no money raised for schools or preaching. "Voted to work on the highways 150 days or pay an equivalent." By the charter, the annual meeting was to be held on the first Thursday in April, which was found to be too late for the selectmen to enter into office, as the inventory was to be taken in that month.

October 24th, John Bryant, Esq., on behalf of himself and other freholders of Bow, petitioned the General Assembly that the time may be changed to the first Tuesday of March annually, which was granted.

Jeremiah Page was chosen representative for Dumbarton and Bow.

In 1781 it was "Voted to give the selectmen, Edward Russell, Benj^m Noyes and John Brown, 30 dollars per day for their services," seventy-five hundred pounds being equal to one hundred pounds silver.

The tax for 1780, collected this year, was,—

	£	s.	d.
"Continental and State	7,900	17	6
Ditto for Beef and County	5,743	11	5
Ditto for Corn and money for soldiers	2,085	14	1
Total	15,728	3	3"

At a meeting held the 28th of May, 1781, it was "Voted to send Esqr. Bryant, as agent of the town, to the General Assembly, to remonstrate against a Petition, preferred by Concord, to have their town incorporated, and voted 1000 dollars to defray the expense." Bryant promised to give his time, and if an attorney was necessary, he would pay him, the town to pay Bryant's expenses while he was gone.

Mr. Russell was chosen delegate to the convention to be held at Concord.

Timothy Dix gave his services as town clerk since 1774.

At the annual meeting in 1782, Enoch Noyes, Richard Dow and James Robertson were chosen selectmen, and James Robertson clerk. "Voted 50 dollars for schools and 50 dollars to Repair highways, at 2 shillings per day." "Voted not to accept the plan of Government as it now stands, by 37 votes." "Voted to accept of an open road from William Robertson's to Esqr. Benj^m Noyes, as Laid by the selectmen in May, 1778, and to recommend John Bryant to the General Court for a justice of the peace." "Voted five dollars' bounty for each wolf killed in town for the year, and to abate John Miller's tax on the steer he lost." "Money raised last year.—New Emission State, £368 16s. 2d. 2q.; County, £21 19s. 6d. 2q.; Silver money, £160 0s. 0d. 2q."

"Agreeable to an act of the General Court, John Robertson, Constable for the 1780 for this town, hath lawfully advertised to be sold to pay the taxes for said year, on the first Wednesday of Oct., 1782, the following lands, viz.:

"In the 2d Division.—Nath^l Stevens, Lot No. 7, Range 11, sold to Ephraim Moor, 18 acres. Benjamin Palmer, Lot No. 11, Range 12, sold to Benj^m Noyes, 56 acres.

"Third Division.—Hadridge Kelly, Lot No 3; Richard Waldron, Lot 19; Mary Jones, Lot 27; Eben^t Wear, Lot 49; Bradstreet Wiggin, Lot 17; Thos. Smith, Lot 21; Rob^t Wilson, Lot 37; Jonas Wiggin, Lot 55; John Frost, Lot 60; Thomas Piper, Lot 61; Benj^m Hoag, Lot 71; Daniel Davis, Lot 83; John Merrill, Lot 84; John Leavitt, Lot 85; 14 1/2 ds sold to Ensign Benjamin Noyes; Benj^m Mason, Lot 33; Joseph Merrill, Lot 39; Edw^d Fifield, Lot 41; Samuel Hilton, Lot 92; 4 lots sold to Walter Bryant, Esqr., father of John Bryant, Esqr.; Lot 92 is the lot north east of the mill lot on the Lombondery (turnpike); Nath^l Stevens, Lot 36; Joseph Wiggin, Lot 120; Thos. Veazey, Lot 122; Col. And^s Wiggin, Lot 61 (north of the old Russell lot); 4 lots sold to John Bryant, Esqr.; Rev. Henry Ruse, No. 86; William French, ss, two lots sold to Mr. Leonard Harriman; George Clark, Lot 97, sold to James Robertson; The Ephraim Leavitt Lot, No. 108, sold to Lieut. Ephraim Moor; Abraham Morgan, Lot 146, across the river, sold to John Garvin, Thos

Westbrook, Lot No. 1, 2d Division, 15th Range, and Lot No. 10, 3d Division, sold to Mr. Aaron Whittemore, in behalf of Charles Coffin.

"It took the whole of the above-said lands to pay the above-said taxes with intervening charges. Attest,

"JAMES ROBERTSON, Clerk."

"Bow, Oct. 2, 1782."

In 1783, James Robertson, Enoch Noyes and Benjamin Noyes were chosen selectmen. "Voted to raise 75 dollars for repairing highways. State and soldiers taxes, £495 17s." "Voted to accept of the new Constitution," which became the Constitution of the State in June, 1784.

"The number of Polls in town, from 21 years of age and upwards, paying taxes in Bow, is 79, taken Dec^r 12th. By Jas. Robertson, selectman of Bow.

"Sworn to Before

"SAM^l DAVIES, Just. Peace."

In 1784, the independence of the United States being acknowledged, a Constitution of the State was formed and accepted by the people, the chief executive to be styled President. Meshech Wear was elected, but the voters in Bow, in their characteristic manner, cast twenty-two votes for Hon. Woodbury Langdon and nine votes for Hon. Josiah Bartlett. "Voted to raise 200 dollars for work on the highway at half a dollar a day." James Robertson, Solomon Heath and Enoch Noyes were chosen selectmen, James Robertson clerk.

The following unimproved lands were sold for taxes this year, viz.:

"The Nath^l Stevens Lot, No. 7, 11th Range, 80 acres, and the John Piper lot, No. 3, 17th Range, 40 acres, sold to Lieut. Ephem^r Moore; 20 acres of the Nicholas Wiggin lot, No. 8, 12th Range; 29 acres of the Benjamin Palmer lot, No. 11, 12th range; 30 acres of the Joshua Hill lot, No. 4, 17th range; 50 acres of the Sam^l Tibbets lot, No. 3, 14th range. In the 3d Division the Isaac Foss lot, No. 1, 29 acres, the south west corner lot in town; the John Sanderson lot, No. 144, 20 acres over the river; the Gov. John Wentworth lot, No. 18, all sold to John Bryant, Esq. The Col. Mark Hanking lot, No. 3, 17th range, 29 acres; Hon. John Wentworth, 29 acres of lot No. 6, 15th range; 31 acres of the Noah Barker lot, No. 8, 18th range. In the 5d Division the Sol. Cotton lot, No. 5; the Sam^l Tibbets lot, No. 35; the Joshua Stevens lot, No. 84; the Col. Mark Hanking lot, No. 54; twenty-acre lots sold to Ensign Benj^m Noyes; 59 acres of the Catherine Wiggin lot, No. 8, 17th range, sold to Solomon Heath; 20 acres of the Joseph Jewett lot, No. 6, 18th range, sold to James Moor; the Joseph Loverin lot, 3d Division, No. 142, over the river, sold to John Robertson, and the Catherine Wiggin lot, No. 95, sold to James Robertson. (This sale was made May 27, 1784, it took the whole proceeds to pay the taxes and charges.) On the third Tuesday of December the following lands were sold at Public vendue: The Wiggin lot, No. 3, 12th range; Hill lot, No. 4, 17th range, and the James Robertson lot, 128, 3d Div.; 29 acres— from each lot sold to John Bryant, Esq. 15 acres of No. 5, 15th Range; 21 acres, No. 6, 15th R.; 20 acres, No. 8, 15th R.; and 2 acres, No. 11; sold to Benjamin Noyes. 20 acres, No. 6, 18th R.; the Pierre Long lot, No. 57, 3d Div., sold to Enoch Noyes. The third division lots, No. 121, and 4 acres of 126, sold to James Moor. 25 acres of No. 4, 17th range, sold to Capt. John Noyes. Part of lot No. 129 sold to Jonathan Carrer.

"ENOCH NOYES, Public Clerk."

In 1785, James Robertson, Jacob Green and Solomon Heath were chosen selectmen. "Voted to work fifty days on the Soucecock Bridge." The meeting-house built in 1770, we suppose, was a rude structure, built of logs, and has now become unfit for public meetings. "Voted to raise 500 dollars in labor and lumber to build a meeting-house on the Hill where the old one stands, and that Solomon Heath, David Brown, Benj. Noyes, John Bryant and Jacob Green be a committee to provide material for the building." "Voted 90 dollars for preaching, to be at the house of John Bryant near Joseph Bower." This house is supposed to have been the first two-story house in town, and was called the High House. "Voted 90 dollars for schoolhouse." John Robertson was granted the right of a ferry over the Merrimack River, any where between Moon Brook and Loudsok River.

In 1786, after making choice of Edward Russell, John Bryant and Timothy Dix for selectmen, "Voted 100 at 7 per day, for Highway, and 100 dollars to hire schoolhouse this year." John Lonsdon had twenty-four votes for President of the State, no opposition.

A portion of the inhabitants wanted the meeting-house at the centre, and a committee was voted to find the centre which they reported to be at the upper end of the Widow Clement's land, and there the place to build the house. But the town voted to build on the Hill, a la Cyren.

At an adjourned meeting, held May 29th, "Voted a committee of thirteen, consisting of four from other towns to locate the house, consisting of Col. Kelly, of Goff's town, Capt. Farrington, of Hopkinton, and Esqr. Foster, of Concordia, and voted to purchase all votes relative to building a meeting-house prior to this day. They then "Voted to build a house as large as Mr. Collicies, then minister at Pembroke, and to raise 100 in material and labor for s^d House."

Mr. Solomon Heath, Lieutenant Enoch Noyes and Mr. David Brown were appointed a committee to build said house. "Voted to hire Mr. Bradford to preach eight days."

Bow and Dumbarton had been chosen to elect a representative and delegates since 1760, January 29, 1788, a meeting of these qualified to vote in town meetings of both towns met at the house of Henry Putney, in Dumbarton, and made choice of Jacob Green, delegate to the convention at Exeter, to act on a new plan of government, which had been proposed by the Philadelphia Convention and already adopted by eight States, none being necessary to make it the law of the land. It was adopted by the convention, Jacob Green voted nay. In 1788, John Bryant, John Gutchee and Enoch Noyes were chosen selectmen. In 1788, Solomon Heath, James Robertson and John Clement were chosen selectmen. The votes for State President, 13, were all for John Lonsdon, for representative to Congress, Joshua Atherton, Esq. had 11, Nathaniel P. Crosby, Esq. 11, Paine Wainwright, Esq. 16, and 8 for others.

In 1789, James Robertson, Solomon Heath and John Clement were chosen selectmen. In answer to an article "to see if the town will vote to be divided and be annexed to Dumbarton, Concord and Pembroke, or to sell off any part of Bow to said town, voted not to sell off or divide the town."

In 1791, with the Rindford proprietors in 1771, they were to pay to the Bow proprietors ten pounds for each hundred acre lot which was had out by Bow in the Rindford grant. Thomas Stickney, Andrew McMillan and Abel Chandler were appointed a committee by the proprietors of Rindford to receive a quit claim deed from the Bow proprietors and give them a bond on interest for the ten pounds for each one hundred acre lot. In 1773 they voted to raise six hundred pounds by assessments, which was supposed to be sufficient to pay the proprietors of Bow, and to give sixty pounds to the Masonian proprietors for their right to the land. The tax not being all collected, an act was passed in 1789, empowering Timothy Walker to collect the remainder, and to fully discharge the bond. In 1790 the subject of a division of the town met the same fate as it did the previous year. Jacob Green, Samuel Gault, and James Robertson were chosen selectmen. "Voted to allow Captain Jacob Green three pounds for attendance at the convention at Exeter in 1788." At a meeting of the voters of Bow and Dumbarton, Major Caleb Stark was chosen delegate to a convention to revise the Constitution. The votes for representative to Congress was, for John S. Sherborn, 30; Abiel Foster, 24; Jeremiah Smith, 8. "Voted forty pounds for building a pond and repairing highways, and none for schooling."

The following tax list was committed to Captain John Noyes for collection, September 11, 1790, he being constable.

Nathan Noyes	2 40	El. John Clement	1 10
Eno. Benj. Noyes	10 00	El. John Gutchee	8 00
El. Enoch Noyes	5 00	John Smith	6 50
Capt. John Noyes	10 00	John Gutchee	11 00
John Noyes, Junr	1 00	Saml. Roberts	1 00
Saml. Alexander	0 00	Saml. Welch	11 00
El. Eph. Miles	6 50	El. David Russell	10 00
Eph. Miles, Jr.	2 00	Jane Russell	1 00
Moses Wainwright	7 50	W. D. Hillman	1 00
Amos Wainwright	1 00	John Russell	1 00
Amos Scudder	1 00	Assey Russell	11 00
David Silver	7 50	John Dwyer	0 00
Benj. Whipple	8 00	Reuben Carter	1 00
Nathan Silver	4 00	Reuben Carter, Jr.	1 00
John Silver, Jr.	7 00	John Carter	1 00
El. Silver	1 00	Eliza Clough, Jr.	1 00
John C. P. S.	1 00	Hyndman Spruce	1 00
Saml. Silver	1 00	El. Merrill	1 00
Saml. Scudder	10 00	El. R. Roberts	8 50
Henry Roberts	1 11	Amos Roberts	1 00
Pea. Lee, Whit	1 00	Wm. Roberts	8 00
James M. C.	1 00	Joseph Baker	1 00
El. Baker	1 00	John Baker	1 00
John Bryant, Jr.	10 00	Amos Baker	1 00
Amos Dwyer	1 00	David Baker	1 00
Wm. Hill	1 00	W. H. Houghton	1 00
Richard Wainwright	1 00	John Coxson	1 00
Thomas Wainwright	7 00	John Coxson, Jr.	1 00
El. Samuel Gault	10 00	Wm. Coxson	1 00
Samuel Scudder	2 00	El. Timothy Dix	10 00
El. J. R. Foster	1 00	Saml. G. Galloway	1 00
James Roberts	10 00	Amos Clement	1 00
Benj. Dwyer	1 00	Saml. Roberts	10 00
David Roberts	1 00	Isa. Dwyer	10 00
Capt. R. S. Dwyer	1 00	El. R. Roberts, Jr.	1 00
Saml. Dix	1 00	James Bowdoin	1 00

David Clough	1	Dr. Philip S. Foster	1
Levi Clough	1	Dr. C. S. Hild	1
Jonathan Clough	1	Capt. T. C. Allen	1
Lt. Eliphalet Rowell	7	Robert Wood	1
Amasa Dow	1	Robert Wood	1
John Dow	1	John C. Wood	1
Henry Hemphill	1	Almon C. Wood	1
Henry Hemphill, Jr.	1	James Wood	1
Wm. M. Brown	1	Wm. R. Wood	1
John Hemphill	1	Lt. Wm. Wood	1
Simon Heath	7	Levi C. Wood	1
W. Green	1	Theodore Wood	1
Samuel Clement	7	John Sullivan	1
W. Betsey Clement	1	Sam. P. Wood	1
John Carter	1	David Estlin	1
Nehemiah McCall	1	Wm. James Heath	1
Clement Noyes	2	Mrs. Sarah Heath	1
Nathan Hall	2	Walter Bryant, Jr.	1
Salomon Heath	11	Lt. Sam. Estlin	1
Calib Heath	1	Jonathan Price, Esq.	1
Capt. Nathan Cady	8	John May	1
Moses Noyes	1	Mr. James Foster	1
William Walker	2	Capt. Ben. Noyes	1
Samuel Walker	1	Chas. White	1
Abiel Walker	1	Jed. Latham	1
Samuel Walsh, Jr.	2	Ben. James	1
Capt. Jacob Green	5	Will. Crompton	1
Anthony Mann	1	Lt. Samuel Noyes	1

"The above is a true list of Taxes made by the Board of Selectmen for the year 1790. Errors Excepted."

"Tax Collectors,
Jas. Bowers, S. S. Sibley,
SAMUEL COLBY, F."

There were one hundred and ten resident tax-payers. The number of inhabitants at this time was five hundred and sixty-eight.

The following names of signers of the Association Test have disappeared from the town records of today:

"Captain Aaron Kimball, Capt. Ephraim Foster, Ralph C. Coe, Capt. Benj. Bean, John Carr, David Carr, Samuel Woodson, Thomas Barry, Leonard Burman, Patrick Clement, John Brown, James B. Hill, James Garvin, Edw. Bartlett, Pascal Foster."

In 1790, after making choice of James Robertson, Timothy Dix and Jonathan Clement for selectmen, and choosing other town officers, thirty-three votes were cast for Josiah Bartlett for President of the State; no opposition. "Voted $20 for schooling, each district to hire a master or mistress, as they see fit." The road from Wood Hill easterly between land of Abraham Colby and Willaby Colby, thence extending by John Colby's to Dunbarton line, was laid out this year. Mr. Samuel Alexander was paid for boarding Mr. Stone and wife, five-shillings. John Noyes was allowed six-shillings for carrying them out of town and five-shillings for warning persons out of town. An act was passed giving Jacob Green and Enoch Noyes, of Bow, and William Duncan and Daniel Livermore, their heirs and assigns, exclusive right to build a bridge at any place one mile above or below Lake Hooksett Falls.

January 11th, Benjamin Noyes petitioned the General Court, "Shewing that he has kept a ferry over the Merrimack River, near the mouth of Susceod River, ever since the year 1764, in all which time he has employed no other person to keep the same, and that the said ferry is now used to the benefit of the people of the said town, and that a continuance of such ferry will be for the benefit of the said town, without any other advantage to the said Noyes, and he humbly supplicates that the said people, by their owning and keeping the same, be bound to the Honorable Court to award him, in the exercise of a right to said ferry exclusively." The petition, when read, was referred to a committee who reported favorably, and February 14th, an act was passed granting said Noyes exclusive right to a ferry on the river within one mile above or below the mouth of the Susceod River.

In 1792, James Robertson, Benjamin Noyes and Eliphalet Rowell were chosen selectmen, and Jesse Green town clerk. Josiah Bartlett had twenty-seven votes for State President and John Pielaring one. A committee was chosen to regulate the school districts, which numbered four, No. 1, Heath District; No. 2, Centre; No. 3, East; No. 4, Wood Hill.

A committee, consisting of Jacob Green and John Bryant, was appointed to carry on a pauper suit which Concord had brought against Bow for the maintenance of Sarah Stone, widow of Andrew Stone, who was in the French War in 1756 in John Godd's company, in 1757 in Jacob Bayley's company, and in Captain Joshua Abbott's company in 1775. Stone resided in Concord, near the Ira Abbot place. While in the war his house was torn down because his daughter did not behave as well as some of the neighbors thought she should, and they took refuge in Bow and became a public charge. In 1786 the town of Concord "Voted to abate Andrew Stone his rates that are due, and exempt him from paying taxes for the future." She was the first pauper in town, and was set up to be kept by the lowest bidder, who was Jonathan Clough at four shillings per week. The subject of building a meeting-house came up again this year. "Voted to reconsider all former proceedings concerning school house, and that Lieutenant William Price, of Goffstown, Colonel Henry Gerrish, of Bosswood, and Benjamin Wiggin, of Hopkinton, fix on a place for school house, and elect Jacob Green, Ensign Benjamin Noyes and Mr. John Carter a committee to select the same, and to draw papers of ground, and to have the same put up a frame, and so to build the house, in the order thereof. The meeting was adjourned to the 10th when they "Voted that Capt. In Nath. and Ensign and Lieutenant Will. C. be a committee to select the site of committee." The meeting opened on the 12th of November when it was voted to accept the report of the committee. Price, Gerrish and Wiggin, then the house be built on the hill, and on the same day of Jacob Green was then chosen to set up the meeting of the house to the sweet soldier, who was Lieutenant Bosc, for 200 1/2 bushel money. "Voted that Enoch Noyes, Willaby Colby, and Timothy Dix be a committee to accept of the meeting-house." "Voted to raise 202 Dollars to defray the charges of building the house." "Chose Benjⁿ, Noyes to defend the town on account of a complaint concerning Sowcook Bridge, near Foster's Mill, also to attend Court to shew cause why the town should not maintain the road laid by the committee on the westerly side of Merrimack River, near John Carter's mill." The vote for Presidential electors was thirty-two, unanimous for the Federal candidates, Isaac Moor, Isaac Shepard and Ensign Benjamin Noyes were approbated for tavern-keepers, the first in town.

In 1793, Benjamin Noyes, John Grushe and Richard Clement were chosen selectmen. Hon. Josiah Bartlett had fifty-eight votes for President of the State; no opposition. "Voted £45, L. Money, to repair high-ways, one-third of each surveyor's tax to be worked on the river road, the party to work all theirs as usual." The probability is that a freshet had damaged the road badly. Samuel Alexander kept Sarah Stone for 15s. 2d. a week. Paid Benjamin Noyes for services to Portsmouth to prevent the road from being laid; also the expense of building Sowcook bridge, £7 8s. 2d. Paid the committee to "Perfix a place to build the meeting-house" upon, £2 8s. The dissatisfaction of some at having the house on the hill instead of at the Centre is apparent in an article in the warrant to see if the town will vote to set off those that request it, for the convenience of the gospel, which was negative. May 21st there was a meeting "to see if the town will vote to be divided by lines in order to be annexed to other towns, or to set off parts of the town by themselves, that they may consine themselves in other towns for the benefit of the Gospel," all of which was negatived by thirty voting against by way of poll. Richard Merrill was "approbated to sell or Retale Liker." No money raised for preaching since 1781.

At the annual meeting in 1794, Benjamin Noyes, Nathaniel Cavis and John Carter were chosen selectmen. At "a meeting warned by the selectmen of Bow and Allenstown, holden at the house of Benjⁿ Noyes, for the purpose of choosing a man to represent said towns in the General Court the present year, Benjamin Noyes was chosen the selectman of said towns to petition said Court that said Noyes be allowed a seat." November 3d a meeting was held "to see what method the town will take to raise eleven men to hold themselves in readiness to march at a minuite's warning." "Voted to make, with what the state and continental gives, seven dollars a month, with one dollar as a bounty, and if called for, two dollars more." It is supposed they were never called for. The probable cause for the order for these men was the resistance to the collection of taxes on distilled spirits in Western Pennsylvania, called the Whiskey Rebellion. For representative to Congress Abial Foster had twenty-three votes; Paine Wingate, none.

May the 29th the selectmen issued their precept to John Carter, constable, "requiring him forthwith to notify and warn the following persons to depart out of Bow to the last places of their abode within fourteen days after said warning, viz.: Kimball Colby and Sarah, his wife, and three children; Widow Hannah Foster; Hannah, wife of Jacob Chismory and her daughter; Jacob Perkins Burnham and Sarah, his wife; also one James Clements; all of whom came into Bow to reside from Dunbarton less than one year ago; also Jacob Wheeler, and Betsy, his wife, and Sirus Bradford, the said Wheeler's servant from Deering; also Thomas Chandler and Sarah, his wife, and Sarah Goodnough, their grandchild, from Concord, less than one year ago, and have no visible means of support." This was done in the name of the State of New Hampshire, and the constable was to make return to the next Quarter Sessions for Rockingham County. By warning newcomers out of town he deprived them of gaining a residence, and the town was not liable for their support if they became a public charge.

In 1795 the selectmen were Thomas Robertson, Benjamin Noyes and Caleb Heath. "Voted that the lowest bidder be collector of taxes and constable." Willaby Colby bid three pounds and was chosen for the year. John Taylor Gilman had thirty-nine votes for Governor; no opposition. In 1796, Jacob Green, Willaby Colby and Samuel Clement, Jr., were chosen selectmen; John Carter, Jacob Green and James White, fish wardens. John T. Gilman had forty-nine votes for Governor. Jonathan Freeman had twenty-one votes for member of Congress; Peleg Sprague, none. Benjamin Noyes was chosen to represent Bow and Allenstown in General Court. In 1797, Enoch Noyes, Jacob Green and Willaby Colby were chosen selectmen. Governor Gilman had forty-four votes this year; no party lines yet. "Voted the selectmen lay out the school districts and report at an adjourned meeting; also provide Guide Posts in town." "Paid Willaby Colby 14 shillings for a coffin and expense of burying Mrs. Stone, and 1s. 6d. for Jury Box."

American vessels had been captured by the French; men were called for by Congress. A town-meeting was called January 1, 1798, "To see what method the town will take to get 16 men ordered by Congress." "Voted to give them a hansom treat for listing and ten dollars a month, with what Congress gives them, if orders come for marching, and one month's advanced pay." It is not known that any went from Bow. At the annual meeting Enoch Noyes, Jacob Green and John Grushee were chosen selectmen. Forty-five votes were cast for Governor Gilman, and sixty pounds were ordered to be raised for the support of the gospel, the first raised since 1781, probably owing to the different views respecting the meeting-house and religious faith. "Voted that each district shall build a school-house, and that the selectmen build a pound near the Brook by the Cross house; Esq. Bryant agrees to give the land." At an adjourned meeting, party feeling having been aroused, "Voted to reconsider the vote for Governor," and Timothy Walker had thirty-nine votes; Oliver Peabody, five. Then it was voted that the selectmen "purchase rum to give each man a good drink of grog, and each one to do as much as he sees fit to build the pound." Deacon James Robertson was chosen representative for Bow and Allenstown.

March 2, 1799, "Then Lieut. Enoch Noyes received of John Grushce, Treasurer, five dollars, four of which was used to buy four gallons of rum to build the pound, as by vote of the town. Chose Enoch Noyes, Caleb Heath and James Robertson selectmen. Jacob Green is yet town Clerk." John Taylor Gilman had forty-six votes for Governor; Timothy Walker, one; Oliver Peabody, one. William A. Kent had fifty-five votes for recorder of deeds; — Brooks, two. "Voted that the selectmen purchase a burying-cloth and locate school-houses." There were seven school districts in town, viz.: Heath, Centre, two on the River road, Woodhill, South and Bogg. Number of inhabitants, seven hundred and nineteen. In 1800, Enoch Noyes, Jacob Green and James Robertson were chosen selectmen; William Walker, pound-keeper; and nine-pence bounty was voted on crows killed in town.

There were five licensed public-houses in town. In 1801 the selectmen were Enoch Noyes, Samuel Clement and James Robertson. Timothy Walker had twenty-nine votes; John T. Gilman, twenty-eight; and John Langdon, eight. The meeting-house having been boarded and shingled and under floor laid, the town-meetings were now held there. In 1802 a meeting was held at the house Benjamin Noyes to choose a representative for Bow and Allenstown; no record of proceedings. At the annual meeting, March 2d, John Carter, Samuel Clement and Jonathan Clement were chosen selectmen. For Governor, John T. Gilman had twenty-eight votes, and John Langdon forty-five. "Voted to raise a sum sufficient to build school-houses in town, but not to build them this year, the selectmen to locate them and purchase the lands." In 1803 the selectmen were the same as the year before. For Governor, Gilman had thirty-five votes; Langdon, twenty-nine; whole number of votes, sixty-four. Jonathan Clement, Deacon Simeon Heath and Deacon James Robertson were chosen to lay out the thirty pounds for the support of the gospel. "Voted one shilling a head for crows, and three dollars for grey wild-eats killed in town or followed from this town to any other town." Benjamin Noyes was chosen representative for Bow and Allenstown. In 1804, Governor John Langdon had fifty-three votes for Governor, and His Excellency John T. Gilman, twenty-seven. Joseph Baker, Samuel Clement and Jacob Green were chosen selectmen. The burying-cloth was ordered to be left at Jacob Green's. The heaviest tax-payer at this time was Esquire John Bryant, the owner of both and nearly one thousand acres of land; next came Benjamin Noyes, Esq., the owner of one thousand acres. George Evans, of Allenstown, was representative for that town and Bow. The electoral vote was forty-three and twenty-six. "Voted to Petition the General Court to make a county charge of Soucook bridge, and chose Joseph Baker to take charge of the matter." Eli Eastman was paid three dollars bounty for killing a wild-cat.

June 20th, John Prentice, John Philips, Thomas W. Thompson, John Montgomery, William A. Kent, James Pinkerton, John Dinsmore, Isaac Thom and George Reid and their associates were authorized to build a turnpike road from Butler's Corner, in Concord, to the State line, near Andover bridge, four rods wide, on the most practicable route.

The road was two years in building, taking a straight course through Bow from Main Street, Concord, to Hooksett bridge. The principal roads in town at this time were the River road and the road from South Street, Concord, to Bow Mills, over Meeting-House Hill and Wood Hill to Dunbarton line, at the Elliot place. Branch roads had been built from the meeting-house to Solomon Heath's, from Tom Merrill's bridge to the River road, from near the centre to Benjamin Noyes' ferry, from Wood Hill easterly to Dunbarton line. August 19th, John Bryant sold to Jacob Carter, of Concord, the land from Badger's Brook to Isaac White's and between the road past Isaac Moore's and the river, about thirty acres, with a small island in Garvin's Falls, east of said land. John Carter had a grist-mill at the falls the year before. December 13th the northerly Bow gore and the southerly to the Soucook were annexed to Concord, and that part southeast of the Soucook was annexed to Penbrooke. These gores were caused by the easterly line of Bow crossing the easterly line of the Pennacook grant at an angle of about thirty degrees. A charter was granted for a bridge across the Merrimack, below Garvin's Falls, to John Carter, Philip Carrigan, Jr., and Nathaniel Cavis and their associates and successors. The bridge was built, but was of short duration.

In 1805, Samuel Clement, John Carter and Jonathan Brown were chosen selectmen, and Nathaniel Cavis representative for Bow and Allenstown. Philip Richardson's widow, Manuel, became a town charge. Isaac Moore, Masters Wood and Harly are mentioned as teachers this year. Votes for Governor: John T. Gilman had thirty-two and Governor John Langdon sixty-four.

"Voted, To hire Rev. Thomas Waterman to preach in the meeting-house one year from the first of May next. Chose Joseph Jones to search the proprietors' book to know if there is any ministerial land belonging to Bow."

In 1806, Samuel Gault, Joseph Jones and John Colby, Jr., were chosen selectmen. Governor John Langdon had sixty-five votes, and John Taylor Gilman eight for Governor. "Paid Thomas Waterman three hundred and sixty-four dollars for preaching last year."

In 1807, Samuel Clement, George Colson and John Colby, Jr., were chosen selectmen; John Carter, Esq., representative of Bow and Allentown. John Langdon had seventy-two votes for Governor, and John T. Gilman one.

In 1808, John Langdon had fifty-three votes for Governor, and no opposition. Samuel Clement, Samuel Gault and John Colby, Jr., were chosen selectmen, and John Evans, of Allentown, representative.

At the June session Israel Abdrich, George Colson, John Carter, Jonathan Eastman, Richard Ayer, James White, Benjamin Noyes, John Eastman and their associates and successors were authorized to build a canal at Garvin's Falls, and to hold land adjoining Garvin's and Turkey Falls, as to them may appear necessary, not to exceed twenty acres; also to construct such locks and dams as may be required to admit the passage of boats, rafts, masts and lumber, the fish not to be obstructed, or lumber not intended by the owner, the canal to be completed within five years.

In 1809, Samuel Clement, John Johnson and Andrew Gault were chosen selectmen, and Samuel Clement representative. John Langdon had sixty-five votes and Jeremiah Smith thirty-nine for Governor. Lieutenant Thomas Colby, Joseph Jones and Nathaniel Cavis were chosen fish wardens.

In 1810, Samuel Clement, John Johnson and John Colby, Jr., were chosen selectmen. The census shows seven hundred and twenty inhabitants. Eight persons were licensed to sell spirituous liquors and keep public-house. John Carter paid nine dollars for getting the proprietors' book. Hall Burgin, of Allentown, was chosen representative.

On July 4th citizens of Bow, Concord, Pembroke and Dunbarton assembled at the house of Benjamin Noyes, Esq. General Nathaniel Head was chosen president of the day and John Carter vice-president. The Declaration of Independence was read, an appropriate address was delivered by Obadiah Carrigan, a procession escorted by the juvenile artillery of Pembroke (Captain Martin), under the direction of Captain Whittemore and Lieutenant Gault as marshals. They marched to the bank of the Merrimack, where they found a table furnished by Esquire Noyes with all the luxuries of the country. After dinner they drank to the following sentiment, by Deacon Samuel Gault, a volunteer: "The American Eagle, may she soar over her foreign and domestic enemies."

In 1811, for Governor, John Langdon had ninety-one, and Jeremiah Smith twenty-nine. John Brown, Daniel Parker and Joseph Jones were chosen selectmen, and Nathaniel Cavis, Esq., representative. "Voted, to pay the fourteen men ordered in 1807 ten dollars a month, when they are called for."

In 1812, William Plumer had eighty-six votes for Governor, John T. Gilman thirty-three, and John Brown one. John Brown, John Johnson and Daniel Parker were chosen selectmen. War was declared between Great Britain and the United States this year. Nathaniel Cavis was chosen representative. The branch turnpike from Hopkinton to Hooksett Falls, through Bow, was chartered June 17th.

In 1813, John Colby, Jr., Daniel Parker and John Johnson were chosen selectmen. William Plumer had one hundred and seven votes for Governor and John T. Gilman forty-three,—one hundred and fifty votes in all. Samuel Clement was chosen representative from Bow, which was no longer classed with Allentown for that purpose.

In 1814 John Colby Jr., Jonathan Cavis and Philip Colby were chosen selectmen, and Nathaniel Cavis representative. For Governor, William Plumer had one hundred and seventeen, John T. Gilman forty-two.

In 1815, Samuel Clement, Daniel Parker and John Johnson were chosen selectmen, and Nathaniel Cavis representative. "Voted to sell twenty-acre lot called the Lane land." It sold for one hundred and eighty dollars. A road was laid from Bow centre to Captain William Walker's this year. That part of Bow south of the Suncook River was annexed to Allentown.

In 1816 the same board of selectmen served. Samuel Clement was chosen representative. For Governor, William Plumer had one hundred and fifteen, and James Sheaff thirty-seven votes. This was the coldest summer ever known,—snow squalls the 6th and 8th of June and heavy frost on the night of the 11th; the corn crop was nearly spoiled.

In 1817, Samuel Clement, David White and Nathaniel Cavis, Jr., were chosen selectmen; Samuel Clement, Esq., representative; Jeremiah Heath, collector.

In 1818 "Voted that Elder Henry Veazey be invited to open the town-meeting by prayer," the first instance of the kind on record. The selectmen were the same as last year.

In 1819 the selectmen were Samuel Clement, Philip Colby and David White. "Voted unanimous for the new county of Merrimack." For Governor, Samuel Bell had thirty-six votes, William Hale seventeen, William Plumer forty-three, and Daniel L. Morrill twenty-six.

In 1820, Philip Colby, John Johnson and Jonathan Cavis were chosen selectmen. Samuel Clement had been representative since 1816. The seventy-five votes cast for Presidential electors were all for the Republican candidates.

In 1821, "Voted to build a pound, the selectmen to locate and let it out by vendue to the lowest bidder." William Pickering had the whole vote, one hundred and forty-five, for treasurer.

In 1822, Gates & Rowell were paid forty-nine dollars for building the pound, and William Walker was chosen pound-keeper.

In 1823, Rev. Henry Veazey was chosen inspector of schools and to take care of the key to the meeting-house, for which he was paid nine dollars. "Voted that any one have liberty to put a stove in the meeting-house at their own expense."

In 1824, Jeremiah Russell, Philip Colby and David White were chosen selectmen, and Stephen Webster collector. A road was laid out from Page corner to Farrinton's. John Brown was representative in 1822, '23 and '24.

In 1825 there were no party lines. David L. Morrill had one hundred and forty-six votes for Governor, and Ruth Heath one. Jacob B. Moore had one hundred and forty-seven votes for register,—the whole vote. Samuel Clement was representative. The road southwest from the Bog, and from John Colby's to Hooksett line, was laid out. David White, James Morgan and Edward C. Clement were chosen selectmen, and Jeremiah Russell collector.

In 1826 David White reported the road laid out from the Cheever road to William Walker's.

In 1827, Samuel Clement, John Parker and Nathaniel Goodhue, Jr., were chosen selectmen; Jonathan Cavis, collector; Isaac Clough, a merchant at the Centre, town clerk. The removal of the meeting-house to the turnpike, near Clough's store, began to be agitated.

In 1828 South School District was organized. John Parker, Nathaniel Carter and David White were chosen selectmen; Jonathan Cavis, representative; Philip Colby, collector. The electoral vote was as follows: one hundred and fifty-three Democratic, thirty-five Whig.

In 1829, "Voted to divide the literary fund among the school districts, unless it can be used for the establishing of a public college."

In 1830 the census returned one thousand and sixty-five inhabitants, the maximum number for the town. Philip Colby was chosen representative, and Mendel Samson collector. The first check-list used this year. Nathaniel Goodhue, Jr., Isaac Clough and Moses McCutchins were the superintending school committee, the first appointed. The Wood Hill District, No. 10, was formed.

In 1831 the vote for Congressmen was as follows: one hundred and forty-seven Democratic, twenty-three Whig. David White was chosen representative.

In 1832, John Farnum was chosen representative. Captain John Brown, James Green and William Boynton were appointed a committee to lay out eighty dollars, with what had been raised, to repair the outside of the meeting-house for a town-house.

In 1833 the Baptist meeting-house was built at the Centre, at an expense of about sixteen hundred dollars, by Deacon Walter Bryant, Nathaniel Cavis, Obed Gault, Aaron Nichols, Robert W. Robertson and others. The Congressional vote was as follows: one hundred and forty-eight Democratic, twelve Whig. A weekly mail-route was established from Concord to Goffstown, through Bow, and Isaac Clough, a merchant of Bow Centre, was appointed postmaster and held the office until 1840, when Robert W. Robertson, another merchant near, held the office till 1842; Willaby C. Hadley was postmaster from 1812 to 1850; John T. Morgan from 1850 to 1868; James Green 1869; George H. Elliot from 1870 to 1873, when Jonathan C. Hammond was appointed, and now holds the office. Jonathan Brown, Jr., and James McCauley alternated in carrying the mail for what they could make as common carriers. Our citizens had received their mail through the Concord office to this time.

In 1834 the subject of buying a poor-farm was agitated, and Nathaniel Carter, Esq., John B. White and John Brown were appointed a committee to inquire into the matter of the expediency of the purchase. William R. Parker was chosen representative.

In 1835 the Congressional vote stood: one hundred and fifty-two Democratic, twenty-four Whig. Isaac Clough has been town clerk from 1826. "Voted a road be laid out around Wood Hill."

In 1836, Jonathan Cavis was chosen representative. "Voted to lay out a road around Wood Hill whenever Dumbarton and Gofftown open a road to meet it," which was never done. "Voted to appropriate the non-resident highway tax for post guides, and to purchase the Branch turnpike through Bow of the proprietors and lay out a highway on the same."

In 1837 it was voted not to buy a poor-farm. John Parker was chosen representative.

In 1838, David Putney was chosen representative. The vote for making town clerks register of deeds stood: fourteen for to eighty-three against it. "Voted to hire fifteen hundred dollars to defray the expense of the suit, Sandwich against Bow, in regard to the Matthew Gault family." In this year the Bog District was divided.

In 1839, "Voted to divide District No. 4, the river road to be one and the turnpike the other." Oliver Messer was chosen representative.

In 1840 the electoral vote stood: one hundred and eighty Democratic, twenty-four Whig. "Voted to authorize the selectmen to hire a sum, not exceeding ten thousand dollars, to carry on the law-suit between Bow and Sandwich," which was changed to one thousand dollars at a subsequent meeting.

In 1841, William Messer was chosen representative. A road was laid out to the Quimby place, in the south part of the town.

In 1842, Amos Morgan was chosen representative. The first vote for road commissioner stood one hundred and sixty-three to seven.

In 1844, James Morgan was chosen representative. "Voted not to have capital punishment abolished." The electoral vote stood one hundred and sixty to seven. Schuyler Walker had been town clerk since 1838.

In 1845 the boundaries of school districts were defined.

In 1846, Samuel R. Green was chosen representative. A road was laid out from Brown's Mills to Turkey Fall.

In 1847 all but two voted in favor of buying a county farm. "Voted to raise six hundred dollars to build a town-house, forty-four by thirty-four, the selectmen, with William Messer and George Wheeler, to be the building committee. Colonel James Green offers to give the land for the house to stand on, as long as wanted for that purpose, if the town will fence it. Voted to pay him thirty dollars, he to relinquish all claim and extend the lot one rod on the southeast side, which he agreed to on condition that all sects and parties be allowed the use of the house when not interfering with previously posted notices on the door of the house."

"Voted that the selectmen take a deed of the lot on the conditions specified." The electoral vote stood: one hundred and fifty-five Democratic, thirty-one Whig, nine Liberty, the first anti-slavery vote. Daniel K. Gault was chosen representative.

In 1849, "Voted to raise seventy-five dollars more than the law requires for schooling." Enoch Alexander was chosen representative.

By the census returns in 1850 there were one thousand and fifty-five inhabitants in town, ten less than in 1830. Some of the soldiers did not appear at the May training in consequence of the small-pox being in town, thus forfeiting the dollar due them; but the town voted to pay them their dollar. "Voted one hundred and thirty-nine to thirty six not to alter the Constitution;" but the State voted otherwise, and Schuyler Walker was chosen delegate to the Constitutional Convention.

In 1851, Amos Hadley, Jr., was chosen representative. An emphatic nay was voted on all the amendments proposed by the convention. "Voted, that the selectmen purchase a horse and harness, and erect a building for the same on the town-house lot." Eighty-three voted in favor and twenty-five against the home-stead exemption.

In 1852 the electoral vote stood: one hundred and forty Democratic, twelve Whig, twenty-seven Free-Soil. There were fifteen school districts, with boundaries defined.

In 1853, Archibald Stark was chosen representative. In 1856, "Voted, that the selectmen purchase a poor-farm, to pay one thousand dollars down and pledge the credit of the town for the balance." Their being so much opposition, a meeting was called, and it was voted to reconsider the former vote, ninety-one to thirty-two, and not to purchase a farm.

In 1859, "Voted to buy a poor-farm," which was done, and in 1866, "Voted to sell the same." The representatives from 1854 to the present time, 1885, is given, viz.:

1855, Benjamin A. Noyes; 1857, Andrew Gault; 1859, Samuel R. Green; 1860, Frederick Chough; 1862, James Thompson; 1864, John W. Goodhue; 1866, William P. Short; 1868, Benjamin Noyes; 1870, Samuel C. Chubb; 1871, James Thompson; 1873, Richard W. Goodhue; 1874, Gulford Upton; 1875, Ira Woodbury; 1876, Hiram Colby; 1877, John Brown (2d); 1878, Samuel Gale; 1879, Horace H. Parker; 1880, Cyrus G. Brown; 1881, Henry C. Chough; 1883, Leonard Kendall; 1885, Andrew Noyes.

In 1860 the census returns give 909; 1870, 745 inhabitants. In 1882 the town voted to exempt from taxation for ten years capital exceeding ten thousand dollars invested in manufacturing purposes. Brown, Moore & Co., built a pulp-mill the next year at Garvin's Falls, which is doing an extensive business.

The town of Bow, reduced to its present dimensions contains about sixteen thousand acres, bounded on the north by Concord, east by Merrimack River, which separates it from Pembroke, south by Hooksett and west by Dunbarton. Its extent on the river is about five miles. The Concord Railroad runs through the town a few rods from the river; the Robinson's station is the only stopping-place in town. Several fine farms are situated on the river. West of the river about a mile is the Parker range of hills, extending from Turce Pond to Hooksett Falls, affording several excellent farms in a healthy location, overlooking Pembroke Street; then comes a depression, called the Bog,—land fertile, but stony; very well adapted to the growth of fruit.

A range of hills extends the whole length of the westerly part of the town, the highest elevations being about five hundred feet above the sea-level.

Military History from 1767 to 1785—BOW PRIOR TO AND DURING THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR.—The military history of Bow prior to 1767 is comprised in the military history of the parishes of Pemacook and Suncook before town privileges were granted them. But few families occupied the soil now constituting the town of Bow. No military organization had been effected. Several who had served in the French War afterwards became residents, viz.: Ephraim Foster, in Joseph Blanchard's company, in 1755; Andrew Stone, in the Crown Point expedition, in 1756; Samuel Winslow, in Captain Fogg's company; Henry Hemphill, in Crown Point expedition, 1758; Samuel Clement, 1760, in Captain Harron's company; and Anasa Dow, in Captain Ladd's company, at No. 4. In 1773 Concord, Bow, Pembroke, London, Canterbury and Northfield comprised the Eleventh Regiment, commanded by Colonel Thomas Stickney, with Benjamin Thompson (afterwards Count Rumford, as major, January 12, 1775, the town voted to buy a stock of ammunition. After the battle of Lexington, April 19th, pursuant to call, "Voted to send Benjamin Noyes as delegate to a convention, to be holden at Exeter, 17th of May." Said convention voted to raise two thousand men besides those already in the field, and appointed a committee of supplies for the army. John Stark was commissioned colonel of the First New Hampshire Regiment, of ten companies. March 2, 1774, Aaron Kinsman was commissioned captain, Ephraim Moor lieutenant, and

¹ Biennial elections after this.

Ralph Cross ensign. When the First Regiment was formed, Captain Kinsman was selected as captain of the Seventh Company. When the town militia, June 23, 1775, chose Ephraim Foster captain, with lieutenant and ensign the same, several of the citizens of Bow enlisted in Kinsman's company. Among them were David Clement, Ebenezer Bean, Benjamin Cotton, Jonathan Currier, Samuel Rogers and John Manuel, for three months, ending August 1st. Manuel was killed at the Bunker Hill, June 17th. Barnet Harvey and John Robertson were in Joshua Abbot's company; Benjamin Bean, Jr., Ephraim Garvin and William Robertson, in Captain Parker's company; Colonel Bedell's regiment of rangers, in the northern Continental army; Thomas Colby, in Captain Noyes' company; James Moor (a fifer) and Moses Noyes, in Daniel Moor's company; Reuben Currier and John Moor, in Captain James Osgood's company, of Conway, July 28, 1775. Samuel Winslow was in Captain Dearborn's company; William Robertson, in Colonel Reed's regiment. In Colonel Baldwin's regiment the following Bow men were enlisted and were at the battle at White Plains in October, 1776: Ephraim Moore, Ralph Cross, Ralph Cross, Jr., Aaron Kinsman. The officers of the town militia at this time were Captain, Benjamin Bean; First Lieutenant, John Grishe; Second Lieutenant, Timothy Dix; Ensign, William Rogers. Solomon Farley was returned as among the sick in Colonel Poor's regiment, Moses Cross was in Captain Shepherd's company April 3, 1777. Captain Bean, James Moor, Esquire Bryant, John Noyes and Joseph Baker were appointed a Committee of Safety, and voted "to raise two hundred and seventy pounds to hire our proportion of three years' men for the Continental service, and give each man fifty dollars upon his enlisting." John Riddle, Stephen McCoy, Jonathan McCoy, Daniel McCoy, James Bowes, James Reddell, John Salloway and Aaron Noyes accepted the offer. Early in July a party of eight men, consisting of David Carr, Willaby Colby, Richard Clough, David Clough, Benjamin Bean, Peter Manuel, John Dow and Samuel Manuel, all of Bow, marched for the relief of Ticonderoga. On their arrival at Charlestown they met the news of its evacuation and orders to return, being in service seven days, under Captain Bean, who soon died.

Eli Colby was in Colonel Wyman's regiment, to reinforce the army in Canada, in August, 1776. In 1777 there were sixty-four men in town from sixteen to fifty years of age. Benjamin Noyes, Captain Ephraim Foster, Amasa Dow, Solomon Heath and David Elliot were appointed to set prices on sundry articles. Eliphas Reed was in Captain Wiggan's company.

In 1778 the town "Voted 500 dollars to hire Continental soldiers, and Chose Edward Carlton, Esqr. Bryant and Timothy Dix to provide for the families of those who hath or shall enlist."

In 1779 seventy pounds were paid to volunteers who went to Rhode Island. "Voted to raise 300 dollars as a bounty to the two men that were sent to Rhode Island for this town during the war, and to give Mr. Noyes 40s. Pr. month in produce, at 16s per bushel, and the town receive his wages." John Noyes was commissioned as captain of Eighth Company, Tenth Regiment, March 17th, in consequence of the death of Captain Bean. Mr. Enoch Noyes, born Benjamin Cotton for three years' service, and Capt. in John Noyes hired Jonathan Sargent and Robert Martin to go to Portsmouth for two hundred and twenty dollars, in Colonel Stickney's regiment, Captain Frye's company, June 2, 1779.

Eliphas Reed and Stephen McCoy enlisted, during the war, in Captain Frye's company. In 1780, "Voted to pay Enoch Noyes 140 dollars for the depreciation of his money paid to Benj. Cotton, and to pay the soldiers hired this summer in Corn." John Robertson served two months at Winter Hill, for which he was paid £1 8s. 6d.

In 1781, "Voted to give Benjin. Cotton 25, 0d. way, annually, as long as he serves for the Town; that the selectmen assess the town sufficient to buy our proportion of beef, and to hire a man to serve in the Continental army, and give him 20 neat cattle, 3 years old, for 3 years' service, 2 years old for 2 years' service, and 20 yearlings for one year's service; also, that Lieut. Moor have the benefit of the services of his son James in the war, and that James Moor have the benefit of his son Ephraim's services in the war." The six months' men were paid seven hundred and twenty pounds.

The three soldiers that served three months were paid one thousand and eighty pounds. "Voted that Capt. Noyes hire two soldiers cheap as he can, and that Ensign Noyes go to the committee on claims to prove our right to Benjamin Cotton and others who were non-residents, serving for the town of Bow." "Voted, that Enoch Noyes collect the corn due to his brother, Nathan Noyes." July 27th, "Voted the selectmen hire a soldier to serve 6 months in the Continental army." The tax for corn and money for the soldiers was £2085 14s. 4d.; three thousand five hundred and fifty weight of beef had been furnished at an expense of £4474 10s. Benjamin Jenness was a six months' man.

James Moor and Moses Moor enlisted for three years, July 15, 1782; the town to pay them fifty shillings per month, in stock, at silver money price.

In 1783, Benjamin Cotton was paid seventeen pounds and a half for three years and a half service, at five pounds per year, in the Continental army.

In 1785, Peter Manuel was paid for services in the war, £1 7s. 2d.

NAMES OF THE REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIERS THAT HAVE SERVED FOR BOW.

Aaron Kinsman, David Clement, Ebenezer Bean, Benjamin Cotton, Jonathan Currier, Samuel Rogers, John Manuel, Barnet Harvey, John Elio Cotton, Benjamin Bean, Ephraim Garvin, William Robertson, James Moor, Moses Noyes, Reuben Currier, John Moor, Samuel Winslow, Eliphas Reed, Stephen McCoy, Ephraim Moor, Ralph Cross, Ralph Cross, Dr. S. J. French, Moses Cross, John Hill, Jonathan McCoy, Daniel McCoy, James Bower, James Reddell, John Sulloway, Aaron Noyes, David Carr, Willaby Colby, Richard Clough, David Clough, Benjamin Bean, Jr., Peter Merrill, John Dow, Samuel Merrill, Eli Colby, Jonathan Sprague, Robert Martin, Moses Moser, Nathan Noyes, Benjamin Jones, Thomas Colby, Ephraim Kinsman and Jacob Rogers.

Captain Aaron Kinsman settled in Bow prior to 1767. He was one of the selectmen in 1768; a grand juror in 1773; received a captain's commission March 2, 1774; signed the test oath in Bow in 1776; from that time he was in the war to its close. July 31, 1786, he sold his real estate in Bow, consisting of one hundred and twenty acres of land, bounded as follows: "Beginning on Concord line, 20 rods from Turkey river, runs easterly on said line 100 rods to the road; thence on the road southerly to opposite Reuben Carrier's house; thence on Carrier's line to the 3d Division lots; thence westerly 140 rods; thence to the first-mentioned bounds, with dwelling-house and barn, all the mills and privileges, except one-fourth part of an old saw-mill and one-fourth part of the privilege where the mill now stands." The purchaser was John Bryant, and the purchase included the lands where the village of Bow Mills now is.

Captain Benjamin Bean, of Epping, bought of Nahum Lacey, of Stratham, lot No. 5 and half of lot No. 4, in the thirteenth range, September 6, 1770, it being the farm at the foot of Wood Hill now owned by Cyrus Hadley (1885). He served in the French War and rendezvoused at Dover, and contracted an acquaintance with Mary Baker, of Brookfield, whom he married in 1753; she was born in 1725 or 1726. He was at the capture of Louisbourg and distinguished himself there. He was captain of the militia in 1776, and very active in obtaining recruits and furnishing supplies for the army. He, with his two sons,—Ebenezer, born in 1755, and Benjamin, born in 1757,—was at the capture of Burgoyne. Captain Bean died in 1777, aged about fifty years. Soon after the close of the war his son, Ebenezer, with his mother, went to Conway, N. H., where he died March 3, 1846. His mother died in 1826, lacking ten days of being one hundred years of age. Benjamin, the second son, married Susan Carr, of Bow, after the Revolution; went to Piermont, where he died in 1835. Captain Bean was son of Benjamin Bean and Mehitable Mallow.

Military History from 1785 to 1864.—By an act of the Legislature, in 1792, each regiment included two battalions. Bow, Concord and Pembroke formed the First Battalion in the Eleventh Regiment. Jacob Green was captain of the militia at this time; also Captain Richard Dow is mentioned and Nathaniel Cavis.

In 1794 eleven men were called for, and in 1798 sixteen; but we have no means of knowing whether they were needed for active service.

In 1807 fourteen men being called for, to be ready at a minute's warning, "Ordered, to give each one dollar on enlisting and to make up ten dollars a month when called into actual service, each soldier to equip himself." Fourteen dollars was paid, but to whom does not appear.

In 1812, soon after the declaration of war, men were called for to defend Portsmouth harbor. August 17th, Governor Plumer ordered a company of artillery from the Third Brigade, which was to be under the command of Captain John Leonard, of Londonderry. The draft was for six months, unless sooner discharged, which was done November 30th. Bow was represented by Corporal Elisha Clough, Samuel Robertson, William Clough, John Carter, Jr., John Rowell and John Silver, Jr., had joined the Fourth United States Infantry, and were in General Harrison's army, in the West, at Vincennes, Prophetstown and Tippecanoe, and were present at Hull's surrender. The regiment was under command of Colonel Miller.

June 27th the town voted to make up to the soldiers who were drafted the last time ten dollars a month. John Thompson and Moses T. Willard were in Captain John McNeal's company, Eleventh United States Infantry, from July 1 to August 17, 1813. James Goodhue was also in the service. Moses T. Willard was in the service, in Samuel Gordon's company, five years, from June 11, 1812.

In Jonathan Butterfield's company, from April 1st to May 31st, was Ensign Wells Carter, Sergeant John Carter, Corporal John Elliott and George Colson. Joseph Flanders became captain January 1, 1814, when Isaac Silver, Richard Silver, Parker Brown and Benjamin Bailey enlisted until February 28, 1814, for the northern army at Champlain.

In 1814, Alexander Colby, Benjamin Noyes, John P. Rowell and Andrew Buntin were in Captain Bartlett's company; John Nichols also, Bartholomew Heath, Samuel Quimby, James Bunting, David Morgan were, from August 6th, for three months, in William Marshal's company; Robert Ordway, Willaby Colby, Benjamin Buntin, Jonathan Corliss, three months, from September 15th. Aaron Colby, William Elliott and Asa Goodhue went as substitutes for Dunbarton men, for sixty days, from September 27th, in Captain Trevet's company.

On the tax-list in 1790 those bearing the title of captain are Jacob Green, Richard Dow and Nathaniel Cavis; 1799, John Thompson; 1801, William Walker; 1811, John Brown; 1814, Walter Bryant; 1816, Nathaniel Cavis; 1820, Aaron Colby; 1824, Obed Gault; 1826, Francis W. Rogers; 1827, John Parker; 1832, William R. Parker; 1836, Enoch Clough; 1839, Isaac White; 1841, Emory Clough; 1842, Moses Colby; 1845, Samuel Gile; 1850, Elijah Upton, Jr.; 1851, Joseph C. Kelly, when the Legislature enacted, "That the militia shall be subject to no active duty except in case of war." The above William R. Parker was promoted major of the Eleventh Regiment in 1836; lieutenant-colonel, 1837; colonel, 1839; brigadier-general of the Third Brigade, 1841; major-general of the First Division, 1849.

August 12, 1820, a rifle company was formed in town. John Carter was commissioned captain, Zenas Wheeler lieutenant and Samuel Burdham ensign, who was promoted to captain in 1824; Samuel Gault was captain in 1827; Simeon Heath, in 1829; John Brown, Jr., in 1831; Samuel Alexander, in 1832; George W. Baneroff, in 1833; Benjamin A. Noyes, in 1835; Enoch Alexander, 1838; Benjamin Page, 1839; and Benjamin J. Gile when the company was disbanded.

At the breaking out of the Rebellion our town responded nobly. Those who enlisted from this town were as follows:

FIRST REGIMENT

Charles L. Hall and Isaac A. Parker enlisted for three months; mustered in May 1, 1861; re-enlisted in Fifth Regiment and discharged in October.

SECOND REGIMENT

Augustus E. Farmer, Company B, mustered June 1, 1861; promoted to first sergeant February, 1862; wounded June 2, 1861; mustered out June 21, 1861, re-enlisted as first lieutenant in Company A, Eighteenth Regiment, September 12, 1861; promoted to captain April 1, 1862; mustered out June 10, 1865.

Charles Holt, Company B, enlisted for three years from November 20, 1861; absent, sick, since April 29, 1861; no discharge furnished.

Alexander Fraser, Company D, mustered in November 19, 1861; promoted to first sergeant September 1, 1864; transferred to Company I September 7th; promoted to lieutenant May 1, 1865.

John Hart, Company E, mustered in November 14, 1861; transferred to the navy April 28, 1864.

Gottfried Lind, Company F, served from November 20, 1861, to June 2, 1865.

John Statum, Company I, served from November 20, 1861, to December 15, 1865.

THIRD REGIMENT

Henry S. Hamilton, first-class musician, served from August 20, 1861, to August 31, 1862, in the band.

Robert F. Palmer, Company E, mustered in August 23, 1861; died at Hilton Head, S. C., January 4, 1862.

Walter S. Poley, mustered in August 23, 1861; died at Hilton Head, S. C., December 22, 1862.

FOURTH REGIMENT

William Morris, a substitute and not accounted for.

SIXTH REGIMENT

John W. Wilkinson, Company D, mustered in November 27, 1861; discharged for disability at Newport News September 22, 1862.

SEVENTH REGIMENT

Alonzo Gough, Company A, mustered in October 20, 1861; discharged for disability at Beaufort, S. C., July 28, 1862.

William W. Gile, Company A, died of disease at St. Augustine, Fla., October 4, 1862.

Charles H. Ordway, Company B, served from December 11, 1861; wounded July 18, 1862; discharged on account of wounds at McDougall General Hospital, N. Y., November 6, 1862.

Almond Mark, Company K, served from November 17, 1861.

EIGHTH REGIMENT

Joseph Ball, Company A, enlisted November 11, 1861; discharged for disability at New Orleans May 24, 1864.

Enos Le. Plant, transferred to veteran battalion Eighty New Hampshire Volunteers January 1, 1865; mustered out October 28, 1865.

Charles Olsen, Company A, served from November 11, 1861; transferred to the navy June 18, 1864.

TWELFTH REGIMENT

Charles H. Taylor, Company C, mustered in September 5, 1862; wounded May 3, 1863; died of wounds at Potomac Creek, Va., May 21st.

THIRTEENTH REGIMENT

Charles E. Putney, Company C, mustered in September 19, 1862; promoted to sergeant May, 1865; mustered out June 21, 1865.

John W. Vinton, Company C, died of disease at Fort Sumter, S. C., July 18, 1862.

Harry C. Galt, Company C, transferred to the navy at New Orleans, La., August 1, 1862.

Henry Dwin In, Company C, died of disease at Fort Sumter, S. C., July 18, 1862.

Harry C. Frost, Company C, served in the navy at New Orleans, La., August 1, 1862.

John F. Guild, Company C, transferred to the navy at New Orleans, La., August 1, 1862; discharged by order July 7, 1865.

Nathan Hoody, Company C, died of disease at New Britain, Conn., February 15, 1865.

Carter S. Morgan, Company C, discharged for disability at New Orleans, La., 1864.

Le wis Silver, Company C, discharged June 1865.

William Morgan, Company E, served from September 23, 1861, to June 21, 1865.

James Ordway, Company E, mustered in September 29, 1861; discharged for disability at Washington, D. C., March, 1862; re-enlisted in First Regiment Heavy Artillery in August, mustered out September, 1865.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT

Ernest W. Fells, Company E, served from September 23, 1861, to June 8, 1865.

Charles F. Heath, Company B, served as sergeant from 1861 to July, 1865.

George H. Burton, Company H, mustered in September 24, 1861; wounded October 19, 1864; discharged at Concord July 29, 1865.

William P. Parker, Company H, mustered in September 21, 1862; promoted to sergeant 1864; discharged 1865.

David O. Russell, Company H, transferred to Veteran Reserve Corps, March, 1861 to June 30, 1865.

Alonzo P. Saltmarsh, Company H, served from 1862 to July 8, 1865.

FIRST NEW HAMPSHIRE CAVALRY

Lewis Porter, Troop B, mustered in March 21, 1861; missing in June; gained from missing; absent, sick, July 15, 1865.

Joseph Stern, Troop G, served to July 15, 1865.

Frederick A. Chase, Troop K, served from March to July, 1865.

In 1863 the town voted to authorize the selectmen to borrow five thousand eight hundred and eighty dollars for the encouragement of the enlisting of volunteers. Several furnished substitutes at a great expense.

HEAVY ARTILLERY, SECOND COMPANY

James Ordway and James D. Walker, enlisted August 18, 1864; transferred to First Regiment New Hampshire Artillery.

Christopher French, John F. Ham, Samuel Elliot, David A. Stevens and Edward T. Parker joined the regiment September 3, 1864.

Charles H. Brown, enlisted as sergeant in the First Regiment of Sharpshooters September 7, 1861; was killed at Bull Run August 30, 1862.

Joseph S. Austin, Company E, discharged for disability at Portsmouth Grove, R. I., March 4, 1864.

William H. Shattuck, not officially accounted for.

The enrollment contained 114 names, our quota under all calls being 52; number furnished, 60; surplus, 8.

Samuel Alexander was born in Londonderry, N. H., in 1730; came to Bow in 1762; purchased fifty acres of land of John Noyes, now occupied and owned by his grandsons, Eli and Enoch, bounded on the east by Merrimack River.

His children were Martha, born November 6, 1760, and married Jonathan Colby in 1783; died October 28, 1844; William, who married Polly Putney, of Dumbarton, and went to Tundridge, Vt.; Enoch, born January 6, 1771, and married Merriam Colby (born March 16, 1775) on July 14, 1797; and Polly, who married James White. The children of Enoch were Betsey, born November 2, 1797, and married Andrew B. Sargent, September 30, 1819; Samuel, born January 19, 1800, and married Mary Nutt, March 25, 1825; Sarah S., born June 21, 1802, and married Sewell Haselton, May 8, 1828; Philip C., born August 22, 1804, and married Mary A. Taylor, May 19, 1828; Merriam, born August 19, 1807, and married Jabez Glines, April 16, 1840; Enoch, born April 18, 1810, and married Lois P. Hadley, November 27, 1832; Eli, born August 6, 1812, never married; James G., born February 12, 1815, and married Aurelia Veasey, January 28, 1841; Willaby C., born May 18, 1818, and married Sarah Ann Blood, April 13, 1848; Adaline, born December 21, 1821, and married Aaron A. Sanson, August 23, 1846.

The children of Andrew B. Sargent (born January 31, 1797) and Betsy Alexander are Merriam E., born January 23, 1822, and married Daniel Messer November 30, 1843; Samuel A., born September, 1826, and married Adaline B. Holt, of Wilton, April 30, 1863; Simeon, born December 5, 1828, and married Mary E. Thorndike, October 14, 1858; Enoch A., born February 9, 1831; Lucy Jane, born May 28, 1833, and married John Morgan, January 22, 1852; Philip J., born May 6, 1839, and married Sarah E. Messer, September 14th, 1870. Andrew B. Sargent died September 28, 1868. His wife Betsy died August 9, 1872.

The children of Samuel Alexander and Mary Nutt (born April 7, 1797) are Eliza Jane, born January 4, 1826, and married Allen T. Hubbard, October 26, 1856; Mary A., born October 25, 1829, and married C. Waterman Pratt, January 22, 1853; J. Bordman, born December 15, 1834, and married Mary Nyland, December 14, 1870; S. Judson, born June 23, 1837 (he was captain of Company B, Ninth New Hampshire Regiment; wounded severely in action July 13, 1863, at Jackson, Miss.; died of wounds July 23d). Samuel Alexander died August, 1879, and his wife, Mary, died May 14, 1843.

The children of Sewell Haselton (born January 7, 1798) and Sarah S. Alexander are Rufus R., born August 13, 1831, and married Lydia S. Farnam, May 13, 1834; and Sarah M., born March 30, 1835, and married David Roberts, February 11, 1855. Rufus R. Haselton was a soldier in Company B, Ninth Regiment, Frank Manard, born April 2, 1833, married Harriet Rockwood.

The children of Philip C. Alexander and Mary A. Taylor (born September 9, 1808) are George Warren, born May 9, 1829, and married Harriet Appleton; Elvira S., born December 2, 1830, and married John C. Morrison, November 30, 1854; Rosantha A., born October 14, 1832, and married Asa Strong, July 10, 1855; Sarah R., born May 27, 1834, and married James N. Wright, July 16, 1854; Merriam A., born May 11, 1836, and married Horatio B. Shoals, April 9, 1857; Lois P., born March 2, 1840, and married Justus Lyman; Dolly T., born April 20, 1842, and married Zediah Cooley, November 24, 1872; Ella J., born September 4, 1850, and married Oscar Ward, August 25, 1868; Edward F., twin of Ella; and Nettie Maria, born December 3, 1854.

The children of Jabez Glines (born April 12, 1811, died June, 1867) and Merriam Alexander are Erastus O., born October 18, 1844, and married Rebecca J. Bunker, November 27, 1862; and Alonzo W., born September 7, 1848, and married Hattie E. Corey, November 17, 1867. He was delegated as drum-major to accompany the Third Regiment and band, as escort to Governor Bell and staff, to the Yorktown, Va., centennial, in 1881. Enoch Alexander, the third son of Enoch, is a man of sterling integrity, enjoying the perfect confidence of his townsmen and all with whom he is acquainted; was captain of the militia in 1838, a member of the House of Representatives in 1849 and 1850, repeatedly chosen one of the selectmen, was town treasurer a score of years, and one of the most accurate surveyors of wood and lumber the country affords, and the town may well be proud of the portrait of himself he has contributed to its history.

The children of James G. Alexander and Aurelia Veasey (born March 20, 1816) are Charles H., born August 27, 1844, and married Sarah Abby Marsh, September 30, 1870; he was register of deeds for Merrimack County 1882 and 1883, and keeps a public-house in Henniker, N. H., since 1884.

Edwin G., born June 22, 1849, is the only child of Willaby C. Alexander and his wife, Sarah Ann Blood, born November 21, 1826. Willaby died April 8, 1884.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

AARON W. BAKER, ESQ.

The early settlers of New Hampshire were sturdy pioneers from the mother-country or came from the older colonies, principally Massachusetts. Some of those who came from the colonies were originally from England, but many were native born. Of the latter class were the ancestors of the Bakers who settled in Bow. Their progenitors emigrated from England to Massachusetts during the last half of the seventeenth century, and at once grappled with the difficulties and dangers of frontier-life. They were active, hardy, industrious, honest, pious and progressive citizens, and were prominent in the church and in the state. From that ancestry came the subject of this sketch, Aaron W. Baker. His great-grandfather, Captain Joseph Baker, was a surveyor, and surveyed several townships in New Hampshire, among them Pembroke, where he settled in the early part of the eighteenth century and raised a family of eleven children. He was the first of this name to reside in New Hampshire. His son, Joseph Baker, was born November 7, 1749. He married a descendant of the Scotch Covenanters and settled in Bow. Ten children blessed their home. One of these, James

Aaron W. Baker

Enoch Alexander

Baker, married Judith Whittenore, of Pembroke. He subdued a farm from the wild lands adjoining his father's estate, and resided there until he died, forty-three years old, from injuries received accidentally. He left a family of six children, the eldest of whom was Aaron W. Baker, who was born April 10, 1796, and was only twelve years of age when his father died. The farm was new and rough and required hard and continuous labor. This Mrs. Baker and her small children were compelled to render. Thus, from boyhood, Aaron W. Baker was accustomed to the hardest of farm-work. Early morning found him in the field, and darkness closed the labors of the day. His advantages for education were very limited. During the winter terms only could he secure even an irregular attendance upon the public schools. By the instruction there received and by his home-studies he acquired a fair common-school education. To this he added a knowledge of vocal music, which he taught for several terms. He had a good voice, which he retained until old age. As he attained manhood he helped his brothers and sisters to better educational opportunities than he enjoyed, and by constant labor improved and enlarged the cultivated portions of the farm. He bought out the heirs and became its owner. In later years he added to it until his farm included nearly all of the land originally owned by his father and grandfather and many acres besides.

He married, March 10, 1825, Miss Nancy Dustin, who was born in Concord September 2, 1801. She was a descendant of the heroic Hannah Dustin, and was a lady of excellent character, good education and natural refinement.

In politics Mr. Baker was first a Whig. When the Democratic party became the exponent of more liberal principles he joined it, and when it became allied with the slave-power of the South he promptly abandoned it. He was an original Abolitionist, and acted with the Free-Soil party from its organization. When the Republican party was formed he, with the Free-Soilers generally, united with that party and ever after remained a Republican.

In religion, as in politics, he was thoughtful, studious and progressive. He was trained in the faith of Orthodox Congregationalism, and until middle life never attended any but Orthodox preaching; but as he read his Bible and pondered over the great questions of duty and destiny he found both heart and mind protesting against its harsh doctrines, and inadequate statements of the goodness, mercy and love of the Infinite Father. He became a Universalist. His wife, who had been educated a Baptist, joined him in his studies and reflections, and she, too, became a Universalist. Both died consoled and sustained by that cheering faith.

Long before total abstinence, or even temperance principles were popular, Mr. Baker became their earnest advocate. He aided the organization and adoption of temperance pledges, and by his influence many signed them. His example and encouragement assisted in the maintenance of pledges and helped to render social or habitual drinking dispensable.

In all the transactions of his life Mr. Baker was noted for his honesty, integrity, energy and faithfulness. He followed his convictions of duty, the logic of events and of principles, to their legitimate conclusions, and did not flinch from their results. He enjoyed society, liked company and loved his friends and relatives.

Although in the political minority of his town, he held the offices of selectman and treasurer and other positions of responsibility and trust.

His children were four sons,—Francis M., who was born February 8, 1826, and died April 13, 1888; Rufus, who was born March 8, 1831, and died February 15, 1861; John B., who was born April 6, 1834; and Henry M., who was born January 11, 1841.

Rufus married Miss Lucy S. Cutter, of Somerville, Mass., October 20, 1858. She was born August 29, 1833, and died March 26, 1866. They had no children.

John B. married Miss Sarah J. Locke, of East Concord, November 14, 1865. They have had two children,—Rufus Henry, born March 16, 1870, and John Perley, who was born August 21, 1871, and died June 28, 1884. John B. resides upon the family homestead. Henry M. is a graduate of Dartmouth College and is a lawyer.

Aaron W. Baker died July 12, 1876. In his life and character the honest yeomanry of the Granite State found a fitting exponent. His wife survived him but a few years. She died May 20, 1881.

CAPTAIN ENOCH ALEXANDER.

Traces his ancestry back to Samuel Alexander, who was born in Derry, N. H. He was born in 1737, and came to this town and located upon a farm, and was a resident of this town until his death, which occurred June 25, 1835. He married Mary Borton, and they had four children,—Enoch, William, Mary and Patic. Enoch Alexander, Sr., was born in this town April 6, 1771. He married Miriam, daughter of Wiltoughby Colby, of this town, July 11, 1797. By this union there were ten children,—Betsey, Samuel, Philip C., Sarah, Miriam, Enoch, Eli, J. G., Wiltoughby C. and Adaline,—six of whom are now living. This family is noted for longevity, as nearly all have lived to an advanced age. Captain Enoch, the subject of this sketch, was born in Bow April 18, 1810. His early days were spent with his father upon the farm, his only advantages for education being limited to common schools of his native town. He has spent his entire life upon the farm, but of later days has been a surveyor of wood and lumber.

to the satisfaction of all with whom he has been connected. Captain Alexander was married, at the age of twenty-two, to Lois P., daughter of Amos and Sarah (Colby) Hadley. She died July 8, 1878. Since then Mr. Alexander has lived alone. He is a Democrat in politics, having cast his first vote for Andrew Jackson, and has always advocated the principles of Democracy. The citizens of his town have entrusted him with every office within their gift, and he has always labored earnestly to advance the welfare of his native town.

He was representative to the General Court in 1848 and 1849; was made captain in the State militia. Mr. Alexander has always been a supporter of the Baptist Church, but severed his connection with it several years ago, although since that time he has devoted a portion of his means toward the building of churches in Suncook, N. H. By his industry and economy he has provided himself with ample means for his support in his old age, and he enjoys the respect and esteem of his fellow-citizens.

HISTORY OF DANBURY.

CHAPTER I.

This town was set off from Alexandria by an act of the Legislature, approved June 18, 1795, in answer to a petition from the inhabitants, with the following bounds: "Beginning at the beech-tree on the south-westerly corner of Alexandria and New Chester [Hill], southwest of Ragged mountain; thence north, twelve degrees west, on the line between Alexandria and New London, about four miles and a half to a beech-tree marked, standing on the west line of Mason's patent, otherwise called the curve-line; thence northeasterly on said curve-line, about seven miles to the range-line between lots numbered nine and ten, in second division; thence south, twelve degrees east, about four miles and a half to the line between New Chester and said Alexandria, between lots numbered one and eighteen on said line, in said second division; thence south, fifty-three degrees west, to the bounds first mentioned, about six miles, on the line between Alexandria and New Chester." June 10, 1808, the Legislature appointed "William Webster, Broadstreet Moody, and Enoch Colby, Esquires, to determine the jurisdictional lines between the towns of New Chester, Alexandria and Danbury."

December 19, 1848, land of George W. Dudley and Archibald Ford was severed from Wilnot and annexed to Danbury.

June 26, 1858, several lots of land were severed from Hill, and annexed to this town.

July 10, 1874, this town was severed from Grafton County and annexed to Merrimack.

July 26, 1878, another lot of land was severed from Wilnot and annexed to this town.

For matters concerning the earlier history of the territory now comprised in the town, see Alexandria papers.

Relative to a Tax for the Repair of Roads.—

"To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives in General Court convened.

"Humbly shews, the Petition of sundry of the inhabitants of the Town of Danbury in the County of Grafton, that, 'An act for laying a Tax on the lands of Danbury,' aforesaid passed to be enacted by the Honorable Senate and Honorable House of Representatives, June 15th and 16th, A.D., 1796, agreeably to an attested Copy of said act herewith exhibited, and that the Selectmen of said Danbury, by virtue of said act, assessed said Tax, and directed a warrant for collection thereof to the Collector of said Town for the time being, and that a part of said Tax has been collected and appropriated to the beneficial purposes intended by said act; and that certain clauses of said act not being sufficiently explicit and defined, your Petitioners are apprehensive that the said Collector has not proceeded according to the true spirit and meaning of said Act, whereby he is now unable by law to enforce the collection of the remainder of said Tax: Wherefore your Petitioners pray that the said Collector may be further empowered according to law to proceed to the collection and appropriation of the remainder of said Tax, agreeably to the true meaning and intent of said Act. As in duty bound, your Petitioners shall ever pray—

"Danbury, November 26, 1798—

"ANTHONEY TAYLOR, } Selectmen
"SAMUEL PILBURY, } of Danbury."

In answer to the foregoing, an act was passed December 7, 1798, authorizing the completion of the collection of the tax, and directing that it should be laid out on the road through "twelve-mile woods."

Petition for a Town.—

"STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

"To the Hon^{ble} the Senate and House of Representatives for said State, Convened at Concord, December 24th, 1794, Humbly Shew,

"The Subscribers, Inhabitants of the Town of Alexandria, that they labor under many Inconveniences by reason of the disagreeable form or manner in which said Town lies; also by reason of a Large mountain that crosses said Town about midway of the length thereof—Said Town is nine miles in Length and about six miles in breadth, which makes it large enough for two towns, and the mountain in the middle of said Town renders it almost impossible for the inhabitants of the South part and those of the North part to assemble on any occasion whatever, without travelling a great length of way to get by said Mountain. They therefore pray that your Honours would take their case under your wise consideration, and grant them relief by making a division of Said Town at or near the middle thereof, which your Petitioners conceive would be of public utility, as well as greatly contribute to relieve the embarrassments of your Petitioners, and as bound shall pray.

"Anthony Taylor, Athmore Hosking (his X mark), Daniel Reynolds, Peter Smith, George Niles, Samuel Pillsbury, John Tolford, Isaac Favour, Levi flanders, Samuel Pingry, Jonathan Tolford, Joseph Atwood, Obadiah Judkins, Ebenezer Williams, Daniel Weare, John Simonds, Benjamin Emerson, Daniel Corliss, Enos Ferren, Samuel jr. Simons, David Atwood, Peter Ladd, thomas Reed, Robert M Murphy, Christopher Bartlet, Jonathan Clark, Benjⁿ Pinter, William Martin, Eleazer Taylor, Timothy Emerson, William Simonds, David M Murphy, Moses Simonds, Ebenezer Simonds, Joshua Tolford, Jonathan Burpe, William M Murphy, Ziba Townsend, James Taylor, Eben Carleton, Sanders M Murphy, Josiah Emerson, John Moor Corliss, Timothy Simonds, Jorg Corliss, Isaac Ladd, Jeremiah Ladd, Peter Ingalls, Stephen Gale, David Morse, John Emons."

Votes Relative to Division of the Town.—

"ALEXANDRIA, March 30th 1795.

"then met agreeable to said warrant

" 1ly voted Joshua tolford, Moderator to govern said Meeting.

" 2ly voted to Divid the town.

" 3ly voted to Divid the town between the first and second Ranges of the second Division.

" 4ly voted to Divid the town, beginning at New Chester Line between the first and second Division, from thence to Run westerly at Right angle from New Chester Line to the Patten Line.

" 5ly voted to Divid the town between the second and third Ranges of the second Division.

" 6ly voted to reconsider the two Last votes in Respect of Dividing the town, and that the first vote shall stand that is to Divid the town between the first and second ranges of the second Division—

"a tru Cooppey, Attest,

"NASON CASS, town Clark."

In House of Representatives, December 29, 1794, a hearing was ordered for the next session; meanwhile, a notice was to be published in the New Hampshire Gazette, and one posted in some conspicuous place in the town. June 18, 1795, an act passed dividing the town and incorporating the southerly part into a town by the name of Danbury.

There are three churches in the town.—Baptist, Congregational and Christian.

Danbury is thirty miles northwest from Concord; on the Northern Railroad.

Postmasters.—Danbury, G. H. Gordon; South Danbury, Alfred Sleeper.

HISTORY OF DUNBARTON.

BY COL. W. H. STINSON.

CHAPTER I.

- "In fair Scotia's land of story
Near the ocean's swelling tide
Stands a castle grim and hoary
By the waters of the Clyde.
- "Here within New Hampshire's lot
Among her mounts which proudly rise,
And in wild, yet grand disorder,
Lift their summits to the skies.
- "Here was our Dunbarton founded,
By such scenery surrounded,
As that land across the main,
Whose resemblance gave her name."

—H. E. BURDICK, in Centennial Bazaar.

THE first mention of the tract of territory afterwards called Dunbarton is in the journal of Captain Pecker, who, with a small company, traversed the country late in the autumn of 1723, in a second journey after Indians.

The next mention of the territory, and probably the first grant as a township, was in 1733, when it was granted and surveyed as a township, known as Narragansett, No. 6, by the General Court of Massachusetts, to soldiers in the French and Indian War. The surveyor's report is as follows:

"This plan describeth a tract of Land laid out for the Narragansett Soldiers, Being the Second Township for Said Soldiers' Land Laid out on Maramack, and contains the Contents of Six miles square, and fifty Acres Allowance for Fishing at Amoscook Falls, and Three Thousand and Seventy acres allowed for Poor Lands and Ponds. In the whole place is 26,100 acres bounded as follows. Beginning at a pitch pine tree standing on the westerly side of Maramack River at the foot of Hannah Hooksett's Falls, Being in Smeoock Lane, and running on said Smeoock Township four miles West, Seventeen Degrees South, to a white pine tree, being the South-West Corner of Smeoock; then Running West four miles, and 40 Rods, on a Township on the West of Smeoock and Pongewick, laid out for the Narragansett Soldiers (near a heap of stones); then running North Five miles and one hundred and forty Rods on Province Land, to a white pine Tree, being the North-West corner of 3rd Narragansett Town on Maramack River; then Running on said Township 8½ miles and one hundred and ten rods east to Maramack River; then on Maramack River, as said River runs, Eight miles and 14½ Rods to the pitch pine Tree at the foot of Hannah Hooksett's falls in fore mentioned.

"Surveyed and Plann'd by order of the Great and General Court's Committee. In October, A. D. 1733 pt.

—STEPHEN HOSMER, JR.,
Surveyor.

The grant laps'd to the commonwealth, and two years later, or in 1735, Captain Samuel Gorham, of Plymouth, England, obtained a grant of the same tract of territory, had it surveyed and affixed to it the name Gorhamtown. He afterwards relinquished his claim.

In 1752, Archibald Stark and others purchased the same tract of territory from John Tufton Mason, and named it Starkstown. A transcript of the record of this first meeting is as follows:

PROVINCE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

"At a meeting of the proprietors of the land purchased of John Tufton Mason, Esq., at Portsmouth, held on Monday, the second day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and fifty two, therefore, acted, That there be and is hereby granted unto Archibald Stark, William Stark, John Stark, Archibald Stark, jr., all of a place called Amoscook, in the province of New Hampshire, the Rev. David McGregor, Robert McMurphy, William Rankin, William Stinson, John Cochran, James Evans, Hugh Dunster, John McCreedy, John Carr, John Cochran, Hugh Jameson, David Stinson, Joseph Soley, Matthew Thornton, Daniel McCarly, John Carr, John Cochran, Dr. Alexander Todd, William Hogg, James McGregor, David Leslie, George Clark, William Rankin, William Stinson, James Rogers, James Cochran, John McIndie, James McGregor, Samuel Todd, David C. n. g., all of Londonderry, in said province; Thomas Mills, Samuel Hogg, Caleb Page, jr., Samuel Richards, Thomas Follansbee, jr., all of Hampstead, in said province; and Jeremiah Dige of said place, William Elliott, John Hall, Adam Dickey, all of Berryfield, in said province; Joseph Blanchard, Esq., Joseph Blanchard, jr., both of Dunstable, in said province; Joseph Putney, James Rogers (their eldest sons for the right, all living on a tract of land hereby granted, William Putney and Okelah Foster, of the same place, for one hundred acres, and the remaining part of the share or right of Hugh Ramsey of said Londonderry, John Marton of Portsmouth, in said province, and George Mussey of said Portsmouth, William Stark (William Stark also named having three rights, being the same name), and Archibald Stark above named, Samuel Emerson Esq., James Vainum, both of Chester, in said province; John Campbell of Haverhill, William Dwyer of Boston, both in the province of Massachusetts Bay; William Gault of Cumberland, in the province of New Hampshire; Samuel Fulton, late of said Londonderry, a party as is expressed aforesaid, to them and their heirs assigns excepting who he may excepted, on the terms, conditions and limitations hereinafter expressed, all the right title, estate and property of the said proprietors, in and unto all that tract or parcel of land, abt. five miles square more or less, situated in the province of New Hampshire, and bounded as follows. Beginning of the main river on the westerly side of a tract of land lately granted by the said proprietors to Thomas Parker and others, and running westward as far as that tract of land runs, coming on the same, then running north two degrees, west five miles and one hundred and eight rods, then north seventy-nine rods and continuing to Bow line, then southerly by the township of Bow and continuing by that till it come to said river; then by that till it comes to the place where it begins."

The first settlers, of whom there is any knowledge, to enter the limits of the territory afterwards called Starkstown, were Joseph Putney and James Rogers, who came from Londonderry by tracing to its source a small stream which empties into the Merrimack, to the great meadow, in the fall of 1749. The luxuriant crop of grass attracted their attention. The ready facilities afforded for procuring fodder for cattle led them to regard it as a desirable spot for a permanent location. There they erected log-houses and planted apple-trees, which had so far advanced towards maturity as to produce fruit when the attack was made on Fort Rumford by the Indians, in 1746. They procured no title to the land, but their possession was confirmed by the proprietors, who, in 1752, obtained a grant of the township from the assigns of John Tutton Mason.

The "settlement" was exposed to the depredations of Indians, and great diligence was exercised to protect themselves and their families from massacre by the wild sons of the forest. When the attack was made on Fort Rumford these brave pioneers were in imminent danger, but saved themselves and their families by flight to Fort Rumford. Stark, in his "History of Dunbarton," says that "two friends from that place traced their way in the night by spotted trees through the forest to the 'great meadow,' to notify them of their impending danger. Upon receipt of the intelligence they at once abandoned their homes and by a speedy retreat to Rumford the same night insured their safety. Returning, in the course of the next day, to drive their cattle to the Rumford garrison, they found them all slaughtered and lying scattered around in every direction. Their houses had been plundered and burned, and their apple-trees, with one exception, cut down."

They remained at Rumford till 1749, when they, with their families, returned and made permanent settlements; the extensive range of meadow lands already cleared by the industry of the beaver and the abundant natural crop of tall blue-joint grass there produced, influenced the pioneers in selecting their location at Montalona. The drought of that year was probably never exceeded in New England. The preceding had been unusually dry, but this was exceedingly so.

There was but little rain in May, June and July. Hay in the Massachusetts colony was so scarce that it was imported from England. But it did not injure the great meadow, and in November the owners drove from Haverhill, Mass., eighteen head of young cattle, which they wintered "at the halves."

From 1749 to 1752 few settlements were made. In the latter year came Thomas Mills, William Stinson and John Hogg from Londonderry. The first settled on lot 17, in the fifth range, the farm now owned by John C. Mills; the second on lot No. 5, in the second range, the farm now in the possession of William C. Stinson; and the third on lot No. 18, in the first range, the estate formerly owned by Deacon John Church, but now in the possession of Charles Clifford.

The motive that actuated these settlers to emigrate to this township was the vote passed at the first meeting of the proprietors, held at Londonderry, April 8, 1751, "that of the thirty individuals who should first locate themselves under their grant, each person should have three acres of land cleared on or before the last day of October succeeding. To have the same fenced in and a dwelling-house not less than sixteen feet square erected, in which, also, their families were to be settled before the last day of May, 1752." Their dwellings were situated several miles apart, and thus remained for sometime without any intervening inhabitants.

The situation of these pioneers could not have been otherwise than drear and lonely, in a wilderness abounding with wild and ferocious animals—bears, catamounts, wolves and wildcats—whose dismal howls disturbed their nightly repose and compelled them to maintain a vigilant watch over their flocks and herds. If, during the night, they looked abroad from their timber-cabins through the darkness and gloom around them, no friendly lights gleamed from windows of distant dwellings to cheer their solitude and assure them that they were not entirely alone in their forest wilderness.

The work of felling the forests and tilling the rugged soil was a laborious task; their implements were few and of a rude pattern, and their means scanty; yet, amidst the many discouragements, these noble sons of toil made the wilderness to blossom as the rose; but their well-provided and opulent descendants can but faintly picture to themselves in imagination the stern realities met, endured, and overcome by the hardy foresters who located the now pleasant places in which they dwell in peace, security and happiness.

Many of the original settlers of Starkstown were from Derryfield and Londonderry; others came directly from Ireland and Scotland. Several families from the vicinity of Ipswich, Mass., took up lands near each other in the southern part of the town, while those from Haverhill, Hampstead and other towns of Massachusetts located in other parts of the township. The so-called Scotch-Irish emigrants who first settled in the town are not to be considered as blended with the natives of Ireland. The ancestors of these Scotch-Irish emigrants, who left Scotland for Ireland in 1619, and subsequently settled in Londonderry, N. H., were a distinct people and unmingled with those of the country to which they emigrated. The cause of their leaving their native soil and seeking a land of freedom was due to religious persecution; but their expectations were not realized, and not till they sought refuge in America did they enjoy the freedom they desired "to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences."

The Scotch-Irish, having been the first to settle in Stark's town, and having for a long period exerted a controlling influence in the management of its affairs, and a large proportion of its present inhabitants being their lineal descendants, it is highly proper that something of their history and the causes that led them to seek new homes in the wilds of America should be given, as in the foregoing.

In 1765, Governor Benning Wentworth granted a charter for the township to be called Dunbarton. The charter is as follows:

"PROVINCE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

"George the third, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, etc.

"To all to whom these presents shall come, GREETING. Whereas, our loving subjects, inhabitants of a tract of land within our Province of New Hampshire aforesaid, known by the name of Starktown, have humbly petitioned and requested that they may be erected and incorporated into a township, and enfranchised with the same powers and privileges which other towns have and enjoy within our said province by law, and it appearing with us to be conducive to the general good of our said province, as well as the said inhabitants in particular, by maintaining good order and encouraging the culture of the said lands, that the same should be done;

"Know ye therefore, that we of our especial grace, certain knowledge, and for the encouragement and promotion of their good deeds and purposes, by and with the advice of our trusty and well-beloved Benning Wentworth, Esqr, Our Governor and Commander in chief, and of our council for said province of New Hampshire, have created and ordained, and by these Presents for us and our heirs and successors do ordain that our loving subjects residing on the tract of land aforesaid, or that shall hereafter reside and improve them, the same being limited and bounded as followeth, viz.

"Beginning at a stake and stone standing on the bank of Merrimack river, on the westerly side, which is also the northerly corner bound of the Goffstown, so called. Thence running westerly by said Goffstown till it comes to the town of Wear, so called; thence turning off, and running northerly by said Wear, till it comes to the line of New Hopkinton, so called; thence turning off, and running northeasterly, by the line of New Hopkinton aforesaid, till it comes to the town of Bow, thence running by Bow line, till it comes to Merrimack river, thence down said river, southerly on said river, to stake and stone begun at.

"Shall be and by these presents are declared and ordained to be a town corporate, and are hereby created and incorporated into a body politic and corporate, to have continuance until His Majesty's pleasure shall be signified to the contrary, by the name of Dunbarton, with the powers and authorities, privileges, immunities, and franchises which other towns in said province by law hold and enjoy, always reserving to us, our heirs and successors, all white pine trees that are or shall be found growing or being on said tract of land, fit for the use of our royal navy, reserving also the right of dividing the said town when it shall appear necessary and convenient for the benefit of the inhabitants thereof.

"Provided, nevertheless, and it is hereby declared, and that our charter and grant is not intended or shall in any manner be construed to extend to effect the private property of the said . . . within the limits aforesaid. And as the several towns within our province of New Hampshire are by laws heretofore made and authorized to assemble, and by the majority of votes present to choose all such officers, and transact all such affairs as by the said laws are declared, we do by these Presents nominate Caleb Page to call the first meeting at any time within forty days from the date thereof giving legal notice of the time and place and design of holding such meeting, after which the annual meeting for said town for the choice of officers and management of affairs aforesaid be holden within said township on the second Tuesday of March, annually.

"In testimony whereof, we have caused the seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed. Witness, Benning Wentworth, Esqr, Our Governor and Commander in chief, in and over our said Province of New Hampshire, the tenth day of August, in the fifth year of our reign, Anno Domini, 1765.

"B. WENTWORTH.

"By His Excellency's command with advice of council

"T. ATKINSON, JUNR, Secy.

"Province of New Hampshire.

"August 10, 1765, recorded in the book of charters, No. 1, Pages, 50 and 281.

"T. ATKINSON, JUNR, Secy."

The bounds as made by the survey in 1803 are as follows:

"North, 1 deg. west, 6 miles, 403 rods; north, 82 deg. east, 638 rods; south, 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ deg. east, 1028 rods; south, 18 deg. west, 49 rods; south, 44 deg. east, 160 rods; south, 46 deg. west, 100 rods; south, 24 deg. west, 118 rods; south, 45 $\frac{1}{2}$ deg. east, 1320 rods; north, 1 deg. east, 8 miles, 250 rods."

The town of Dunbarton is situated in the extreme southwestern part of Merrimack County, but previous to the incorporation of Merrimack County, in 1852, it formed a part of Hillsborough County; its latitude is 43 $^{\circ}$ 5'; its present area is twenty thousand nine hundred and sixty-six acres; there are many hills, but no mountains. Among the highest are Duncanowett, Mills, Putney, Prospect, Jamieson and Abbott. The highest point of land is seven hundred and seventy-nine feet above the level of the sea. The situation is elevated, the air pure and the water good. The soil is of the best quality, and well adapted to agricultural and horticultural products. No river runs through the town, but several large streams drain it, among them Harris, One Stack, Leach, Tenny, Ray, Settlement and Chismore Brooks. The largest pond is Gorham, having an area of eighty acres; the other ponds are smaller, and bear the names of Woodbury (or Kimball), Long, Stark and Purgatory. Concerning the geology of the town, Prof. C. H. Hitchcock divides the formations into distinct groups, viz.:—1, porphyritic gneiss; 2, lake gneiss; 3, montalton series, including the Concord granite; 4, ferruginous schist; 5, andalusite mica schist, with coarse granite veins; 6, Rockingham mica schist; 7, Kearsarge andalusite group; 8, Merrimack group, including a little clay slate.

No minerals are found, but an arsenic mine exists in the eastern part. The arsenic ore is included, as a bed, between a strata of mica slate, resting directly in granite. It is from six to eight inches in thickness, and is very heavy and rich in arsenic. The bed with the strata is to the south 80 $^{\circ}$, east 20 $^{\circ}$, and runs north and south. Large quantities of loose pieces of the ore may be easily obtained on the surface and in the soil. Associated with the arsenical pyrites the green arsenic of ore is found, forming investing layers on the ore, and scorodite, or yellow arsenic of iron, occurs in concretionary masses and thin crusts between the joints and cavities.

A little argentiferous galena was also found in disseminated branches and crystals. Radiated black tourmaline exists in the mica slate, and quartz crystals are found in the vein and in the soil. Kaoline, or clay from decomposed granite, fills up many spaces between the rocks.

In 1825, by act of the Legislature, the part bordering on the Merrimack River was disannexed for the purpose of forming a part of the town of Hooksett.

The first census was taken in 1767.—Unmarried men, 16 to 60 years old, 25; married, 16 to 60 years old, 39; boys from 16 years and younger, 70; males over 60 years, 6; females unmarried, 80; married, 45; widows, 1; male slaves, 2. Census, 1775.—Males under 16, 111; 16 to 50 not in the army, 92; over 50, 11; in the army, 14; females, 232; slaves, 1. 1790, 917; 1800, 1222; 1810, 1256; 1820, 1150; 1880, 711.

The first saw-mill built in the town was by General John Stark, in the northwesterly section, a lot being granted him with this provision understood. The property and estate is still in the possession of the Stark family and owned by a granddaughter of the illustrious general, who resides in the grand old mansion. The family have a private cemetery near the estate where the remains of Major Caleb Stark, a son of John Stark, lie buried with those of other descendants.

As a farming town Dunbarton holds an even rank, whose well-tilled farms and good farm-houses and buildings speak volumes for the thrift and enterprise of the people.

On the 13th of September, 1865, the town celebrated its centennial of incorporation with exercises of great interest, and the sons and daughters located in other states and sections came home again to mingle in and enjoy the festivities of the occasion, and the event will long be a treasured one to all who were present, and notable in the history of the town.

CHAPTER II.

DUNBARTON—(Continued).

RELIGIOUS INSTITUTIONS.

CLOSELY identified with the town is the religious review, and first we give the History of the Congregational Church.—The history of the Congregational Church is largely the religious history of Dunbarton, for this organization is at once the oldest and largest Christian body in the town. The ancestors of many of the early inhabitants were men and women who, in 1619, had left fair Scotland, their native land, because of religious persecution, and had settled in the north of Ireland. Being strict Presbyterians, they did not find there the freedom which they had expected, but were forced to contribute towards the support of the Established Church. A century later their descendants sought in America a home where they could freely worship God, and their children who came to Dunbarton brought with them the religious spirit of their fathers. They early felt their need of the preaching of the gospel and of public means of grace.

In 1752 a vote was passed at the second meeting of the proprietors that a meeting-house should be erected; but for some reason it was not finished till about 1767. This building was located at the Centre, in what is now the public common, and was a low-framed structure, furnished only with seats of rough plank and a pulpit of rough boards. It was thirty feet square, and had no means by which it could be warmed. This house remained the only place of public worship for twenty years. Previous to the completion of this building the people enjoyed occasional opportunities of hearing the Word. The first sermon is said to have been preached by Rev. Mr. McGregor in the open air. At different times several ministers were employed to preach; but not till nineteen years after the erection of the first meeting-house was there a settled ministry.

In 1773 an attempt was made to settle a minister, Rev. William Fessenden, but previous to his conference with the committee which had been appointed by the town he had become established in another place. The Revolution placed a check upon religious effort. From 1780 to 1783 only twenty-four days' preaching were hired. In 1785 an attempt was made to settle Rev. Mr. Bradford, but his doctrinal views proved unsatisfactory. Again, in 1786, an unsuccessful attempt was made to settle Rev. Mr. Williams. On October 30, 1788, a committee was appointed to engage Rev. Walter Harris "for one year, or a shorter time, to preach on trial." On the 26th of January, 1789, it was voted to extend him a call.

On June 18, 1789, the Congregational Church of Dunbarton was organized with ten members. A church covenant was framed, and the Westminster Confession was adopted as the standard of faith, in the following words: "We do profess a firm belief of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, and understand them for the most part as they are explained in the Westminster Confession of Faith; at least, we view that as the best human system now extant." Rev. Walter Harris was ordained and installed pastor of the church on August 26th of the same year, and he held his charge for more than forty years, the leader of the people, not only in spiritual matters, but in all things essential to their welfare. So largely was Dr. Harris instrumental in moulding the character and determining the prosperity of the inhabitants of Dunbarton that no history of the town is complete which does not give him prominent notice. He was born June 8, 1761, in Lebanon, Conn. His father died shortly before his birth, and he was left, with his brother, to the care of his pious mother. Each day, taking her boys by the hand, she held them at her side while she read from the Bible and offered her fervent prayers to God. Thus was the seed of piety sown, afterwards to spring up and grow into a pure and noble character. When he was sixteen years old his mother died, and he and his brother were left to care for themselves. The War of the Revolution soon breaking out, the brothers enlisted to defend their country, and fought side by side till the elder was killed by a British cannon-ball. Dr. Harris served uninjured in the war for three years. Having received an honorable discharge, he purchased a lot of land in Lebanon, N. H., and began to clear it. While at this work the thought of a higher sphere of usefulness came to him. One day he sat down upon a tree which he had just felled, and there argued aloud his case. At length he declared, "I will go to college," and striking the axe into the tree, he left it there, a present to the finder, and started to execute his new resolve. In 1787 he graduated with honor from Dartmouth College, having the Hebrew oration. He then studied theology under Dr. Emmons. In mental power and in ability to defend the truth he was nearly the equal of his illustrious teacher. On coming to Dunbarton, he found the people greatly needing instruction in evangelical doctrines, and he began his work by setting forth and expounding these. During his entire ministry his preaching was characterized as doctrinal,—"God's sovereignty, man's depravity, salvation through the blood of Christ, by the effectual working of the Holy Ghost; standing on this foundation, he preached." He was a natural orator, possessing a voice of great power and pathos. At first he would carry the judgment of his hearers by his convincing logic, and then persuade them with his eloquence. He possessed the power of impressing himself as well as what he uttered upon the people, and so had the two great essentials for leadership. All revered him. The inhabitants came to him for advice upon all matters. Rev. S. S. Parker says: "The impression he made upon my heart in childhood was that God Almighty was first and Dr. Harris was second." Not only did he teach by word, but by example. In all things he tried to be a pattern for the people. His life was blameless. He cultivated his farm with great care, kept all things in order and was a model farmer. As a winner of souls his Master owned him. In the third year of his ministry there was a great outpouring of the Spirit, and eighty persons were added to the church. Dr. Harris believed in revivals and worked and prayed for them.

In 1816 forty new converts were added to the church, and again, in 1826, eighty persons became members. Dr. Harris was always deeply interested in the cause of education, and for many years visited all the schools in town twice annually, and it was a long time before the people appreciated his labors and thought to thank or recompense him for this work. Dr. Harris' influence was felt throughout the State. In church affairs and in the defense of evangelical doctrines he was an acknowledged leader. Declining health compelled him to resign his charge in 1830, but he still remained in Dunbarton an inspiration and a power. He died December 25, 1843. He was succeeded in the church by Rev. John M. Putnam, who was installed pastor by the same council that dismissed Dr. Harris, July 8, 1830. Mr. Putnam was born in Sutton, Mass., February 26, 1794. From eight until fourteen years of age he worked on a farm. Then he worked as a jeweler and in a printing-office till he was twenty-one. He studied at Kimball Union Academy from 1815 to 1817, and entered Brown University at the age of twenty-four. His health prevented graduation. Having studied theology under Rev. Jacob Ide, D.D., of Medway, Mass., he was ordained December 13, 1820. His first pastorate was at Ashby, Mass. He remained there five years, and then became editor of the Repository and Observer. From 1827 to 1830 he was settled at Epsom, N. H., from which place he came to Dunbarton. He was a worthy successor to Dr. Harris, and for thirty-one years labored faithfully for both the spiritual and temporal welfare of the people. Under his ministry the church greatly prospered. Only eight months after his installation there was a revival which brought fifty new members into the church. In 1858 another revival resulted in an addition of twenty-three persons to the church. These were nearly all heads of families.

Mr. Putnam, like Dr. Harris, took great interest in education. For many years he visited the schools throughout the town. He also published two works on English grammar. His other publications are "Helps at the Mercy Seat" and several sermons. As a preacher, Mr. Putnam differed somewhat from Dr. Harris. His preaching was less legal, though scarcely less effective. He was a powerful speaker and a most excellent pastor. He resigned his charge from ill health, and was dismissed October 9, 1861. On the same day his successor, Rev. Sylvanus Hayward, was installed. He was pastor till April 12, 1866. Thus for more than seventy-seven years the Congregational Church has the remarkable record of not being one day without a settled pastor.

Rev. George I. Bard was installed pastor November 20, 1866, and was dismissed December 3, 1872.

The next pastor was Rev. William E. Spear, ordained and installed October 16, 1873. His letter of resignation was accepted August 1, 1878. Mr. Spear is now a practicing attorney in Boston.

Rev. James Wells succeeded him as acting pastor for nearly two years, and gave much acceptance.

The present pastor, Rev. Tilson C. H. Bouton, was ordained and installed July 14, 1881, coming fresh from Andover Theological Seminary, and is an earnest preacher of the Word and a beloved pastor.

In 1860 there were one hundred and twenty-nine members. Now the church-roll presents one hundred and twenty-three names.

In the early years of the church the discipline of its members was of the strictest character. Many of the cases of church discipline would seem almost incredible to the present generation. The following is quoted from the records:

"Jan. 27, 1794.—A complaint was presented to the church by ——— against our brother, ———, for unchristian-like behaviour.

in suffering himself to be carried, in a light and vain manner, upon a man's shoulder to the length of one-quarter of a mile."

The church accepted this complaint, and summoned the brother before it. He appeared and confessed his fault and was pardoned.

In 1789 it was "Voted to erect the second meeting-house." This vote was carried into effect. The building was erected on the spot where the first log church was built, at the centre of the common, where it still stands, now used as the town hall.

In 1836 the present church edifice was built, which covers the spot where the house of Colonel William Stark, a brother to General John Stark, was located. It was repaired and remodeled in 1881, furnished with an elegant and costly set of pulpit furniture by representatives of one of the earliest families, and is now one of the most pleasant houses of worship to be found in our State, outside of the cities. The church also owns a good parsonage, built in 1883, and a vestry.

In the early years of the church the minister's salary was obtained by a tax levied upon all ratable polls and estates in the town. This system, in time, led into much difficulty, and was abolished. It was succeeded by a tax upon all members of the society which exists in connection with the church. It is now raised by subscription. The church is at present in a prosperous condition, and, with the blessing of God resting upon it, it will continue to be in the future, as it has been in the past, a mighty instrument for the temporal and eternal good of the people.

The Baptist Church.—In 1795, as the result of the visits of Rev. Hezekiah Smith, D.D., of Haverhill, Mass., there was a Baptist Church formed in Bow, several members of which lived in Dunbarton, and when the Bow Church disbanded, in 1816, the Dunbarton members united with the Baptist Church in Goffstown. In 1827 a young man who was working at Anoskeag village began to hold meetings in a school-house near Montalona on Sundays, attending to the work of his trade during the week. Soon the school-house could not contain his hearers, and a large, unfinished blacksmith-shop was floored and provided with seats for a congregation, which soon filled them to overflowing.

Encouraged by these meetings, the Baptists of Dunbarton met November 9, 1828, and voted to obtain letters of dismission from the churches of which they were members, and to petition the Baptist Churches of Goffstown, Bow, Weare and New Boston to send delegates to a council to be held December 15th, at nine o'clock A.M. Joel Wheeler and Jonathan Colby were chosen deacons, and Isaac Westcott (the young man who for several months had been their preacher and leader) was appointed to receive the hand of fellowship. To the request for a council were the signatures of nineteen persons.

Two other subjects were also under consideration at this time, viz.: building a new meeting-house and the ordination of Mr. Westcott. The former was acted on immediately, and the new house was finished in the summer of 1830; the latter was postponed a few months, and though a council was called in the autumn of 1829, Mr. Westcott was not ordained until after he left Dunbarton.

The council of recognition met according to invitation at the house of Joel Wheeler, the churches of Goffstown, Bow and Weare being represented, and chose the Rev. Joseph Davis moderator, and Mr. Joseph Peacock clerk. It having been voted to extend the hand of fellowship to those desiring it, services of recognition were held, Rev. Joseph Davis, of Weare, preaching the sermon. Immediately after the recognition services the church retired and received two new members.

During the first ten years of its history there are but few items of interest to be found in the records of the church.

The church was supplied by Mr. Westcott until February 20, 1831, and afterwards by Rev. Messrs. Ellis, Strong and Wilmarth; meanwhile licenses to preach had been granted to Christie Wheeler and to Joel Wheeler, Jr.

Apparently the first settled pastor of the newly-gathered flock was Rev. Stephen Pillsbury, who was called and settled in the spring of 1835, and remained until the close of 1838.

In July, 1839, Mr. Horace Eaton, then a student, agreed to supply the church until October. He found the state of religion very low, there being no attempt to sustain a prayer-meeting. In August he obtained a promise from one of the deacons to meet him at the place appointed for a prayer-meeting the next week.

At the first meeting three were present, at the second, twelve, and at the third, a full house. These meetings were the beginning of a series, during the continuance of which several were converted and fifteen were baptized and joined the church. At the close of the year the total membership was fifty. Rev. Levi Walker was received by letter from Hanover April 15, 1840, and became pastor of the pulpit for a year, when he removed to Campton. After this Rev. Stephen Pillsbury supplied the pulpit half the time for several months, and the membership of the church was increased to seventy.

In accordance with an invitation from the church, a council assembled March 21, 1843, and ordained Abner Mason, a member of the Worthen Street Church, Lowell, Mass., to the work of the ministry and as pastor of the Dunbarton Church.

In December, 1844, Jonathan Wheeler was chosen church clerk, a date worthy of mention, from the fact that he faithfully discharged the duties of his office for thirty-two consecutive years, during twenty-nine of which he lived four miles from the meeting-house. Rev. Abner Mason having been dismissed in November, 1844, he was succeeded by Rev. N. W. Smith, who acted as supply for about a year.

The church had thus far, during nearly twenty years of its history, worshiped in the meeting-house at Montalona; but the members found it hard work to support preaching even a portion of the time. Some members of the Baptist Churches in Hopkinton and Bow, all of whom resided in Dunbarton, having expressed a desire to attend church in their own town, and being willing to contribute toward building a new house of worship, the church met April 29, 1847, in a hall, which, with a lot of land, had been recently purchased at the centre of the town, and received by letter fourteen new members from the churches in Hopkinton and Bow.

The church having no pastor, Rev. J. W. Poland was received by letter June 4, 1847, and became their pastor for a season.

The failing health of Mr. Poland would not permit him to continue his labors, and February 3, 1848, Rev. H. D. Hodge was received by letter as member and pastor of the church, and remained during the year. Meanwhile, work was progressing on the new meeting-house, and the building was completed so that the first services were held in it Sunday, December 1, 1848.

In the spring of 1849, Rev. Samuel Cook became pastor, and remained until the latter part of 1853, when he removed to Concord. For about a year the church was without a pastor, but January 7, 1855, Rev. Horace Eaton and wife were received by letter from the church in Wilton, and under his pastorate the following spring there were several additions.

Mr. Eaton remained with the church nearly five years.

After irregular supplies for several months, Rev. J. M. Coburn supplied the pulpit very acceptably for one year, and was succeeded by his brother, Rev. W. L. Coburn, who was ordained at Dunbarton February 28, 1861.

For reasons which do not appear in the records, this pastorate was a short one. In May or June, 1862, Rev. John Peacock was engaged as a supply, and continued with the church until September, 1863.

In September, 1863, Mr. Stephen Pillsbury (son of the Rev. Stephen Pillsbury, who was settled in 1835) commenced his labors. He preached about a year as a licentiate from the New London Baptist Church, and, in October, 1864, was ordained and settled as pastor. Mr. Pillsbury remained with the church until the close of the year 1865, when he removed to Mt. Holly, Vt. During the year 1866 the church had no stated supply.

Early in 1867, Rev. T. B. Eastman was called and settled as pastor. Mr. Eastman was succeeded by Rev. E. J. Whittimore, who, in turn, was succeeded by Rev. Samuel Woodbury. Mr. Woodbury remained for two years and then removed to Pembroke, Me. In the summer and autumn of 1874 the church was supplied by Mr. A. S. Stowell, then a student at Newton Centre, Mass., and afterwards ordained pastor of the church at Salem Depot. In May, 1875, Mr. A. J.

Hopkins, at that time pursuing his studies in Newton Theological Institution, began as a supply for the summer, and, in accordance with the request of the church, continued, while pursuing his studies, to supply them through the following year.

He was ordained pastor of the church September 27, 1876, and remained with them until October, 1879, when he accepted a call to the adjoining town of Hopkinton. During his pastorate twenty-five new members were received by the church, seventeen by baptism and eight by letter.

The first Sunday in October, 1879, Rev. L. Hayden, D.D., began to preach as a supply, and at the close of the year was formally recognized as pastor of the church. He remained until July, 1885, when he accepted a call to become pastor of the Baptist Church in Shutesbury, Mass.

Doctor Hayden was one of the town's most respected citizens, ever taking an active interest in every good cause of public, educational or religious welfare, and his removal from town was an extended cause of deep regret, and that the remaining years of a well-spent life may be in green pastures and beside the still waters of a Father's love, is our benediction on this noble man and servant of God.

In the autumn of 1882, owing to a bitterness of feeling engendered by political excitement, a portion of the members withdrew, thus seriously impairing the financial and spiritual strength of the church. The church is at present without a supply.

The Universalist Society was formed in 1830, and the Methodist Society in 1847, both of which have been disbanded.

St. John's Episcopal Chapel.—In the westerly part of the town, on land donated by the Stark family, stands the St. John's Episcopal Chapel, a very neat and inviting edifice. Services are held regularly, to the support of which the Starks lend cheerful aid.

In the preparation of the history of the two larger religious societies, we acknowledge the kindly aid rendered by Rev. Mr. Bouton and Rev. Mr. Hopkins.

CHAPTER III.

DUNBARTON.—(Continued.)

SCHOOLS AND MILITARY.

In granting townships, the lords proprietors usually set apart a right called the "school lot." Such a right was reserved in this town. At the proprietors' meeting, March 2, 1752, after voting the parsonage lot, another lot was voted, as the record states, "for the use and maintenance of a school forever."

At the meeting in March, 1771, the sum of thirty dollars was appropriated for a town school, which appears to be the first for that purpose upon record.

The same amount was annually appropriated during the years 1772, '73, '74 and '75. In 1776 the school money was voted down, as was the case from that date until March 22, 1788, when the sum of seventy-two dollars was voted for the town school. In 1788 the town "Voted to raise eighty dollars for a town school, and that the selectmen divide the town into proper districts for a town school, and that no men send from one district to another."

In 1789, "Voted to raise twenty-four pounds for a town school."

In 1790, "Voted twenty-four pounds for a town school;" and in 1791 "thirty-five pounds were voted for the use of a school."

The law of 1791, which directed a tax to be assessed, amounting to seven thousand five hundred pounds sterling, upon the several towns, in proportion to their taxable property, gave a direct impulse to the common schools throughout the State.

Prior to the passage of the act of 1805 Dunbarton had been divided into three districts, each containing a school-house.

At that time the town was divided into three school districts, viz., Page's Corner, Centre and Montalona. Robert Hogg, a native of England, was the first teacher in town, and his many years' service gave him the sobriquet of Master Hogg.

The first school-house at the Centre stood just south of the present Congregational Church. It was a plain structure, twenty feet square and ceiled instead of plastered. The entrance was from the east; the fireplace was at the west end. Two rows of benches were on either side, and the master's desk stood near the entrance.

The only books used at that time were Dilworth's Spelling-Book, New Testament and Pike's Arithmetic. The branches taught were reading, writing and arithmetic. All copies for writing were set by the master, and only quill pens were used.

The town is at present divided into eleven school districts.

It is said that history repeats itself. The first representative to the General Court was Caleb Page, in 1775; the representative in 1875 was Caleb Page also, but though the same in name, not in person.

No town of like size can claim a more honorable record, and none a larger number of distinguished military men, than Dunbarton.

The most famous of all engaged in the service was Major Robert Rogers, a brief biography of whom will be found in the following:

Major Robert Rogers, who became famous as the commander of the New England corps of rangers, was the eldest son of James Rogers, and was born in Londonderry in 1727. He was fifteen when he came with his father to the woods of Starkstown, and nineteen when the family made their fortunate escape by night to Rumford.

The ranger corps of the "Seven Years' War" was mostly made up of Massachusetts and New Hampshire men. Major Rogers had with him his two brothers—Richard, who died at Fort William Henry of small pox; and James, a captain in the Provincial militia—William and Archibald Stark, Jr., Caleb Page, Nathaniel Martin, Adam Dickey and John McCurdy, all of Starkstown. Rogers served through the war, and died in England in 1800.

Another was John Stark, who received his first baptism of fire under the heroic Rogers, and who afterwards made the independence of the American colonies an accomplished fact upon the ever-historic battle-field of Bennington; Joseph Blanchard, the gallant colonel was another who led the New Hampshire forces to victory in many a contest during the Seven Years' War; Jeremiah Page, the surveyor of "Coos meadows," and afterward surveyor assistant for His Majesty's government, George H. Captain Alexander Todd; Richard Rogers, the ranger, and brother of the famous Robert,—these have written their names high on the roll of fame, and reflected honor on old Starkstown, the town they represented.

The following gives the names of officers and soldiers in the Indian and French War, 1750-60:

Captain John Stark (afterward General), Ensign Caleb Page, Major Robert Rogers, Captain Joseph Blanchard, Captain James Rogers, Captain Jonathan Bunkbank, Captain Richard Rogers, Lieutenant Nathaniel Bunkbank, Lieutenant John McCurdy, Lieutenant Abram Stark, Lieutenant William Stark, Stephen Law, Andrew Dickey, John Foster, James Andrews, James McCurdy, David Stinson (killed by the Indians at Stinson's Pond, in Rumney).

The following are the names of those who served in the Revolutionary War, from 1775 to 1783:

Major Caleb Stark, General John Stark, Colonel William Stark, Captain Nathaniel Bunkbank, Captain James Leach, Captain John Ferguson, Captain John Schile, Major John Mills, Rev. Walter Harris, Lieutenant Thomas Mills, Lieutenant William Tenney, John McCurdy, Daniel McCurdy, Caleb Page, (d), L. Barnard, Squire (colored), Sampson Moore (colored), James Stinson, William Holmes, Jotham Stearns, William Bailey, Tristram Bonnet, William Bond, George McAlpine, James McPherson, Alexander Hogg, Ebenezer Woodbury, Thomas Hart, John Damon, Stephen Ayer, Amos Barnes, John Wegan, Moses Heath, John Dodge, James McCurdy, Samuel Lord, Thomas Hammond, William Page, Jeremiah Barnes, Asa Putney, Aaron Putney, George Hogg, Thomas Gregg, Jonathan Smith, Benjamin Collins, John Blanchard, Abel Hadley, Samuel Preston, Ebenezer Chase, John Holmes, Nathaniel Martin, Noah Sargent, Archelus Perkins, Abel Sargent, Nathaniel Wheeler, William Wheeler, Winthrop Sargent.

The following enlisted in time of peace, 1810:

Robert Miller, Nathaniel Hemphill and Jonathan Goble.

The following enlisted in 1812-15:

Dr. James Stark, Thomas Ayer, Joseph Collins, John Miller, Benjamin Bailey, John Ayer, Robert Sunborn, Ira Barley, John Babson, John Ladd, Charles Hart.

The following were drafted in the War of 1812-15:

Thomas Lord, Isaac Nichols, William Stark, John Stark, John Washburn, Luther Clement, Archibald Stinson, Daniel Clement, Stephen Waldman, Jacob Ayer, Enoch Gile, Philip Kilder.

Daniel Stinson enlisted July 17, 1818, and E. Lyman Harris in 1820.

In 1846, in the war with Mexico, the following men entered the army from Dunbarton:

Benjamin Whipple (5d), Charles Clement, Simon Oily, Lieutenant Winslow (may), served in regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers.

From the following it will be seen that the town displayed a truly loyal spirit in defending our government and country, in its civil conflict of 1861 to 1865.

The following is a copy of the vote passed at annual town-meeting in the town of Dunbarton, March 14, 1865:

"Voted, that Silvanus Hayward be a committee to obtain the names of all the men this town has furnished for the army as volunteers, conscripts or substitutes, and bounties paid to each, date of enlistment, length of service, and all the facts in relation thereto, which may be of historical value to the town, that the same may be recorded in the records of the town."

The following is a report of committee appointed to procure and place on record the names and history of the soldiers furnished by the town of Dunbarton in the late war:

"It were indeed base for the town to refuse or neglect to put on permanent record the names of those of its own citizens who served in defense of our country in putting down the most senseless and infamous rebellion the world has ever known. Their names should be handed down with honor to the latest generation, that our children in years to come may read them with gratitude, and bless the names of those who gave their toll, and even, in many instances, their lives, to save them from the curse of barbarism and slavery.

"To this end, and that we ourselves may honor more definitely what the town has done, the following statement is presented.

"I have not been able to ascertain whether or not any townsman enlisted at the first call for seventy-five thousand men. Since that time the town has furnished in volunteers and substitutes one hundred and one different men, three of whom re-enlisted after serving out their time.

"According to the Adjutant-General's Report, this gives an excess of eight men over all required by the government. By the statement furnished the selectmen from the recruiting office, the excess is only one.

"The whole amount of money paid in town bounties has been twenty-four thousand eight hundred and ninety-five dollars, of which two thousand and twenty-two dollars has already been received back—eleven hundred dollars from the State and nine hundred and twenty-two dollars from the United States. From one to three thousand dollars (how much cannot yet be exactly told) will be paid back by the general government, and several thousand dollars are still claimed from the State, of receiving which there is some doubt. A large portion of this has been paid to substitutes picked up here and there, whose names I have not thought best to look up, as they can be of no interest to Dunbarton. The separate sums paid to Dunbarton volunteers I have given as shown by receipts in the hands of the selectmen. Two Dunbarton men, Henry S. Hammond and Frederick Waite, enlisted in Manchester, the former of whom served his time out and returned in haste. The latter died of measles at Newbern, N. C., April 20, 1863. The following volunteered and received no town bounty.

"Alonzo Barnard, enlisted in Second Regiment Sharpshooters, Company F, November, 1861, re-enlisted December, 1862, promoted to corporal; wounded May, 1864, and died soon after in the hospital at Philadelphia, Pa.

"Peter Barnes, enlisted in Second Regiment, Company D, November, 1863.

"Ira Briggs, enlisted in Sixth Regiment, Company I, November, 1861; discharged for disability, 1862.

"Wilbur F. Brem, enlisted in Second Regiment, Company B, June, 1861, captured at Gettysburg, July, 1863, and died of starvation in Andersonville prison, 1864.

"Henry M. Caldwell, captain of Company F, Second Regiment of Sharpshooters, enlisted September, 1861, died of fever at Edmonston, Va., July 12, 1862.

"Horace Caldwell, orderly sergeant, same company, enlisted November, 1861; discharged for disability, 1863.

"Jeremiah Cough, enlisted in Second Regiment of Sharpshooters, Company F, November, 1861, discharged for disability, 1862.

"William C. Flanders, enlisted in Fourth Regiment, Company I, September, 1861, discharged for disability January, 1862, afterwards re-enlisted and served three years.

"Peter Graydon, enlisted in Second Regiment, Company E, June, 1861.

"Simon G. Heath, enlisted in Second Regiment, Company E, June, 1861, re-enlisted January, 1862, died of disease at Oxford, 1863, in '62.

"David A. Jameson, enlisted in Second Regiment Sharpshooters, Company F, November, 1861, wounded June 8, 1864, and died in hospital at Baltimore, Md., June 26, 1864.

"William T. Marshall, enlisted in First Regiment Sharpshooters, Company E, September, 1861.

"Frank B. Mills, enlisted in Second Regiment Sharpshooters, Company F, November, 1861, wounded March, 1862, and discharged for disability May, 1862.

"George Noyes, enlisted in Second Regiment, Company C, June, 1861, discharged for disability July, 1864.

"Daniel Ordway, enlisted in Seventh Regiment, Company I, December, 1861.

"Moses E. Ordway, enlisted in First Regiment Sharpshooters, Company E, September, 1861, deserted and went west.

"Frank A. Putney, enlisted in First Regiment Sharpshooters, Company E, September, 1861.

"William A. Putney, enlisted for ninety days and served in the National Guard stationed at Portsmouth, N. H.

"Samuel A. Symonds, enlisted in Seventh Regiment, Company K, December, 1861, killed at Laurel Hill October 7, 1864.

"John W. Twiss, enlisted in Fourth Regiment, Company H, September, 1861.

"Henry A. Waite, enlisted in First Regiment Sharpshooters, Company E, September, 1861.

"Edward Everett Whipple, enlisted in Second Regiment Sharpshooters, Company E, November, 1861; died at home of consumption March 5, 1862.

"David H. Whipple, enlisted in Third Regiment, Company A, August, 1861, died of disease at Fort Royal July 1, 1862.

"J. Henry Whipple, enlisted in Second Regiment Sharpshooters, Company F, November, 1861, transferred to Invalid Corps July, 1862.

"Lewis Wood, enlisted in Second Regiment, Company E, June, 1861, re-enlisted January, 1862, promoted to corporal.

"These two received one hundred dollars town bounty each, viz:

"Bradford Bunham, enlisted in Sixteenth Regiment, Company D, October, 1862.

"David F. Heath, enlisted in Fourteenth Regiment, 1861.

"The following individuals received a town bounty of two hundred dollars each:

"Amos C. Bailey, enlisted in Fourteenth Regiment, Company H, September, 1862; wounded and discharged, 1863.

"James A. Baker, enlisted in Sixteenth Regiment, Company D, October, 1862, died of disease at Brashear City, La., April 11, 1864.

"James E. Barnard, enlisted in Ninth Regiment, Company K, August, 1862, discharged June 10, 1863.

"William E. Bantun, captain of Company H, Fourteenth Regiment, enlisted October, 1862, discharged September, 1863.

"Alonzo P. Chamberlain, enlisted in Fourteenth Regiment, Company H, September, 1862, promoted to corporal, wounded September, 1864.

"Moses K. Eaton, enlisted in Fourteenth Regiment, Company H, September, 1862, died of disease at Wilmington, N. C., September 21, 1863.

"John K. Emerson, enlisted in Fourteenth Regiment, Company H, September, 1862, promoted to corporal.

"Joseph H. Hooley, enlisted in Sixteenth Regiment, Company D, October, 1862.

"Marcus M. Holmes, sergeant in Fourteenth Regiment, Company H, September, 1862, promoted to lieutenant May, 1864.

"Marshall A. Merrill, enlisted in Tenth Regiment, Company C, September, 1862.

"Chester L. Page, enlisted in Fifteenth Regiment, Company E, November, 1862.

"Wilson F. Peck, enlisted in Fourteenth Regiment, Company H, September, 1862, promoted to corporal.

"Daniel R. Roberts, enlisted in Ninth Regiment, Company E, May, 1862.

"John B. Sanborn, enlisted in Tenth Regiment, Company H, September, 1862, captured at Fair Oaks, Va., October, 1864.

1 This is evidently a mistake, and should read Massachusetts.

* Andrew J. Stone, captain Company F, Ninth Regiment, enlisted August, 1862, died of wounds at Fredericksburg, Va., May 29, 1863.

* Benjamin Twiss, enlisted in Tenth Regiment, Company H, May, 1862, was captured in May, 1863, and after being nearly starved to death in prison, was released on parole the December following.

* Robert E. Wheeler, enlisted in Fourteenth Regiment, Company H September, 1862, promoted to corporal.

* Leonard Wilson, enlisted in Fourteenth Regiment, Company H, September, 1862, promoted to color-sergeant.

* Lasander Wyman, enlisted in Thirteenth Regiment, Company E, October, 1862.

* The following are those who received three hundred dollars bounty from the town.

* Timothy Clark, enlisted in Fifth Regiment, Company H, August, 1862.

* John D. Houlahan, enlisted in Fifth Regiment, Company D, August, 1862.

* Elbridge C. Brem, enlisted in Fourteenth Regiment, Company H, August, 1863, and is the only Dunbarton man who received five hundred-dollars town bounty.

* The following citizens of Dunbarton provided substitutes of their own accord, the town giving three hundred dollars to each for that purpose.

* Lemuel N. Bernard, Charles W. Brem, Isaac P. Offord, Alfred Coleby, William A. Elliott, Lauren P. Hadley, Aaron Lovel, Johnson C. McIntire, John C. Mills, John Mills, Nathan W. Wheeler, Jr.

* The labor of collecting the above statistics has not been small, and there are doubtless still many errors and omissions, but it is as accurate as the means at hand would allow.

* It has been to your committee a labor of love, for which he will feel amply rewarded if he shall thus have been the means of giving greater permanence to Dunbarton's roll of honor.

* Respectfully submitted,

* SILVANO HAYWARD, Committee.

"Dunbarton, N. H., April 7, 1866."

CHAPTER IV.

DUNBARTON—(Continued).

FEW towns have graduated from college and sent out into the world a more worthy list of sons than Dunbarton; fifty-one natives have graduated from colleges, as follows: Dartmouth 41; Wabash, Indiana, 3; Union, N. Y. 2; Harvard 2; Yale 1; Brown University 1; Auherst 1.

Among the ministerial graduates we find Isaac Garvin, Abraham Burnham, D.D., Hosea Wheeler, Amos W. Burnham, D.D., Thomas Jameson, Harrison C. Paige, Charles H. Marshall, Abraham Burnham, Leonard S. Parker, Ephraim O. Jameson, George A. Putnam, John P. Mills. Among the teachers, Samuel Burnham, William Parker, Prof. Caleb Mills, Prof. Charles G. Burnham, Joseph Gilson Hoyt, LL. D., Prof. Mark Bailey, William H. Burnham. Of journalists, William A. Putney, Henry M. Putney, John B. Mills.

In the legal profession, the names of Jeremiah Stinson, William Stark, John Burnham, John Whipple, John Jameson, John Tenney, James H. Paige, Walter Harris Tenney, Caleb Stark, Jr., Amos Hadley, Joseph M. Cavis, David B. Kimball, George H. Twiss, Wm. E. Buntin, Henry E. Burnham, Newton H. Wilson appear, while many others have made a good record in their chosen walks.

It will be pardonable if, out of the honored list of those who have won a name and position in their chosen walks, we give a brief sketch of a few.

PROF. MARK BAILEY was born in Dunbarton May 20th, 1827, and worked on his father's farm until he was fifteen years of age; he attended the academy at Pembroke, also at Danville, Vt., and was graduated at Dartmouth College in '49, in the same class with Judge Doe and the late Judge Stanley. His time was occupied winters by teaching, and his elocutionary gift was further cultivated by training received from the late Prof. William Russell, of Reed's Ferry, and afterwards he became a partner of Prof. Russell's son in teaching the art in New York City.

Prof. Bailey taught in the Andover, Bangor, Union and Princeton Seminaries, and in most of the New England colleges during the years 1852 and '53. In 1855 he was appointed instructor of elocution in Yale College, New Haven, Conn., a position still retained.

In 1863, Prof. Bailey lectured before The American Teachers' Association, and also prepared the "Introductory Treatise on Elocution" for the popular Hilliard readers; his lessons on "Sound and Sense" have awakened a large degree of interest in the art.

Several courses of lectures have been given before the public teachers at Washington, D. C., and at Cincinnati. In 1856, '60, and '61 he was active as a Republican, on the stump, for "Free Territories," the "Union" and the freeing of the slaves. Prof. Bailey has a delightful home, and has accomplished much in his work in developing good readers and speakers, is one of the best elocutionists in the country and retains a fond regard for his native town.

JOSEPH GIBSON HOYT, LL.D., was born in 1815; graduated at Yale College in 1839; he won a high reputation as a classical scholar and accurate teacher; was chancellor of Washington University, in the city of St. Louis, and in the midst of his splendid career he died suddenly, in 1862. He is spoken of as the most brilliant son of Dunbarton.

REV. GEORGE A. PUTNAM, born in 1835, has achieved renown in the clerical profession. Another worthy son is REV. EPHRAIM O. JAMESON, born January 23, 1832. He prepared for college in Gilmanton (N. H.) Academy, and graduated from Dartmouth in 1855, and from the Theological Seminary in Andover in 1858. He was ordained to the gospel ministry March 1, 1860, and installed pastor of the East Congregational Church in Concord, N. H. He resigned and was installed November 9, 1865, pastor of the Union Evangelical Church at Salisbury, Mass., where he labored until July, 1871, when he resigned and was installed as pastor of the First Church of Christ in Medway, Mass., in 1871. The esteem in which this pastor is held by the people, is evidenced by his continuous service of nearly fourteen years among them. In addition to his duties as pastor, Mr. Jameson does some literary work. He published, in 1844, a volume of family history, "The Cogswells in America." The "History of Medway, Mass.," he has ready for the press.

Mr. Jameson married, September 20, 1858, Miss Mary Cogswell, eldest daughter of the late Rev. William Cogswell, D.D., of Gilmanton, N. H. Mr. Jameson is now settled at Millis, Mass.

HENRY EBEN BURNHAM, son of Henry L. and Maria A. Burnham, was born in Dunbarton, N. H., Nov. 8, 1844; attended district school; prepared for college at Kimball Union Academy, Meriden, N. H.; graduated at Dartmouth College in the class of 1865; studied law in the offices of E. S. Cutter, Esq., and Judge Lewis W. Clark, in Manchester, N. H., and in the office of Minot & Mugridge, in Concord, N. H.; admitted to the bar in Merrimack County, April term, 1868; began the practice of law in the fall of 1868 at Manchester, and has continued in law practice at Manchester to the present time. He has been a partner for several years of Hon. David Cross, and is now in business with A. O. Brown, Esq., under the firm-name of Burnham & Brown.

He has represented one of the wards of Manchester in the Legislature two terms, has held the office of treasurer of the county of Hillsborough two years, and was judge of Probate for that county in 1876, 1877 and 1878.

Mr. Burnham is one of the most pleasing public speakers in the State. A thorough lawyer, popular, honored, and most highly esteemed by his host of friends. His poem at the Centennial of the town was a model in arrangement, word and sentiment, from which we quote at the opening of this town sketch.

He married Lizzie H. Patterson, daughter of John D. Patterson, Esq., of Manchester, October 22, 1874, and has three children.—Gertrude E., Alice M., and Edith D. Burnham.

COLONEL CARROLL D. WRIGHT, of Reading, Mass., was born in Dunbarton July 25, 1840. He is a son of Rev. Nathan R. Wright, a prominent Universalist clergyman, who was settled at different places in this State for many years, but has of late resided in Lynn, Mass. He attended the academies at Washington, Alstead and Chester, Vt., and in 1860 commenced the study of law in the office of the late Hon. William P. Wheeler, of Keene, continuing the same, subsequently, with Erastus Worthington, of Dedham, Mass., and Tolman Willey, of Boston. In August, 1862, while on a visit to Keene, and before completing his legal studies, he enlisted as a private in Company C, Fourteenth New Hampshire Volunteers, but was commissioned second lieutenant before leaving for the seat of war. He filled various responsible positions in the service; was appointed adjutant of his regiment in the fall of 1863, and was assistant adjutant-general in Louisiana and during Sheridan's campaign in the Shenandoah Valley, at the close of which campaign he was commissioned colonel of his regiment, but resigned in the following spring on account of ill health. He subsequently resumed the study of the law, and was admitted to the bar at Keene in October, 1865. Recurring ill health prevented his engagement in active practice until the fall of 1867, when he opened an office in Boston, and soon succeeded in establishing a profitable business, making his residence in the town of Reading, which has been his home up to the present time.

In 1871, Colonel Wright was elected to the Massachusetts Senate by the Republicans of the Sixth Middlesex District, and was re-elected the following year, serving with ability as chairman of the committees on insurance and military affairs, and secretary of the judiciary committee. In 1873 he was appointed by Governor Washburn chief of the State Bureau of Statistics of Labor, which position he still holds, and to the work of which office he has devoted his attention since that time, winning a reputation as a thorough statistician, excelled by that of no man in America.

Colonel Wright was supervisor of the federal census in 1880 for the State of Massachusetts, performing his work with characteristic fullness and accuracy. He prepared for the Census Bureau an exhaustive special report upon "The Factory System of the United States," visiting the principal factory centres of this country and of Europe in securing the information necessary to its thorough preparation. He also prepared, under authority of the Boston City Council, a large volume embodying the social, commercial and industrial statistics of that city, which was issued some two years since.

Colonel Wright is a graceful and eloquent speaker, and won distinction as a popular lecturer upon war and other topics before entering upon his statistical work. He was prominently brought forward as a candidate for Congress by the young Republicans of his district in 1876, and received an earnest support in the nominating convention, which was only overcome by the peculiar influences brought to bear in the interests of a wealthier aspirant. In December, 1879, he delivered a course of lectures on social topics before the Lowell Institute, in Boston, and in 1881 was chosen university lecturer on the factory system at Harvard College.

After the passage of the measure by Congress, in the winter of 1885, instituting the United States Bureau of Labor, Colonel Wright was appointed the commissioner, and has rendered service of great and lasting value in inaugurating the initiative work of this valuable agency to aid the industrial and laboring interests of the country.

HENRY LARCOM BURNHAM.—The only State Senator the town has furnished is Henry Larcom Burnham, son of Bradford and Hannah Dane (Whipple) Burnham, who was born in Dunbarton November 25, 1814. He attended the district school, summer and winter terms, until twelve years of age; then only winter terms for six years. He commenced teaching when eighteen years of age, and continued teaching some part of each year for thirty years. He generally taught winter terms and was engaged in farming the rest of the year.

He was a student at Blanchard Academy, at Pembroke, N. H., one and a half terms; was employed in land surveying more or less for forty-five years; was a justice of the peace nearly forty years, writing a large number of deeds, wills and other legal instruments; has held nearly all of the various town offices; represented the town in the House of Representatives in 1858; was on the Board of County Commissioners from 1860 to 1863; a member of the State Senate in 1864 and 1865, and was sheriff of the county of Merrimack from 1867 to 1872.

In March, 1842, Mr. Burnham married Maria A. Bailey, only daughter of Josiah Bailey, late of Dunbarton. Their only child, Henry E. Burnham, is a lawyer in Manchester, N. H.

By reason of failing health, Mr. and Mrs. Burnham left the farm at Dunbarton nearly four years since and now reside with their son in Manchester.

The scenery from our hills is extensive and grand, the air pure and invigorating, and those who have gone out to fight the battle of life in other parts of the country and amid other surroundings ever remember their old ancestral home with kindly feelings of love and delight to return and revisit the scenes of their childhood, which can never, never be forgotten.

In the hurried preparation of this sketch we acknowledge the kindly aid of Rev. Mr. Bouton, also of Rev. Mr. Hopkins, who have proved themselves friends in need, and for our many omissions we ask the reader's indulgence.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

MAJOR CALEB STARK.

On the 20th of August 1758, Captain John Stark, of His Britannic Majesty's corps of American rangers, while on a furlough from the army, was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Caleb Page, Esq., who also held His Majesty's commission as captain of provincial militia, and was one of the original grantees of Starkstown (now known as Dunbarton, N. H.)

In the spring of 1759, his furlough having expired, and a new company having been enlisted, the hardy soldier returned to his post at Fort Edward, prepared to perform his part in the next campaign, which, under the vigorous direction of the Earl of Chatham, was destined to reduce Louisburg and Quebec, and open the way to the entire conquest of Canada.

His wife was left at home with her father, one of the most prominent and wealthy pioneers of the settlement, under whose hospitable roof the subject of this notice was born December 3, 1759, during the absence of his father. The capitulation of Canada, in 1760, terminated the war in the north, and the provincial troops returned to their homes.

Soon after these events, there being no immediate prospect of active service, Captain Stark resigned his commission in the army and withdrew with his wife to his paternal acres at Derryfield (now Manchester), N. H.

The good Captain Page, entertaining a strong affection for the child who had been born under his roof, and had received his Christian name, was desirous of retaining and adopting him. To this proposition his father made no objection, and he remained under the indulgent care of his maternal grandfather until June 16, 1775.¹

The best works of the time were procured for his improvement, and he obtained a good education for that period. The two principal books were Fenning's Dictionary and Salmon's Historical Grammar, which are still preserved in the family.

The tragedy enacted at Lexington on the 19th of April, 1775, having aroused the martial spirit of New England, Captain Stark abandoned his domestic occupations, and hastened to the theatre of action, in the vicinity of Boston, followed by most of the old corps of rangers who had served under his orders during the previous war, and others from the province who were eager to prove their devotion to the cause of liberty.

The daring acts of valor which had so frequently distinguished the career of the veteran Stark, combined with his military experience and success, left him no competitor in the minds of his countrymen-in-arms, by whom he was unanimously elected colonel, and in a few hours a regiment of nearly nine hundred men was enlisted for one year.

These proceedings were soon known in the northern settlements, and his son, then under sixteen years of age, whose memoir we are writing, made an earnest application to his grand-parent for permission to repair to the camp at Medford. The latter remonstrated with him on account of his extreme youth, saying, that although his father was familiar with scenes of strife and carnage, the camp was not a fit place for one of his years; and there the matter for a short time rested. Not, however, dissuaded by these representations, the young man resolved to go at all events; and, having secretly collected his clothing in a valise, without the knowledge of the family, and before daylight on the morning of June 16, 1775, he mounted a horse which had been given him by his grandfather, and, with a musket on his shoulder, started for the American camp.

After traveling a few miles he was joined by another horseman. The stranger was a tall, well-formed, fine-looking person, wearing the undress uniform of a British officer. He inquired, politely, of our young adventurer who he was, and where he was going, and upon being informed that he was proceeding to the camp at Medford, to join his father, Colonel Stark, the stranger said: "You are, then, the son of my old comrade. Your father and I were fellow-soldiers for more than five years. I am traveling in the same direction, and we will keep company."

¹ This interest in the child of his adoption continued unabated until the close of his life, and in the division of his large estate his favorite grandson was assigned an equal portion with his own children.

Calo Stark

The stranger was the celebrated Major Robert Rogers, of the "French War" notoriety. As they journeyed on, the major insisted on defraying all the road expenses, and toward evening took his leave, transmitting to his old associate-in-arms, Colonel Stark, a message soliciting an interview at a tavern in Medford.

Upon the arrival of our youthful patriot at the regimental headquarters, his father's first greeting was: "Well, son, what are you here for? You should have remained at home." The answer was: "I can handle a musket, and have come to try my fortune as a volunteer." "Very well," said the colonel; and, addressing Captain George Reid, he continued: "take him to your quarters; to-morrow may be a busy day. After that we will see what can be done with him."

The morrow, in truth, was a "busy day." A force, composed of detachments from the Massachusetts and Connecticut lines, under the command of Colonel William Prescott, moved on the evening of the 16th of June, with instructions to fortify Bunker Hill; but, misapprehending their orders, proceeded about one mile farther, and commenced an intrenchment on Breed's Hill, a lesser eminence, which was commanded by the guns of the opposite battery on Copp's Hill, in Boston, as well as exposed to the fire of the ships-of-war at anchor in the harbor. At daylight on the 17th a furious cannonade opened upon the half-finished "redoubt," and soon after, in compliance with an order from General Ward, two hundred men were detached by Colonel Stark to support the parties employed on that rude field-work. Later in the day (about 2 P.M.) another order was received, directing him to march with his whole regiment to oppose the enemy, who were landing in great force at Morton's Point.

As previously stated, the New Hampshire line, under Colonel Stark, formed the left wing of the American force on this ever-memorable occasion, and gallantly repelled the reiterated attacks of some of the choicest battalions of the British light infantry.

Our young volunteer proceeded with the company under Captain George Reid (to whose care he had been so summarily assigned by his father the previous evening) to the position occupied by the regiment at the rail fence, extending from the redoubt to the beach of Mystic River, where an opportunity was soon afforded for testing the skill and facility with which he could "handle a musket" in his country's cause. Side by side with some of the veteran rangers of the old French War, he stood at his post on that eventful afternoon; and when their ammunition was nearly expended, and the occupation of the redoubt by the British marines and grenadiers had decided the fate of the day, he returned, unharmed, to Winter Hill, where the regiment subsequently intrenched.

On this pleasant eminence, a few miles from the city, were located the handsome residences of several wealthy Loyalists, whose opinions having rendered them obnoxious to the American party, on the commencement of hostilities, had abandoned their dwellings, and taken refuge in Boston. Among them was a gentleman named Royal, who, on retiring to the city, had left his lady with a family of beautiful and accomplished daughters, in possession of his abode. The mansion being conveniently situated for his headquarters, Colonel Stark called upon the family, and proposed, if agreeable to them, his occupancy of a few rooms for that purpose, to which Madame Royal most cheerfully assented, being well aware that the presence of an officer of his rank would afford her family and premises the best protection against any possible insult or encroachment, not only from those under his immediate command, but also from other detachments of the patriot forces. His proposal was made, not with the tone of authority, but rather as the request of a private individual; and it is almost unnecessary to add that, during the intercourse which ensued, the family were always treated by Colonel Stark and his officers with the utmost consideration and respect.

During the remainder of this campaign our young soldier was acquiring, as a cadet in Captain Reid's company, the principles and practice of the military discipline of the day; and when not actually engaged with his new duties, many of his leisure hours were naturally passed at the headquarters of his father, where his association with the refined and well-educated ladies of the house could not but exert, at his age, the most favorable influence over the formation of his habits and manners; and when referring, in after-years, to this period of his life, the subject of this memoir has frequently acknowledged the advantages derived from the intercourse it was then his privilege to hold with this amiable and interesting family.

On the reorganization of the army, early in the ¹We have reason to suppose that the object of Major Rogers' visit to America, in 1775, was to sound public opinion and ascertain the relative strength of the opposing parties, to enable him, in the choice of service, to make the best personal arrangement which circumstances would permit. At this interview, as we have been informed, Colonel Stark assured him that no profers of rank or wealth could induce him to abandon the cause of his oppressed country. "I have," he said, "taken up arms in her defense and, God willing, I will never lay them down until she has become a free and independent nation." The veteran lived nearly forty years after this object of his most fervent wishes and labours had in the field of honor had been accomplished.

²During the action a man was killed at his side, and it was reported to his father that he had fallen.

succeeding year (1776), young Stark received his first commission as ensign in Captain George Reid's company, and proceeded with the regiment, which constituted a portion of Sullivan's brigade, to New York, and thence, in May, to Canada, where our New Hampshire troops, under that able and resolute general, rendered important service in checking the advance of Sir Guy Carleton, and covering the retreat of the force, which had invaded that province the preceding season under Montgomery and Arnold.

The retrograde movement of the army, always discouraging to the young soldier, was rendered more so on this occasion by the accompaniment of a dangerous and loathsome malady, the small-pox, which, as inoculation was not in general use in those days, rapidly spread among the officers and men, converting the camp into a vast hospital. Among the victims of this contagious disease was the adjutant of the First New Hampshire Regiment, who died at Chimney Point in July; and Ensign Stark, who had been previously performing, during a portion of the campaign, the duties of quartermaster, although then under seventeen years of age, was deemed qualified to succeed to the vacancy, being already distinguished for his energy of character and promptness of action, as well as for the proficiency attained in all details of military discipline and duty. Promotion to the grade of lieutenant accompanied this appointment.

After the retirement of Sir Guy Carleton to winter-quarters in Canada, the regiment, with others from the Northern Department, marched to reinforce the dispirited remnant of the main army, under General Washington, in Pennsylvania. Cheerfully sharing all the hardships and privations which were endured by the army at this gloomiest period of our Revolutionary struggle, Adjutant Stark was also an active participator in the brilliant operations at Trenton and Princeton, with which the campaign was so successfully closed in New Jersey.

In January, 1777, the army being cantoned on the high lands about Morristown, the First New Hampshire Regiment was dismissed, the term of enlistment of the men having expired. In company with his father, young Stark was now enabled to revisit his native State, where the next few months were employed co-operating with the other officers of the regiment in raising recruits for the ensuing campaign.

Several junior officers having been promoted to the rank of brigadier over the heads of some of the veteran colonels of the army, Colonel Stark could not, consistently, with a decent self-respect, continue to retain a commission which compelled him to serve under officers of less experience than his own. On his resignation, the command of the regiment was assigned to Colonel Joseph Cilley, an officer of undoubted courage and firmness, in every respect qualified to succeed him; and Lieutenant Stark, having been reappointed adjutant, repaired with the troops to Ticonderoga in the spring of 1777.

Those who are conversant with military affairs will readily appreciate the important bearing of the adjutant's duties on the discipline and efficiency of the regiment. It is no disparagement to the individual courage and conduct of the officers and men composing the same to remark that the steadiness and precision with which all the evolutions of this regiment were performed, when in the presence of the enemy on various occasions during this campaign, afforded satisfactory evidence of the faithfulness with which the duties of his office were discharged by the subject of this memoir.

After the evacuation of Ticonderoga, and the retreat of the American army to the North River, General Schuyler was superseded in the command of the Northern Department by General Gates. Young Stark happened to be present, on duty at the headquarters of that general,¹ when the intelligence of the Bennington success was received by express, and being permitted to accompany a small party sent to open a communication with General Stark, he was soon enabled to congratulate his father, personally, on that brilliant achievement; and after a few days' absence, rejoined his regiment, which was the first to come into action on the 19th of September.

In the action of October 7, 1777, he was wounded in the left arm. Soon after the capitulation of Saratoga, General Stark, having received from Congress the commission of brigadier-general, which had been justly due to him the year previous, selected his son for his aid-de-camp. During the years 1778 and 1781 he discharged the duties of aid-de-camp, brigade major and adjutant-general of the Northern Department, then commanded by General Stark. He was a good writer for one of his years, and from the period of his appointment as aid-de-camp wrote the letters of the general's official correspondence. In the campaign in Rhode Island, in 1779, he acted as aid-de-camp to his father, in which capacity he was present at the battle of Springfield, in 1780.

¹ While General Gates was rejoicing at the reception of tidings announcing the first success in the north, an aid-de-camp mentioned to him that a son of General Stark was awaiting an interview with a message from Colonel Cilley. "Is he?" said Gates, "call him in." When he appeared the General said, "I am glad to see you, my boy. Your father has opened the way for us nobly. In less than two months we shall capture Burgoyne's army. Don't you wish to see your father?" The adjutant replied that "if his regimental duties would permit, he should be glad to visit him." "I will find an officer," said Gates, "to perform your duties, and you may go with the party I shall dispatch to Bennington, and convey a message from me to your father. I want the artillery he has taken for the brush I soon expect to have with Burgoyne." He proceeded with the party. The horses along their route were deserted by their owners, but abounded in materials for good cheer. From the residences of inactive Tories they obtained ample supplies for themselves and horses during their march. After the surrender he accompanied General Stark on a visit to General Gates, and at his headquarters was introduced to all the British officers of rank who were there assembled as the guests of the American general-in-chief of the northern army. He said that Major Arkland and General Burgoyne were, in personal appearance, two of the best-proportioned and handsomest men of their age he had ever seen. General Burgoyne held a long conversation with General Stark, apart from the other company, on the subject of the French War, of which the former then stated that he intended to write a history.

After the close of the Revolutionary War his attention was directed to mercantile pursuits,—first, at Haverhill, Mass., and afterwards at Dunbarton, N. H. He was for a time concerned in navigation, and owned several vessels.

In 1805-6 he became an importing merchant at Boston, in the English and East India trade. In the course of his commercial transactions he visited the West Indies in 1798 and Great Britain in 1810, where he spent a year, making purchases for himself and other merchants of Boston.

While in England he traveled through a large portion of the kingdom, and his observations furnished an interesting journal. He also kept a journal during his residence in the West Indies.

After the declaration of war, in 1812, he closed his mercantile affairs at Boston and purchased an establishment which a company had commenced at Pembroke, N. H., which he furnished with machinery for manufacturing cotton. To this he devoted his attention until 1830, when, having disposed of his interest in the concern, he proceeded to Ohio to prosecute his family's claims to lands granted for military services, which, in 1837, after a vexatious course of lawsuits, were recovered. He died upon his estate in Oxford township, Tuscarawas County, Ohio, August 26, 1838, aged seventy-eight years, eight months and twenty-three days.

In 1787 he married Sarah, daughter of Dr. William McKinstry, formerly of Taunton, Mass., who was, in 1776, appointed surgeon-general of the British hospitals at Boston. She died September 11, 1839, aged seventy-two. Of their eleven children (five sons and six daughters), five are now living. Major Stark's remains lie in his family cemetery at Dunbarton. His monument bears the following inscription:

"In Memory of
MAJOR CALVIN STARK, Eldest Son of Major-General John Stark,

under whose command he served his country in the War of the American Independence. He entered the army at the age of sixteen, as quartermaster of First New Hampshire Regiment, was afterwards adjutant of the same, and subsequently brigade-major and adjutant to General Stark. He was present at the battle of Bunker's Hill in 1775, at Trenton in 1776, at Princeton, and in the actions of September 19th and October 7, 1777, which immediately preceded the surrender of Burgoyne.

*Born December 3, 1759, died August 26, 1838."

In person, Major Stark was rather above the middle height, of a slight but muscular frame, with strong features, deep-set, keen, blue eyes and a prominent forehead. He much resembled his father in personal appearance. His characteristics were indomitable courage and perseverance, united with coolness and self-possession, which never deserted him on any emergency.¹

He was the youngest survivor of the action who appeared to witness the ceremony of laying the corner-stone of the Bunker Hill Monument by the Marquis de Lafayette, by whom he was recognized at once as a fellow-soldier.

During his tour to New Hampshire the illustrious guest of the nation and his suite were entertained at his mansion in Pembroke.

Major Stark was one of the twelve Revolutionary veterans who stood by General Jackson at the ceremony of his first inauguration as President of the United States, and was personally acquainted with all the Presidents from General Washington to General Harrison, inclusive.

¹ PIERCE DE PIERRE—Died, on Sunday evening last, at his residence, near New Comerstown, in this county, Major Caleb Stark of New Hampshire. Though confident that on this occasion ample justice can not be done to the memory of Major Stark, yet, in silence on the subject would not be tolerated by that portion of the community who know his public services and his worth.

² He was the son of General Stark, of New Hampshire, the hero of Bennington. At the age of fifteen he entered the ranks of the Revolution, and commenced his career at the battle of Bunker's Hill as a volunteer in his father's regiment. He remained in service until the close of the war, which found him a frigate-major. In the engagements which resulted in the surrender of General Burgoyne he was adjutant of the regiment commanded by the brave Otho D. Colley, grandfather of him who fell in the duel last winter at Washington.

³ At the close of the war he returned to private life. He afterwards was extensively engaged as an importing merchant at Boston, and subsequently as a manufacturer of cottons at Pembroke, N. H. He owned and cultivated a large farm, and contributed the results of many agricultural experiments to the public journals.

⁴ He possessed a highly-cultivated and active mind, but the improvement of which he suffered no opportunity to pass neglected.

⁵ His memory was strong, and his stores of information, derived from travel or extensive reading, were ever at command. He had the reputation of being one of the best military critics of the nation, and was often consulted, especially during the War of 1812, when our army had but few experienced officers.

⁶ He came to Ohio to prosecute the claims of his family to lands granted to General Stark for military services, in which, after a tedious litigation, he was successful. It was his intention, after he had succeeded in recovering this valuable estate, to have returned to his family, in New Hampshire, but sudden indisposition and death prevented its being carried out.

⁷ Major Stark, in all his acts and movements, exhibited the prompt decision and energy of the soldier. Indeed, his whole course appeared to be influenced by the habits acquired while fighting the battles of freedom in the war of the Revolution. At the season of life when habits are generally formed, his education was acquired in the tented field, in the laborious marches, combat marches and privations of that fearful struggle, devoting his moments of leisure to useful study, and in his duties abroad, pressing forward with indomitable resolution and confidence in himself.

⁸ From the effects of this habitual perseverance resulted, it is supposed, the immediate cause of his death. He had attended court at New Philadelphia on the 16th of August, and on the 17th, which was a very warm day, rode a hard traveling horse from Dover to his residence—twenty-three miles—in three hours. On the following week he was the soldiers of the New Hampshire line, his testimony secured persons to all whose cases he represented at the War Department. Most of the veteran applicants who sought his assistance had some reminiscence of their military days to relate. One of them, Captain Daniel Moore, spoke of the sinking of a flat boat in the middle of the North River, in which himself, Major Stark, their horses and the crewman were the only passengers. "While I was considering," said the captain, "what expense I should make to the general for losing his loss, the boys' presence of mind and activity effected arrangements which enabled us all, with the horses, to reach the shore in safety, although in a well-soaked condition."⁹

¹ When the person act of 1830-2 was passed, Major Stark (as former brigadier-major) being personally known to all the officers and most of attacked with a disease in the head and suspension of his faculties, which, with some intermissions, continued until his death, on Sunday evening last, at the age of seventy-eight years, eight months and twenty-three days." Copied from his papers at Boston, 31, 1838.

Caleb Stark, Jr., son of Major Caleb Stark, was born in Dunbarton, N. H., November 24, 1804; died February 1, 1864. He was buried in the family cemetery, near the old Stark mansion, a most beautiful resting-place for the dead.

He was a graduate of Harvard College of the class of 1823. After completing his collegiate course he entered the Law School in Connecticut, where he remained about one year and then entered the law-office of Charles G. Haines, Esq., in New York City, where he finished his legal studies and was admitted as attorney-at-law. He soon after went to Ohio and opened an office in the city of Cincinnati. The Western climate did not agree with his constitution, and his health becoming impaired, he closed his business there and returned to his native State and opened an office in Concord. Finding the practice of law unsuited to his quiet, unobtrusive disposition and domestic habits, and being under no pecuniary necessity to continue the practice for a livelihood, he abandoned his profession and returned to the old family homestead in Dunbarton, where he passed the remainder of his days in retirement.

Although not engaged in active business, he was in no sense an idle man; he represented his township in the State Legislature from 1834 to 1837, and was always an earnest and strenuous advocate of the Democratic principles, which he had adopted at his first entrance into public life.

He was an extensive reader, a close observer of men and of the events of life and a deep thinker, and was one of the finest classical scholars of his class, a writer of great ability and a liberal contributor to the political and literary journals of his day. He is the author of several works of great historical value; among them is the "History of Dunbarton," and a valuable memoir of his illustrious grandfather, General John Stark, whose victory over the British and their Hessian and Indian allies at Bennington, Vt., in 1777, made his "one of the few immortal names that were not born to die."

The subject of this sketch inherited from his ancestors their patriotism and love of country.

In private life he was justly and highly esteemed for his genial and social qualities; for the poor and distressed his sympathies were ever alive, and his heart and purse were ever open for their relief. No appeal was ever made in vain to his benevolence; he was most emphatically what Pope calls "the noblest work of God,—an honest man."

COLONEL JOHN STINSON.¹

As early as 1751 we find the name of Captain William Stinson, the first settler in the south westerly part of Dunbarton, associated with the earliest settlement and records of the town, and whose original estate, in part, is now in the possession of a grandson by lineal descent.

Captain Stinson was born in Ireland March 15, 1725, his parents, with other families, having removed from Scotland to escape the persecutions there endured, and which following them, they took passage for the New World, where, on arrival, they went to Londonderry, N. H., where others of their people had settled.

From this rugged ancestry came the subject of our sketch, Colonel John Stinson, who was the third son of James and Janette (Albison) Stinson, and born at Dunbarton November 13, 1789.

James Stinson, the father, was a cousin to the Captain Stinson mentioned, a man connected with the town's early history, as the records indicate, and known for his well-grounded and industrious character and habits. He inherited many of the Scottish traits and characteristics, and particularly was it noted in speech, while the reputation of the people from the land of Wallace and Bruce for honesty, uprightness and integrity of character were prominently upheld in all his walks and associations. A farmer by profession and occupation, his estate was cleared, cultivated and improved, and the home which had been established by his industry and economy, and in which he delighted, witnessed his closing days and was handed down to his son John, of whom we write.

At the age of twenty-nine years John Stinson was married to his cousin, Betsey Stinson, the ceremony being performed February 18, 1810, by Rev. Walter Harris, D.D. From this union of hearts three children were born,—two daughters and one son. Mary Jane, the eldest daughter, married David Story, a representative farmer of the town. At her decease, and in the course of time, Mr. Story married the remaining daughter, Nancy Chase, who died August 12, 1865. The son, John Chase, completed his education at the High School in town, and subsequently went to Gloucester City, N. J., where he found employment in the wood, lumber, hardware and coal business, and afterwards was admitted to the firm, where he still continues in business.

¹ By William H. Stinson.

Wm. H. Mason

Chas Stinson

On May 2, 1867, he married Alice B. Cogill, of Gloucester City.

Colonel Stinson was a thrifty farmer, active in local affairs, a true Democrat and a town officer for many years; was selectman in 1846-47, and town clerk in 1824, serving continuously in the latter office from 1833 to 1845; and was commissioned colonel of the Ninth Regiment New Hampshire Militia, which position he filled with much acceptance. The stirring times incident to old State musters and trainings had much interest to him. His truly hospitable home was ever free and inviting, and his fund of wit, humor and good-cheer rendered it a tempting place to call or visit; while his wife was a most excellent lady, and noted for those endearing traits of character which place woman high in our reverence and devotion.

Colonel Stinson survived his wife several years, and died at the old homestead where his life had been spent, and where his son had provided for his every want, on August 13, 1874, in his eighty-fifth year, respected and beloved by all who knew him.

CAPTAIN CHARLES STINSON.

The subject of this sketch was born April 18, 1800, in Dunbarton, N. H. He was grandson of William (1) Stinson, one of the early settlers of this town under the Masonian grant of 1751; was born of Scottish parents in Ireland, March 15, 1725. From that country, while young, he emigrated with his father to Londonderry, N. H. In the year 1751-52 he commenced a settlement in Starkstown (afterward Dunbarton), where for a time he lived alone in a log cabin, in which, on one occasion, he received as a visitor the Rev. David McGregore. "Not having a table," says the historian of Londonderry, "nor anything that would answer as a better substitute, he was obliged to make use of a basket, turned up." The Rev. Mr. McGregore, in asking a blessing, pertinently implored that his host might be "blessed in his basket and in his store." This blessing was literally fulfilled, as Mr. Stinson became one of the most wealthy persons in the vicinity.

He was prominent in the settlement of the township, and filled with credit many offices of trust and importance, and by industry and economy became one of the most substantial freeholders within twenty miles of his residence.

William Stinson was married to Agnes Caldwell, March 26, 1754, and died August 21, 1803. She was born June 17, 1734, and died July 23, 1818. By this union there were twelve children.

William (2) Stinson, Jr., second son of William Stinson, Sr., born March 4, 1762, married Jane Cochran, of New Boston, N. H., who was born in 1776. He was an excellent farmer and intelligent man. He was often employed in town affairs, was liberal and hospitable, especially to the poor. In him they found a friend.

His wife was a superior woman, who looked well to the ways of her household, and their house was one of the most agreeable visiting-places in town. From this union there were five children. William Stinson, Jr., died April 8, 1822. Jane C. Stinson died April 28, 1820.

Captain Charles (3) Stinson was the oldest son of William Stinson, Jr. At an early age he displayed a love for farming, and made progress in the district school. At Bradford Academy, Massachusetts, he ultimately acquired what education it was his privilege to obtain. When eighteen years of age he was appointed commander of Dow's Troop. He was an active officer during the celebrated Godstown muster, where he obtained the title that followed him through life. He was well known in this section of the State for his good judgment and his sound integrity.

As a farmer he was active, and naturally of a strong constitution, he was able to carry on a great amount of work, and as a reward of his industry, he added to his original inheritance a good property.

As a resident of Dunbarton, N. H., he was active and prominent in its affairs. He was county commissioner, selectman, treasurer and twice elected to the Legislature. In 1867 he sold his large estate and moved to Godstown, where he spent the remainder of his days in quietness and attending to his business affairs.

Captain Charles Stinson married Susan, daughter of Robert and Prudence Cochran, of Sharon, Vt., May 15, 1831. Susan was born October 27, 1803, and died March 23, 1838. He married, second, Mary Ann, daughter of Moses and Sally Poore, of Godstown, N. H., May 29, 1839, born August 28, 1811.

Captain Charles Stinson died August 8, 1878. There were three children by the first union, and one by the second.

Children.—Jane Stinson, born October 5, 1833, married Wallace Caldwell, Ryfield, Mass., July 15, 1858.

Letitia C. Stinson, born March 9, 1835, married John M. Parker, of Godstown, November 20, 1854.

Susan C. Stinson, born October 22, 1837, married George Byron Moore, November 29, 1860. Mr. Moore died of pneumonia April 11, 1872. On May 17, 1877, she married Judge Edwin S. Jones, of Minneapolis, Minn., where she now resides.

Mary A. Stinson, born August 1, 1841, married Charles A. Pillsbury, September 13, 1866, of Minneapolis, Minn., where she now resides.

OLIVER BAILEY.

Oliver Bailey was one of the independent farmers and substantial men who constitute the chief glory of a State.

He was born in 1797, in Dunbarton, N. H., and died in 1880, eighty-three years old.

His father, Captain Oliver Bailey, a man of great vigor and thrift, was descended from the Scotch who migrated to the north of Ireland to better their fortunes, and thence to Londonderry, N. H., in the New World. His mother, Mary Thompson, was of sterling English blood and worth, from Charlestown, Mass. She was eight years old when the battle of Bunker Hill was fought, and saw, from their house-top, and remembered well, that famous struggle.

Born of this thrifty and hardy stock, young Oliver inherited a vigorous constitution, a fearless, active spirit, good brains to see and plan for himself, and the best muscle and nerve to execute his resolute will.

Brought up on wholesome farmer's fare, he seemed to thrive best on the hard work and rough sports which added skill and self-reliance to his growing strength, till, at opening manhood, he yielded to none in the field or the wrestling-ring, with the scythe or the drumsticks.

He had little schooling, but learned to read the almanac and the Bible, and had an apt use, always, of the wise sayings of "Poor Richard" and of Solomon; learned to write a note, to keep his accounts and to figure in his head better than most can with pen or pencil, depending mainly, through life, on which the poet Burns prized above all learning.

"A spark of Nature's fire,"

In person, he was of medium stature and weight, with a large head, broad, high forehead, sandy hair and grey-blue eyes, with broad shoulders, a stout, straight back, strong, lithe limbs and a hand-grip from which nothing could escape, — a body, indeed, which seemed modeled to give him the utmost strength and staying power, consistent with his natural quickness and ease of action.

This favored by nature and home discipline, he set out at twenty-one for himself, with no capital but a few acres of tough, rocky land, but partly paid for, and an irrepressible ambition to earn his own independence in the world.

By his untiring toil he soon cleared new fields, dug some of the rocks out of the old ones, built huge stone-walls, a small house and big barns, and was ready for a home of his own. Much of his prosperity and happiness he made sure of by marrying wisely. In 1821, at the age of twenty-four, he married Jane Mills, but seventeen, daughter of James and Jane Fulton Mills, of his native town.

She was a wise and winning helpmate, comely in person, even-tempered and amiable, blessed with equal good sense and good nature, and, though so young, well trained in household duties, apt at work and willing beyond her strength. Of this union four children were born, — a daughter, who died in infancy, and three sons, yet living, to bear grateful witness to her never-failing love and worth. In her unselfish devotion to her family she sacrificed, ere many years, her health, and life itself at the age of forty-five. Yet, in sickness and in health, she was ever the good angel of the home and the neighborhood.

In 1850, Oliver Bailey married Mary D. Ryder, daughter of Ezekiel and Betsy Ryder, of Dunbarton. She had been trained in the best school for her new duties, — in that of an enlightened farmer's home. She was unusually well educated in the schools, too; had been a teacher and enriched her house with good books, pictures and flowers, and to the essential virtues of a good wife she added the rarer grace of a good stepmother.

Of this union one gifted son was born, — George, who died at eighteen, in the full spring and blossom of a promising manhood.

By the hardest work and the most careful saving on the smaller farm, Oliver Bailey was able to buy the large, old homestead when his father, Captain Oliver Bailey, had outlived his three-score years and ten.

This larger place, with its many hay-fields, natural runs, great meadows, large pastures and wood-lots, gave him a better chance to prove his superior management and to keep a large stock.

His judgment, at sight, of the weight and worth of cattle was extraordinarily accurate. This gift, with a persuasive tongue in his head, enabled him to buy and sell to advantage. With plenty of hay and barn-room for the winter, and mountain-pastures for summer, he was able to hold his stock over, and so to take advantage of the changing market, buying at the lowest and selling at higher prices. No very small part of his gains at this time came from the growth and exchange of cattle. His wise policy was to enrich the farm also by selling less hay and grain and more fatted cattle.

He had a sleight-of-hand at all kinds of work, and could get more out of his boys and hired help than most farmers; for he led them himself, giving them more than enough to do to keep up, and his restless forethought kept ahead of any execution in plans for the morrow, so that no odd hour or stormy day caught him without some bit of side-work to fill the time.

But it was not driving work and shrewd bargains alone which made him comparatively rich; it was the continual saving and wise investing of his small earnings for so many years. He bought only what he could not get on well without, and could pay down for. He put his name to no man's paper. He took no stock in wild land speculations or railroad promises, however tempting. He invested his money in growing property, or loaned it on good mortgages, or put it into the soundest banks, rather than into those paying the most interest.

Hence he lost none of the principal, and as he rarely disturbed the interest, his small sums naturally cumulated in the long years to a goodly amount for a Dunbarton farmer. But he was thus saving only to be liberal in a larger way. To his second son, Mark, when sixteen years old, he gave the choice of a farm at twenty-one or a college education, and he gladly took his chances in the schools. In 1859, when only sixty-two, he divided the great farm between his oldest son, Oliver (who inherits with his father's name much of his stirring ambition and talent to get on in the world), and his youngest son, James M. (who has a happy genius for living easier), and bought a small farm at Bow Mills, near Concord, built a nice house on it and deeded this place to his wife; here he spent the rest of his days, "merely playing farmer," as he used to say.

Alvan Bunker

At his home he was hospitable to all comers. A good liver, though a light eater himself and temperate in all things save only in hard work.

He never had a doctor for himself till late in life, when he suffered greatly with the asthma. Though a private citizen, always devoted to "minding his own business," he was in his own way public-spirited and patriotic, interested in town, State and national affairs.

In politics he was a staunch Webster Whig and Lincoln Republican. In religion he held fast to the teachings of his early church, the Congregationalist.

So marked a man had his faults, of course, but they were mostly the excesses of his robust virtues.

Some will ask, Was such a life a success? Was so much toil and so little pleasure worth the while? Doubtless there is a golden mean between work and play, but of the two extremes his, surely, was the nobler one. And the simple truth is, he took more pleasure in earning than in spending; and solid enjoyment in seeing his well-tilled lands, his full barns and wood-sheds, his sleek, fat cattle, and his comfortable home. He enjoyed the manly sense of independence his honestly-earned dollars gave him while living; and the generous satisfaction at last of leaving them to his widow and sons to help "keep the wolf from their doors." At the ripe old age of eighty-three, with his mind clear apparently as in manhood's prime, he died as he had long lived, in the assured hope of a happier hereafter.

His body rests in his family burial lot in Dunbarton, where he had erected a plain granite monument, —a fit symbol of his solid and lasting work and character.

HISTORY OF FRANKLIN.

CHAPTER I.

Geographical—The First Settlements—Names of Pioneers—Indian Depredations—Manufacturing Interests—The First Saw-Mill—Erected in 1764—The First Grist-Mill—The Morrison Mills—The Granite Mill—The Winnepesaukee Paper Company—A. W. Sulloway—Mills, &c.

THE town of Franklin, lies in the northeastern part of the county, and is bounded as follows:

On the North and East, by Hill, Belknap Co. and Northfield; on the South, by Boscawen; and on the West by Salisbury and Andover.

The territory embraced within the bounds of the present town of Franklin originally comprised a portion of the towns of Sanbornton, Salisbury, Andover and Northfield.

The first settlement of the town was made in 1748, near the Webster place, where a fort was built and occupied for several months. To Philip Call and his son Stephen is ascribed the honor of having been the first permanent settlers within the bounds of the present town, at that time a portion of Salisbury. Nathaniel Malven and Sinkler Bean were pioneers in the western part of the town. In 1749 Malven, with his wife and three children, were captured by the Indians and taken to Canada, where they remained several years. The few pioneers were in constant dread of the Indians who roamed through this section, sparing neither women nor children from their murderous assaults. The wife of Philip Call was killed by the Indians in August, 1754, her husband witnessing the deed while secreted unarméd near by. It is said that her daughter-in-law, with her grandchild, escaped from the savages by concealment in the chimney. Peter and John Bowen settled on the "Burleigh place" in about 1748.

John and Ezekiel Webster, cousins, settled in the town in 1759 or '60. The latter was the father of Ezekiel and Daniel Webster. Ephraim Collins was also one of the pioneers. He settled in about 1752, and his grave-stone is the earliest in the lower graveyard, near the Webster place. Jacob Morrill, Tristan Quimby and Benjamin Sanborn were among the early settlers at the Lower village. "In 1767 there came from Epping, James Cate, Sr., whose wife had been saving seeds from their best apples all the winter before, for the orchard they would plant in their new home! They settled on the late Edward Wyatt place, in Franklin. Some of the apple-trees from those seeds were still remaining a few years since." (Runnels.)

The settlement at what is now known as the Upper village consisted of only one house and a grist-mill until after the Revolution.

Ebenezer Eastman, of honored memory, was the founder of the village. He came here when only twenty-seven years of age; was a man of property, ability and great energy. He built a saw-mill, kept the village tavern, conducted a farm and was extensively engaged in lumbering. His homestead was the "Webster Home." He died in 1833. A few years later the village received an enterprising spirit in the person of Captain Ebenezer Blanchard, who came from Northfield. He was a man of great energy and contributed largely in advancing the material interests of the town. He was the father of Mrs. Stephen Kenrick.

Among other settlers were James and Isaac Proctor and James Garland.

The Manufacturing Interests.—The first mill in this town was the old "town-mill," of the original town of Sanbornton. By the provisions of the first Masonian charter, "twenty acres (says Mr. Runnels) were to be assigned in some suitable place for a saw-mill, and whoever should build the first mill within three years might own the land and have the privilege of sawing the logs of share-owners and other inhabitants there, to the halves for the term of ten years next after the said mill first starts." If none should appear to build thus within three years, the owners of shares were to undertake to build the mill at their expense, and put it under such regulations that all the inhabitants might be "seasonably and reasonably served with boards and other timber sawed" for building purposes.¹

The town-mill site was established on Salmon

¹For much of the early history of this town, early record history, Revolutionary history, &c., the reader is referred to the histories of Sanbornton, Northfield, Salisbury and Andover (elsewhere in this volume), of which this town formed a portion until 1828.

Brook. First action of the grantees was April 21, 1763,—meeting held at Joseph Hoyt's, in Stratham, when it was voted that a saw-mill be built and maintained on that first established site, "agreeable to Charter;" that it be completed by October 10th; that "whoever builds it shall have £1000, old tenner, and the mill priviledg." At a meeting, June 6th, the privileges of mill-builder were accorded to Daniel Sanborn, under the oversight of the selectmen. Time extended to November 20th; but even then the mill had not been built, as February 6, 1764, "Voted not to release Daniel Sanborn, Jun., from his obligation to build a mill," which, accordingly, had been completed that spring, and was soon after carried away by a freshet. Hence the proprietors voted, July 9, 1764, to give Daniel Sanborn, Jr., five hundred pounds, old tenor, "to build a saw-mill in the rove of that which he lost;" also that a grist-mill be built by the proprietors within fifteen months. But afterwards, October 8th, at a meeting in Exeter, permission was given Mr. Sanborn "to build his saw-mill in Sanbornton, on Winepsocke River, ner the brige [thus changing the location], provided he build a grist-mill, with or near the saw-mill, within the specified time."

Tradition supplies an account of this first mill, on Salmon Brook, in what is now Franklin, as follows: That the foundation had been laid the fall before,—at site of bridge leading to the late Albert G. Morrison house,—without a dam, trees being simply felled from one ledge over to the other; that Edward Shaw drew up the mill-irons from Exeter on a hand-sled, in March, only to find the foundation all washed away, and finally, that by June the mill thus "built between the ledges" was completed and went into operation, and that a log was actually sawn before the fatal freshet alluded to, so the mill-site was claimed!

After standing neglected for several years, a Mr. Adams built the first permanent mill on or a little above this original town-mill site. It was, however, early purchased and enlarged by Mr. Bradbury Morrison, and being extensively used by three generations in his family,—himself, several of his sons, and recently by his grandson, the late Albert G.—the whole group has ever been known and will be for years to come, as the Morrison Mills. Another saw-mill, with a grist-mill, tended by Bradbury Morrison, Sr., and a blacksmith's and trip-hammer shop for the ingenious Ebenezer Morrison, stood some twenty rods below the main dam, carried by water conveyed from the same by a sluice-way. Nathan S. Morrison and Captain Levi Thompson also had an interest in this mill and shop, which were burned in 1836. Forty rods below these last, on the flat, Albert G. Morrison, with his uncles, Bradbury, Jr., and George W., had also a planing and shingle-mill, which were likewise burned about 1850.

At the main dam, the first planing-mill in this part of the country was erected by William Greene, its first starting being "celebrated," it is said, by large potations of potato whiskey. This was swept away by the February freshet of 1821. Of late years there have been a saw-mill above, and a shingle, lath and planing-mill below the bridge and original site, the latter built by A. G. Morrison between 1843 and 1850. The present occupants and chief owners of the whole are Giles & Knapp. The privilege must always remain a valuable one, as the fall is from seventy-five to one hundred feet between the upper mill and the Penigewasset, at which it is not surprising that "immense quantities of lumber" were rafted from these mills in earlier times, when they were surrounded by "the heaviest and finest pine timber."

When Jeremiah Sanborn settled at Franklin Falls, in 1778, the Folsom saw-mill was standing, erected, probably, in about 1772. This was at the upper bridge.

The first mill (says Mr. Runnels) was soon carried down by a freshet, and Mr. Sanborn rebuilt on the Northfield side, where one of his old sills was, till very recently, to be seen imbedded in the wall just above the bridge. This mill, with an added grist-mill, was again transferred to the Sanbornton side, though extending over the edge of the river for some little distance, and its site was occupied, after 1819, by the Jonathan Sanborn fulling or clothing-mill, which was itself succeeded by the old "red mill," two stories high, for making satinnet and cotton yarn. This, after lying unused for several years, was burned. The same site was later occupied by the Sleeper Bros., door, sash and blind manufacturers.

THE GRANITE MILL was erected in 1822 by John Cavender, Thomas Baker, John Smith, John and Charles Tappen and John Long at Franklin Falls. This was burned in about 1855.

THE FRANKLIN MILLS (wooden), erected in 1863, gave a new impetus to the village. These mills are now leased by M. T. Stevens.

THE WINNIPISCOGEE PAPER COMPANY,¹ The so-called "Upper Dam," at Franklin Falls, was built about 1852 for a large hosiery-mill, two stories high, of stone, which was erected the same year, and operated by the Franklin Mills Company, also by the Nesmith Brothers (George W. and John N., of Lowell, Mass.), associated with K. O. Peabody. The boarding-houses—two less in number than at present—were built the next season. This mill was only run three or four years, and then burned. Its site is now occupied by one of the pulp-mills of the Winnipisogee Paper Company, which was first built in 1868 for the grinding of poplar-wood, and was built over in 1879.

A. W. SULLOWAY, MANUFACTURER OF HOSEERY.—This mill was built in 1864 by Frank H. Daniels and A. W. Sulloway. In the spring of 1865 it was started under the name of Sulloway & Daniell and ran two sets of cards, making Shakers' socks. In 1867 one set cards were added and run on Shaker flannel and hosiery. In 1869, Mr. Daniell sold his interest to Mr. Sulloway. In 1871 he ceased making flannel, and has made hosiery altogether ever since. In 1873 was added a fourth set of cards. The mill now manufactures three hundred dozens per day men's and boys' socks. Employs ninety-five to one hundred hands.

¹ See biography of Warren F. Dunell.

For history of manufacturing interests of Walter Aiken, see biography.

CHAPTER II. FRANKLIN—(Continued).

CIVIL HISTORY.

Petition of Ebenezer Eastman and others for Incorporation of Town—The Movement Opposed by Andover, Salisbury, Sanbornton and Northfield—Report of Legislative Committee—Incorporation of Town—First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected

In 1825 a petition was presented to the Legislature, signed by Ebenezer Eastman and others, praying for the organization of a new town from portions of Andover, Salisbury, Sanbornton and Northfield. This was met with opposition from various persons in the towns, whose territory it was sought to curtail, and if not a long, certainly a sharp contest ensued. During a portion of the time the subject was under discussion the old towns employed as counsel E. X. Woodbury, while Parker Noyes guarded the interests of the embryo town. Hon. George W. Nesmith also was interested in the organization of the new town.

The following is a copy of the report of the committee appointed by the Legislature to act on the subject:

"To the Honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives:

"The undersigned, a committee appointed on the petition of Ebenezer Eastman and others, praying for the incorporation of a new town, to be formed out of parts of the town of Salisbury, Andover, Sanbornton and Northfield

"Knox,

"That they met at Salisbury on the twenty-ninth of September last, for the purpose, as required by the vote of the House, of 'viewing the ground from which the contemplated new town is to be taken, and hearing all parties interested.' From causes not within the control of the committee the several towns had not been notified in the manner required by the vote of the House. Having, however, been informed of the intended meeting of the committee, they attended by their respective agents, who all expressed their readiness, at that time, to proceed with the examination. The committee accordingly accompanied the agent of the petitioners and the respective town agents to such parts of the several towns and villages as the parties in interest thought proper to point out. In their various examinations and in the several hearings of the different agents and individuals interested the committee spent four days. The result of this very full investigation was an unanimous opinion, on the part of the committee, that the prayer of the petitioners is reasonable and ought to be granted. With respect to the several towns, out of which it is proposed that the new town should be taken, it may be stated, as the result of the committee's inquiries on this point, that those parts of Salisbury, Sanbornton and Northfield which are without the limits of the new town are generally opposed to the division of their territory; that the people of Andover are divided on the question, those who reside near the present centre of that town being for the most part opposed to the incorporation of a new town, and those in the western and eastern parts in favor of it; and that, of the inhabitants of the proposed new town itself, those belonging to Salisbury and Andover are in favor of its incorporation, those in Northfield are divided and those in Sanbornton opposed to it.

"The objections on the part of those towns are very fully stated in the remonstrances, and other papers, which accompany this report. Some of these objections appeared to the committee not to be sustained by the facts in the case, others they have endeavored to obviate by the limits which they have assigned to the new town, and of the remainder, such of them as have any real weight are, in their opinion, greatly overbalanced by other and more important considerations in favor of the new town. That inconvenience should result to some individuals to be expected, as a matter of course, in all proposed changes of this kind. But, in the present instance, the individuals injuriously affected are few in number, and the injury which they will sustain inconsiderable, compared with the advantages which will accrue from the proposed change. Within the limits proposed for the new town there is already a population equal to that of the average number given by more than one-half of the towns in the State. The number of rateable polls, as near as the committee could ascertain, is 187, of which number 75 belong to Salisbury, 48 to Sanbornton, 37 to Northfield and 27 to Andover. There have recently been erected on the banks of the Wampussogee river, within the limits of the proposed new town, a paper mill and cotton manufactory, both of which are now in full and successful operation. From the great falls in this and other streams in that vicinity and the inexhaustible supply of water, there is reason to believe that very extensive manufacturing establishments and other works requiring water-power will, at no distant period, be erected at or near this spot, in addition to those already there. Even without these contemplated improvements, which would of course bring along with them a considerable increase of inhabitants, the number at this time living within the proposed limits, and the amount of business transacted at the villages along the river, seem to entitle them to the ordinary privilege of being incorporated into a town by themselves.

"Many of the petitioners live at a great distance from the centre of business in their respective towns, and have to go over rough roads to attend the annual and other public town meetings. Their local situation, on the contrary, is such that they come easily and frequently together in the course of business at the village near the bridge. At this village a handsome church has been lately built, in which, besides the accommodation which it furnishes as a place of religious worship, the public meetings of the new town may be conveniently held. It may be here added, while speaking of public establishments, that a well-endowed literary institution, 'Noyes School,' has within a few years been founded within the proposed limits of the new town, and that, within the same limits, there is also a Post-Office. The objection that the new town, if created, will be divided by the Pemigewasset, which passes through it, is in a great measure obviated by the fact that there is a good bridge over this stream near the meeting-house, and that the roads are so arranged as to meet generally at this point. It was said that this bridge might be swept away by the sudden rise of the stream, and this is certainly true, but it is equally true that this bridge is too much used, both by people in the vicinity and by travellers from a distance, to leave any doubt as to its being kept constantly in repair. With some improvements on the Merrimack, who have been long contemplated, that river would be navigable up to the junction of the Wampussogee with the Pemigewasset, which takes place near the centre of the contemplated new town, about seventeen miles from Concord. In that event the new town would be situated at the head of navigation on the Merrimack. It was urged on the part of Northfield that the creation of the new town would deprive them of so many of their inhabitants as not to leave them the number of rateable polls required by the Constitution to entitle towns to a representation to the General Court. This objection would have had much influence with the committee if they had found it well supported by the facts in the case. But the certificate of the town clerk of Northfield shows that the check-lists, used at the annual meeting in that town in March, 1827, contained the names of 265 voters. From the same certificate it appears that of this number, only thirty-seven voters live within the proposed limits of the new town, which would leave, after the separation, two hundred and twenty-eight legal voters in Northfield. Much was also said before the committee respecting the injury which would result from the division of farms and the destruction of school districts in the old towns by the incorporation of the new. That something of this kind should occur in every new arrangement of town lines is perhaps inevitable. In the present instance the committee have endeavored, as far as possible, to avoid any inconvenience of this kind, and they have so far succeeded in this object as to divide very few farms at all; and none, so far as they are informed, in a manner particularly injurious to the owner. The old school-districts in the several towns are also left, for the most part, without change, and where any alteration will become necessary in any of them, it can, without difficulty, be effected.

"The committee, therefore, recommended that a new town be incorporated, to be formed from parts of the old towns of Sanbornton, Salisbury, Northfield and Andover. A survey of the territory included within the limits of the proposed new town, as designated by the committee, has been made under their direction and accompanies this report.

"All which is respectfully submitted,

"CAREY KYLER,
"WILLIAM PIERCE, JR.
"AMY MERRELL.

"January 31, 1826."

The towns of Salisbury, Andover, Sanbornton and Northfield then engaged E. X. Woodbury and petitioned the Legislature to be put back. Parker Noyes protested to the proceedings, as the town had not been notified. A committee reported in favor of the petitioners. Noyes then moved for an order of notice and postponement, which he secured. The following is a copy of the report of the committee on towns and parishes for 1828:

"The standing Committee on Towns and Parishes, having had under their consideration the petition of Dearborn Sanderson and others, praying for a new town to be taken from the towns of Salisbury, Andover, Sanbornton and Northfield, and also sundry memorials and remonstrances against the petitions and other papers connected therewith,

RESOLVED

"That notice of the pendency of said petition has been published, pursuant to the order of the House, at the last session, and that the petitioners, as well as the corporations and individuals opposed to the prayer of said petition, have presented to the committee such testimony as seemed to them to have a bearing upon the merits of the case.

"As a result of their inquiries the committee offer for the consideration of the House the following:

"Statement of Facts

"The original petition is signed by two hundred and ten voters, and the petition which was referred to the committee, at the present session, is signed by thirty voters, making two hundred and forty petitioners in the whole, all, or nearly all of whom reside within the limits of the proposed new town.

"The number of voters in Salisbury is	425
in Andover	125
in Sanbornton	730
in Northfield	288
"The proposed new town would include within its limits, from Salisbury	108
from Andover	35
from Sanbornton	88
from Northfield	49
Making in all	280

voters to be included within the limits of the new town, of whom 18 remonstrate against the prayer of the petition, and leaving the old towns, in the event of incorporation of the new one, the following number of voters, viz:

Salisbury	317
Andover	90
Sanbornton	641
Northfield	239

"The whole amount of State Tax, assessed in Salisbury in 1828, is	$416.00
Assessed on inhabitants within the proposed limits	201.20
State Tax in Andover, 1828	215.00
Assessed on inhabitants within proposed limits	100.00
State Tax in Sanbornton, 1828	478.00

Assessed on inhabitants in proposed limits	200.00
State Tax in Northfield in 1828	200.00
Assessed on inhabitants in proposed limits	75.00

"From this statement it appears that the valuation of the inhabitants, to be taken from Salisbury and Andover, is rather below, while that of the inhabitants of Sanbornton and Northfield is somewhat above the average valuation of all the inhabitants of the respective towns.

"From the examination made by the committee they are satisfied that the territory pointed out as the limits of the new town contains a population and resources which will entitle it to a respectable ranking among the towns in New Hampshire. That this population is increasing, appears from the fact, that in January, 1826, the whole number of voters within the proposed limits was 187, showing an increase of nearly one-fourth part in the number of voters in less than three years.

"The committee are also satisfied that the inhabitants, living within the territory, would be accommodated by granting the prayer of the petition. Most of them have a distance to travel in order to attend the public meetings, which tends much to diminish, in respect to them, the value of the elective franchise. Many of the petitioners in Salisbury live at a distance of five miles, and some of them a greater distance from the place of town meeting. And all those comprised within the new town could much more conveniently attend at its proposed centre. The same remark will apply to Andover, except that the average saving in travel would be somewhat more. Some of the petitioners in Sanbornton live in the immediate vicinity of the proposed new centre, and most of them nearer to it than to the place of public meeting in that town. In Northfield is a considerable settlement, connected with the manufacturing establishments, on the banks of the Wampussagee. This is within a mile of the proposed new centre, and a little over four miles from the place of meeting in Northfield.

"In regard to the equality of the roads and the expense of making and repairing, the committee do not find any essential difference between the old towns and those parts proposed to be taken out. It was objected, on the part of Andover, that by dividing that town, in the manner proposed by the petitioners, an expensive road in the northeast part would be left to be supported by that town, whereas it ought to be supported by that portion of Andover which has petitioned to be set off. It did not appear to the committee, however, that the average expense of repairing roads in that part of Andover to be comprised in the new town, is not equal to the expense of repairing roads in other parts of the new town, and but this, among other reasons, a majority of the committee is opposed to extending the line in Andover over the limits pointed out by the petitioners.

"The fact being established that the proposed territory contains a population and resources which entitle the prayer of the petitioners to a respectful hearing, and that there are no inconveniences which they at present suffer which ought to be redressed, the committee have proceeded to the only remaining inquiry which seemed to them necessary to be made, in order to come to a correct result as to the subject matter referred to them—viz:—

"Whether these inconveniences can be removed, and the same grievances redressed consistently with a due regard to the interests and rights of the towns or individuals to be affected by the measure proposed.

"It is proper here to remark, that the prayer of the petition is opposed by the towns of Salisbury, Sanbornton and Northfield, that it is not probable that any arrangement, in regard to lines, would separate the inhabitants of these towns living out of the proposed limits, to a division. The town of Andover, also, opposes the petition, unless the line of the new town should extend north to New Chester, in which event, as the committee were informed, that town would make no further opposition.

"The objections made by the several towns were urged by their agents, who were before the committee, with much zeal and ability. The committee have attentively considered these objections and the testimony in their support, and upon a view of the whole subject, a majority of the committee is of the opinion that the objections to the proposed measure are not sufficient to counterbalance the obvious benefits which would result to the petitioners by the establishment of a new town.

"The objections urged by the towns were,

"1. The general objection against all enactments on town lines. This objection, in the opinion of the committee, ought to prevail only when a town is subject to a loss, either in influence or resources, and when a party seeking a redress for grievances can find a different remedy. In this case, however, the committee have the satisfaction of believing that a new town may be incorporated and the old towns may still remain, as they have always been, highly respectable in point of numbers, character and resources of their inhabitants. The committee is further of opinion that to constitute a new town it is necessary to take a portion of each of the towns mentioned.

"2. Another objection used was, 'That school districts would be delineated by the lines marked out by the petitioners.'

"It may be here remarked, that in Salisbury and Andover no school district is affected by the new town. In regard to Sanbornton and Northfield, the proposed line divides school districts, and in some places, of course, inconveniently. But from a careful examination of the testimony in this particular, the committee is of the opinion that the proposed line in these towns is as little an inconvenience as any that could well be adopted. In regard to this objection, and others of a similar nature, the committee may with much propriety make use of the language of a highly respectable committee, who, after viewing the ground and hearing the parties, made their report to the House of Representatives in June, 1826:

"'Much was said,' say that committee, 'respecting the injury that would result from the division of farms and destruction of school districts in the old towns by the incorporation of the new. That something of this kind should occur in every new arrangement of town lines is perhaps inevitable. In the present instance the committee have endeavored, as far as possible, to avoid any inconvenience of this kind, and they have so far succeeded in this object as to divide very few farms at all, and none, so far as they are informed, in a manner particularly injurious to the owner. The old school districts, in the several towns, are left for the most part without change, and where any alteration will become necessary, in any of them, it can, without difficulty, be effected.'

"It should be remarked, that in their investigations the committee have confined themselves to the limits defined by the viewing committee in 1826.

"The committee report for the consideration of the House the following resolution:

"Resolved, That it is expedient to establish a new town to be taken from Salisbury, Andover, Sanbornton and Northfield, and including in its limits the bounds pointed out by the petitioners, and that the petitioners have leave to bring in a bill for that purpose.

"LEVI CHAMBERS, for the Committee.

"December 4, 1825."

The town was incorporated as Franklin December 24, 1828.

What pertains to the setting off of the southwest portion of the original town, to form the town of Franklin (says Rev. Mr. Runnels, in an account of the action of Sanbornton in relation to this controversy), may now be safely treated as a matter of history; but in alluding to the later division, or attempts at division, we shall be treading upon delicate ground, and shall therefore confine ourselves almost exclusively to the recorded action of the town from time to time. The Sanbornton people were no doubt honest in their earliest strenuous opposition, though we now smile at the arguments used, the fallacy of some of which, valid in their day, is being proved by the lapse of time.

In town-meeting, March 9, 1825, the subject of "setting off the southwest corner of town" first came up in the warrant, "by petition of Ebenezer Eastman and others, to form a new town." A "polling of the House" resulted in "yeas, 4; nays, 402." At the same time a similar movement for the "northwest part of the town, on petition of Ebenezer Kimball and others," was disposed of in nearly as summary a way,— "nays, 379; yeas, 7."

Next, from the Stratford Gazette of October 22, 1825, we obtain this document,—

"The inhabitants of the southwest part of this town presented to the committee appointed by the Legislature to lay out a new town, agreeably to the petition of Ebenezer Eastman and others, the following remonstrance:

"The undersigned, inhabitants of the town of Sanbornton, remonstrance against being set off into a new town, agreeable to the petition of E. Eastman and others, and represent that they are not subject to any great 'inconvenience,' nor do they suffer any 'privation of civil and religious privileges by reason of their distance from the public building' in this town, but, on the contrary, believe their civil and religious privileges are now far superior to any they might expect to enjoy in the new town.

"That they now live in a town in which there is and long has been an uncommon harmony between the different religious societies; neither do they believe that that harmony, civil or religious, will be increased by their becoming members of the new town, divided as this will be by a large river, extending nine miles through the centre of the town, impassable but at one place, their neighborhoods divided in like manner, the wants of its several parts unknown to the other in consequence of this division, but have good reason to believe that it would produce an unfriendly disposition and rivalry between its several parts, not only in their civil and fiscal concerns, but might likewise engender the seeds of hatred and animosity in their religious duties.

"That the town in which they now live has a school and parsonage fund amounting to more than $8000, the interest of which is annually appropriated towards the support of our common schools and all of our religious societies. Remove us from these advantages, and you place us in a town having no funds; and instead of conferring a favor, you impose upon us a tax annually exceeding our proportion of a $1000 State tax. Remove us, and you deprive us of a rich legacy, fostered and enlarged by the parental [?] [obscure] and tender care of our fathers, and left by them not only for the instruction of our children in their civil and political duties, but by it the vital principles of piety and evangelic knowledge are enforced, which are the only sure foundations of our present, and the only hope of our future happiness.

"That they now live in a town mostly surrounded by mountains created from the foundation of the world, which require no parambulation, admit of no doubt and subject us to no lawsuits respecting their authenticity. Remove us, and you subject eight towns and eight different sets of schoolmen to the expense of parambulating over twenty-five miles of a zigzag line on this new town where we now have natural boundaries.

"That we have located and accommodated our farms to our several wants and circumstances. Remove us, and you divide them, and leave a part in another town, to be taxed as non-resident, depriving our children, in addition to the loss of our school and parsonage money, of the benefit of the school tax of that part of our property, and giving it to strangers. Remove us, and you divide our school districts, subjecting those who now live near the school-house to travel more than two miles to attend school; you will locate many of us farther from our public building; you will augment our taxes; you will give us a great share of bridges; you will subject us to the maintenance of several miles of highway, in addition to our common highway tax; and we never have been able to find a precedent, and cannot discover the least semblance of justice in taking off a large section of this town against their unanimous wish, augmenting their taxes at least one-third, depriving us of our school and parsonage money, dividing and cutting up our farms, destroying our school districts, and placing us under the arbitrary will of strangers, and we cannot willingly consent to these sacrifices without we can perceive a far greater advantage to some section of this town than merely gratifying the ambition and pride of some half a dozen individuals. (Signed)

James Clark.	Budbury Morrison
Samuel Fellows.	Sarah W. Clark
Abraham Cross.	Deborah Sanborn, Jr.
David Clark, Jr.	William Robertson
Deborah Sanborn.	Abraham Sanborn.
Jonathan Sanborn, Jr.	Andrew Sanborn
George C. Ward.	John Cate.
Tristram Sanborn.	Jonathan Prescott, Jr.
David Thompson	Jeremiah French.
Nicholas Clark.	Samuel Prescott.
Abraham Sanborn, Jr.	David Doherty.
Jonathan Prescott.	Joseph Thompson.
William Thompson.	John Thompson
David Gage.	Levi Thompson.
Nathan S. Morrison.	Joseph Sanborn."
Ebenezer Morrison.

It would appear from the foregoing that the legal voters in that part of Sanbornton which is now Franklin were then, almost to a man, opposed to the division; while it must be remembered that Mr. Eastman and the few others who petitioned in its favor were living upon the west side of the river, in what was then Salisbury village. Accordingly, for three years longer, while efforts were continued for the formation of the new town, the dismemberment of its own territory was as steadily opposed by the town of Sanbornton. Even "at the last moment," November 3, 1828, it was voted, on the motion, "that part of the town petitioned for be set off for the formation of a new town," yeas, twenty; nays, three hundred and eighty; and Charles Gilman, Esq., was chosen as an agent to oppose the petition of Dearborn Sanborn and others (for new town) before the committee of the Legislature on towns and incorporations.

When, however, at the next annual meeting, March 11, 1829, the town of Franklin had been constituted, there was a display of will, pertinacity and almost obstinacy on the part of the Sanbornton citizens, which seems hardly justifiable, in that they "would do nothing" in respect to "the proportion of the town funds claimed by Franklin, the town papers of Sanbornton belonging to Franklin, or the annexing to most convenient schools districts of those disannexed by the forming of the new town."

The controversy continued for several years, as in March, 1832, a special agent was chosen—Nathaniel Holmes, Esq.—to make arrangement with the town of Franklin and to obtain able counsel, whether the town of Sanbornton is holden to pay to Franklin any of its fund; and if holden, to make further arrangements and lay the matter again before the town. At a meeting in October (same year) it was voted that the town agent and selectmen "obtain further counsel whether Franklin has a legal claim upon Sanbornton for a proportion of the School and Parsonage Fund." The above agent never reported to the town (as appears from records); but at a special meeting, January 20, 1834, an action having been brought by the town of Franklin against Sanbornton to recover part of the funds belonging to said Sanbornton, Charles Lane, Esq., was appointed agent to attend to the suit, with instructions to continue the action so long as any probability of gaining it may exist; or otherwise, that he have power to settle the action and agree on a committee to say "how much of the town funds Franklin shall have, and what part of the poor it shall take."

The Sanbornton fathers of that day were honest in the belief that no other town could justly claim the funds which were left to their town; hence they were sincere in resisting the claims of Franklin. But it was ultimately decided against them, as in 1836, of the "School and Parsonage Fund," which had amounted to $6658.78, $633.53 was paid to Franklin as "the share belonging to those persons who had been set off," leaving a balance of $6025.25.

CHAPTER III.

FRANKLIN (Continued).

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

The Congregational Church—Unitarian Church—First Baptist Church—Christian Baptist Church—Free Baptist Church—Methodist Church—Roman Catholic Church.

The First Unitarian Congregational Society of Franklin was organized the 6th of December, 1879. "For the purpose of establishing and sustaining the worship of God in public and social religious services, and to secure for ourselves and our children the benefits of religious instruction, and as a means of illustrating and extending rational and practical Christianity."

In the second article of the constitution the objects of the society are declared to be "the cultivation and diffusion of useful knowledge, the promotion of fraternal justice, and of a serious and intelligent public spirit, and the earnest endeavor to supply a centre and home of religious sympathy and of all good influences to those who seek and need our fellowship."

On the occasion of the organization of the society the constitution was signed by the following persons: Rev. J. B. Harrison, Mrs. W. F. Daniell, Mrs. R. G. Burleigh, A. W. Sulloway, W. F. Daniell, Daniel Barnard, Charles H. Gould, R. G. Burleigh, G. B. Wheeler, F. H. Daniell, R. E. Bean, E. B. S. Sanborn. The following persons were elected officers of the society: Clerk, George B. Wheeler; Treasurer, Alexis Proctor; Pastor, Rev. J. B. Harrison; Trustees, Warren F. Daniell, Daniel Barnard, A. W. Sulloway, E. B. S. Sanborn, R. G. Burleigh, Alexis Proctor, Frank H. Chapman.

The board of trustees was constituted a committee to procure plans and consider other matters pertaining to the building of a church.

At a meeting of the trustees, held April 30th, a communication was read by the pastor informing the trustees that Mrs. Persis Smith, of St. Louis, had offered the society the sum of four thousand dollars toward the erection of a church and one thousand toward building a parsonage, provided that a suitable building lot be given for the parsonage and a suitable home erected thereon within a reasonable time.

At a meeting of the society, April 30, 1881, it was voted that the trustees proceed to build a church, to cost not less than ten thousand dollars. The trustees were also authorized to build a parsonage as soon as the necessary funds could be raised. At the annual meeting of the society, December 31, 1881, A. W. Sulloway reported that a parsonage had been built at a cost, exclusive of the lot, which had been given by W. F. Daniell, of two thousand five hundred dollars, of which amount Mrs. Smith had contributed one thousand dollars and Mr. Sulloway had advanced the remaining fifteen hundred until the society could repay it. During the year the society received from its most generous benefactor, Mrs. Smith, three thousand dollars toward the foundation of a library, to which was added five hundred dollars contributed by members of the society, and two hundred and fifty dollars, a gift from an unknown friend, through Hutchins & Wheeler, of Boston. At a meeting of trustees, held November 24, 1882, the building committee reported that the church was completed at a cost, including two thousand two hundred and fifty dollars paid for the land, of sixteen thousand one hundred and twenty dollars.

¹ See appendix.

² By Rev. E. S. Elder.

It was voted that the church be dedicated December 19th, and that Rev. M. J. Savage be invited to preach the dedication sermon. The clerk of the society was instructed to acknowledge the receipt of one thousand dollars from Mrs. Charlotte E. Stevens, of North Andover, Mass., and the offer of whatever further sum might be needed to purchase and place in the church such an organ as Mrs. R. G. Burleigh and Mrs. W. F. Daniell might select.

The church was dedicated December 19th, Rev. M. J. Savage preaching the sermon. Among those present and participating in the services of the day was Rev. Horatio Wool who, fifty-one years before, had preached the first Unitarian sermon ever preached in Franklin.

In January, 1884, Rev. J. B. Harrison, who, by earnestness and a high order of ability, had drawn a congregation together, and held them during nearly five years, withdrew from the pastorate of the society. In the following September the society extended a call to Rev. E. S. Elder to become their pastor, which call was accepted.

The foregoing narrative has been compiled from the church records. But little needs to be added. A history of a church cannot be written in its infancy. The first six years of the life of the society have been extremely prosperous, and the present is full of promise. The society is indebted for its existence and prosperity to an unusually fortunate concurrence of favorable circumstances. It was no common talent that attracted, and no common ability that held together, a congregation drawn from all the churches. It was no ordinary interest in a liberal church, and in what it stands for, that prompted the generous gifts of over nine thousand dollars from distant friends toward a church, an organ, a parsonage and a library, and this generosity was seconded by a corresponding liberality on the part of the society. And what is more significant and promising, those ideas, convictions and purposes of which the Unitarian Church is the representative and exponent were heartily welcomed by a large portion of the community. There are at present (1885) more than fifty families connected with the church. In its unusually excellent library of more than two thousand five hundred volumes, to which valuable additions are being made, it has an instrument of power and helpfulness to the entire community. It is to be hoped that as an institution for the promotion of goodness and righteousness in the lives and characters of its members, and for the advancement of the kingdom of God in the community, the Unitarian Church of Franklin will abundantly justify the faith, fulfill the hopes and reward the endeavors of all who have in any way contributed to its establishment.

The First Baptist Church of Franklin Falls.¹—Owing to the rapid growth of the village of East Franklin, as it was then called, there was an evident need of some place in which religious services could be held on the Sabbath for the benefit of many who could not go to churches in the neighboring villages.

Accordingly, the business men of the community secured Lyceum Hall, the only place that was then available, and made arrangements for the support of weekly religious services on the Sabbath. Elder Burton, of Sanbornton, appears to have been the earliest regular preacher to this union congregation, and he was succeeded, in April, 1866, by Rev. N. P. Philbrook, who, in May, 1867, was followed by J. E. Dame, a student from the academy at New Hampton. Mr. Dame preached his farewell sermon June 28, 1868, and Rev. Charles A. Cooke preached most of the time for the ensuing year.

Meanwhile, the question of organizing a Baptist Church had been discussed, and upon the advice and encouragement of Rev. E. E. Cummings, D.D., of Concord, an organization was finally effected under the name of the First Baptist Church of East Franklin. The constituent members were twelve in number, as follows: Mr. and Mrs. Shadrach Wadleigh, Mrs. Lydia Sanborn, Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Jenkins, Mrs. James Jenkins, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Sumner, Mrs. Walter Aiken, Mrs. Fanny W. Swett, Miss Nettie Whitaker and Miss Laura McEloughlin.

In November, 1869, Rev. Benjamin Wheeler, of Saco, Me., began to preach to the union congregation in Lyceum Hall, and in June, 1870, he accepted a call from the Baptist Church to become its pastor.

In the summer of 1869, Walter Aiken, Esq., one of the most generous supporters of the union services, began the erection, at his own personal expense, of a new meeting-house, which was completed the following spring, so that just at the time when the town changed Lyceum Hall into a school building the new church building was ready for occupancy. As soon as practicable after the church had secured a pastor, a council of neighboring churches was called to consider the question of recognizing this church as in good standing in the Baptist denomination.

¹By Rev. A. J. Hopkins.

This council met June, 30, 1870, and, after proper investigation, voted to proceed with public services of recognition of the new church and dedication of the new meeting-house.

One year later Mr. Aiken, with rare munificence, donated the meeting-house and land on which it stood to the First Baptist Society and he has to the present time ever been a generous contributor to the financial prosperity of the church.

After a brief service of one year and nine months, Rev. Mr. Wheeler, on March 3, 1872, resigned his pastorate, leaving a church which, having been organized less than three years, had made a net gain of seventy-five, and now contained eighty-seven members. Of this increase, forty had been received by baptism, and all became willing workers in the now vigorous and efficient organization.

Mr. Wheeler, in the following October, moved from Franklin to Randolph, Mass., though he remained a beloved member of this church until August 25, 1876, the date of his death.

Mr. J. F. Fielden began preaching for the church in May, after Rev. Mr. Wheeler's resignation, and June 7th it was voted to extend to him a call to ordination as pastor of this church. The call having been accepted, the public services of ordination were held July 5, 1872. During the next seven years the church enjoyed a season of great prosperity, increasing rapidly in numbers and influence, so that at the end of its first decade of years there were one hundred and ninety-six members.

In 1875 the First Baptist Society, by unanimous vote, transferred all its property to the First Baptist Church of Franklin Falls, a corporate body under the laws of the State. In April, 1875, a baptistry was placed in the church, and in July an additional and useful room was formed by connecting the church and chapel. In February, 1878, a fine-toned, fifteen hundred pounds bell was presented by George E. Buell, Esq., and placed in the church tower, where it yet remains, the only church bell in the village.

Rev. Mr. Fielden resigned his pastorate in Franklin August 5, 1881, and immediately accepted a call to become pastor of the First Baptist Church in Winchester, Mass.

During this service of a little more than nine years Mr. Fielden made a record as pastor which has rarely excelled, for of the one hundred and forty-nine accessions during his ministry, one hundred and six were baptized by him and forty-three came from other churches.

After an interval of about five months, on December 16, 1881, a call was given to Mr. C. R. Brown, of Cambridge, Mass., to become pastor of the church after ordination. This call having been accepted, a council met in the church, on Friday, December 30th, and, after a satisfactory examination, proceeded to the public exercises of ordination and recognition. This pastorate, though fruitful in accessions of new members, was quite brief, for in June, 1883, the pastor was invited by the trustees of Newton Theological Institution to take the position of assistant professor of Hebrew and cognate languages in that seminary. He, having pursued those studies during a residence of two years in Germany, felt it to be his duty to accept the invitation, and accordingly resigned his pastoral charge after a service of but eighteen months.

In July the church extended a call to Rev. A. J. Hopkins, of Hopkinton, N. H., to become their pastor, and he accepted, entering upon his labors at the beginning of October, 1883. During the period between that and the present time (July, 1885) but few changes have taken place and little worthy of note has occurred. The church now numbers one hundred and eighty members, has a flourishing Sunday-school and appears to be preparing for another period of marked spiritual development and rapid increase in numbers.

Christian Church.—The religious awakening out of which grew the Christian Church in Franklin, N. H., dates back to October, 1810, when Elijah Shaw, afterwards a prominent minister in the denomination, visited Andover and vicinity on an exhorting tour, he being only seventeen years old. In the summer of 1811, and again in 1814, he visited the above-named towns. At this last visit the work began in earnest, he preaching in a barn, as no other building was large enough to hold the crowds that flocked to hear the good news. The work spread into the adjoining towns of Salisbury and Sanbornton.

The pioneer church organized from Elder Elijah Shaw's labors was in Sanbornton. The organization was effected October 25, 1814, Elders Moses Cheney and Elijah Shaw assisting. This church continued its work with some efficiency till it fell to decay, in 1827, the membership at that period being eighty-one persons, residing in Sanbornton, Salisbury, Andover, New Chester and Northfield. Their covenant was brief and comprehensive: "We, whose names are under-written, having submitted ourselves to God, agree to submit ourselves to one another, considering ourselves a church of God, called to be saints, agreeing to take the New Testament, and that only, for our rule,—for name, belief and practice."

Elders Calley and Morrison organized at different times, from 1820 to 1837, three churches in Andover and Salisbury village (now Franklin West village) and Sanbornton. These three churches united, March 14, 1839, into a strong organization. They did not long continue in this united capacity. Little or no provision was made for supporting the minister, and the church soon went to ruin. In January, 1838, the members of the church living in Franklin decided to separate from the others and form a new church. The organization was completed January 21, 1838, at the school-house in Franklin village, Elders Benjamin Calley and Richard Davis assisting.

The movement toward the erection of the church edifice, in which the church have worshiped, was started January 14, 1838. A notice was posted that day for a meeting on the 20th, in the school-house in Franklin village, of all desirous of aiding in the erection of such a building. At that meeting Joshua Fifield, James Clark and Caleb Merrill were appointed to procure a site, and report estimated expense to an adjourned meeting January 27th, when the reports were accepted, and Messrs. Fifield, Clark and John Rowell were appointed a building committee, and N. S. Morrison, Caleb Merrill, Daniel Herrick, a committee to raise funds and sell pews. February 10, 1838, all the arrangements were completed for the building. The foundation was put in, and the frame was put up June 27th, and so rapidly was the work carried forward by this energetic society, that the house was dedicated to the worship of the One God and His Son, Jesus Christ, November 7, 1838. Isaac Hale, Joshua Fifield and John Simonds were committee of arrangements, Elder Elijah Shaw preaching the sermon (text, Isaiah xlv. 6-7). The house cost $3200. The pews sold and subscriptions paid amounted to $3003.73, leaving a debt of $197.27, which was raised at once, and the church given to the worship of God free from debt, and, what is quite remarkable in the history of churches, has never had an incumbrance upon it in the form of a debt; and there have been no interruptions or lapses in the service held in the church. In 1859 some repairs were made at an expense of one hundred and sixty dollars. In 1872 repairs and improvements in the interior of the church were made, amounting to eight hundred and fifty dollars, and a pipe-organ put in costing fifteen hundred dollars. The pastors that have been settled over this church since its organization are as follows: Benjamin Calley, one year, to 1839; Joseph Elliot, four years, to 1843; Elijah Shaw, two years, to 1845; J. C. Blodgett and E. Chadwick, one year, to 1846; J. W. Tilton, two years, to 1848; O. J. Wait, eight and a half years, to 1856; A. H. Martin, four and a half years, to 1861. During 1862 several preachers of different denominations supplied the pulpit. In 1862, H. C. Dugan was settled, who remained to 1865; Rev. Mr. Syreans, to 1866; R. B. Eldridge, to 1868; O. J. Wait was again settled in 1868 and remained to April 1, 1883, when he resigned to become president of Antioch College, at Yellow Springs, Ohio. In 1883, T. G. Moses was called to the pastorate. In writing this sketch I have been impressed with this remarkable feature,—the unanimity which has characterized all the actions of this body of Christians. There have been no long and distracting church trials, no bickerings among the membership, but love and harmony have prevailed for nearly fifty years. The present condition of the church is prosperous. The Sunday-school is in a flourishing condition, and its financial resources are sufficient for all the increased demands upon it.

The Free Baptist Church was organized in 1870 with sixteen members. The church edifice was erected in 1871 at a cost of about six thousand dollars. The first pastor of this church was Rev. James Rand. Among his successors have been the following: Revs. F. E. Davidson, J. Willis, E. H. Prescott and G. N. Musgrove.

The Methodist Church was organized in 1871, by Rev. J. H. Haines. The church is in a prosperous condition; Rev. S. P. Heath, pastor.

The Roman Catholic Church was organized by Rev. Father Murphy, of Laconia. He was succeeded by Fathers Goodwin, Lambert and Galvin.

CHAPTER IV.

FRANKLIN—(Continued).

The Legal Profession—Physicians—Educational—The New Hampshire Orphans' Home—The Press—The Transcript—The Merrimack Journal—The Franklin National Bank—The Franklin Savings-Bank

Lawyers.—The legal profession in Franklin, even from an early day, has numbered among its members some of the most distinguished lawyers and jurists in the State. The first lawyer in the town was Thomas W. Thompson,¹ a graduate of Harvard, who commenced practice here in 1791. He was a member of Congress, State treasurer, etc. Parker Noyes,¹ an early lawyer of the town, was also an able man. He was prominent in securing the charter of the town in 1828. Hon. George W. Nesmith,¹ ex-judge of Supreme Court; Hon. Daniel Barnard,¹ Hon. Austin F. Pike,¹ United States Senator; and Hon. Isaac N. Blodgett,¹ associate justice of the Supreme Court. Other lawyers are E. B. S. Sanborn,¹ F. N. Parsons, William M. Barnard (son of Judge Daniel Barnard), G. R. Stone, E. G. Leach and W. D. Hardy.

Physicians.—The medical profession has also been well represented. The oldest resident physician is Dr. Luther M. Knight, who located here in June, 1845. Other physicians have been John H. Sanborn, H. W. Brockway, W. W. Sleeper, Austin Durkee (deceased), William E. Keith, C. B. Nichols and J. W. Staples.

Educational.—The town is more liberal in its support of schools than any town in the State compared to its population. The present High School was erected at a cost of about forty thousand dollars.

Two natives of Franklin are presidents of colleges,—Rev. N. J. Morrison, D.D., president of a college in Missouri, and John W. Simons, president of a college in Dakota.

The New Hampshire Orphans' Home.—The first meeting for the organization of this humane institution was held in Eagle Hall, Concord, February 21, 1871.

¹ See chapter on Bench and Bar.

At that meeting Hon. George W. Nesmith, of Franklin, was chosen president; Hon. Horton D. Walker, of Portsmouth, vice-president; Rev. C. W. Millen, of Tilton, secretary; Hon. John Kimball, of Concord, treasurer; and Rev. D. A. Mack, of Franklin, superintendent and agent.

In June, 1871, the institution was incorporated. The persons authorized to call a legal meeting of the corporation did call it in July, and the aforesaid charter was duly accepted by the grantees. Officers were elected, and at that and a subsequent meeting, a board of directors was chosen, by-laws ordained and a committee was appointed to report upon the location of the institution.

Part of the second section of the act of incorporation gives in brief language the main objects of the Home,—

"The main object, or purpose, of this Corporation is to procure a home for the destitute orphans and homeless children in this State, to furnish substantial and for a time by feeding and clothing them, by teaching them habits of industry by giving them moral and intellectual improvement, and, finally, to seek out for them suitable and permanent places of residence, where they may receive rewards for their labor, and ultimately become useful members of society, and, consequently, be saved from pauperism, vice and crime."

It was empowered to take and hold personal or real estate to the amount of three hundred thousand dollars.

Also to make legal and binding contracts with the guardians or friends of the orphans in relation to their services and future employment, and were also authorized to make similar contracts with the overseers of the poor, or county commissioners, who may have the legal control of any orphan for the time being.

At a meeting of the board of directors, holden in August, 1871, the committee appointed to locate the institution reported in favor of establishing it upon the Daniel Webster farm, in Franklin, extensive, well located and full of historic interest. Their report was adopted by a vote of the directors. On the 28th of August the executive committee of the board purchased of Messrs. Joseph Eastman and John C. Morrison, of Concord, one hundred and eighty acres of the Webster farm, with the buildings thereon. The price demanded was ten thousand dollars, but the owners remitted eight hundred dollars of the purchase money to the corporation, leaving the price stipulated to be paid nine thousand two hundred dollars.

This was adjusted by the payment of five thousand dollars drawn from the treasury; also by contributions of the citizens of the town of Franklin amounting to $2504.24, a portion of which had already been paid into the treasury; also from money received from sundry citizens and religious societies of the towns of Amherst, Andover, Bristol, Canaan, Enfield, Exeter, Lebanon and Wilton, amounting in all to $1745.62, including a small balance of interest which had accrued on the purchase money. On the 19th day of October, 1871, the Home was duly opened and consecrated to the public use and to its professed objects by appropriate ceremonies. Interesting addresses were made in the presence of a large concourse of people by Professor E. D. Sanborn, Senator Patterson, Rev. Mr. Heath, Rev. Dr. Davis and others. On the same day a fair was holden for the benefit of the orphans by their friends from Concord, Fisherville, Lebanon, Andover, Salisbury, Tilton and other adjacent towns, from the avails of which the treasury realized the net income of about four hundred and fifty dollars. In the same month the trustees engaged the services of Rev. Mr. Mack as financial agent, his wife as matron and his daughter Jennie as teacher, all at the fixed salary of one thousand four hundred dollars, including also their board for the term of one year. The first orphan was admitted on the 26th day of October.

The Home was opened with Rev. D. A. Mack as chaplain and Mrs. Mack as matron. Mr. Mack remained its efficient chaplain until his death, which occurred December 1, 1883.

During the first three years the number of children averaged annually from thirty to forty. During these years all the current expenses were paid, the Home was furnished with furniture and the farm with stock and tools. Besides this, a new building was erected at a cost of eight thousand dollars, and five thousand dollars was left in the treasury and nearly one thousand dollars on subscription. This brings us to 1875. From 1875 to 1878 the chaplain served as financial agent only six months. During this time the funds of the Home decreased nearly one thousand dollars annually. In May, 1878, there were only two thousand dollars on hand, and but little on subscription. During the last five years, from May 30, 1878, to May 30, 1883, Mr. Mack was the only accredited agent.

This institution was practically founded by Mr. Mack, and it was through his untiring efforts that it was made a success. He planted this institution here on a property for which a hundred per cent. bonus has since been offered. He was voted ten per cent. commission on the first ten thousand dollars, but received little less than eight per cent. The endowment of the Home invariably increased when he acted as agent, and at no other time. By much hard labor he procured furniture, furnishing for the dormitories, thirty thousand brick, boots, shoes, cloth, books, papers, farming tools, etc., for the institution. Over four hundred dollars was secured on the day of the dedication. On these donations he received no commission.

The first president of the Home was the honored and venerable George W. Nesmith, who still occupies the position. His name has been a tower of strength to the institution and his counsels have been invaluable. Mrs. Mack is the present matron.

The Franklin Transcript was started by Mr. John A. Hutchinson. The first number appeared July 6, 1882. A seven-column folio, "patent outside," was used. The paper was dated Franklin, N. H., and printed by O. A. Towne, at the Falls. Mr. Hutchinson was a man of feeble health, who was able to put but little work into the paper, yet from the first it paid not only the running expenses, but a handsome sum beside. He was taken suddenly ill of congestion of the lungs September 26th, and died October 5, 1883. The paper was continued by his widow during October, and sold to O. A. Towne November 1st, Mr. Towne having other business which demanded his attention, associated Mr. S. H. Robie with himself in the enterprise, giving Mr. Robie the position of editor and general manager. In December of the same year the paper was changed from a "patent" to a "home-print." The subscription list and advertising patronage increased materially. Up to the present writing it has been constantly under the above management—in the firm-name of Transcript Publishing Company.

The Merrimack Journal was founded in February, 1872, by Hon. Daniel Barnard and Hon. Austin F. Pike, presumably with an idea of helping assist Pike to a re-election to Congress. He was defeated. The ostensible proprietors, whose names stood at the head of the paper, were Moses B. Goodwin, a Washington journalist, lawyer and "literary feller," and Frank M. Calley, a printer. In 1874, Omar A. Towne purchased Calley's interest, and in 1875, D. T. Elmer bought the paper. His successors were F. K. & G. B. Wheeler, who bought in May, 1876. G. B. Wheeler bought his brother's interest in 1877, and sold to Russell P. Eaton, who had published the New England Farmer twenty-five years, in May, 1880. In October of the same year it was purchased by the present proprietor, Roscoe E. Collins, a practical printer and journalist of wide experience, who made it an independent paper in all things. It had been a twenty-eight column paper from its start. In May, 1883, he enlarged it to a thirty-two column paper. It is read by six thousand people every week, and its circulation embraces most of the States and Territories of the Union.

The Franklin National Bank was organized November 22, 1879. Alvah W. Sulloway, Daniel Barnard, Warren F. Daniell, Isaac N. Blodgett, Walter Aiken, John Taylor, all of Franklin, and George E. Shepard, of Andover, were elected directors; Alvah W. Sulloway was chosen president, Daniel Barnard vice-president and Frank Proctor clerk and cashier.

The capital ($100,000) was fully paid on December 6, 1879, and the charter of the bank (No. 2443) was issued December 20, 1879.

The bank opened for business January 1, 1880, in the rooms of the Franklin Savings-Bank, which occupancy has continued to the present time.

At each successive annual stockholders' meeting the same board of directors has been unanimously re-elected, and the officers of the bank remain the same as at the date of organization.

The surplus and undivided profits of the association now aggregate one-fifth of the capital stock.

Franklin Savings-Bank was incorporated June 30, 1869, with the following incorporators: Walter Aiken, N. H. Sanborn, Warren F. Daniell, Austin F. Pike, Jonas B. Aiken, Daniel Barnard, John Taylor, Frank H. Daniell, George W. Nesmith, James Taylor, Alexis Proctor, David Gilchrist, Edwin C. Stone, Frank H. Aiken, Levi Richardson, Stephen Kenrick, John W. Sweet, Ephraim G. Wallace, A. S. Nesmith, A. W. Sulloway, John H. Rowell, William Russell, William A. Russell, I. N. Blodgett, E. B. S. Sanborn, Asa B. Closson, Henry Burley, Benjamin S. Hancock, Orin B. Davis, Watson Dickerson, John Proctor.

The following were the first officers and trustees: President, Austin F. Pike; Secretary and Treasurer, Nathaniel H. Sanborn; Trustees, Austin F. Pike, George W. Nesmith, Daniel Barnard, David Gilchrist, Warren F. Daniell, Watson Dickerson, William A. Russell, John Taylor, Walter Aiken, Alexis Proctor, Jonas B. Aiken, Stephen Kenrick, A. W. Sulloway.

Present officers: George W. Nesmith, president; Alexis Proctor, treasurer. Present trustees: George W. Nesmith, Daniel Barnard, Warren F. Daniell, John H. Rowell, Milton Gerrish, John Taylor, Walter Aiken, C. C. Kenrick, A. W. Sulloway, H. A. Weymouth, I. N. Blodgett, E. B. S. Sanborn, F. L. Morrison.

The first deposit was made October 1, 1869, by Harry Hinds, of ten dollars.

Deposits, April 1, 1885, $593,920.

Presidents, Austin F. Pike and George W. Nesmith; Treasurers, N. H. Sanborn and Alexis Proctor.

Military Record, 1861-65.—The following men enlisted from Franklin under the call of 1862 and subsequent calls:

Hubbard S. Kamball, James P. Simons, John Bankley, William Foley, Edward McCoy, John James, George Ramsay, A. J. Sargent, John Brennan, John Collins, Bernard Donerley, P. M. Mahon, A. L. Smith, John C. Smith, A. L. Corliss, Charles D. Colby, C. B. Woodford, C. C. Frost, H. B. Hunton, C. A. Fletcher, G. W. Daniels, Jacob G. French, Edward A. Knight, G. F. Sweet, S. G. Collins, H. H. Logan, Joseph Atkinson, E. E. Cochran, S. H. Clay, R. Stevens, G. H. Stevens, J. L. French, A. A. Pottenger, J. P. Simons, B. Keyser, James Cate, L. M. Clark, John Russell, J. B. Thorne, E. B. Ash, C. Lutz, A. F. Howe, G. S. Eaton, George Foley, J. Fuller, John Sanborn, George W. Eaton, D. T. Cheney, E. Cheney, Jr., John Ash, C. G. Bolhof, A. W. Sanborn, James Fitzgerald, Thomas Harley, James Hall, B. F. Peckinfill, William Wilson, Duncan McNaughton, T. James, B. I. Barnes, C. J. Pipe, J. Clinton, John Anderson, Calvin Sanborn, W. A. Gile, M. K. Smith, H. Colby, E. B. Hancock, W. P. Kinsman, F. W. Ballou, George Green, J. H. Bennett, A. T. Cate, D. T. Cate, S. Cook, L. M. Davis, H. W. Fairbanks, Jr., H. E. Gardner, W. H. Keyes, C. C. Morrison, D. W. Putney, Joseph Thompson, D. K. Woodward, T. P. Whittier, C. E. Thompson, J. P. Sanborn, D. H. Sargent, H. B. Lucals, S. J. Sawyer, W. J. Foster, O. Gardner, J. M. Otis, Thomas Kelley, J. Gibbsley, Joseph Bennett, Charles Crawford, John Hancey, George M. Custer, Frank Cole, Thomas Ford, Peter Phillips, J. O'Brien, Harry Casper, John Ludlow, James Martin, John Murphy, John Smith, Joseph Sullivan, John Ward, Henry Williams, James White, Thomas Cullum, S. Geary, John Gardner, John

Stephen Kendrick

Hastor, William Henry, John Johnston, R. J. Palmer, John Smith, Max Solmary, William Wistar, William Riley, Asa Morrison, R. Brown, John Flynn, P. Kelly, George Ramsey, W. Elliott, Daniel Maxfield, G. M. Clifford, J. Green, J. C. Bruce, J. F. Putney, Thomas Bruce, B. W. Bredt, Daniel Curtis, W. J. Dixon, Isaac Hamilton, J. H. Hunt, E. Marshall, G. H. Stevens, C. H. Stevens, George Whitman, E. Bonmann, C. Flemming, R. Mott, Charles Hayes, C. H. Hogan, Daniel Douglass, William Bradley, Thomas Rider, William Andrews, John White, James Hayes, John Maxwell, William Harvey, John Wood, John Harrington, O. H. Merrill, R. G. Burleigh, H. J. Williams, Patrick Sawyer.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

STEPHEN KENRICK.¹

Stephen Kenrick, Esq., one of the oldest and most influential citizens of Franklin, died on the morning of the 4th of August, A.D. 1884, after a lingering illness of several months.

He was born in Haverhill, Mass., June 15, A.D. 1806; his age, therefore, exceeded seventy-eight years. He was the youngest member of a family of nine children, born to John Kenrick and Sarah Colby. They were both natives of Amesbury, but became citizens of Haverhill soon after their marriage. The husband was born December 16, 1764; the wife January 25, 1771. John died by a casualty in 1806. His widow subsequently became the wife of David Marsh, of Staten Island, N. Y., deceased, and Mary, wife of Rev. G. W. Kelley, resident in Haverhill, Mass., now deceased.

The name of Kenrick, or Kendrick, or Kendrick appears to be of early English origin. The name of John seems to have been adopted as an early favorite by the family. We find the name of John Kendrick, sheriff in London, in 1645. The same name appears as Lord-Mayor of London in 1651. John Kenrick was in Ipswich, Mass., in 1657, John Kenrick, John Kenrick, Jr., and Elijah Kenrick were among the petitioners, in May, 1678, to the Legislature, to set off part of Cambridge and to establish the town of Newton. John Kenrick, Jr., of Newton, marched from that town, and was engaged in the Lexington battle, April 19, 1775. Among the many immediate descendants of John Kenrick, of Amesbury, Mass., who were distinguished in the walks of business and professional life, were Professors Henry L. Kendrick, of West Point Academy, and John Kendrick, of Marietta College, Ohio, both first cousins, and James R. Kendrick, superintendent of the Old Colony Railroad, who was also second cousin of Stephen Kenrick, Esq. These gentlemen were all natives of the town of Lebanon, in this State, and we might enumerate many others of the same family, and their "kith and kin," or collaterals, in different parts of the Union, as being prominent and successful business men, and highly respected in their respective localities.

Early in this century, and prior to 1820, Timothy Kenrick, the elder brother of Stephen, had immigrated to the town of Lebanon, and established there a profitable mercantile business. He had acquired early a good education, and was known and honored by his fellow-citizens as a man of integrity by several public trusts. He was town clerk thirty-seven consecutive years, and was several times elected their representative to the Legislature. He was often employed in the settlement of estates of his vicinity, and was for many years director of the Northern Railroad. He well discharged these important trusts. In the mean time his brother Stephen was with his kind father-in-law, Marsh, in Haverhill, where he received good paternal protection and the benefits of the best schools found there until he arrived at the age of fifteen years. He then was committed to the care of his brother Timothy, then of Lebanon, and was employed in his brother's store. Here he received that valuable systematic instruction which proved useful to him in after-life. We next find him for a short time in Bangor, Me. Afterwards he was engaged in trade for himself with Mr. James Howe, at Barnet, Vt.; next, for a short time, at Boscawen Plain, N. H. Then, in 1831, he formed an advantageous co-partnership with Mr. Brewer, of McIndoe's Falls-village, Vt., and there continued in business until 1836, when he came to Franklin, and ever since has made his permanent residence here, identifying himself with the business of this town, and becoming one of its most active and prosperous citizens.

For many years he was largely interested in various-railroad projects and contracts, in connection with Joseph A. Gilmore and John A. Lyon. From these enterprises he derived much profit, and became a large proprietor in several railroads. He was president of the Concord and Portsmouth Railroad from about 1861 to the time of his death. For many years before his death he was president of the national bank located at Hillsborough Bridge, and was interested in its stock. He was also trustee of the Franklin Savings-Bank. He took also a deep interest in the management of the prudential and financial matters of the town, occupying many of the official stations, conferred by his fellow-citizens. He was elected one of the selectmen of the town during the years 1849, 1850, 1851, 1854 and 1872. In 1859 and 1861 he represented the town in the House of Representatives in this State. For many years he was a member of the Congregational Church in Franklin, and was one of its most generous supporters.

In 1833 he married Clarissa A., youngest daughter of Captain Ebenezer Blanchard, late of Franklin, who still survives him. To them were born seven children, four of whom were removed in infancy by death. Another, Dr. Timothy G. Kenrick, died in Naples, Italy, January 29, 1879. He was born July 8, 1849.

¹ By Hon. Geo. W. Nesmith.

graduated at Dartmouth College in 1871; studied the medical profession, graduating at the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York, June 1, 1874. With much enthusiasm he applied himself to the study of insanity, and to the best mode of treating and managing those affected with this unfortunate disease. His mild temper and great power of self-control, united with his skill and learning, gave him signal success in this department of his profession. He was fortunate in early securing the patronage and friendship of Dr. I. W. Barstow, the eminent manager of the Sandford Hall Asylum, at Flushing, N. Y. He had the full confidence of Dr. Barstow, and was employed by him, to the mutual advantage of both parties, up to 1876, when Dr. Kenrick was called into a larger sphere of duties as assistant surgeon in the New York State Lunatic Asylum, at Utica. It is enough to say that his success here met the expectations of his friends, and that his professional attainments commanded the respect and confidence of his associates and the managers of that institution. His life was sacrificed to the malarial climate of Naples while, in devotion to duty, he was traveling for the benefit of the health of one of his diseased and wealthy friends, who was very wisely committed to his professional care. His early, premature death brought extreme sorrow to the hearts of his parents and his many friends, who had witnessed his progress and reasonably indulged high hopes of his future success in life. The lamentation over his loss at home was most sincere. Abroad "he was by strangers honored and by strangers mourned."

Of the two surviving children, Stephen, the eldest, many years since removed to the West, where he has been extensively engaged in various railroad enterprises. We find him now in Wisconsin, married, but without children, and prosperous in other respects, enjoying the income of the office of general superintendent of the Fort Madison and Northwestern Railroad. He is cheerful, and apparently enjoys life well.

The remaining child is a son, in the full vigor of life, under the name of Charles C. Kenrick, now very active, doing the labor of two men, being extensively engaged in building houses, barns, stables, shops. As a farmer, raising more hay and corn than any other person in town, improving largely, by judicious cultivation, his lands; selecting good breeds of cattle and horses, and increasing their number; giving promptly a fair day's pay to a fair day's labor, thus rewarding a large number of laborers, and expending profitably a good amount of capital daily; improving the condition of his estates, and augmenting the wealth of the town. We might here also, with propriety, refer to the extensive traffic in wood and lumber recently carried on by him, not without profit.

During the long life of his father, Charles has enjoyed the benefit of his advice, and followed it. Thereby he gained his father's confidence, and before his death he received from him the conveyance of a large estate, under the sole obligation to render all needed aid to his aged mother in sickness and in health. This obligation his kind nature prompts him to obey to her entire satisfaction.

We now leave the history of the children and again refer briefly to that of the father. While Mr. Kenrick was a citizen of Franklin we found him interested and well informed in the important interests of the town, State and nation. He had leisure and opportunity to inform himself so as to discharge intelligently his own private trusts and duties, as well as those belonging to the good citizen. His knowledge and experience, acquired by him in trade, banking and railroad affairs, were of much value to himself and useful to others. We have already alluded to his great ability in acquiring and retaining successfully a large estate. We must not forget to give due credit to a diligent help-meet, in the name of his wife, who brought to him a considerable pecuniary inheritance that descended from her paternal estate. This inheritance, coming down from a worthy ancestry, would, of course, be highly appreciated. It constituted a valuable accession to the estate, now constantly increasing through the harmonious action, kind care and economy of both husband and wife. It is an acknowledged fact that the accumulation of property generally requires much patience and great mental resources; but a critical world tells us that a wise appropriation or disposition of a large estate requires the exercise of still more sagacity, good judgment and wisdom.

HON. A. W. SULLOWAY.

From an industrial as well as a political standpoint, the town of Franklin has long occupied a prominent position in the State. Highly favored by nature with the facilities most conducive to the development of manufacturing industry, there has grown up within its limits, or been attracted thereto from other localities, a large class of citizens possessing the enterprise, energy and sagacity requisite to the most advantageous use of those facilities.

There are, indeed, few among our New England towns of corresponding size which include among their inhabitants a larger number of active and successful business men, or whose progress has been signalized during the last quarter of a century by a more substantial industrial development.

Alvah Woodbury Sulloway is one of the best known, most practical, energetic and public-spirited among the enterprising business men of this prosperous and progressive town.

While the State of Massachusetts has drawn from our midst a large proportion of the men whose labors have brought the prosperity and distinction which that proud old commonwealth enjoys, she has given New Hampshire, in return, some of her own sons, whose efforts have contributed, in no small degree, to advance the honor and welfare of the State of their adoption. Among these is the subject of this sketch. Born in Framingham, Mass., December 25, 1838, Mr. Sulloway is now in his forty-seventh year. He is the only son and eldest child of Israel W. and Adeline Richardson Sulloway, to whom three daughters were also born, two of whom are living;—one unmarried, and the other the wife of Herbert Bailey, Esq., a prominent manufacturer of the town of Claremont.

A. W. Sulloway

Israel W. Sulloway was born in Salem, N. H., December 24, 1812, and sprang from Revolutionary ancestry on both the paternal and maternal sides, his mother being the daughter of Captain Israel Woodbury, of Salem, who served in the patriot army throughout the war for independence.

He engaged in manufacturing service in youth, and was for some time an overseer in the Saxonville woolen-mills. In 1848 he removed to Enfield, N. H., where he introduced the process of making the celebrated Shaker socks by machinery, being the first manufacturer to engage in this enterprise. He established a prosperous business, which he carried on about sixteen years, when he sold out to his son-in-law, Mr. Bailey, and retired from active life, locating at Waltham, Mass. He died suddenly, November 20, 1883,—a man of remarkably kind and benevolent disposition, whose sterling qualities won the respect of all who enjoyed his acquaintance.

In his father's mill at Enfield, Alvah W. Sulloway, gained that practical knowledge of the business in which he has since been engaged, which constituted the sure foundation of the success he has attained therein.

He secured a good academical education at Canaan and Barre, Vt., and the Green Mountain Liberal Institute, at South Woodstock; but spent a considerable portion of his time, between the ages of ten and twenty-one years, in active labor in the mill, thoroughly familiarizing himself with the various processes in hosiery manufacture and the general conduct of business in that important line of industry.

Upon attaining his majority, with that ambitious and independent spirit which so generally characterizes the youth of New England, and to which the development and prosperity of all sections of our country are so largely due, Mr. Sulloway determined to go into business for himself. His purpose received the ready encouragement and sanction of his father, and, after due deliberation, he formed a partnership with Walter Aiken, of Franklin, in the manufacture of hosiery. The partnership continued for about four years, when it was dissolved by mutual consent, and another firm was organized which put in operation a new mill.

This firm consisted of Mr. Sulloway and Frank H. Daniell, of Franklin, who carried on business together until 1869, when Mr. Daniell withdrew, and Mr. Sulloway has since been sole proprietor. The mill is situated upon the lower power of the Winnipisogee, opposite the mills of the Paper Company, the power being used in common by the two establishments. The building is of brick, three stories high, with basement, contains four sets of wooden machinery, with about seventy-five knitting-machines, and furnishes employment for about ninety operatives, besides a large number of women in the vicinity and surrounding towns, whose labor is required in finishing the work which the machines leave incomplete.

The goods manufactured are the Shaker socks, or half hose, of which more than three hundred dozen pairs are produced daily, giving an annual product of about one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The monthly pay-roll averages about two thousand five hundred dollars, aside from the amount paid for outside labor.

Mr. Sulloway is a business man in the true sense of the term, and as such he has been thus far eminently successful. But while devoting his energies and ability to the development of his own business interests, and thereby indirectly conferring large benefit upon the community in which he moves, he has never failed to contribute by direct personal effort to the advancement of all measures of public utility and material progress, and to his labor and encouragement, personally and pecuniarily, as much as to any other among its many enterprising and public-spirited citizens, the town of Franklin is indebted for the advanced position which it holds when regarded from a business, social or educational stand point. He was a prime mover in the organization of the Franklin National Bank, which went into operation in November, 1879, and has been president of the institution from the start. He has also been a trustee of the Franklin Savings-Bank ever since its establishment, and for several years past a member of the committee of investment. In 1880 he was chosen a member of the board of directors of the Northern Railroad, and in March, 1885, he was appointed president of the same corporation.

In politics Mr. Sulloway is an ardent Democrat, an earnest and enthusiastic worker in the party cause, and his labors in this direction have been largely instrumental in bringing his party into ascendancy in Franklin, which was for many years one of the hardest-contested political battle-grounds in the State, numbering, as it does, among its citizens several of the most active leaders of the two great parties. In 1874, although the town was then decidedly Republican, he was chosen a member of the State Legislature from Franklin, and was re-elected the following year. In 1874, and again in 1875, he was elected to the same position.

In the Legislature, as everywhere else, he proved himself a thoroughly practical man, devoting himself actively to business and leaving speech-making to those inclined to talk rather than work. In 1871 he served on the committee on elections; in 1872, upon railroads; in 1874, was chairman of the committee on manufactures, where his close acquaintance with manufacturing interests fitted him for most efficient service; and in 1875 was again a member of the elections committee. In 1874, when the Democratic party managers set to work systematically to win a victory in the State, Mr. Sulloway was nominated for railroad commissioner upon the ticket headed by James A. Weston for Governor.

Although there was no choice by the people in the election that year, the Democracy won a substantial victory in that they secured a majority in the Legislature, and the election of their candidates for Governor and railroad commissioner followed at the hands of that body. To the triumph of his party in the State the energetic labor of Mr. Sulloway in the general conduct of the campaign contributed in no small degree.

As a member of the Board of Railroad Commissioners for the term of three years, the last year as chairman of the board, he rendered the State efficient service, carrying into his official labors, so far as they extended, the same practical sagacity and judgment exercised in his own private business.

In January, 1877, Mr. Sulloway was nominated by the Democracy of the Second District as their candidate for Congress against Major James F. Briggs, of Manchester, the Republican nominee. The district was strongly Republican, and that party had a popular candidate in the field; yet Mr. Sulloway, with no expectation of an election, made a vigorous canvass and ran largely ahead of his ticket. He was also the candidate of his party in the district at the next election, and again in 1880, making lively work for his successful opponent, Major Briggs, on each occasion. He has been an active member of the Democratic State Committee for a number of years past, and for the greater portion of the time a member of the executive committee of that body, having direct charge of the campaign work.

He was a member of the New Hampshire delegation in the National Convention at St. Louis, in 1876, which nominated Samuel J. Tilden for the Presidency, and was an enthusiastic supporter of Mr. Tilden, not only in convention, but also in the subsequent campaign, in which he was actively engaged as a member of the Democratic National Committee from this State. In 1880 he was again a delegate to the National Convention of his party at Cincinnati, where General Hancock was nominated; and in 1884, at Chicago, he was a zealous supporter of Governor Cleveland.

In religion Mr. Sulloway is an adherent of the liberal faith. He was reared a Universalist, and is now an active member of the Unitarian Society in Franklin. In this organization, as in business and politics, he is an earnest worker, and to his encouragement and material assistance is largely due the erection of the finest church edifice in the town. He has been trustee of this society from its beginning, and is also a member of the board of trustees of the Unitarian Educational Society, under whose auspices Proctor Academy, at Andover, is conducted.

In 1866, Mr. Sulloway was united in marriage to Miss Susan K. Daniell, the youngest daughter of the late J. F. Daniell, and a sister of Hon. Warren F. and Frank H. Daniell. They have three children,—a daughter and two sons,—the eldest, Alice, born August 5, 1871; Richard Woodbury, born February 15, 1876; and Frank Jones, born December 11, 1883.

Their home is a fine modern residence, erected in 1877, beautifully located in a bend of the Winnisseege River, surrounded by handsome grounds, with all its appointments conducive to the comfort of the family and the hosts of friends who share their generous hospitality.

Mr. Sulloway is a man of keen perceptive powers and ready judgment, so that he is enabled to form conclusions upon all practical questions presented with more than ordinary promptness and accuracy. His opinion in all matters of public interest and concern in the community in which he resides is as frequently sought and carries as great weight as that of any other man, to say the least, and the same also may be said of his advice in private business affairs.

He is frank and outspoken at all times, and never hesitates to say just what he thinks when called upon to express himself in any direction. He has many warm friends, and enjoys a full measure of popularity in social as well as in public and business circles. He was a moving spirit in the organization of the New Hampshire Club, an association formed by New Hampshire men doing business in Boston, for social entertainment, and has been a leading member of the same from the start. Endowed with an active mind, and healthy and vigorous bodily powers, he has great capacity for labor, and will unquestionably accomplish even more substantial results in the future than have already attended his efforts.

WARREN F. DANIELL.

In almost every instance, those who, during the first half of the present century, laid about the waterfalls of New Hampshire the foundations of our manufacturing villages, builded better than they knew. They were generally men of limited ambitions and means, and established their factories without the expectation that they were changing worthless plains and forests into cities or plain mechanics into millionaires. They aimed only to create productive industries and win a fair reward for their labor. But they were skillful workmen, and under their inspiration and direction their enterprises have grown into great proportions, which have made the fortunes of their owners and called into being communities that are models of the best that skill and thrift can produce.

Warren Hamilton

To this class belonged Kendall O. and James L. Peabody and Jeremiah F. Daniell, who, over fifty years ago, built a paper-mill in the forest that then grew about the falls on the Winnipiseogee where the wealthy, wide-awake and beautiful village of Franklin Falls now stands.

The Peabodys built a small mill at this point about the year 1828. Their knowledge of the paper business was very limited, their machinery of the most primitive kind and their experiment was not at first a success; but they were men not easily turned from their purposes. They secured the services of a practical paper-maker, Jeremiah F. Daniell, who knew the business thoroughly, and was by education, as well as by natural abilities, well qualified to prove an efficient helper to men who, like the Peabodys, were trying to establish a new enterprise in the face of many discouragements. He had worked at his trade in Pepperell, Mass., also in Dorchester and Methuen. While at Pepperell, he married Sarah Reed, of Harvard, Mass., by whom he had two children,—Warren F., the subject of this sketch, who was born June 26, 1826, and Mary, who died in infancy.

On going to Franklin he was given an interest in the business and became a permanent resident. In the face of many obstacles, he secured from South Windham, Conn., a newly-invented paper-machine, which was transported across the country by two eight-horse teams and set up ready for business. Mr. Daniell purchased the interest of J. L. Peabody, and the firm became Peabody & Daniell. The machinery was scarcely in position when a fire destroyed the factory and its contents, leaving the owners bankrupt in nearly everything but courage and a determination to succeed, which enabled them to finally rebuild and proceed in a small way with their business.

The erection of the cotton-mills at Manchester gave them an opportunity to purchase large amounts of paper stock at low prices, and from that time they were moderately prosperous. The next year after the removal of Mr. Daniell from Massachusetts his wife died, and a year later he married Annette Eastman, of Concord. His son, Warren F., was at that time a wide-awake boy of ten years. He had picked up a little book-knowledge in the Massachusetts schools, and that he might be further educated without much expense, was sent to Concord, where he worked upon a farm for his board and clothes and the privilege of attending school a short time each winter, until, at the age of fourteen, he was called home and entered the paper-mill as an apprentice to learn the business with which his name is now so prominently identified. It was his purpose, at a later period, to attend the academy at Tilton; but on the day on which the term began his father was severely burned, and Warren F. was obliged to take his place in the mill, where he became master of the trade in all its branches. As a journeyman, his wages were one dollar and twenty-five cents per day. Warren F. was ambitious at some time to have a mill of his own, and with this object in view, he went to Watersville, Me., and with other parties erected and ran a paper-mill at that place, when, a year later, he took charge of a mill at Pepperell, Mass., where he remained until 1854, at which time his father bought out Mr. Peabody and asked his son to join him at Franklin, which he did, and the firm became J. F. Daniell & Son, and under that name was for ten years prosperous and successful. In 1864, Warren F. bought his father's interest and became sole proprietor, and so continued until in 1870, when the mill property, which had grown to be one of the largest and best-known private manufacturing establishments in the State, was sold to a company of Massachusetts capitalists, who organized as the Winnipiseogee Paper Company. Mr. Daniell then became connected with a large paper-house in Boston; but soon tiring of city life, returned to Franklin, and, with a large interest in the company, became its resident agent and manager, which position he still occupies. This company owns large paper-mills supplied with the best machinery, employs three hundred hands and produces about twenty tons of paper daily, and in its large measure of success is a monument to the sagacity and enterprise of the man who plans and directs its operations, who, without the help of a liberal education, has won his way by hard and patient work to a first place among the business men of the State. While compassing his own success, Mr. Daniell has contributed much to that of others, and in his struggle upward has pulled no one down.

The business world acknowledges him as a man of undoubted integrity, thoroughly responsible and eminently successful; a genial man whose good-fellowship never tires, and whose hospitality and generosity are inexhaustible. In 1850, Mr. Daniell married, Elizabeth D. Rundlett, of Stratham, and had one child, Harry W. She died in Pepperell in 1854. He married, second, Abbie A. Sanger, of Concord, October, 1860, from which union there are Eugene S., Otis, Warren F., Jr., and Jerie R.

Mr. Daniell is much interested in agriculture, and owns a large farm, which is under a high state of cultivation. He has long been the owner of the best herd of Jersey cattle in the State. His stables contain some of the finest horses; he admires a good dog, and is a skillful breeder of swine and poultry. He has contributed much to the introduction of improved stock, crops and farm machinery in his neighborhood; has been active and liberal in sustaining the State and local agricultural societies, and in otherwise promoting the farming interest.

In politics Mr. Daniell is a Democrat, and such has been his popularity at home that he has represented his town, which is Republican, several times in the Legislature, and was twice chosen Senator in a district which no other Democrat could have carried. He represented his party in the National Convention of 1872, and has always been one of its trusted counselors and efficient workers, and but for his refusal would have been its candidate for Governor and for Congress.

During the war he gave himself to the cause of the Union as represented by the "boys in blue," voting to raise and equip all the men who were needed, giving liberally to provide for them and their families and supporting by word and deed on all occasions the cause for which they fought.

WALTER AIKEN.

The first ancestor, Edward (1), came from the north of Ireland about 1722, and settled in Londonderry, N. H., and became one of the proprietors. His son, Nathaniel (2), lived in Londonderry and was an energetic business man. One of his sons, Thomas (3), moved to Deering, N. H., and carried on farming there. His son, Matthew (4), was born in Deering, N. H., March 21, 1776, and moved to Pelham, N. H., and was a saddler and harness-maker there. He married Sally Hackett, daughter of Colonel Hackett, of Portsmouth, N. H., who built there the first frigate for the United States government that was engaged in the Revolutionary War.

The children from this union were James Gilman (5), born May 10, 1795, who was a soldier in the War of 1812, and was last heard from by his family as an officer at the battle of New Orleans, where it is supposed he fell, January 8, 1815. Herrick (5) was born in Peterborough, N. H., June 8, 1797. Sally (5), born May 10, 1799, married Phineas Stevens, who was an engineer and built a number of prominent mills in New Hampshire. Emma (5), born June 10, 1802, married David Hamblett, a millwright, of Manchester, N. H., died April 12, 1885. Alfred (5), born July 11, 1804, was a tanner, who lived first in Bennington, N. H., and removed to Beckett, Mass., and there died September 25, 1878.

Herrick (5) first set up in business as a manufacturer of machinery at Dracont, Mass., and moved to Franklin, N. H., and set up business in the old shop of Daniel Herrick, in 1838, which business he carried on in that vicinity for many years. He was an inventor and received letters patent on many useful and cunning machines, among which were a "spiral-brush" and a leather-splitting machine. He also received several medals for valuable inventions. He conceived the plan of using a cog-rail for steep grades on railroads and constructed a model at his shop that worked well. Thinking to apply his invention upon a road to the top of Mt. Washington, he rode up on horse-back, and although convinced in his own mind that by his plan the summit could be reached, he was unable to convince the railroad men and capitalists that his plan was feasible, and the honor of the achievement, a few years later, went to others. Mr. Aiken was a good citizen, a successful business man and a kind husband and father, and died November 7, 1866.

At Dracont, Mass., February 5, 1830, he married Ann Matilda, daughter of Isaac Bradley, of that place. She was born August 28, 1810, and was a descendant in the fifth generation of the renowned Hannah Duntan, of Haverhill, Mass. She died January 6, 1884.

The children from this union were Walter (6), born October 5, 1831, in Dracont, Mass.; Jonas Bradley (6), born August 23, 1833, at the same place; James Hackett (6), born June 20, 1835, died of cholera in Calcutta.

Francis Herrick (6), born June 10, 1843, in Franklin, N. H. He succeeded his father in business, carrying it on successfully. He built a fine residence in Franklin and died January 16, 1876. He was a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, a thirty-two-degree Mason. He married Hannah A. Colby, of Hill, N. H., September, 1865.

Charles Lowe (6) was born July 23, 1845. He resided in Elkhart, Ind., for several years and is now an employé of the Old Colony Railroad Company,, at Taunton, Mass. He married Isabella Burleigh, of Thornton.

Jonas Bradley (6), the second son, has been quite prominent among the business men of his time and had extensive business connections, although he retired from active business some years ago. He married, first, Helen M. Scribner, of Franklin, in 1864. She died April 14, 1865, the same day upon which President Lincoln died. He married, second, Addie G. Proctor, of Northfield, Vt. The only child from the first marriage, Alice Matilda (7), died in infancy. The children from the second marriage are Mary Louisa (7), born November 19, 1867; Charles Wilson (7), born August 21, 1869; and George Proctor (7), born December 5, 1873, who was drowned May 10, 1876.

Walter, the subject of this sketch, passed his boyhood at the old home, and, in addition to the advantages of the common schools, he attended for two years the Gilmanton Academy and also the institutes at New Hampton and Tilton. He entered his father's machine-shop at an early age, and, having a natural talent for mechanics, he rapidly developed, and at the age of twenty-two years started in business for himself in an upper room in his father's shop, where he invented and built one of the first knitting-machines in the country. A pioneer in the invention and manufacture of knitting-machines, Mr. Aiken has taken out over forty patents, and his latest machine makes a perfect stocking without seam in less than five minutes and works automatically. He also invented a machine to make gimlet-pointed screws. Mr. Aiken is also a woolen manufacturer, producing as many as four hundred dozen pairs of stockings per day. He also built the house on the summit of Mt. Washington, owning one-half of it; assisted in building the railroad up the mountain; became the general manager at the opening of the road, in 1869, and has continued in that capacity, making the most complete success as a financial venture. Mr. Aiken designed the locomotive in use on the Mt. Washington Railway. He, in connection with Sylvester Marsh, has perfected and carried into complete operation the work which Herrick Aiken had so many years before conceived, viz.: to build a railroad to the top of Mt. Washington. His residence, on a bluff overlooking the village, is one of the finest in Franklin. Mr. Aiken owns the Hamilton Hotel, at the Bermuda Islands, with all the modern improvements and capable of entertaining two hundred and fifty guests. He built the signal station on Mt. Washington for the United States government in 1873; built the Summit House in 1872. Mr. Aiken is a Democrat; was in the War of the Rebellion; has been a representative to the General Court for four years and is a director of each of the banks in Franklin, and a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity and also of the Odd-Fellows. "The old Granite State" may well be proud of such sons. He married, first, Susan Colby, of Warner, in 1853; he married, second, Mary Dodge, of Hampton Falls, January 1, 1867. The children by the first marriage were James (7), born February 5, 1854, and Frederick (7), born November 4, 1855. These children are now living.

Walter Aiken

HISTORY OF ANDOVER.

BY N. J. BACHELDER.

CHAPTER I.

Early History.—The earliest or provincial history of the town of Andover can be derived only from records so incomplete and often contradictory that it is difficult to settle many important questions regarding the first settlement of the town. Something was known of the location and peculiarities of this tract of land many years previous to the presentation of a petition to the Masonian owners for the grant in 1748.

Whatever had been learned by exploring parties, so little had been recorded before this date that not only is an immense amount of research necessary, but some theory and speculation also for an intelligent statement of previous transactions in regard to this tract. But few facts are reasonably certain in relation to it. The land was entirely devoid of a white man's habitation or the faintest indication of the same at the time of the grant. It was covered with the original forest, frequented by wild animals and diversified only by the unevenness of its surface, the mountainous region existing on the northern and western boundaries. The hilly sections were covered with a dense growth of hard wood and the plains with an immense pine forest. The streams and ponds existed in all the grandeur of primitive wildness, and the entire tract now known as the town of Andover was an unbroken wilderness.

This land had been previously purchased of John Tuffton Mason, Esq., and to these proprietors did the original grantees petition.

At a meeting held at Portsmouth, November 20, 1751, the grant was made to the following-named persons:

Elmond Brown, William Swann, Archibald Lakeman, John Hoyt, John Brown, Daniel Crane, Nathan Row, Amos Deane II, Daniel Sanborn, John Sanborn, Joseph Gove, Benjamin Leavitt, Nathan Langtellow, David Norton, Walter Williams, Benjamin Sweet, Jr., Benjamin Shaw, Benjamin Tilton, Joseph Prescott, Thomas Silva, Israel Blake, John Ellis, Daniel Wear, Nathaniel Healy, Benjamin Sanborn, Robert Miller, Tobias Lakeman, of Hampton Falls, Edward Brown and Jonathan Beck, of Salisbury, Mass.; Samuel Bathrick, of Portsmouth; Ezekiel Wetheren, Joseph Wear, Samuel Blake, Jr., John Chapman, Samuel Blake, Nathan Dow, Samuel French, William Brown Clough, Jesse Prescott, Ebenezer Lovern, of Kensington, Anthony Emery, John Marston, Simon Marston, Joshua Towle, Daniel Marston, John Leavitt, Jonathan Leavitt, Nathaniel Babcock, of Hampton, Samuel French, Richard Smith, Benjamin Eaton, Joseph French, Hezekiah Carr, Benjamin French, of South Hampton and Hampton Falls; David Page, David

Lowell, Nason Cass, Joseph Rawlins, of Exeter, Jonathan Sanborn, of Kingston; Robert Call, of Chester.

Said tract of land was estimated to contain about forty square miles, and was bounded as follows:

"Beginning at a great rock on the westerly side of Pemigewasset River, which rock is the northeasterly bound of a tract of land granted to Ebenezer Stevens, Jeshiah Philbrick, and others by said proprietors; then running west seventeen degrees, south, ten miles; then beginning again at said rock, running up said river so far as to contain four miles upon a straight line; thence west seventeen degrees, south, ten miles; thence on a straight line to the end of the first ten-mile line."

Various conditions were imposed upon the grantees, among which were the following:

"That fifteen families be settled upon said tract of land, each having a house of sixteen feet square at least, or equal thereto, and four acres of land cleared and tilled for tillage or mowing upon their respective shares within four years next after the granting hereof; and fifteen families more so settled within six years of the granting hereof; and thirty families more within ten years of the granting hereof. That within eight years from the granting hereof a meeting-house be built for the worship of God and fitted for that purpose for the use of the inhabitants there; and that they maintain and support the constant preaching of the Gospel there after the expiration of ten years from the granting hereof. That all white pine trees fit for masting the royal navy be and hereby are reserved and granted to his Majesty, his heirs and successors forever for that purpose. Provided always that in case of an Indian war within any of the terms of years above limited for the doing any of the said matters and things aforesaid, by the said owners to be done, the same number of years as such war shall last shall be allowed after that impediment shall be removed."

According to the terms of the grant, the tract was divided into eighty-one shares, and each share divided into three lots. Two of the lots were to contain one hundred acres each, and the third the remainder of the land belonging to each respective share. Eighteen of these shares were reserved by the grantors. One was reserved for the first ordained minister, one for the parsonage and one for the support of schools. The remaining sixty shares were to be the property of the sixty grantees. The provisions of the grant were such that the eighteen shares reserved by the grantors were to be free from any expense incurred in effecting the settlement of the town.

The township was first called New Breton, in honor of the brave men who achieved the capture of Cape Breton in 1745. A large number of the forces in this engagement came from the province of New Hampshire, and several of the grantees of New Breton were among the number.

The early meetings of the proprietors of the township were held at Hampton Falls, and for more than twenty years all business was transacted there. Committees were frequently appointed and sent up to the township, and their reports formed the basis of action. The first important business transacted at these meetings was to procure the drawing of a plan of the town, and May 28, 1753, a committee was appointed to lay said plan before the grantors and arrange them to have the lots drawn. According to this plan, the town was divided into four ranges, each commencing at the Penigewasset River and extending across the town in a westerly direction. Land, four rods wide, for a road between each range was reserved and a centre square surveyed, where, probably, it was supposed the business interests of the town would be centred, and it is not unreasonable to conjecture that it was expected to become a central location for all leading interests. This town centre was west of Loon Pond about one-half mile, and located on land now owned by J. D. Philbrick, W. A. Bachelder and F. H. Flanders. Instead of being the metropolis of the town, it is even remote from any highway.

The ranges were divided into lots according to the terms of the grant, and measures were taken for spotting out the town as indicated by the plan. It is not certain how thoroughly this was done, for at a meeting in May, 1763, a committee was appointed "to run out said township anew and bound and number every lot agreeable to the plan formerly exhibited and accepted by the grantors." This committee was David Norton, Richard Smith, Benjamin Eaton, Benjamin Tilton and Jeremiah Lane. They spent six days doing this work, and in November of the same year made a lengthy and interesting report of their proceedings. This report occasionally mentions "old spotted lines," but nearly all the lines were newly spotted, with no reference to any previous survey, and the committee claim to have made a thorough division of the town according to the original plan. Undoubtedly, this was the first accurate survey with the boundaries distinctly marked. About the same time committees were appointed for establishing the boundary lines between this and the adjoining townships, which seems to have been well and faithfully done.

Proprietors' meetings were held very frequently, and after the boundary lines were fairly well established, the location of roads and bridges was the subject mainly considered.

The range-ways which had been reserved for roads were not practical for this purpose, and we find the early records filled with reports of action taken in this matter. In September, 1753, it was voted to clear a road to the Centre Square. Doubtless, this was the earliest projected road, and, like those afterwards surveyed, terminated at the Centre Square as the objective-point. Although this road was spotted, we are unable to find any evidence that it was cut and cleared. At the meeting of July 21, 1761, a committee previously appointed to look out and spot the most convenient place for a road to the Centre Square, and also to search out the most convenient place for a saw-mill and spot a road thereto, made report as follows:

"We have made search, and, according to the best of our judgment, pursued the road from the fort in Stevenston (so-called) to Peter Rowing's house, in said Stevenston, and from thence to Gill's meadow (so-called), and from thence the spotted way to Loon Pond, in said New Britain, and from thence to the Centre Square, and from thence back to the southerly part of said Loon Pond, and from thence northerly round said pond till we come to where said pond empties itself, and from thence down said stream to the first falls, next to Loon Pond, where we apprehend to be the most convenient place that we can find in said township of New Britain for a saw-mill."

The report of this committee was accepted, but no further action is recorded in regard to clearing the road thus spotted.

The records indicate that the first road cut and cleared was known as the Centre road, leading from the Penigewasset River to Chance Pond, around the northerly end of this pond, and from thence to the mill privilege and Loon Pond.

At a meeting held November 3, 1762, a committee consisting of Anthony Emery, Nathaniel Healy, Jr., and Jeremiah Lane, who had been appointed at a previous meeting, reported the above-mentioned road completed, and were voted three hundred and eighteen pounds ten shillings, old tenor, in payment for cutting and clearing the same.

As the town became settled, roads were necessary, and soon were cut in various directions through the forest, and their location has been a subject of controversy and contention as often as a new road was projected, even to the present day. In many instances roads were abandoned after a short time as some better way was suggested.

Damages were awarded the owners of land through which roads passed, and frequently the range-ways adjoining the farm were voted in exchange for the land taken. The famous Fourth New Hampshire turnpike was surveyed through the town in 1804, and opened to travel in 1806. One of the most important toll-gates on the route of this turnpike was that at West Andover, where this road was intersected by the Grafton turnpike.

This gate for many years was in charge of Thomas Clark, Esq., a man of some renown in hotel and store business, and also in public affairs.

The turnpike was made a free road in 1839, and the town was required to pay the corporation five hundred and sixty-six dollars in consideration of the same.

The early settlement of the town progressed very slowly. It required no little courage and powers of endurance to brave the dangers and privations of the wilderness. A narrow path cut through the forest was the road over which a man must bring on horseback his family and household goods.

Reminiscences of the exploits and adventures of the earliest inhabitants would fill a lengthy chapter. Different sections of the town bear names taken from hunting adventures which are still fresh in memory and often told by the oldest inhabitants as related to them by the first settlers.

Money was voted at the proprietors' meetings for the encouragement of those who first settled here; but not until 1761 did any one venture to make a home within the limits of the town. During that year Mr. Joseph Fellows moved from Boscawren into that part of Andover known as Flahole, and settled on what is now the Royal Stone farm. Mr. Fellows died March 14, 1811, and his daughter, Peggy, was the first child born in town. Elias Raino was the next settler, building a house near the Joseph A. Rowe place. The house was long since destroyed, but traces of the cellar can still be seen. Mr. Raino died September 20, 1787. The third man to settle in the town was William Morey, who cleared the farm now owned by Jonathan Cilley, and built a house a few rods south of the one at present occupied by Mr. Cilley. Mr. Morey died in 1814. Edward Ladd was another of the early settlers. He lived upon the farm lately occupied by James Marston, and died in 1818, at the age of eighty-two years.

With no inhabitants on the north from whom assistance could be had, and being unable to obtain supplies without a journey of a dozen miles, and then bring them home on their backs, it is no wonder that the early settlement was slow. In 1775 the number of inhabitants in the town was one hundred and seventy-nine.

In the minds of the proprietors, next in importance to the clearing of roads seems to have been the building of a saw-mill, and the mill privilege was one of the first things looked for in the survey of the town. The place selected was where the Busiel hosiery-mill now stands, and here the first saw-mill was erected by Nathaniel Prescott in 1766. The proprietors of the township voted Mr. Prescott forty pounds, lawful money, towards the erection of the mill, he agreeing to keep it in good running order and to saw all logs hauled there by the inhabitants of the town at the halves for the next ten years. A large number of saw-mills have since that time been built in town, and in 1820 no less than five were in active operation. At this early date they were usually built on small streams, which now would not furnish sufficient power, and upon very small streams do we frequently find traces of dams, mills and rude machinery in places now entirely given to the growth of wood and lumber.

A grist-mill was needed, and its location was considered at several meetings. Various places were favorably reported. In 1769, Mr. Prescott moved the saw-mill farther up the stream, and a committee contracted with Anthony Emery to build a grist-mill at the foot of the falls, and also made a contract with Mr. Prescott for drawing water for said grist-mill from his saw-mill gate for a period of twenty years by payment of seven pounds, lawful money.

At a meeting February 2, 1774, this grist-mill, built by the proprietors of the township, was voted to be sold to Joseph Fellows for thirty-five pounds. It was used for many years, and was but one of several grist-mills in operation in the town a few years later. Carding-mills, clothing-mills, bark-mills and tanneries were built in various sections of the town, and in 1820 no less than two of each mentioned were operated.

The first business meeting called in New Breton was by authority of the province of New Hampshire and for the purpose of choosing officers for assessing and collecting the province and county tax. This meeting was held at the house of Joseph Fellows, June 21, 1773, but after this, were annually held at the meeting-house. But little business was transacted, except the election of officers, which included a man to take care of the meeting-house, until the incorporation of the town, June 25, 1779, at which date the town took the present name of Andover.

The first town-meeting after the incorporation, was held at the meeting-house July 13, 1779, and the following were elected the first town officers: Moderator, Samuel Blake; Clerk, Jonathan Weare; Selectmen, Joseph Philbrick, Samuel Blake and Jabez Morrill; Assessors, Peter Weare and Joseph Chandler; Highway Surveyors, Robert Wise, John Row, Joseph Philbrick and Joseph Fellows; tithingmen, fence-viewers, surveyors of lumber and hog constables were also chosen.

Meetings were held on August 16th and September 1st to consider various questions for advancing the settlement of the town. Action was taken for the support of both school and church, and the incorporation of the town marked a new era in its development.

During the next years the town became rapidly settled, and all worthy objects of a public nature were supported. Old roads were repaired and new roads laid out and cleared. Bridges were built. Land was cleared and cultivated, and the large two-storied houses were erected. A new meeting-house was built, and a church organization established.

Appropriations were almost annually made for schools, and later the school districts were formed and school-houses erected. In 1790 the town had six hundred and forty-five inhabitants, and in 1820 the people of Andover numbered sixteen hundred and forty-two.

October 10, 1828, Joseph C. Thomson was elected agent for the town in the formation of the new town of Franklin. Mr. Thomson was instructed to favor the formation of the contemplated town, providing the tract of land taken from Andover for its formation should extend entirely across the town. A strip of land bordering upon the Penigewasset River was taken from the easterly end of Andover and incorporated in the town of Franklin by an act dated December 24, 1828.

Following will be found the list of representatives and town clerks serving in the town to the year 1886, and after this are given the more important events in the history of the leading interests of Andover:

REPRESENTATIVES.

1796-1802, Joseph Phibbrick; 1803, Jonathan Weare; 1804, Joseph Phibbrick; 1805, Jonathan Weare; 1806, Jacob B. Moore; 1807-9, Jonathan Weare; 1810-12, James Tucker; 1813, Jonathan Weare, Jr.; 1814, James Tucker; 1815, Jonathan Weare, Jr.; 1816-17, no representative; 1818, Samuel Graves; 1819, no representative; 1820-21, Robert Barber; 1822-24, Samuel Brown; 1825, Robert Barber; 1826, no representative; 1827, Samuel Brown; 1828, Joseph C. Thomson; 1829-30, James Tucker; 1831-32, Jesse Graves; 1833, no representative; 1834-36, Joseph Swett; 1837-38, Royal F. Estman; 1839, Joseph C. Thomson; 1840-41, Benjamin F. Scribner; 1842-43, Enoch F. Sisson; 1844-45, Joseph A. Rowe; 1846, Samuel Butterfield; 1847, Samuel Butterfield and John Fellows; 1848, John Fellows; 1849-50, Samuel Morrill; 1851-52, Ephraim G. Graves; 1853-54, Dudley E. Longley; 1855-56, Caleb T. Marston; 1857-58, Watson Dickerson; 1859-60, John M. Shirley; 1861-62, John Proctor; 1863-64, Samuel Swett; 1865-66, Aaron Olin; 1867-68, George W. Thomson; 1869-70, Henry A. Weymouth; 1871-72, John F. Emery; 1873-74, John P. Carr; 1875, Zeba Severance; 1876, Zeba Severance and Clark Durgin; 1877, Clark Durgin and Gerry Morgan; 1878, Gerry Morgan and Clarence E. Carr; 1879, Clarence E. Carr; 1881, William E. Meleny; 1883, Robert C. Carr; 1885, George W. Stone.

TOWN CLERKS.

[At the organization of the town government, in 1775, Paul Smith Marston was chosen town clerk, and continued in the office until the incorporation of the town, in 1779.]

1779-92, Jonathan Weare; 1793-94, Silas Barnard; 1795, Jonathan Weare; 1796-97, Jacob B. Moore; 1798-99, Jonathan Weare; 1800-4, Jacob B. Moore; 1805, Jonathan Weare; 1806-10, John Weare; 1811, Willard Emery; 1812-18, Robert Butler; 1819-21, Samuel Brown; 1822-31, Jesse Graves; 1822-23, Nehemiah D. Sleeper; 1824-26, Thomas R. White; 1827, Edwin Moody; 1828-29, Samuel Swett; 1830-41, Jacob C. Hanson; 1842-44, Simon Graves; 1845-46, William B. Emery; 1847-48, Henry A. Weymouth; 1849-50, Ephraim G. Graves; 1851-53, Henry A. Weymouth; 1854-56, Jacob F. Kenerson; 1857-60, Clark Durgin; 1861-64, Nathan Woodbury; 1865, Henry M. Bosworth; 1866-72, John W. Keniston; 1873-79, George H. Morrill; 1880-84, Henry M. Bosworth; 1885, Nathan Woodbury.

Ecclesiastical History—CHURCH BUILDINGS.—

The early settlers manifested much interest in establishing and supporting a religious meeting, and we find action frequently taken during the period in which the religious affairs were controlled by vote of the town. Doubtless, it was the intention of the grantees to locate the first meeting-house at the Centre Square, for, being the geographical centre of the town, it was supposed that it would become the business centre also, and a vote was passed at one time to build a meeting-house there. The "mills" having been located at the place now known as East Andover, the proprietors of the township, for the better convenience of the inhabitants, decided to locate the first meeting-house there, and at a meeting held May 18, 1772, the following action was recorded.

"Resolved, That a meeting house be built in said township of New Boston for the public worship of God, said house to be 20 feet wide and 20 feet long and 9 feet stud; to be one story high and well boarded on the sides and ends with feather-edged boards. The roof well boarded and shingled. Proper doors made, and double floor laid over the whole frame below. Plank laid for the people to sit on and a decent desk for the minister."

Benjamin Tilton and Benjamin Eaton were previously agreed to furnish all material and build the house for sixty-four dollars, and were appointed a committee, with instructions "to locate said house as near to the mills now built in said township as they shall think most convenient, and to have it completed in a workmanlike manner within one year." One-half of said amount was to be paid in six months and the remainder when the house was completed.

It was located and built on the opposite side of the road from the school-house now standing, and within twenty rods of the first saw-mill and grist-mill built in town. This building was used for religious meetings and for the business meetings of the town until 1795, when, for some unknown reason, it was demolished. Tradition says it was destroyed in the night, and it may have been done with the object of hastening the building of a new meeting-house; for, as early as 1782, this subject was considered by the voters of the town, but they could not decide upon the place to build it. The location of the second meeting-house was a difficult question to settle, and for several years was agitated by the voters at each annual meeting. Various places were accepted and as often rejected by a reconsideration of the vote.

At one time "it was voted to build a meeting-house on the hill by Captain Bachelor's." A committee was appointed to build the house and settle for the land. Afterwards it was voted "to set a meeting-house on the plains near Mr. Clough's," and at another time "on the plains near the pond." A vote was passed to build two meeting-houses. A committee was chosen from outside the town, who located the house "near Mr. Nathan Row's," but the report of this committee was rejected. The house was finally built according to a vote passed May 10, 1790, "to build a meeting-house on the hill in Mr. Hilton's lot." This was on the exact location of the Congregational Church at East Andover to-day, and the frame now in that building is the same as was originally raised May 3, 1796. The first sermon was preached in the house July 31 of the same year, and the church formally dedicated February 5, 1797.

The building has been frequently remodeled, and at the present day has but little resemblance to that first erected. The greatest development of the resources of the town was made in the years following the erection of this building, and for more than twenty-five years it was the only church edifice within the limits of Andover.

But very few records have been found regarding the third meeting-house built. It seems to have been erected by people of different religious beliefs, and was known as the Union Church. The frame was raised in June, 1822, and the building soon after completed. It was located at Andover Centre, and, as remodeled, is the present academy building. It was for a time regularly used for the meetings of the Universalist, Methodist, Congregational and Christian Societies, each occupying it a stated Sabbath in a month. It was afterwards only used occasionally, and a fine hall finished in the building erected by Hon. John Proctor became the more usual place of holding religious meetings.

The former church structure was divided into two stories, and the upper floor for many years used for the annual meetings of the town, and at present the entire building is devoted to the needs of Proctor Academy.

The large and commodious hall in Proctor Block, Andover Centre, was fitted up by Mr. Proctor expressly for religious services and furnished with pulpit, organ, chairs and all necessary appointments and conveniences of a house of worship. At his death a provision of his will bequeathed the use of the hall for religious purposes to his native village. By this wise and generous forethought a most attractive place of worship is provided, rendering a church edifice unnecessary.

The fourth meeting-house in town was built by the Free-Will Baptist Society of East Andover in 1839. The building committee were James Severens, Josiah Bacheelder, Jonathan Cilley, James Bayley, Simeon Rollins, Dearborn Cilley and A. J. Tucker. The building was dedicated December 25, 1839, with appropriate exercises. A bell was purchased in 1841. The building was entirely destroyed by fire May 23, 1871, and soon replaced by the present structure, which is neatly furnished and affords a very pleasant audience-room.

In 1879 a building was commenced at West Andover by the Union Enterprise Society for religious meetings. The building was completed in March, 1882, and dedicated August 31 of the same year, Rev. William Morrill preaching the dedicatory sermon. The society is non-sectarian and its members entertain different religious beliefs. The object of the society is the worship of God, and for this purpose was the building dedicated. The pastors have been: William Morrill, Christian; William Love and James D. Legro, Methodist.

A building was erected at Andover Centre by the Congregational Society during the summer of 1882. It is known as the Chapel, and built for religious worship by this church. This building was dedicated September 26, 1882, and affords the fifth place at present in the town where religious services are constantly held.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.—According to the terms of the grant, "One of the said shares shall be for the first minister of the gospel who shall be settled on the said land, and continue there during his life or until he shall be regularly dismissed, to hold to him, his heirs and assigns; and one other of the said shares to be for and towards the support of the gospel ministry there forever." This condition seems to have been complied with in the drawing of the lots, and we find lots numbered 19 and 62 reserved for these purposes.

The income of these, known as the minister and parsonage lots, was appropriated to the support of preaching, together with such sums as were voted by the proprietors of the township. The entire amount was necessarily small, only at first enough to secure preaching a portion of the time. The noble character of the earliest settlers is in no way so clearly demonstrated as in the sacrifices made for the support of the gospel ministry. Whatever privations were endured, the minister was supported, not barely to clear the terms of the grant, but freely and generously, as will be seen. The first minister preaching regularly was Rev. Mr. Brown, of whom but little is known. He was here in 1774, two years after the building of the meeting-house, and it seems, for some reason, that the liberality of the inhabitants was not well tested this year, for he received but thirty dollars for his services.

Congregational Society.—Rev. Josiah Badoeck preached his first sermon in Andover, August 19, 1781, and this commenced a new era in the religious history of the town. Mr. Badoeck was called to Andover to preach regularly July 8, 1782; was ordained October 30th of the same year, at East Andover, and on that day the first Congregational Church was organized with six members. At the time Mr. Badoeck was called to the town it was voted to give him one hundred and fifty dollars for the first year, with ten dollars added yearly until it should amount to two hundred dollars per year. It was also voted to build him a house "the bigness of Mr. Samuel Blake's," to give him the use of the parsonage, to give him twenty cords of wood yearly, to clear for him two acres of land each year for five years, to allow him to be absent three Sabbath days in each year. This was the contract under which Mr. Badoeck came, and doubtless was a low compensation for a man of his fine education and superior natural endowments. He was a graduate of Harvard College in 1772. It would also seem a liberal sum to be raised by the people of the township, who probably at this time did not number more than three hundred. The minister lot is now known as the Horace Clay farm, on Taunton Hill. The frame of the house now standing is probably that raised for Mr. Badoeck, and there he lived the remainder of his life. The church over which he was the pastor increased to about thirty members, and during his pastorate the second meeting-house in town was built and occupied by this society. Mr. Badoeck was an active and influential man in the business affairs of the town, and his bold signature is often found in the records. Perhaps no name in the early history of the town is more familiar than that of Rev. Josiah Badoeck. He was formally dismissed as pastor in 1809, and died December 7, 1831, at the age of seventy-nine years.

After the dismissal of Mr. Badoeck there was only occasional preaching, and after a time the Congregational Society informally united with other denominations, under the name of the Union Society.

June 14, 1810, the town voted to sell the parsonage right. This right consisted of three lots, each numbered 62. One was in the second range and sold to Elijah Hilton for nine hundred and seventeen dollars. The remaining two were in the fourth range. One was sold to Moses Fuller for five hundred dollars, and the other, containing eighty acres, to Philip Cilley for one hundred and ninety dollars. The amount received was sixteen hundred and seven dollars. The interest on this sum was voted for various purposes at subsequent meetings, and the disposition of both principal and interest frequently considered. Its proper division among the various religious denominations soon after represented in town was a difficult question to determine, and finally, on March 8, 1831, the town voted to appropriate the parsonage fund, both principal and interest, for the use and benefit of the town, and this ended all controversy.

January 13, 1829, a Congregational Church was formed, consisting of ten members, and Mr. Samuel Kingsbury settled as its pastor. At this time the church formerly organized was represented by its venerable pastor and one aged member. No records or church documents of any kind could be found. Mr. Kingsbury was dismissed by an ecclesiastical council January 11, 1831.

June 25, 1841, another Congregational Church was formed. May 23, 1843, Rev. Nathan Howard was ordained pastor over the Congregational Churches of Andover and Wilmot, and remained until 1850, at which time the Congregational Society united with others, and employed Rev. Reuben Kimball, who remained two years.

In January, 1853, Rev. Nathan Howard was again employed. He remained until the close of the year 1854, after which only occasional Congregational preaching was had until the organization of the First Congregational Church, at East Andover, in the early part of the year 1868.

In January, 1869, Rev. Howard Moody was called to the pastorate, and a portion of the preceding facts in regard to the Congregational Church in Andover are taken from a historical sermon, preached July 9, 1876.

A Congregational Church was formed at Andover Centre November 16, 1880, with eighteen members. John R. Bates, George J. White and William Woodbury were chosen trustees; Willis D. Thomson, clerk. Rev. Howard Moody was formally installed pastor of this and the church at East Andover September 26, 1882, remaining until his death, April 29, 1885. During the year 1885 both churches were supplied by Rev. F. G. Chutter, of Andover, Mass.

The meetings of the Congregational Society have been held in different parts of the town.

Mr. Kingsbury preached at Taunton Hill a portion of the time, and Mr. Howard at Andover Centre.

It seems that this society, organized by Rev. Josiah Badcock in 1782, has, with brief cessations, held religious meetings in some section of the town since that date.

Mr. Moody reports one hundred and six united with the church previous to 1876, and several additions have been made since.

Free-Will Baptist Society.—During the noted revival among the Free-Will Baptist denomination, in 1801, interest was manifested here by those of this belief. The formation of the society was made and first meeting held in 1803, the association then organized being known as a Monthly Conference, which existed and held religious meetings at East Andover. This association, although not bound by any sectarian creed, was sustained by those of the Free-Will Baptist belief, and was productive of much good by the sincere worship of its members. The great revival of 1810 brought encouraging success to the work and numbers of this society,—forty additions being made at one time and many others during the year. It was at this time that traces of a second Free-Will Baptist Society are found in town, but the records are so meagre as to specify but little regarding its location and existence.

Elder Elijah Watson was ordained here in 1803, and was afterwards a zealous worker in this society and church. Ebenezer Chase was also ordained and preached for several years, beginning in 1810. He was afterwards the editor of the only paper ever published in town. The Free-Will Baptist Church was formally organized at East Andover by Rev. Elijah Watson and Rev. Samuel Robbins, January 7, 1830, with eighty-one members. Elder Watson was for many years the settled pastor, meetings being held in the same church with the Christian denomination until a house was built by this society, in 1839. The name of Elder Watson is very familiar to those acquainted with the history of this church, and, perhaps, no one of the early preachers contributed more to its success. He was born in Nottingham, N. H., in 1777, and died in 1857.

The preachers in this church since Mr. Watson have been as follows: Ebenezer Fisk, Cummins Paris, E. G. Knowles, D. Sidney Frost, Oliver Butler, D. Sidney Frost (second pastorate from 1856 to 1859), Uriah Chase, Samuel T. Frost, Alvah Buzzell, N. L. Rowell, W. M. Jenkins, J. F. Smith, C. B. Griffin, F. E. Davison and J. G. Munsey. Preaching has been held almost continually since the organization of the church, in 1830, to the close of 1884.

March 18, 1854, was organized in connection with this church, a Free-Will Baptist society and due notice of the organization appeared in the Independent Democrat, published at Concord, April 20th following. "Notice is hereby given that Henry D. Cilley, Ziba Severens, Henry A. Weymouth, Thomas Haley and their associates have formed themselves into a Religious Society to be known as the Free-Will Baptist Society at East Andover, N. H., assuming all the responsibilities, rights and privileges of the laws of the State made and provided," William A. Bacheider was chosen clerk and a board of directors was annually elected. William Emery, James Connor and Daniel Weymouth were the directors elected at the organization.

This society has a large representation in the families of this community, and during its prosperous seasons has exerted a broad influence for Christianity.

Unitarian Society.—In September, 1879, the First Unitarian Society was organized in Andover. Previous to this time there had been occasional Unitarian preaching, but no organized society. John P. Carr, Amos H. Proctor, Joseph Baker, Calvin Campbell and J. W. Scales were elected as trustees of the organization, and Frank W. Proctor, clerk. The constitution declares the object of the society, "united effort for the study and practice of Christianity." Rev. Calvin Stebbins was the first pastor. Under his ministrations the interest and attendance increased and the society became firmly established as a religious organization.

Mr. Stebbins continued with the society for two years, and was then called to a large and important field of labor. The society parted from him with regret, and he has continued to manifest an interest in its welfare and prosperity, and to give it the benefit of his experience and counsel.

Mr. Stebbins was succeeded by Rev. Crawford Nightingale, who remained with the society a year. For the next year the pulpit was supplied, and at the end of that time Rev. T. Thomson was settled. From its organization the society has sustained preaching continuously. About sixty families are represented in the society.

The Sunday-school has a well-selected library. The Ladies' Industrial Society has rendered invaluable assistance, having raised and contributed to the support of the society the sum of six hundred and sixty dollars in six years; its social and benevolent work has been effective also. The choir, a well-trained quartette, is under the efficient direction of Professor Buswell; few societies have expended so much upon the musical department of worship with such excellent and helpful results. The society has raised and expended for all purposes an average of twelve hundred dollars per year.

The meetings of this society are held in Proctor Hall. Its present condition is good and its future well assured. Its influence and opportunities are increasing and it bids fair to continue an enduring power for the development and fostering of the moral and spiritual growth of the community.

Methodist Society.—The Methodist Society was organized at Andover Centre in 1827, Major William Proctor being a leading member at its organization and zealous in its support. Meetings were held in the meeting-house on certain specified Sabbaths in the year, and were largely attended. The church membership is estimated at thirty during the years in which the society was active. The first preachers were Matthew Newhall and Richard Newhall, in 1827. Following is the complete list of preachers located in this society from 1827 to 1838: 1828, William Kimball and Sereen Fisk; 1829, John Adams and Caleb Bede; 1830, J. B. H. Norris and Sylvester Williams; 1831, J. B. H. Norris and S. Harket; 1832, Nathaniel Ladd and S. P. Williams; 1833, J. W. Morey and M. Quimby; 1834, Jonas Scott and H. Clark; 1835, E. H. Ladd; 1836, John L. Smith (Hallelujah John); 1837, John L. Smith; 1838, A. Folsom and D. Jones. Occasional preaching was held for several years later, but no great prosperity was witnessed by the society after this date.

